As I have shown, it was the position of the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail that the “Sangreal”, or “Holy Grail”, as described in the stories that emerged from the courts of Europe in the early part of this millennium, is actually a veiled reference to the bloodline of David, a play on the words “Sang real”, or “royal blood.” In the Grail stories of the Middle Ages, the custodians of the Grail are the “Grail family”, headed by the Fisher King. They trace their lineage back to Joseph of Arimathea, who, along with Mary Magdalene, was supposed to have brought the Grail (often a cup filled with the “blood” of Jesus) from Jerusalem after the crucifixion. The Grail family, in the Grail stories, is romanticized as being chosen directly by God to guard the Grail (just as King David was chosen by God to rule over the Kingdom of Judah) and one of its members, Sir Galahad, is described as “a scion of the House of David.” Galahad is traditionally said to be the grandfather of a real-life character, Godfroi de Bouillon, who led the First Crusade and in 1118 founded, as we shall soon relate, the Order of Sion and the Knights Templar. The Grail guardians are described in the romances specifically as Templars. The Knights Templars were also at that time very influential in the French royal courts that commissioned most of the romances, so it is possible that they might have had an indirect effect on the content of the stories. Wolfram von Eschenbach states explicitly in the Grail romance Parzival that the Grail is the source of kingship. “And if anywhere a land loses its lord”, he writes, “if the people there acknowledge the Hand of God, and seek a new lord, they are granted one from the company of the Grail.”

However, there are many different versions of the Grail myth, and many different interpretations of what the Holy Grail actually was. But I do not see these interpretations as conflicting with one another. Rather they fit together to form a pattern, revealing that the Holy Grail is not merely a single object, but a network of related traditions as old as history itself.

A Stone

In Eschenbach’s Parzival, the Grail was a magic stone that could create things out of nothing, bring the dead back to life and cause those who looked upon it to never age another day. It also communicated. Written messages would appear on its surface detailing the names and lineages of those chosen to seek the Grail, and Parzival actually talked to it. It is called "lapsit exillis" - "stone from the heavens." Indeed, in the story it states that angels had "left it on earth and then rose high above the stars, as if their innocence drew them back." There are also versions of the story where these are described specifically as "fallen angels" who descended to Earth after the biblical "war in Heaven."

The Grail is sometimes identified as the "stone of light" knocked from Lucifer's crown during this war in Heaven. Others have claimed that the stone from Lucifer's crown was actually a meteorite, perhaps the one revered by Muslims at the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem, a sacred black stone which they believe "fell from Heaven" as well. In fact, the Koran says that Muhammad stood upon this stone when he was taken to Heaven on a "ladder of light" by the Angel Gabriel. (This "ladder of light" will take on greater relevance later on in this book.)

Another candidate for the "Grail as stone" is the Emerald Tablet of Hermes, a slab of crystal engraved with ancient wisdom by the Greek god of writing. The stone upon which it is written supposedly "fell from Heaven", and the wisdom it contains is alchemical in nature, detailing a ten-step process, both chemical and spiritual, that results in the creation of the "Philosopher's Stone." Also called the "Elixir of Life", this "stone" bestows enlightenment and immortality upon those who partake of it. It is symbolized in alchemy by the Sun, and in equated with the Grail.

The stone from Heaven upon which all of this alchemical wisdom was purportedly engraved is often specified as the stone from Lucifer's crown. In these versions, Hermes is equated with the biblical prophet Enoch, and is said to have passed the Tablet on to his grandson Noah, who took it with him on board the Ark.

A Cup

As previously mentioned, the Grail is traditionally thought of as the cup that caught Jesus Christ's blood as he hung upon the cross. This legend was first found in Chretien de Troyes' Perceval, written in 1182. The Grail is also said to be the cup used by Christ at the Last Supper. One popular candidate for this artifact is a crumbling hunk of olive wood which rests at the Nanteos Mansion in Glastonbury, England, supposedly brought there by Joseph of Arimathea. Richard Wagner visited the mansion once and there conceived the idea for his opera Parsifal.

But there are many other stories surrounding the Grail cup. Some have said that this is the same cup used by the priest Melchizedek while serving Abraham bread and wine on Mt. Moriah. From the Grail cup, sometimes described more as a bowl or a serving dish, one could obtain whatever kind of food one wished, in limitless abundance. In this way the legend is obviously based on ancient Celtic myths about Bran the Blessed's "cauldron of rebirth" and the magical "Horn of Plenty." This accords with earlier prototypes of the Grail story from Mesopotamian cultures that refer to a mystical bowl which, coincidentally, is covered with sacred writing. The word "grail" is said by some scholars to come from the Old French word "gradale", a dish used to serve successive courses in a meal, but I have discussed in a later chapter how this word could have a much older antiquity. When not filled with blood or food made from thin air, the Grail was empty, and its emptiness was heavily stressed, perhaps because emptiness is the supreme state of being and enlightenment - the annihilation of the ego.

Mystical Union

This brings us to another point of view concerning the Grail: a spiritual experience. It is described as the most worthy thing that one can seek, and those who embark upon the quest for the Grail must be completely pure of heart. One does not merely "find" the Grail: one "achieves" it, and at that point is initiated into its secrets. Just seeing it causes an overwhelming, trance-like state of awe and reverence, and the experience brings a complete transformation of the soul. “Upon a green achmardi she bore the consummation of heart’s desire”, writes Eschenbach, “its root and its blossoming - a thing called ‘the Gral’, paradisal, transcending all earthly perfection!” In the story of Parzival the Grail has been lost, causing a state of infertility called “the Wasteland.” The Fisher King, Parzival’s uncle, is wounded in the crotch, and the festering sore, along with the Wasteland, cannot be cured until the Grail is found - an obvious metaphor for spiritual redemption. This is the redemption that, mystics relate, occurs when one’s inner polarities (male/female, light/dark, etc.) are aligned, equalized, and transcended, creating a feeling of sublime nothingness that leaves one receptive to divine influence. It is union with God, the Great Void, the state of Samadhi that is the goal of yogic meditation.

Bodily Secretions

Famed magician Aleister Crowley had quite a different take on the meaning of the Grail. Noted for his work in the field of sex magic, he combined Tantric theory learned in India with methodology learned from the German Ordo Templi Orientis. He believed that sex performed ritually could result in transcendence of the ego and union with the Godhead. This was possible if one was "in conversation with the Holy Guardian Angel" at the moment of orgasm, and the process for reaching that state is detailed in The Book of the Unveiling of the Sangraal. Afterwards, all fluids created during sex must be consumed in full by the magician, so as to retain their potency (in the same way that Tantrics retain their semen so as to prevent a loss of energy). Crowley referred to semen as "red tincture", vaginal secretions as "white tincture", and the mix of the two, the Elixir of Life. He also called it significantly, the "Magnum Opus" or "Philosopher's Stone." The holy vessel (vagina) from which one drinks the Elixir of Life he called "the Sangraal." This is an important connection, because according to my research, sex magic appears to have been part of a long-standing tradition in which many members of the Grail family and their close associates participated. Interestingly, when Crowley wrote about his own sex magic rituals he referred to himself as "the Great Beast" and his consort as "the Whore of Babalon." I am reminded of a passage in Saint John's Revelations describing the Whore of Babalon thusly:

"And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication" (Revelation, 7:4-5).

Does that golden cup symbolize the same idea as the Holy Grail? As I was soon to find out, the concept of a "Scarlet Woman" is directly related to both the practice of sex magic and the Holy Grail tradition, so the answer to that question is most probably "yes."

The Ark

In his book The Sign and the Seal, Graham Hancock argues that the Grail might have actually been the Ark of the Covenant, the revered Judaic relic designed by Jehovah and built by the Hebrews to absolute geometric perfection. This was the 1 cubit x 1 cubit x 2 cubit wooden cedar box into which Moses placed the Tablets of the Testimony: tablets of stone engraved by the finger of God.[3] It was overlaid with the purest of gold, and crowned with two mysterious winged objects called cherubim who each had two faces: of a lion and eagle, a man and an ox, respectively. Between their outstretched wings stood the Mercy Seat, where God would literally sit and talk to the priest. In fact, God was referred to as actually living in the Ark. "The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble: he sitteth between the cherubim; let the earth be moved."[4] The prophet Samuel was said to have seen and conversed with a "form", which he took to be God, in the vicinity of the Ark. Later, King Solomon had a temple built for it, in which he used the Ark to conjure up not only Jehovah, but a host "demons" and "archangels." The Ark "smote" those who touched it, moved objects at will and produced "manna" for the Israelites to eat while they were starving in the desert - all attributes shared by the Grail. The Ark had to be obscured by a veil at all times lest those who looked upon be killed, and only the sons of the High Priest Aaron were allowed to actually see it, protected by a "breastplate of judgment" made from gold and precious stones.

Graham Hancock bases his argument on the fact that the Knights Templar, "guardians of the Grail" according to tradition, were believed to have excavated a treasure from the caverns underneath Solomon's Temple which made them extremely rich and powerful. They were rumored to have taken this treasure to the mountain of Montsegur in the Languedoc region of France, which was the prototype for the setting of most of the Grail romances, “Montsalvat.” It is also quite close to Rennes-le-Chateau.

[4] (Psalm 99.)

Each of these explanations of the Grail is equally intriguing. I eventually came to the conclusion that they may all be correct, and that the Grail is really a combination of all of the above, each providing a piece of the puzzle known as the “Grail mystery.” This mystery, I believe, has now finally been cracked, and one of the first keys that helped open up the mystery to me was the existence of the “Grail bloodline.” My study of this subject began with the legendary Merovingian kings.

Blood Royale

It is not known when the Merovingian dynasty began, for their rule over the Frankish kingdom seems to have already been well-established by the time of Meroveus - the source of the line’s name and the first king of that line to have made his way onto the historical record. Before this there is no other line of Frankish kings whom the Merovingians would have usurped: they simply had always been the royal family as far back as anyone could remember. Meroveus was, however, worthy of being called the progenitor of the dynasty, for his conception was in no way natural.

Meroveus was, according to the legend, the spawn of two fathers: one, the Frankish King Clodio, the other, a mysterious sea creature called "the Quinotaur." This beast raped his mother, already pregnant, as she was swimming in the ocean, and managed to magically inject his own seed into the developing fetus, co-mingling his own inhuman blood with that of the Frankish kings. This is why Meroveus' name bore within it the French word for "sea", and why his descendants, the Merovingian kings, were believed to possess magical, super-human powers. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail states:

"According to tradition Merovingian monarchs were occult adepts, initiates in arcane sciences, practitioners in esoteric arts - worthy rivals of Merlin, their fabulous near-contemporary. They were often called the sorcerer kings or thaumaturge kings. By virtue of some miraculous property in their blood, they could allegedly heal by the laying on of hands; and according to one account the tassels on the fringes of their robes were deemed to possess miraculous curative powers. They were said to be capable of clairvoyant or telepathic communication with beasts and with the natural world around them, and to wear powerful magical necklaces. They were said to possess an arcane spell that protected them and granted them phenomenal longevity - which history, incidentally, does not seem to confirm.”

Other rumors about the Merovingians were very specific. For starters, each supposedly bore a birthmark that consisted of a red equilateral cross, either above the heart or between the shoulder blades. They were called “the long-haired kings”, because they refused to cut their hair, which purportedly contained the essence of their magical powers. At death, it would appear that they partook of the ancient ritual of trepanation, allowing the “soul” to escape to the afterlife through a hole drilled in the deceased’s skull. They were also ritually entombed with strange, occult artifacts, much like the Egyptian Pharaohs. In the tomb of Meroveus’ son, King Childeric, there was interred a severed horse’s head, a golden bull’s head, a crystal ball, and three-hundred golden bees - a symbol of the Merovingian line. (These bees were later attached to the coronation robe of Napoleon Bonaparte, who had married a Merovingian princess, in order to connect himself symbolically with the ancient kingly line.) There was another similarity between the Merovingians and the Egyptian Pharaohs: both were considered to be priest-kings, and living incarnations of the divine. This was seen by the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail as evidence for a Merovingian descent from Christ, and a long-standing local tradition does indeed link them with said blood, making them, by definition, a "Grail family."

The knowledge of this remarkable ancestry was purportedly the impetus behind the pact made between Meroveus' grandson, King Clovis I, and the Roman Catholic Church in the year 469, bestowing upon him the title "New Constantine", and control over a vast kingdom which provided the prototype for the "Holy Roman Empire." This title was, according to the pact, to be passed down to his descendants from that moment on, in exchange for his conversion to the faith. (Yes, the presumed "children of Christ" were themselves, until that time, not Christians.) The idea, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, was that by employing the Merovingians and allowing them to spread their empire, the Church could keep the priest-kings "under their thumb", so to speak, and silent about their divine lineage, which could be devastating for the hegemony of the Roman faith. For several generations, this agreement was observed, and the baptism of Clovis was a fondly remembered event, commonly depicted in ancient seals with the king being submerged in a Grail-like cup. But in the year 679, the Church broke their very own pact, in the most devastating of ways.

By the time the Merovingian King Dagobert II was born, in 651, the power of the throne had already been weakened, with authority increasingly being usurped by court chancellors known as “Mayors of the Palace.” On the death of his father, the five-year-old Dagobert was kidnapped by then Palace Mayor Grimoald, who tried to put his own son on the throne instead. Human compassion saved young Dagobert from death, and he was exiled to Ireland, only to return years later and reclaim the throne in 679. But the problems of the Mayors of the Palace continued. Apparently displeased with Dagobert’s lack of allegiance and devotion to the faith (a problem noted in previous Merovingian kings as well), the Roman church entered into a conspiracy with Mayor Pepin the Fat. On December 23, supposedly while on a hunting trip in the haunted and sacred wood called the “Forest of Woevres”, Dagobert was lanced through the eye, on Pepin’s orders, they say. With Roman Catholic endorsement, Pepin passed political power onto his son, Charles Martel, thus beginning the Carolingian dynasty that would later become so famous. After that, the Merovingian bloodline faded into obscurity. All subsequent Merovingian kings were essentially powerless, and they were officially thought to have died out with one of Dagobert’s grandsons, Childeric III. Forty-nine years later, Charles Martel’s grandson, Charlemagne was anointed Holy Roman Emperor. The church had finally washed its hands of the Merovingian problem, or so they thought.

And what was the problem, exactly? According to the claims, the Merovingians, as his blood descendants, knew the truth about Jesus and his actual significance as King of the Jews. They knew that the Roman church had stolen their birthright, usurped their role as the priest-kings of the "True Church", co-opted the idea of Jesus and created a fictionalized version of the messiah to further their own agenda - world domination, both secular and spiritual. The Merovingians knew that the fantasy of Christ as a virgin-born deity who suffered willingly for our sins and ascended to heaven was just that - an "opiate of the masses" used by the Romans as an excuse to set themselves up as the arbiters of God, and thus perpetuate their faltering empire. And with the death of Dagobert II, they thought they had eradicated this threat for good.

But according to the sources used in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, the Merovingian bloodline continued on in secret, via Sigisbert IV, son of Dagobert II and his second wife, Giselle de Razes. Historians have assumed Sigisbert to have been another casualty of his father's assassination, but there is actually no record of this. Legend says that Sigisbert IV was taken by his sister after his father's assassination and sent to the Languedoc, then ruled over by his mother. This occurred in the year 681, a possible explanation for the use of this number in one of the coded messages from Sauniere's parchments. He also took on the name of

"Plantard", meaning "ardent flowering shoot", a reference to the continuation of the Merovingian line, and took on his uncle's titles "Duke of Razes" and "Count of Rhedae." From this, the family names Plantard, Plantavelu, and Plantagenet (the name of one of Britain's most famous royal lines) can be traced. It is also likely that Sigisbert's descendants were the rulers of a independent kingdom encompassing the region of Razes and Rennes-le-Chateau that came into being in the 8th century. The rulers of this land included Theodoric, Guillem de Gellone (a famous figure of his time who was mentioned in Dante's The Divine Comedy) and Prince Ursus, listed by some genealogies as Dagobert II's grandson, Sigisbert VI. Somewhere around 879, he was declared "King Ursus" by his supporters, who attempted to usurp King Louis II and place Ursus on the French throne. Although the insurrection failed, Ursus married into the Breton ducal house, and his descendants took on the duchies of Brittany and Aquitaine. They also brought the bloodline to England, beginning the Planta family line that eventually resulted in the Plantagenets. One member of this Planta line was Bera IV, also called "the Architect." There is a possibility that he and his descendants may have been involved in the formation of Freemasonry. Interestingly, according to Masonic scholar Albert Pike, the Craft is sometimes referred to as "Frankmasonry."

Genetic descent is not the only way in which the Merovingians have passed on their heritage to future generations. The other was in the form of a cult - a cult which cherished Christ and, in particular, Mary Magdalene, as progenitors of the Merovingian “Grail blood”, which they deemed sacred. This cult also recognized another divine ancestor, represented by the Quinotaur, whose genetic essence was intermingled with that of the blood of Christ in the bodies of the Grail kings. Essentially, it was what we would call the cult of the Holy Grail. Certainly this cult was responsible for the way Dagobert II’s relics were treated after his death. While the Roman Catholic Church and the Carolingian hierarchy were attempting to excise Dagobert II and his heirs from the history books (so much so that any chronicle of French kings written before 1646 fails to even mention him), Dagobert’s body was exhumed in 872 from the royal chapel of Saint Remy in Stenay and moved to a new church, where it became the center for the worship of “Saint Dagobert”, for he had been canonized by a local “metropolitan conclave.” The relics were believed by the local cult to protect the town against intruders, and they began to observe a feast on every “Saint Dagobert’s Day” - December 23, the anniversary of his martyrdom. The Pope later canonized Dagobert in 1159, not the last time the Church would mark for sainthood a person who had been martyred by the Church itself.

Years later, the Church would turn martyring those of the Grail cult into a full-time job.

The Albigensian Crusade

In the year 1209, the Catholic Church began its first and only crusade against fellow Christian Europeans, the Cathars. The word “Cathar” came from “Cathari”, meaning “the Pure Ones”, although they were also called “Albigensians” because they had first been publicly condemned by an ecclesiastical council at the Languedoc town of Albi. The Cathars were a heretical Christian sect who believed that one could commune with the True God through the spiritual experience of “gnosis” - direct knowledge of the divine. They did not believe in the crucifixion or honor the cross. They also believed that the “Jehovah” of the Bible was actually a demiurge: “Rex Mundi”, the King of the World, who had created the corrupt world of matter in order to entrap men’s souls. The goal of gnosis, then, was to free oneself from the bonds of creation, much like the Buddhist concept of “nirvana.” They were fish-eating vegetarians, and practiced birth control to prevent innocent children from being brought in to the corrupt world of matter. Oh, and one other thing: they were rumored to have possessed a vast treasure that included the "Holy Grail."

The Languedoc region of France was a bastion of Cathar thought, where it had threatened to become the dominant religion. Nearly 30% of all Cathar priests were drawn from Languedoc nobility, and even non-Cathars in the region usually maintained a cold attitude towards the Church of Rome. The Languedoc was at that time an independent principality, with a distinct culture of esoteric thought and higher learning. So when the "Albigensian crusade", as it came to be called, began, even many non-Cathar locals defended their home-grown heretics to the death.

For the next forty years, the Church attempted to wipe out the Albigensian menace. The destruction of Catharism, which tended to run in families, was so complete that the Crusade is now considered by historians to be Europe's first genocide. Those who were not killed in the fighting were arrested and tortured by the Dominican Order's Holy Inquisition. The Church's army spared no one, not even non-Cathars, who stood in the way of their stated goal. When Pope Innocent III was asked how the soldiers should know the heretics from the true Christians, he responded with the oft-quoted line, "Kill them all. God will know His own."

And that they did. The Cathars and their defenders fought bravely, but in the end it was no use. Some of the few remaining Cathar strongholds, towards the end, were those in Arques, Narbonne, Toulouse, Carcassonne, and Rennes-le -Chateau. But the final fortress to capitulate was that of Montsegur, “poised”, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail relates, “like a celestial ark above the surrounding valleys.” It was besieged by the invaders for ten months, and finally fell in March of 1244.

On the first of March, the less than 400 remaining defenders, 180 of them actual Cathars, and the remainder mercenary soldiers, were offered terms for surrender. The soldiers would receive full pardon, and the heretics would only have to renounce their beliefs and make a full confession. The Cathars agreed to a two-week truce while they considered the terms, with the understanding that if anyone tried to escape, they would be immediately executed. They took the whole two weeks, but in the end, the Cathars refused, and were immediately burned to death.

Yet according to the legends, the night before the end of the ceasefire, a small group of Cathars managed to sneak out of the fortress carrying some unnamed treasure - one quite separate and distinct from the famed hordes of gold and other booty the heretics possessed, which had been smuggled out safely much earlier in the siege. Given the importance of the date, which was Easter, March 14, the day of the Spring Equinox, the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail assumed that the "treasure" must have been some sort of holy relic, which they had needed to hold onto until that point for use in their Spring Equinox ritual. Records indicate that an equinox ritual did indeed take place. Whatever it consisted of was in all probability the reason why at least twenty of the mercenary soldiers who were defending the Cathars converted to their religion at the last moment, thus sealing their death warrants. The writers of Holy Blood, Holy Grail have theorized that the ritual had more to do with the equinox than with the Christian Easter, since Easter celebrated Christ's resurrection after the crucifixion, and the Cathars did not believe that Christ had died on the cross. But could it not have been both an observance of the equinox and an Easter ritual - one that actually repudiated the crucifixion? A letter written by Jean de Joinville, friend to French King Louis IX during the 13th century, stated that , "The king once told me how several men from among the Albigenses had gone to the Comte de Montfort... and asked him to come look at the body of Our Lord, which had become flesh and blood in the hands of their priest." Perhaps the Cathars did possess the true Body of Christ, and perhaps something about that body provided proof that Christ had not been crucified. Then again, as we were later to discover, Christ was not the only being whom the Cathars may have called "Lord." Nor were they the only possible possessors of the Holy Grail and the secret traditions of Christ whom the Catholic Church would decide to root out in the coming years.

The Knights Templar

According to chroniclers of their early years, the Knights Templar were founded in 1188 by Hughes de Payen, a vassal of the Count of Champagne. This occurred after they had presented themselves to Baldwin I, King of Jerusalem, whose older brother, Godfroi de Bouillon had led the crusaders to victory in the Holy Land almost twenty years previously. They proposed themselves as a order of fighting monks, who would protect the roadways for pious pilgrims journeying to Jerusalem. They were immediately given an entire wing of the royal palace as their headquarters - a wing that had been built upon the foundations of the Temple of Solomon. Thus they received their name, the Knights of the Temple.

For the next nine years they admitted no new members to their order - strange since the nine founding members hardly seem like they would have provided an adequate number of staff to protect all of the roads to the Holy Land. Furthermore, there is no evidence from contemporary chroniclers indicating that they even engaged in such activities. Guillame de Tyre, the chief chronicler of the age and an intimate associate of King Baldwin, does not even mention them, causing the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail to suspect that he had been silenced by the royal muzzle to cover up for the Templars' actual activities - excavating the Temple Mount. The authors speculate that when the Roman legions sacked the Temple in 70 A.D., they took only the most obvious loot, unwittingly leaving behind the most valuable treasure, chief among which would have been the Ark of the Covenant, and perhaps, the artifact which came to be known as the Holy Grail. This could have been secreted away by the Temple priests in any of the numerous tunnels known to exist beneath Solomon's Stables on the Temple Mount - stables which the Templars made use of during their nine-year stay. This could have, in fact, been the purpose behind the foundation of their order - a mission based upon knowledge that had been passed down from Christ's descendants to the Merovingians, and then on to the Templar founders. The main figures involved in the Templars' foundation (King Baldwin, the Count of Champagne, Andre de Montbard, Hughes de Payen, Bertrand de Blanchefort and Godfroi de Bouillon) were all descendants of Merovingian blood, and if they had been in on the family secrets, that could explain why they willingly pledged themselves, their money, and in the king’s case, the royal quarters to the cause. If they had been successful in their mission, it could explain how they acquired the capital with which they eventually created a vast empire.

During their first nine years they became famous throughout Europe as the selfless “Militia of Christ.” By 1127, most of the knights had returned to Europe, and in the following year, Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, Andre de Montbard’s uncle, published a pro-Templar tract entitled In Praise of the New Knighthood. At the Saint Bernard-inspired Council of Troyes, the Church officially recognized the Templars as a religious and military order dedicated to the defense of Christendom. Saint Bernard then assisted in the drawing up of their rules of conduct, based upon those of the Cistercian order of monks, another group upon whom Bernard had much influence. Templars were sworn to poverty and celibacy. They wore white mantels to symbolize their purity, emblazoned with the red cross patee. And just as the Merovingians were forbidden to cut their hair, the Templars were likewise forbidden to cut their beards. The Templars’ reputation for bravery was well-earned. They were not allowed to retreat from battle unless the odds outweighed them three to one, and when they were captured they were obliged to fight to the death rather than beg for mercy or ransom. They were also pledged to secrecy about the orders workings, and were inducted with a strange initiation ceremony about which there were many rumors. A few years later, there was another interesting development in their rule. In 1139, a former student of Saint Bernard's, Pope Innocent II, issued a papal bull stating that the Knights Templar would owe allegiance to none except the Pope himself, making them immune to the political whims of all authorities, both religious and secular.

As their fame grew, so did their ranks, and thus, their property holdings. The sons of European nobility swelled their membership, and the vast amounts of money and property donated by the new recruits swelled their territory and their coffers - for new recruits, as per their vow of poverty, were required to relinquish all property upon admittance to the order. Soon they stood at the helm of a huge, international empire over which they held complete independent sovereignty. During Christendom's Second Crusade, the Templars accompanied France's King Louis II into battle, and played a decisive role in preventing the war from becoming a total disaster. Over the next century, they secured their important role in international politics by utilizing their influence upon a number of kings, nobles, and ecclesiastic authorities. Many of these kings were financially indebted to the Templars, and some actually resided with them. The Grand Master of the Temple even stood by England's King John as he signed the Magna Carta. At times, it appeared that the Templars possessed the power to make or break a monarch's career according to their desire.

Their political influence spread in direct proportion to their huge banking operation. In fact, the modern institution of banking, in which money can be deposited in one location and withdrawn in another, is a Templar invention, along with the "cheque", likely named after the "chequerboard" pattern that was one of the Templars' most well-recognized motifs. This made it possible for pilgrims and travelers to journey safely without fear of roadside robbers, and the cheques were unforgable, as they were written in sophisticated secret codes for which the Templars became known. Almost every king or queen in Europe banked with them, as well as a number of Muslim leaders whom they dealt with on a regular basis. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail puts it, "The Templars thus became the primary money changers of the age, and the Paris preceptory became the center of European finance."

The Templars' enterprises put them in the position of being conduits for new forms of art, science, and craft, as well as new forms of thought and belief. They had access to new advances in agriculture, armaments, surveying, mapmaking, and navigation, and they were one of the first groups of people to employ the magnetic compass in their seafaring. They ran their own hospitals to treat wounded soldiers, and were at the forefront of modern medicine, bringing to the field a scientific point of view unusual among their contemporaries, including an unprecedented understanding of the principals of hygiene. They even made medical use of mold extracts, similar to the widespread use of penicillin as an antibiotic today. Their mastery of architectural principles, including the understanding of advanced mathematics (such as was used in the building of the Giza pyramid, for example), along with their patronage of the stonemasons' guilds, led to the development of Gothic architecture.

They were equally influential in bringing new religious and philosophical ideas into vogue throughout Europe, including blends of Islamic, Judaic, and Gnostic threads of thought, setting the stage for Europe's cultural Renaissance, which followed the medieval era and incorporated these same themes. Their ambiguous relationship with the Saracen enemy in the Holy Land, with whom they maintained a respectful peace whenever possible, led to the incorporation of a number of these new thought systems and scientific techniques, for Arab culture was still, at that time, a high civilization. There were even rumors of a close relationship with the Order of the Assassins, called by some authorities the Islamic equivalent to the Knights Templar. Like the Templars, they took oaths of secrecy, conducted strange ceremonies, and were obliged to fight with the same fanatical bravery.

But when their relationship with the Muslims began to deteriorate, the Templars' foothold in Jerusalem began to slip. King Baldwin IV of Jerusalem died in 1185. In the battle over the succession that resulted, the current Grand Master of the Knights Templar, Gerard de Ridefort, was said to have betrayed some oath made to the deceased king, initiating a near-civil war amongst the Europeans living in the Holy Land. He also managed to destroy the long-established truce between the Christians and the Saracens, and led the Christians into a battle at Hattin in 1187 that resulted in the end of their 100-year-long reign in Jerusalem. By 1291, almost the entire Holy Land was under Saracen control. The last Christian fortress, Acre, fell dramatically in May of that year.

The Templars set up new headquarters in Cyprus, but without the Holy Land to protect, or new territory to capture on behalf of Christendom, they lacked any clear-cut goals. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail suggest that at this point, the Knights Templar turned their attention towards a new ambition: creating their own independent European state. Other authors, such as Alan Butler and Stephen Dafoe, have suggested that Switzerland is a likely candidate for the planned Templar state, and even suggest that the Swiss nation is a direct result of this. Evidence they give includes the extensive Templar holdings that existed there, the Templar-style equilateral cross on their national flag, and the well-established role that Switzerland plays as a center of European finance. Also, in Valais, Switzerland, the capitol is called “Sion”, and is the center of a modern-day Templar order (the Grand Swiss Priory) dedicated to controlling the world by controlling its finances. However, the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail believe that the land which the Templars had picked to be the “New Jerusalem” was, in fact, the Languedoc region of Southern France - land of the Merovingian kings, whose descendants included the Templars’ founders. It was also the realm of the Cathar heretics, who, as it turned out, were closely associated with the Knights Templar as well.

It has been written that one of the Templars’ founders was a Cathar, and that their fourth Grand Master, Bertrand de Blanchefort, was from a “Cathar family.” So too were many of the order’s dignitaries. And although the Templars were officially neutral in regards to the Albigensian crusade, they did accept a number of Cathars into their ranks at that time, providing them with immunity from prosecution. They even allowed Cathar refugees to take shelter in their preceptories, and on some occasions did defend them militarily. According to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, “In the Languedoc, Temple officials were more frequently Cathar than Catholic”, and, “The Grand Master at the time... declared there was in fact only one true crusade - the crusade against the Saracens.”

But the Catholic crusade against heresy would soon be turned against the Templars themselves, and the Holy Inquisition, which had been formed to deal with the Cathar problem, would soon be torturing their knights. For by 1306, the Templars had made a most powerful enemy: King Philippe IV of France. He did not merely resent them because they owed no allegiance to him, being obliged solely to the Holy See, and constituted a military threat greater than his own armed forces. He also owed them a lot of money, which he could not afford to repay, but which he knew they held in great abundance. Furthermore, they had insulted him in the past by refusing him admittance to their ranks. Perhaps he had even heard about the treasure from Jerusalem that they supposedly possessed. Whichever the case, he had decided that he would do away with the Templars, not only in his own domains, but everywhere altogether. And the only other power he knew of that held the amount of international clout needed to execute the plan was the only power that held command over the Templars: the Papacy. But manipulating the Papacy was nothing new to King Philippe the Fair. He had already, as most historians will attest, played a guiding role in the kidnapping of Pope Boniface VIII and the poisoning of Pope Benedict XI. The current pope, Clement V, owed his very throne to Philippe, who had been responsible for his election. Even as the son of Ida de Blanchefort, from the same family as the Templars' fourth Grand Master, Clement V still could not resist pressure from Philippe the Fair. Philippe wanted to persecute the Templars for heresy.

The drama which unfolded thereafter gave rise to numerous legends, including the superstition surrounding "Friday the 13th." Philippe had drafted a list of charges, largely based on evidence gleaned from spies, and from a defected Templar who agreed to be a witness. He then issued secret orders to his seneschals throughout France, sealed, with instructions that they were to be opened at dawn on Friday, October 13, 1307, and implemented immediately. All Templars were to be arrested at once, and all of the order's property seized.

Despite the trouble the king went through to keep the plan secret, the Templars still seemed to have received some sort of warning, for the vast majority of their wealth, along with whatever holy relics they presumably possessed, had already been spirited away into trusted hands far from the king's reach. (Most of this could be achieved through their highly sophisticated network of banks.) The order's current Grand Master, Jacques de Molay, had just had all of the order's books burnt for no apparent reason. And one Templar who left the order had been told by the treasurer that this was a "wise" move, as danger for the order lurked around the corner. Also, a memo had been given to all of the Templar preceptories in France warning their members not to divulge any information to anyone about the order's customs and rituals. The Templars who were arrested went without struggle, as if they had been instructed to submit.

However, not all Templars were arrested. It is known that a group of them, all closely associated with the treasurer, escaped, taking with them, presumably, all the wealth and treasure they could carry. According to the legends, the Templars loaded the loot onto wagons, which they then transported to the coast, where eighteen ships awaited them at the Templar naval base at La Rochelle. These ships vanished without a trace shortly before the arrests.

The fate of the arrested knights varied. All were interrogated, and many were tortured into confessing. The confessions, as well as the accusations, all revolved around similar themes. A list of charges drawn up by the Inquisition on August 12th, 1308 reads:

> "Item, that in each province they had idols, namely heads.
> Item, that they adored these idols.
> Item, that they said that the head could save them.
> Item, that it could make riches.
> Item, that it could make the trees flower.

Item, that it made the land germinate.

Item, that they surrounded or touched each head of the aforesaid idol with small cords, which they wore around themselves next to the shirt or the flesh."

They were also accused, among other things, of homosexual rites, of baby sacrifice, of committing abortions, and of ritually trampling upon the Christian cross during their initiation ceremony. A widespread interpretation of this ritual, repeated often throughout the confessions, is that they were expressing their denial of the crucifixion, presumably because they had come across evidence that Christ did not die on the cross. This ritual could also have served as an introduction to a spiritual discipline that was older than Christianity. One aspirant, during the initiation ceremony, was supposedly told that he should not believe in Christ, but in a "higher God." A crucifix was then displayed, and he was told, "Set not much faith in this, for it is far too young." The accusations regarding this ritual, however, had been floating around the rumor mill since at least 1249.

The most widespread and consistent aspect of the confessions, however, involved the worship of one head in particular, specifically an idol named "Baphomet." Some said it was a man's head, some a woman's head. Some said that it was bearded, some that it was made of glass or crystal, and some said that it had two faces. A popular tale held that it was the head of the Templar's first Grand Master, Hughes de Payens, or that of John the Baptist. The latter seems a likely rumor to have been circulating amongst the Templars, for one of the theories surrounding the order is that they ascribed to the Johannite belief that John the Baptist was the true messiah, and Jesus a false prophet. Some even said that Baphomet was not a mere head, but a demon, perhaps the Devil himself - half male, half-female, half-human, and half-beast. This was the source for the 19th century occultist Eliphas Levi's well-known depiction of Baphomet, now incorporated into the Waite tarot deck as "the Devil." This popular image, sometimes referred to as "the Sabbatic Goat", was made to embody symbols of conflicting dualities. Thus the beast bears the breasts of a woman and the sex organs of a man. He is shown poised between the waxing and waning moon symbols with his right and left hands pointing up and down, respectively. Levi designed a sigil depicting an inverted pentagram with Baphomet's goat face super-imposed onto it, and called it the "Goat of Mendes." This symbol was later used by Anton LaVey's Church of Satan.

Yet there was another idolatrous head found during the raid on the Templar's Paris preceptory which presents an intriguing possibility about Baphomet. According to the written account, it was, “a great head of gilded silver, most beautiful, and consisting of the image of a woman. Inside were two head-bones wrapped in a cloth of white linen, with another red cloth around it. A label was attached, on which was written the legend “Caput 58 M.” Given the evidence that the Templars knew of and believed in the Grail family, descendants of Christ, and Mary Magdalene, some think that this idol contains the relics of Magdalene herself. After all, 5 +8 = 13, and M is the 13th letter of the alphabet, so “58M” could be a code signifying the name “Mary Magdalene.” However, there is another important detail to consider as well. The “M” was actually written as “□”, the astrological sign for “Virgo.” There is a symbolic connection between the figure of Mary Magdalene and the figure of Virgo. There is also a connection between Mary Magdalene and the goddess Venus, or Isis, upon whom “Virgo” is based.

As it turns out, Isis figures into a popular legend regarding the origin of Baphomet. According to the tale, a Templar called “the Lord of Sidon” was in love with a young woman named Yse (possibly derived from “Isis”) who died suddenly. On the night of her burial, he dug up her body and copulated with it. Nine months later a voice “from the Void” told him to go back to the grave, where he would find his son. There he discovered a head resting on a pair of legbones (perhaps the origin of the Templar’s famous skull and crossbones symbol.) The voice told him that if he was careful to guard the head, it would be “the giver of all things.” He took it with him and for the rest of his days it protected him. Later on, the tale relates, the Templar order got a hold of it and incorporated it into their rituals.

Despite the severity of the charges leveled against them by the Papacy, most Templars were able to confess and go on with their lives. A number of them escaped persecution altogether. In England, for instance, King Edward IV (Philippe’s son-in-law) took a protective stance towards the Templars, only pursuing them under extreme duress from the Pope, and then after most of them had already escaped. Those that were arrested often received light sentences involving a few years of penance in a monastery - not unlike the life they were used to living anyway. Their lands were given to the Knights Hospitaller of Saint John, now known as the “Knights of Malta”, and the military wing of the Vatican. It was an order that reportedly had much in common with the Templars, perhaps even certain belief systems, and there is evidence that some of the escaped Templars simply joined this rival order.

Where did the escaped English Templars go to? Most likely, Scotland, which provided a haven for renegade Templars from all over Europe. Scotland was at war with England at the time, so pressure from

King Edward would have been useless, and Scottish people at that time did not care much what the Pope thought of them either. Escaped Templars played an integral role in the history of Scotland, where the order was never officially dissolved. They are said to have fought by the side of Robert the Bruce during 1314's Battle of Bannockburn. They purportedly survived in Scotland at least until 1689, when, during the Battle of Killiecrankie (part of a revolt against the deposition of Scottish Stuart king James II by William of Orange) an ancient Templar device was found on the body of John Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee.

In the province of Lorraine, which was then part of Germany (and now part of France), the region's duke exonerated all Templars of heresy, instructing them to array themselves in the clothes of common people and blend in with the populace. The Templars were openly defiant in both Germany and Spain, where they were proclaimed innocent by their judges, and went on to live normal lives in other orders, such as the Teutonic Order, or the Knights Hospitaller. In Portugal, the order itself was cleared of all charges, and merely had to change its name, becoming the Knights of Christ.[5] This order was devoted specifically to sailing, and sponsored a number of history's most well-known explorers. Vasco de Gama was a member of the order, and Prince Henry the Navigator, speculated as having been among the few to explore (albeit secretly) the New World prior to Christopher Columbus, was a Grand Master. Most importantly, however, Christopher Columbus himself was the son-in-law of a Knight of Christ, and may have used his relative's maps to navigate his way to America, where his ships sailed under flags bearing the order's insignia, the red equilateral cross. The Templars also reputedly used their influence in the Teutonic Order to exact a measure of revenge against the Catholic Church, when they decided to support the Protestant Reformation of Martin Luther.

[5] For a number of years, most of Portugal's early kings were Grand Masters of this order.

Revenge was something that was definitely on the minds of escaped Templars, especially in regards to what happened to their last known Grand Master, Jacques de Molay. Although he had confessed to the charges, he later repudiated them, claiming that the confession had been made during torture, and was therefore not valid. He was thus consigned, in March of 1314, to be slow-roasted upon an open fire in a public square. Before he died, de Molay is said to have called on both Pope Clement and King Philippe to join him in death within a year. Clement died of dysentery within a month, and about eight months later, Philippe died of unknown causes. This, of, course, lent credence to the rumors that the Templars were adept at witchcraft.

Nor did the revenge end there. In 1789, the dying curse of de Molay re-emerged in the actions of French Freemasons, heirs to the traditions (and perhaps the secrets) of the Knights Templar. These Freemasons were responsible for orchestrating the French Revolution against both the Catholic Church, and the current political state. King Philippe's descendant, Louis XVI, was beheaded before a cheering crowd. As the king's head rolled off the guillotine, a man reportedly leapt onto the scaffold and flung Louis' blood all over the crowd, shouting "Jacques de Molay, thou art avenged!"

In many other ways, too, the Templars lived on. Their secrets and traditions were taken up by the Order of Freemasons, a secret society, derived partially from medieval stonemasons' guilds, which has included many of Europe, England and America's most influential political figures from the seventeenth to the nineteenth centuries. They have largely been given credit for both the French Revolution and the American Revolution, and are thought by many to constitute an international conspiracy that continues to this day. The Freemasons do indeed seem to have embraced ideas that would tend to be associated with the Templars, including "secrets" regarding Solomon's Temple, the Ark of the Covenant, the Holy Grail, and alternative interpretations of both the Old and New Testament, embracing a lot of so-called "apocryphal" legends. They also use a number of the same symbols that the Templars used, including the skull and crossbones, the equilateral cross, and the double-barred Cross of Lorraine. And of course, the Freemasons' approach in general tends to be "occult" and "Gnostic", just like the Templars, derived from secrets that have purportedly been passed down from ancient Egypt and even earlier, just as the Templar wisdom is said to have been derived. The Freemasons even have entire degrees dedicated to the mythos of the Knights Templar.

Through the aforementioned stonemasons' guilds, which eventually evolved into Masonic lodges, the Templars communicated to the world the secrets they had learned from their excavations of Solomon's Temple - secrets involving sacred geometry and architecture. This resulted in the stunning array of Gothic cathedrals that sprung up across Europe during the Middle Ages and immediately afterward. These cathedrals are like music expressed in architecture, based upon the principle of the Golden Mean, nature's most perfect mathematical proportion, which will be discussed at length later in this book. Within the dimensions of the cathedrals were contained, so they say, the ancient secrets of alchemy, and by the looks of them one can easily imagine that to be true.

Because of their renowned esoteric wisdom, the legend of the Templars has been utilized by a number of other occult groups throughout the centuries. The Rosicrucian Order, an influential element of the Renaissance soon to be discussed, based its own mysteries upon theirs, as did the "Order of New Templars", a neo-pagan white supremacist organization that played a part in the rise of the Third Reich, before being obliterated by that Reich's ironic anti-occult efforts. Even the inner order of the S.S., known as the Black Sun, was patterned after the Templars. Other, more innocuous occult figures have embraced the teachings of the Templars as well, such as H.P. Blavatsky and Rudolf Steiner. Then, of course, there are the numerous neo-Templar orders that proliferate throughout the Western world, mostly social clubs for middle-aged men, all of whom claim a direct pedigree derived from the original order. Without a doubt, the legend of the Templars will live on to seed the fertile plain of the human imagination well into the twenty-first century.

The Templar Conspiracy

For a number of reasons, several books, including Holy Blood, Holy Grail, have suggested that a conspiracy has contrived to distort the historical facts regarding the Knights Templar, and indeed, that the creation of the Templars themselves was the result of a conspiracy. One of the facts that seems to have been distorted is the date of the Templars' foundation: 1118. If the historians are correct, the Templars started in that year with nine knights, and did not add to their membership for another nine years. But it is known that by 1126 they had added four new members, so either the date of their foundation is wrong, or the bit about them admitting no new members for nine years is wrong. If the last piece of information is correct, then they would have actually been founded in 1111 or 1112. And there just so happens to be much evidence supporting that idea. For instance, in 1114, the Count of Champagne is known to have received a letter from the Bishop of Chartres regarding his intention to join "The militia of Christ", a nickname for the Templar order. Clearly, then, the existence of the Templars was already well-established.

This count of Champagne seems to have been at the center of the social circle that created the Templars. One-third of the nine knights who founded the Temple were vassals of the Count of Champagne, including Hughes de Payen, their first Grand Master. When the Count himself finally joined in 1124, he was therefore, in a reversal of traditional authority roles, pledging allegiance to one of his own vassals. There are other strange inter-connections as well. The Count also demonstrated his patronage to the Templars' sister order, the Cistercian Monks of Saint Bernard, when in 1115 he donated the land onto which Saint Bernard's Abbey of Clairvaux was built. Saint Bernard was also the nephew of one of the Templars' original nine knights: Andre de Montbard. The court of Champagne, located in Troyes, was furthermore the location of a number of activities with which the Templars were also associated. It was a center for cabalistic studies throughout the Middle Ages, birthplace of the earliest versions of the Grail romances, and the site of some of the Templars' most important holdings.

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail indicate that this conspiracy revolved around the treasure of Solomon's Temple - a treasure that they suspect included the so-called "Holy Grail" - and that this conspiracy was primarily composed of descendants of the Grail family, the Merovingians. These are the people who may have been in possession of hereditary secrets regarding the location of the treasure, which must have been the main purpose behind creating the Templars. It was also the reason why King Baldwin II gave them quarters on the Temple Mount, and why they kept so few members for the first nine years - so that it would be easier to protect the secret. The suggestion seems to be that the conspiracy officially began in 1104, during a meeting between the Count of Champagne and a number of nobles from the Brienne, Chaumont, and Joinville families, as well as the "liege lord" of Andre de Montbard. It was immediately after this that the Count of Champagne left on his first trip to the Holy Land. He made another such trip in 1114, apparently desiring to join the Templars, who were already in existence. Upon his return, he donated that land to the Cistercian order mentioned previously. Following this, the holdings of both the Templars and the Cistercians expanded exponentially. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail theorized that a conspiracy had been behind the formation and rapid growth of both orders, and that this conspiracy in fact constituted a third order in itself.

This third order, they surmised, seems to have been preoccupied with the Languedoc region of Southern France (where Rennes-le-Chateau is located), and around the Templar preceptory in nearby Bezu. Templar activities in this region came to a head at around 1153 with Bertrand de Blanchefort, whose ancestral home was located in that region. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail describe Blanchefort as "the most significant of all Templar Grand Masters", and as a protege of Andre de Montbard. Under Blanchefort's leadership they became highly-trained and organized, as well as a force to be reckoned with in European finance and politics. It was Blanchefort who donated to them the lands near Rennes-le-Chateau and Bezu upon which they built their preceptories. And in 1156, under Blanchefort's direction, a group of Germans were imported into the region by the Templars, purportedly to work in the region's numerous gold mines. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail states, "These workers were supposedly subjected to a rigid, virtually military discipline. They were forbidden to fraternize in any way with the local population, and were kept strictly segregated from the surrounding community." But what was all of this secrecy actually for - especially since the gold mines that they were supposedly working in had been emptied by Roman miners during the previous millennium? According to Cesar d'Arcons, an engineer hired to write up a report on the region's mineral deposits some time later, these Templar-employed German miners were not actually mining anything, but were excavating a subterranean crypt.

Whatever it was for which they were digging, they continued to take great pains to preserve the secret for many decades. By the end of the next century, the Templars had been invited by the lord of Bezu and Rennes-le-Chateau to dispatch a special contingent of Templars from Rousillon to Bezu, where they built a lookout post at the top of the mountain. No one knows why, however, since the pilgrim routes that ran through the area were already adequately protected. But as the locals will tell you, even unto this day, the Templars were actually there to guard a treasure - one clearly connected with what those German miners had been doing nearly a century earlier.

It is curious to note, with this in mind, that for reasons unspecified, the Templars stationed at Bezu and Rennes-le-Chateau were the only ones in France who went completely unpersecuted during the raid of 1307. Obviously, these knights had something up their sleeves that rendered them untouchable - a secret of some sort. And this secret was undoubtedly shared by that third, hidden order which I previously mentioned. That order is called the Priory of Sion.

The Priory of Sion

The “Prieure de Sion”, or “Priory of Sion (Zion)” first began publicizing itself, in modern times, at least, in 1956, when an explosion of written material regarding Rennes-le-Chateau, the Templars, and the Merovingians began to appear in France. The majority of this material appeared to the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail to have originated from the same group of people - although credited to divergent and supposedly unrelated authors. Most of these authors appeared to have inside knowledge of the Rennes-le-Chateau affair, and this information was leaked systematically through tantalizing tidbits that served to whet the reader’s appetite, and increase the aura of mystery already surrounding the whole affair. In short, it appeared to be “propaganda” which promoted the subject of Rennes-le-Chateau and the Merovingian monarchy on the part of this shadowy organization.

Some of the material appeared in mainstream books, newspapers, and magazines. For example, there was a series of best-selling paperbacks by Gerard de Sede, including The Accursed Treasure, written by a man who turned out to be an agent of this shadowy organization. His books were largely based on an informant named Pierre Plantard, the organization's leading figure. The rest of this explosion of materials, which are referred to in Holy Blood, Holy Grail as the "Priory Documents", took the form of papers, pamphlets, and privately-published limited edition books and magazines deposited quite purposefully in France's national library, the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris. Each of these would provide certain pieces of the puzzle which, when put together with the others, would begin to form a fuller, albeit still bewildering picture. Many of these were authored under obvious pseudonyms of symbolic significance, such as Antoine l'Ermite, named after Saint Anthony the Hermit, or "Madeleine Blancassal", derived from the French spelling of "Magdalene" and the names of the "Blanque" and "Sals" rivers, which converge at the village of Rennes-le-Chateau. The work of Ms. Blancassal was said to have been published by Switzerland's foremost Masonic lodge, Grand Loge Alpina. Strangely, the lodge itself denies this, although a researcher hired by the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail spotted it on the lodge’s library shelves.

Other “Priory Documents” (as Holy Blood, Holy Grail refers to them) were published under the names of actual people, some of whom died mysteriously shortly after their publication. For instance, there was Dossiers Secrets (Secret Dossiers), a strange collection of purported data pertaining to the Merovingians and the Priory of Sion. It contained genealogies, letters, newspaper clippings, and other scraps all thrown together, along with commentary from the author, “Henri Lobineau”, and some other unnamed commentator. However, within the Dossiers themselves it was revealed that “Lobineau” was a pseudonym, and it was claimed that the real author was one Leo Schidlof, who died in 1966. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail talked to his daughter, who denied that he had written the Dossiers, but said that during his life and especially on the day of his death a number of people had tried to contact him on the subject, which he swore he knew nothing about. Yet Secret Dossiers asserted that he had not only written or compiled most of the material in the book, but had also possessed a leather briefcase filled with secret documents pertaining to the Rennes-le-Chateau between 1600 and 1800. The Dossiers claimed that shortly before his death M. Schidlof passed the briefcase onto a courier named Fakhar ul Islam, who was supposed to meet in East Germany with an "agent delegated by Geneva" in February 1967, in order to transfer the briefcase to him. However, it is claimed that Fakhar ul Islam was expelled from East Germany before this could occur, and went back to Paris to "await further orders." His body was found on February 20 on the railway tracks at Melan, France, having been thrown from an express train. The details of Mr. Fakhar ul Islam's death turned out to be true, as the discovery of his decapitated body had been reported in the papers the following day. The briefcase, of course, was gone.

One of the most significant "Priory documents" is Le Serpent Rouge. This consists of a prose poem, thirteen stanzas in length, each dedicated to one of the houses in the thirteen-house zodiac system used by the Priory of Sion (which we will discuss more later on.) It also contained a Merovingian genealogy, two maps of medieval France, and a map of the grounds of the Seminary of Saint Sulpice. The poem, although cryptic, made clear allusions to Rennes-le-Chateau, Mary Magdalene, January 17th, Freemasonry, alchemy, and a host of other subjects pertaining to the mystery at hand. It appeared to provide, in coded language, step by step instructions for discovering the secret of Rennes-le-Chateau. The authors were purported to be named "Louis Saint-Maxent, Pierre Feugere, and Gaston de Koker", three men who, just days after the poem was deposited in the library, were found hanged without explanation.

According to the “Priory Documents”, especially those found in the Bibliotheque Nationale, there was indeed another order behind the foundation of the Knights Templar: the Priory of Sion. The purpose of the Priory, which has continued, unlike the Templars, intact unto the present day, was and is the preservation, support, and eventual restoration to the throne of the Merovingian bloodline. In fact, not only are the Merovingians considered by the Priory to still be the rightful kings of France, they are also considered to be eligible for other thrones throughout Europe, as well as that of Jerusalem. This is by virtue of the fact that they passed their divine lineage on, though dynastic intermarriage, to many of Europe’s leading royal and noble houses, and most especially to a certain few, including the lines of Blanchefort, Gisors, Saint-Clair/Sinclair, Plantard, Hapsburg, and Lorraine. The Priory, according to the documents, possessed in its day a great deal of clout in the realm of international politics, and it still does today, secretly commanding the allegiance of a number of key individuals in politics, diplomacy, banking and finance - especially in Europe, and especially in France.

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail found that there was in fact an Ordre de Sion which resided in Jerusalem at least as early as the turn of the twelfth century - a mere ten years after the supposed foundation of the Order, according to the documents, in 1090. Furthermore, their headquarters was the Abbey of Notre Dame du Mont Sion, an Abbey founded by Godfroi de Bouillon. The Priory Documents state that the Knights Templar were created specifically by the Ordre de Sion, with the help of guiding lights Hughes de Payen, Bisol de Saint Omer, Hughes, Comte de Champagne, and Andre de Montbard (said to have been made a member of the Ordre de Sion, in 1111, the same year in which Holy Blood, Holy Grail speculated the Templars to have actually been founded). In 1117, Sion supposedly had Baldwin I, who, they say, "owed his throne" to the Ordre de Sion, negotiate the constitution of the Knights Templar. But as we know, the Templars had already existed in a rudimentary form prior to that.

Baigent, et. al. did find evidence that the historical Ordre de Sion had connections to the Templars, including charters bearing the signature of Hughes de Payen along with those of known members of Sion. Even more convincing, the list of Templar Grand Masters included in Secret Dossiers was even more complete and correct than any previously published list, as if drawn from inside information. The authors also found evidence that the group which eventually became the Ordre de Sion had a hand in starting the Crusades in the first place. This group consisted of monks from the Southern Italian region of Calabria who in 1070 migrated to the Ardennes forest, then owned by Godfroi de Bouillon. This same group is mentioned in the works of Gerard de Sede as having been led by the Merovingian Prince Ursus. They were patronized by de Bouillon's aunt and foster mother, Mathilde de Toscan, duchess of Lorraine, who gave them land at Orval, near Stenay, and the site of Dagobert II's assassination. But then in 1108 they vanished completely, and nobody knows where they went. Holy Blood, Holy Grail, however, speculates that they may have followed Godfroi de Bouillon on his crusade to the Holy Land, where "he is known to have been accompanied by an entourage of anonymous figures who acted as advisors and administrators." Further, Gerard de Sede wrote that Peter the Hermit, de Bouillon's tutor and one of the main figures behind the undertaking of the Crusades, was a member of the Calabrian monks.

In the Secret Dossiers, there is a quote from historian Rene Grousse stating that the kingship of De Bouillon's brother, Baldwin I, rested upon a "royal tradition", itself "founded on the Rock of Zion", which was described as "equal" to that of all European dynasties. This is strange, considering that at that time, Baldwin's office as "King of Jerusalem" was an elected position. But if Baldwin was indeed a descendant of the Merovingians, and thus Christ and King David, this would explain the allusion to the "Rock of Zion", a reference to the sovereignty of David's god-ordained kingship and the divine right of his bloodline to rule. Further, if Baldwin had in fact been installed in his office by an organization which represented that bloodline, it would explain how he "owed his throne" to the Ordre de Sion. This is certainly what it sounds like when contemporary chronicler Guillame de Tyre writes that as soon as Jerusalem had been captured, a secret group of unknown men, one "a certain bishop from Calabria", met to offer the throne of the new kingdom to Godfroi de Bouillon. For whatever reason, he declined the "King" title, but accepted that of "Defender of the Holy Sepulcher", and when he died in 1100, his brother Baldwin gladly accepted the crown.

After this point, the Ordre de Sion is not mentioned again in history until 1152, when King Louis VII of France brought them ninety-five new members and gave them the priory of Saint-Samson at Orleans. Says Holy Blood, Holy Grail, of these new members, "twenty-six - two groups of thirteen each - are said to have entered the 'small Priory of the Mount of Sion', situated at Saint-Jean le Blare on the outskirts of Orleans."[6]

In 1188 there was a rift between the Order of Sion and the Order of the Temple. The Templars' current Grand Master, Gerard de Ridefort, had recently lost the Holy Land to the Saracens, and had also committed some kind of unspecified "treason." So in that year, during a ceremony called the "Cutting of the Elm", the Order of Sion officially disavowed the Templars and cut themselves off from them. As the Priory documents state, an event known as the "Cutting of the Elm" did occur at Gisors during that year, although the historical record of this event does not contain any reference to either the Order of Sion or the Knights Templar. It also does not appear to have ever been fully explained. Supposedly, there was an elm tree located in the "Champ Sacre", or "Sacred Field" at Gisors. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail write that, "According to medieval chroniclers the site had been deemed sacred since pre-Christian times, and during the twelfth century had provided the setting for numerous meetings between the kings of England and France." The Elm was, as the story goes, the only source of shade on the field. It was more than 800 years old, and "so large that nine men, linking hands could barely encompass its trunk." In 1188, during one of those historic meetings between the French monarch, Philippe II, and the English monarch, Henry II, a skirmish broke out between the two men's armies over the shelter provided by this tree. After three days of negotiations, Holy Blood, Holy Grail states that a "full-scale onslaught" ensued. The English "took refuge within the walls of Gisors itself, while the French are said to have cut down the tree in frustration. Philippe II then stormed back to Paris in a huff, declaring that he had not come to Gisors to play the role of woodcutter." Other accounts of the story include some other bizarre details. They say that Philippe announced to Henry that he intended to cut down the tree, and Henry's response was to reinforce the trunk with bands of iron. Holy Blood, Holy Grail tells us that:

> "...the following day the French armed themselves and formed a phalanx of five squadrons, each accompanied by a distinguished Lord of the realm, who advanced on the elm, accompanied by slingsmen, as well as carpenters equipped with axes and hammers. A struggle is said to have ensued, in which Richard Coeur de Lion, Henry's eldest son and heir, participated, attempting to protect the tree and spilling considerable blood in the process. Nevertheless... the tree was cut down."

After the Cutting of the Elm, the Order de Sion selected a new Grand Master, Jean de Gisors, changed their name to "Prieure de Sion", and adopted an odd nickname, "Ormus", again with the "M" written as the sign for Virgo, with the other four letters written inside of the symbol. "Ormus" is also the name of an Egyptian sage from Alexandria, who in A.D. 46 created an initiative order with the Rose Cross as its insignia. It is significant, then, that in that same year of 1188, the Prieure de Sion also adopted the subtitle “Order de la Rose-Croix Veritas.” They kept that bizarre nickname, Ormus, until 1306, the year before the downfall of the Knights Templar in France. In that year, 1307, Sion’s Grand Master, Guillaume de Gisors, received the golden head called “Caput 58 □” from the Order of the Temple. Apparently then, there was still some degree of cooperation between the two orders. However, it is strongly implied in Holy Blood, Holy Grail that only some members of the Temple at that time continued to receive Sion’s support, and that the Priory may have actually been involved in the persecution of the Templars. Guillame de Gisors was also close friends with Guillame Pidaye, who participated in King Philippe’s raid, indicating that he may have been acting as a double-agent, facilitating the raid on the one hand, and tipping off select Templars in time to escape on the other.

As the years progressed, the Priory itself became the target of Roman Catholic hostilities, albeit in a far less drastic fashion. In 1619, the Priory of Sion was evicted from their house at Saint-Samsom. They had incurred the wrath of the Pope and the King of France for spending extravagantly, boycotting Catholic services and being generally irreverent towards all authority. From that point on, they disappear from the pages of history, at least apparently, until their reemergence in the twentieth century. But in the meantime, the Priory of Sion, according to their own literature, experienced an illustrious series of Grand Masters, or "Nautonniers" (Navigators). Some of these names may be quite familiar to you. The list published in Secret Dossiers is as follows:

Prior to "Cutting of the Elm"

One can see that this list consists of a mixture of noblemen and women, some famous, some not, all of whom possessed Merovingian blood, along with a number of well-known artists, intellectuals and occultists, some of whom are among the most important in history. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail were able to identify in each purported Grand Master strains of unorthodox religious thought, as well as other activities consistent with Priory membership, and were also able to establish definitive personal links between each Grand Master, his predecessor, and his successor. According to the Priory's statutes, published in the "Priory documents", the grand mastership is hereditary by default, and electoral in case of vacancy, explaining how even non-bloodliners could obtain the office. However, it is also possible that we do not know the true family history of each of these individuals, and that there may indeed be some "Grail genes" residing within their blood, for it seems unlikely to us that they would have chosen leaders completely outside of the family. This perhaps explains why some of the Grand Masters are listed as having taken office at ages as young as six, and why, of the famous ones, many assumed office prior to achieving their fame. Perhaps it is worth considering whether or not the Priory may have had a hand in the accomplishments that made these people famous. Perhaps these men allowed themselves to be used as pawns in the Priory of Sion's strategic plot for world domination. Once the light of the Holy Grail is shined upon the works and activities that encompassed these men's lives, we can see that behind the familiar facade of history are the unseen hands that have guided the destiny of civilization, manipulating hearts and minds in accordance with some obscure grand plan.

Chapter Two: The Underground Stream

"Beneath this marble shaft, as black as coal rises the Fountain of Fortune. He who drinks of it will suffer dire misery. For this spring was brought forth by the sorcerer Vergil, who laid his curse upon it.

Nicolas Flamel

The first figure on the list of Grand Masters who is not known to have had royal blood was Nicolas Flamel, owner of a small Parisian bookshop who became one of the fifteenth century's most renowned alchemists. Flamel was intrigued by the concept of alchemy, and longed to get his hands on the fabled Sacred Book of Abraham the Jew, Prince, Priest and Levite to that Tribe of Jews Who by the Wrath of God were Dispersed Amongst the Gauls - a book which purported to disclose the secret of the Philosopher's Stone. One night he dreamt that an angel came to him and bequeathed him this book, with the promise that he would "see in it that which no man will be able to see." Shortly afterwards, a cash-strapped student walked into his shop and offered to sell him a copy of the very book in question. Flamel, of course, snapped it up right away.

At first he did not know what to make of it. Bound in copper plating and covered inside and out with symbols completely foreign to this advanced master of the occult, it proved, at first, indecipherable. It remained so for the next twenty-one years, torturing the aging bookseller, until he finally resolved to seek out a Jew conversant in the Cabala who would be capable of reading it. Jews had been expelled from France at that point, so he went to Spain, then a safety zone for both Jewish and Muslim esotericists, under the guise that he was taking a pilgrimage to the Cathedral of Saint James of Compostela. He found no help there, but on the way back, he met a Jewish Cabalist named Maestro Canches, who was able to elucidate for him the key to the book's code. Flamel had not brought the entire book, however, but only a few pages, and agreed to bring the old Jew back with him so that they could decode the rest of the book. Flamel even had him converted to Christianity so that he would not technically be guilty of smuggling a Jew into France. Unfortunately, Maestro Canches died on the trip to Paris. But he had given Flamel the information he needed to be able to decode the rest of the book, and on January 17th (there's that date again) Flamel is said to have transmuted mercury into gold with the use of the Philosopher's Stone.

From that moment on, Flamel lived a comfortable, but not extravagant lifestyle, well beyond the means of most small bookshop owners, obviously having discovered in the Philosopher's Stone the source of perpetual wealth. He and his wife Pernelle opened a new store and founded a number of churches and hospitals, which they decorated with strange, occult symbols derived from The Book of Abraham the Jew. He spent the remainder of his life writing treatises on alchemy. But it was only to his wife and his nephew Perrier that he left his testament revealing the secret of the Philosopher's Stone, and then only after his purported death at age 80, in 1418. He was buried at Saint Jacques la Boucherie, where his bookshop was located. On his tombstone were carved a sun, a key, and a closed book. These, along with the other alchemical symbols represented on his various properties, were removed over time by treasure hunters, who attacked his grave and former domains searching for his secrets. One of these persons was said to have found, beneath the foundations of Saint Jacques la Boucherie, vials full of red "projection powder."

As the generations passed, one of the descendants of Flamel's nephew, "Dubois", came into possession of the projection powder, an used it in a magic show he put on for King Louis XIII in which lead balls were changed into gold. Immediately afterwards he was interrogated by an important historical personage named Cardinal Richelieu, who was trying to wrench from him the secret of alchemy. All this resulted in was Richelieu's frustration and Dubois' execution, whereupon Richelieu seized all of his property, as well as that of his illustrious ancestor. Richelieu had Flamel's houses turned inside out in search of secrets and treasure, even opening the man's coffin - which, according to rumor, was found empty. (Indeed, "Flamel sightings" occurred numerous times throughout the centuries following his death.) Richelieu successfully got his hands on The Book of Abraham the Jew, and built an alchemical laboratory in which he tried out various experiments. But he was unable to fully interpret the book, and failed to transmute anything. After that most of the text of The Book of Abraham the Jew became lost, leaving only the diagrams, which have been published numerous times since.

What is there to indicate that Nicolas Flamel was in fact a member of the Priory of Sion? Well, for one thing, the manner in which he just happened to come across The Book of Abraham the Jew, which he had been searching for his entire life, and then just happened to run across the right man to help him interpret it, is indicative of involvement in a secret society. It was rather like the way in which Berenger Sauniere came across the parchments, and then had them interpreted at Saint Sulpice, after which he, like Flamel, became inexplicably wealthy. Then there is the title of the book itself, The Book of Abraham the Jew, Prince, Priest and Levite to that Tribe of Jews Who by the Wrath of God Were Dispersed Amongst the Gauls. This indicates a Prince of a Jewish tribe that became dispersed in Gaul, now France. Jesus supposedly fled to Gaul after the crucifixion partially because there already existed a large Jewish and semi-Jewish population in that region, perhaps the remnants of one of Israel's lost tribes. Then there is the fact that Flamel learned the book's secret on a pilgrimage to Saint James of Compostela, the purported burial place of Jesus' brother James. More interesting is that fact that the pilgrim route to Saint James of Compostela passes very near Rennes-le-Chateau. Then, of course, there is the date of the first presumed alchemical transmutation, January 17th - the date of Sauniere's stroke, Marie de Blanchefort's death, and the Feast Day of Saint Sulpice. Then there is the absolute secrecy with which Flamel guarded the key to the Philosopher's Stone, only divulging it to family - his wife and his nephew. And finally, there are the actions of Cardinal Richelieu, indicating that he knew for a fact that Flamel was in the possession of a real secret.

Interestingly, Cardinal Richelieu is discussed extensively in Holy Blood, Holy Grail. During the 1600s, he constituted the real power behind Louis XIII's throne. And in 1633, out of a desire to wrench Southern France from the influence of Spain and Austria, he brought France into the Thirty Years War against those two nations (who represented the Catholic side of the conflict), in favor of the Protestant armies of Sweden and Germany (whose leader, Elector Frederick, Palatinate of the Rhine, was strongly supported by the Rosicrucian thinkers of the time). This is a strange position for a Catholic Cardinal to take, and the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail indicate that Richelieu may have been a Rosicrucian himself – which might mean that he was connected with the Priory of Sion for whom the Rosicrucian order may have been simply a front. Perhaps when Richelieu raided Flamel's domains, he was just acting as an agent of the Priory, attempting to repossess property that was rightfully theirs. Or perhaps he was a double-agent.

Rene d'Anjou

The next Nautonnier on Sion's list worth examining is Rene d'Anjou. Though little known today, Rene d'Anjou was one of the most influential figures of the Renaissance, and came to assume a huge collection of titles, including: Count of Bar, Provence, Piedmont and Guise, Duke of Calabria, Anjou, and Lorraine, and King of Hungary, Naples, and Sicily, Aragon, Valencia, Majorca, Sardinia, and Jerusalem; the last being titular, inherited from his ancestor, Godfroi de Bouillon through the House of Lorraine. Rene has been credited with inventing the double-barred Cross of Lorraine, associated with his ruling house and later the French Resistance movement, but the Templars were known to have used it at least 200 years earlier, and it can probably be traced back further as well. Rene was born on January 16, 1408, in the Lorraine castle at Angers. In 1419, at the age of ten, he was married to Isabel of Anjou, then nine. It was also at this time that Rene was installed as Grand Master of the Priory of Sion. Given Rene's Angevin ancestry, it is natural that he would have been chosen for such an august position, even at a tender age. His uncle, Louis, Cardinal of Bar, was his regent for another ten years, until he was ready to become the helmsman of the order than would become the most influential factor in his hugely significant life. Rene also belonged to some other fraternal orders, including the Order of the White Greyhound, the Order of the Fidelity, and his own self-created chivalrous Order of the Ship and Double Crescent (a revision of the Order of the Crescent created by Louis IX) - which for some reason was suppressed by the Pope.

In 1415, Rene's sister Mary was married to the Dauphin of France, later King Charles VII. Charles' father had been recently overthrown by King Henry V of England, who then proclaimed himself Regent of France and married the Dauphin's sister, Katherine de Valois. The French were under the domination of the English, but a ray of hope came in the form of Jeanne d'Arc.[7] She first appeared in 1429 at the fortress of Valcouleurs, announcing her divine mission to deliver France from the English overlords, thereby fulfilling an old prophecy by Merlin about a maid from Lorraine who would be sent by God to liberate France. This, she claimed, would require her to visit the Dauphin at his court at Chinon. Instead of requesting that the commandant at Valcouleurs escort her there, she specifically asked for Rene d'Anjou, entreating his father-in-law, the Duke of Anjou, for "your son, a horse, and some good men to take me into France." This implies that she already had Rene in mind. It was Rene's mother, Iolande d'Anjou, who took Jeanne d'Arc under her wing, convincing the court and the Dauphin that she was in fact the prophesized "Maid of Lorraine." Iolande even officiated over the examination to ensure her virginity, which made a very dramatic scene in the Joan of Arc film, The Messenger. In the end, it was Rene who accompanied Jeanne to Chinon, and he is said to have been by her side at the siege of Orleans. He also led the main battle at Senlis and was one of Jeanne's captains at the siege of Paris. Some contemporary chroniclers even wrote that the two were lovers. It was Rene whom King Charles VII sent to inform a deflated Jeanne that the siege of Paris was being withdrawn. Afterwards she was captured, sold to the English, convicted of heresy for claiming to speak to God, and then burnt at the stake. It is said that she clutched a Cross of Lorraine at her breast as she prepared to die. All of this seems to indicate that the appearance of the Maid of Lorraine was something orchestrated by the House of Lorraine from the very beginning, with full consent from all parties. But as the authors Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh and Henry Lincoln write, "In the centuries that followed, a systematic attempt seems to have been made to expunge all trace of Rene's possible role in Jeanne's life."

[7] A statue of Jeanne d'Arc can be found on the grounds of Sauniere's church at Rennes-le-Chateau.

In 1431, Rene inherited the Duchy of Lorraine from his father-in-law, but was imprisoned in Dijon when the Duke of Burgundy staked a rival claim to his inheritance. He was eventually freed with the help of his wife, Isabel, but not before leaving his own two children behind as hostages for the next three years! Rene developed an interest in painting that would last a lifetime, and is known to have decorated one of the rooms in the castle that was his prison. Later, when Rene and Isabel became the Duke and Duchess of Lorraine, court was held at their castles throughout Anjou and Provence. These courts included Jewish cabalists, astrologers and even the physician Jean de Saint-Remy, grandfather of Nostradamus. In fact, Christopher Columbus was a member of the court for a while, and Rene was the person who gave him his first ship's commission to Tunis.

Rene's court would hold constant soirees, poetry readings, mystery plays, and "allegorical" knightly tournaments called "pas d'armes", a combination of battle and pre-scripted play. Rene established rules and traditions for knighthood, chivalry and jousting which are still observed by chivalrous orders and anachronistic societies today. He wrote a couple of books on the subject, one being Livre des Tournies, or Manual for the Perfect Organization of Tournies, which includes things like how to make a challenge, how to correctly display banners, and how to show ladies proper respect. The other was called Battles and the Order of Knighthood and the Government of Princes. Today this rests in the library of Lord William Sinclair and bears the names "Jesus - Mary - John" on the cover - names, we now know, of some of Rene's biblical ancestors. The court manifested a fairy tale-like legend around itself, as it perpetuated the stories of the Holy Grail, King Arthur, Tristan and Isolde, etc. Rene was preoccupied in particular with the Grail story, and is known to have collected "Grail cups." His favorite possession was a red crystal goblet of Egyptian origin which he believed had been used by Jesus and Mary Magdalene during their wedding at Cana. An inscription on the side of the cup read: “He who drinks well will see God. He who quaffs at a single drop will see God and the Magdalene.”

Rene d’Anjou’s influence on the European culture of the Renaissance was so great that we might wish to call it the “Rene-sance.” He befriended Cosimo de Medici while in Italy, and many believe him to have been the impetus for a number of important decisions made by de Medici during this time. These include: the founding of Europe’s first public library in San Marco in 1444, which was loaded with rare manuscripts on neo-Platonic, Pythagorean, Gnostic and Hermetic thought; the instruction of the University of Florence to begin teaching Greek; and the creation of an academy for the study of Pythagoras and Plato, which sparked a number of other, similar institutions. Rene is also credited with introducing into this intellectual renaissance the theme of “Arcadia”, the Greek Paradise. In his court at Tarascon, Rene staged The Pas d’Armes of the Shepherdess. The Shepherdess in the play was his mistress at the time, who, according to Baigent, et. al in Holy Blood Holy Grail, was, “an explicitly Arcadian figure, embodying both romantic and philosophical attributes.” She presided over a tournament fought by knights who represented conflicting ideals which must be reconciled - a very Hermetic concept. Rene also displayed other Arcadian themes in his famous paintings, depicting himself standing next to a tombstone.[8] The presence of a tomb is also implied in his painting Le Fountaine de Fortune, which was an illustration from his illuminated manuscript, Les Coeur d'Amours Espris (The Book of the Heart Possessed by Love.) In this picture, the "fountain" mentioned in the title looks distinctly like a tombstone, and it is the source of an "underground stream", Alpheus (from the Greek for "source"). Alpheus is a real river in Arcadia, Greece, and it really does go underground, re-emerging at the Fountain of Arethusa in Spain. Hermetically, this river represents an "underground stream" of secret knowledge passed down through the "subterranean" Grail families and the organizational offshoots of the Priory of Sion.

Rene married his second wife, Jeanne of Laval, in 1454, and stayed with her until he died at Aix-la-Chappelle on July 10, 1480, leaving behind a huge and carefully organized library. The tombstone that he had chosen for his burial at the Church of Saint Maurice was rather odd, as it was surmounted by a painting he had made showing a dying, half-skeletal king sitting on a throne, holding a scepter and orb, his crown slipping off of his head as it leans to the side. It is fitting that a man who had much worldly power, and yet was so spiritually adept, was so comfortable with his own inevitable mortality.

[8] Recall that a tomb, a shepherdess and Arcadia are the main elements of the Nicholas Poussin painting The Shepherds of Arcadia, mentioned in the parchments found at Rennes-le-Chateau.

Iolande de Bar

Rene’s daughter, Iolande de Bar, followed him as Grand Master of the Priory. She had married Ferri, Lord of Sion-Vaudemont, who was also a member of Rene d’Anjou’s Order of the Crescent. Iolande turned Sion-Vaudemont into a holy site for the region of Lorraine - or rather, she returned to it the holy status it had enjoyed since pre-Christian times. It had once been the location of a statue of the Teutonic goddess Rosemerthe, and during the early Christian era it was known by the Judaic-sounding name Mount Semita. During the reign of the Merovingians it had housed a statue of the Virgin, and this statue had once been declared “Sovereign of the Comte de Vaudemont”, as well as the “Protectress of Lorraine.” A festival for the “Queen of Heaven” was held there every year, and at least as early as the 14th century there was, centered in Sion-Vaudemont, a secret society called the “Confraternity of Chevaliers of Sion”, which originated at the abbey on Mt. Sion in Jerusalem, and would appear to be the same as the Priory of Sion.

Sandro Filipepi

Following Iolande on the list of Nautonniers is Sandro Filipepi, better known as the artist Botticelli. He is most famous for his much-copied depiction of The Birth of Venus, garbed with nothing but her flowing red hair, rising from the half-shell. One of his biggest patrons was Georges Antoine Vespucci, tutor to Rene d'Anjou's grandson Rene. He also studied under two masters whom Rene d'Anjou had patronized, Filippo Lippi and Mantegna - as well as under Verrocchio, an alchemist and Hermeticist whom Leonardo da Vinci (the Grand Master who followed Botticelli at the Priory) would himself study under. And although Botticelli is not known to have had Merovingian blood, those who patronized him did, including members of the Medici and Gonzague families.

Botticelli was part of the "neo-Platonic" movement popular during his age, which sought to resurrect classical aesthetics and revitalize the myths of ancient Greece and Rome, as well as the ancient precepts of Hermeticism and sacred geometry, by incorporating them into new art forms, often depicting them under the guise of Roman Catholic symbolism. He also repeatedly featured the theme of the "underground stream" in his work. In the center of Madonna of the Magnificat is a winding river issuing from a clearly subterranean source. Similar streams are prominently displayed in Celestial Annunciation, and hidden in the background of Adoration of the Magi. Botticelli was clearly an occultist, and based most of his paintings on a pentagonal grid. He is also a likely candidate for the designer of the first deck of tarot cards - the other being his tutor, Mantegna.

Leonardo da Vinci

One of the most audacious claims made on the list of Priory Grand Masters is that Leonardo da Vinci followed Botticelli in the assumption of that office. As one of the most brilliant minds in known history, this accomplished painter, sculptor, sketch artist, architect, scientist and inventor embodied the definition of the term "Renaissance man", and would make a proud addition to any organization's membership. He had been friends with the previous Grand Master, both having been apprenticed to Verrocchio and patronized by the Medici, Este and Gonzague families. Leonardo also had a patron in Francesco Sforza, a founding member of Rene d'Anjou's Order of the Crescent, and one of Rene's best friends.

It is now known, and was known at the time, that Leonardo was a bit eccentric in his religious and philosophical beliefs - heretical, even. He appears to have endorsed an old Christian heresy stating that Jesus had a twin brother named Thomas. This belief would seem to be illustrated in Da Vinci's The Last Supper, where one of Christ's disciples is depicted bearing an uncanny resemblance to Christ himself. Also, the depiction of Saint John sitting next to him looks decidedly female, perhaps a covert acknowledgement of Christ's marriage to Mary Magdalene. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail also felt that this theme was illustrated by a sketch of Da Vinci's called The Virgin with Saint John the Baptist and Saint Anne. In the book The Templar Revelation, authors Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince further ascribe to Leonardo a belief in the Johannite heresy, which states that John the Baptist was, in fact, the true Christ, and Jesus a usurper. This cult they identified with a gesture, made with the right index finger pointing skyward and the palm facing inward, which can be found depicted in numerous works of Da Vinci's, and in the works of other Renaissance artists as well, always associated with John. In the same book the authors theorize that Leonardo may have, in fact, created the famed relic the Shroud of Turin as a hoax, using a then unknown photographic technique which he may very well have invented.

The Campaign Against the House of Valois

During the sixteenth century, the Priory of Sion and the Grail families, including the houses of Guise and Lorraine, embarked on a conspiracy to oust the ruling Valois dynasty and reclaim the French throne for Merovingian blood. The conspiracy spanned three generations, and the terms of three Priory of Sion Grand Masters: Connetable de Bourbon (a.k.a. Charles de Montpensier), Ferdinand de Gonzague, and Louis de Nevers. The plot came closest to fruition between 1550 and 1570 due to the efforts of Charles, cardinal of Lorraine, and his brother Francois, duke of Guise. They were both cousins of Connetable de Bourbon and relatives of the Gonzague family, each of which provided financial and moral support for the Lorraine cause. Although historians have characterized the two brothers as cruel and fanatical Catholics, Holy Blood, Holy Grail describes them as opportunists who took advantage of both Catholic and Protestant factions whenever it suited them. As the book describes, "In 1562… the Council of Trent, the cardinal of Lorraine launched an attempt to decentralize the papacy - to confer autonomy on local bishops and restore the ecclesiastical hierarchy to what it had been in Merovingian times.”

By the following year, Francois de Guise was within reach of the French throne, when he was quite suddenly assassinated. The cardinal of Lorraine died a dozen years later, but the conspiracy continued with the next cardinal of Lorraine and the next duke of Guise. At the helm of this conspiracy was Priory of Sion Navigator Louis de Gonzague, duke of Nevers, and the banner they employed was the Cross of Lorraine. The conspirators succeeded in exterminating the Valois line, but ironically, by that point the House of Guise was itself near extinction, and could not bring forth a legitimate candidate for kingship.

Nostradamus

Besides the known members of the Priory of Sion, there were others who throughout the generations lent their hands in assistance to their cause. According to the Priory documents and Gerard de Sede, this included the famous prophet Nostradamus, astrologer to the French court, and an advisor to Catherine de Medici (the mother of Mary, Queen of Scots). He most certainly would have been in a position to: (a) pass along sensitive information to the Priory that he may have been told or overheard, and in particular (b) provide the French court with faulty astrological predictions that would have worked to the conspirators' advantage. In fact, Nostradamus' famous quatrains may not even have been prophecies, but instead secret messages for the Priory of Sion, descriptions of past events, or plans for future machinations pertaining to their conspiratorial plot. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail puts it:

"...there is no question that some of Nostradamus' prophecies were not prophecies but referred, quite explicitly, to the past - to the Knights Templar, the Merovingian dynasty, the history of the house of Lorraine. A striking number of them refer to Razes - the old comte of Rennes-le-Chateau. And the numerous quatrains that refer to the advent of 'le Grand Monarch'... indicate that this sovereign will derive ultimately from the Languedoc."[9]

Nostradamus seems to have been admitting that there was more than met the eye in regards to his gift of prophecy when he described it as,

[9] The importance of this reference will become obvious later on when I discuss in greater detail the concept of the "King of the World."

"An emotional tendency inherited from a line of ancestors." Perhaps his ancestors and the ancestors of the Merovingians were one and the same.

Gerard de Sede had a number of details to add regarding Nostradamus' relationship with the Grail families and the Priory of Sion. He says that before Nostradamus became famous as a prophet, he spent a great deal of time in the Lorraine region, and that this was a sort of probationary period, following which he was initiated into the Priory's secrets. As the story goes, he was shown a very secret, very ancient book, which provided the basis for his subsequent "prophecies." This book was shown to him at the Abbey of Orval, which had been donated by Godfroi de Bouillon's foster mother, and which, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, was the birthplace of the Priory of Sion. Up until the period of the French Revolution, books of prophecies attributed to Nostradamus continued to issue from Orval.

Robert Fludd

The next Nautonnier on the list after Louis de Nevers was Robert Fludd, known as the "John Dee of the 15th century."[10] He was one of the more formative influences on the body of esoteric thought that is now called "Western magic": including alchemy, cabala and Hermeticism. Although not publicly known to have been a member of the then-developing Rosicrucian brotherhood, he did write that that the "Magia, Cabala and Alchymia of the Brothers of the Rosy Cross" was of the "highest good." He was a prominent member of the London College of Physicians, and was patronized by both James I and Charles I, from whom he rented land in Suffolk. And perhaps most amazingly, Fludd was on the committee that determined the translation of the King James Bible.

Robert Fludd's father had been friends with the Priory's previous Grand Master, Louis de Nevers, and had sent Robert to study at Oxford, which John Dee had attended and there formed a secret society of student occultists. After Oxford, Fludd traveled the continent, and met with a number of influential members of the Rosicrucian movement. Then in 1602, he was commissioned to tutor Henry of Lorraine's sons, especially Charles, duke of Guise. He continued his relationship with Charles for the next twenty years. By then Charles had married Henriette-Catherine de Joyeuse, whose possessions included Couiza and Arques, right near Rennes-le-Chateau.

Western occultism

It was during and immediately after this time that the Priory plot to seize the French throne for Merovingian blood took a new turn - with the new claimant to the office issuing not from Guise, but from its sister house: that of Lorraine. Their candidate was Gaston d'Orleans, Louis XIII's younger brother, who had married the duke of Lorraine's sister. Among his supporters was Charles, duke of Guise. Although the attempted deposition of King Louis failed, the monarch confronted another problem, which favored his opposition - his inability to produce a child. But then in 1638, twenty-three years into a childless marriage, his wife, Anne of Austria, suddenly became pregnant. According to both contemporary and subsequent rumors, the true father was also the true power behind the throne: Cardinal Richelieu, mentioned previously in the section on Nicolas Flamel. Another theory states that it was Richelieu's successor, Cardinal Mazarin, and that he and Anne were secretly married after Louis XIII's death.

The Fronde and the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrament

The birth of the "king's son" ruined Gaston d'Orleans' bid for the throne, but it sparked the beginning of a civil war that would continue off and on for the next decade, known as the Fronde - an attempt to remove Cardinal Mazarin and Louis XIV from their positions. This civil war, consisting largely of highly-orchestrated "popular uprisings", was sponsored by the same families associated with the Grail blood and the Priory of Sion that have consistently been the instigators behind our entire story. And for their headquarters these "frondeurs" chose the ancient Merovingian capitol of Stenay, near the location of Dagobert II's assassination, as though they were making the statement that the ultimate aim of the plot was in fact the avengement of Dagobert's death.

The "Priory documents" state that during the Fronde years, the Priory "dedicated itself to opposing Mazarin." As the documents say, it did so under the facade of another fraternal organization, one acknowledged by history to have been at the forefront of the Fronde - the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement. The documents state that the Priory of Sion was the Compagnie de Saint-Sacrement.

History tells us that the Compagnie was formed around 1629 by a close associate of Gaston d'Orleans, although he is the only founding member who is known. The rest of the group's upper hierarchy were anonymous, and even the low-ranking members did not know who they were. Of these lower-ranking members, some of them have been named: the duchess of Longueville's brother, the bishop of Alet (near Rennes-le-Chateau); Charles Fouquet (brother of the Superintendent of Finances, whose other brother wrote that letter to Nicolas Poussin mentioned previously); Saint Vincent de Paul (to be discussed later); and Jean-Jacques Olier, founder of the Seminary of Saint Sulpice, which was used as the Compagnie's headquarters. The members did not understand or question the orders they were given, and they were not permitted to communicate with one another. The main thing that bonded them together was a mysterious and elusive secret, what chroniclers referred to as "the Secret which is at the core of the Compagnie." The order's own statutes state that, "The primary channel which shapes the spirit of the Compagnie, and which is essential to it, is the Secret."

The purpose behind the Compagnie has been, to historians, completely confusing. On the surface, it claimed to be devoted to charitable work, but underneath the surface, it was much more devoted to spying on behalf of the frondeurs, and infiltrating the upper echelons of government, nearly dominating, at times, the parliament, judiciary, and police, as well as holding key positions in the king's cabinet. Saint Vincent de Paul was made confessor to Louis XIII, and Anne of Austria was, for a period, completely malleable in the hands of the Compagnie, who managed to turn her against Mazarin for a brief span.

Another ambiguous aspect of the Compagnie was their religious affiliation. Historians present the Compagnie as representing rigidly conservative Catholicism, and as being devoted to eliminating "heresy." Yet many of the group's known members were Protestants. Furthermore, why should such an organization be opposed to arch-Catholic Mazarin? And if it was heresy they were against, why did the Catholic hierarchy of the time refer to the Compagnie as heretical it itself? They were charged, quite reminiscent of the Templars, of "impious practices", and bizarre, unnatural initiation ceremonies. Some of them were even threatened with excommunication, a threat which did not seem to faze these supposed "arch-Catholics."

Even though Cardinal Mazarin and Louis XIV had rallied against them for years, the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement carried on as normal, well past 1660, when the king finally ordered their dissolution. But in 1665, they concluded, according to the "Priory documents", that they could not continue in their "present form", and withdrew from public light, recalling all of their official documents and sealing them away in Saint Sulpice. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail point out that these documents would then have been available to the decoder of the Rennes-le-Chateau parchments, Emile Hoffet, later on. But in one form or another, the Compagnie is known to have operated into the next century, tormenting Louis XIV, and some say it continued into the 1900s. They were mentioned in a negative context by the royally patronized writer Moilere in his play Le Tartuffe, and the Compagnie actually used its conspiratorial ties to have the play suppressed for the next two years. Meanwhile, the Compagnie had its own literary propagandists in La Rochefoucald and La Fontaine, both known members of the Fronde and the Compagnie who used allegorical satire to attack the king. And in the case of La Fontaine, the king attacked back, attempting to bar his entrance to the Academie Francaise, the French literary academy. Interestingly, La Fontaine was patronized by the duke of Guise, the duke of Bouillon, and Gaston d'Orleans' widow.

Johann Valentin Andrea and the Rosicrucians

Holy Blood, Holy Grail theorizes that the Compagnie may also have been connected to the then-developing Rosicrucian brotherhood, which was at that time being led by current Priory of Sion Grand Master, Johann Valentin Andrea. The flames of Rosicrucianism were then being fanned by Andrea's Rosicrucian Manifestos, and The Chemical Wedding of Christian Rosenkreutz, both published anonymously, although Andrea later confessed to writing them "as a joke." Chemical Wedding, however, reads less like a joke and more like a complex web of Hermetic, alchemical and astrological symbolism, coupled with veiled allusions to political and religious conflicts then occurring. Written from the perspective of the Rosicrucian brotherhood's legendary namesake, it incorporates neo-Platonic allegory, elements of the myths of Osiris, Venus, Deucalion, Atlas, and many others, as well as allusions to a mysterious "Princess" whose office must be restored. And like the Knights Templar, Rosenkreutz supposedly wore a white tunic and mantle with a red cross.

As a whole, the Rosicrucian Manifestos, which allegedly issued from an "invisible" secret society in France and Germany, predicted a new golden age of Heaven on Earth, an Arcadian paradise worthy of Rene d'Anjou's imaginings - a world order reflecting harmonious cosmic laws in which the spirit of man would be freed to pursue its God-given destiny. They also, sometimes allegorically, sometimes not, railed against the Roman Catholic Church and its worldly kingdom, the Holy Roman Empire. For this reason, Rosicrucianism was hated and suppressed by the Catholic hierarchy, while the Protestant movement embraced it.

Rosicrucianism was embraced by another figure associated with Protestantism. whom Johann Valentin Andrea was related to by blood:

Frederick of the Palatinate, a man whose genealogy tied in with those of the Grail families, and whose ideals would seem to be identical to theirs. After marrying Elizabeth Stuart, daughter of James I of England, he established a court in the capitol of Heidelberg, which was formed, shall we say, along “Hermetic lines.” Frances Yates, as quoted by Holy Blood, Holy Grail, explains what developed from this:

> “A culture was forming in the Palatinate which came straight out of the Renaissance but with more recent trends added, a culture which may be defined as ‘Rosicrucian.’ The prince around whom these deep currents were swirling was Friedrich, Elector Palatine, and their exponents were hoping for a politico-religious expression of their aims... The Frederickian movement... was an attempt to give those currents politico-religious expression, to realise the ideal of Hermetic reform centered on a real prince... It... created a culture, a ‘Rosicrucian’ state with its court centered on Heidelberg.”

It was Frederick’s actions on behalf of the Rosicrucian movement, becoming the monarch of the rebelling nation of Bohemia, against the wishes of the Holy Roman Empire, that led to the Thirty Years’ War between the Catholics and the Protestants - a war which would devastate

Europe. It was in the midst of all of this that Johann Valentin Andrea organized a network of “Christian Unions”, made up of groups of thirteen individuals per union. Each member was expected to be an expert in one or another field of knowledge. The aim of the Unions was to preserve science, philosophy, Hermeticism, and other knowledge threatened by a Catholic church then busy persecuting heretics. They also provided safe houses for the heretics themselves, and acted as smuggling rings, helping those Protestants, freethinkers and esotericists then fleeing the Inquisition escape to England. There they found a refuge, for British Freemasonry was just then in its formation, and many of the exiled heretics fell in with the “Invisible College” of occultists, including Robert Moray, Elias Ashmole and Robert Boyle, which is yet to be discussed. There is even evidence that Freemasonry itself was partially derived in structure from the Christian Unions, and in substance from the Rosicrucian mysteries. To this day there is a degree in Scottish Rite Freemasonry called “Knight Rose Croix.”

Chateau Barberie

Another bone of contention that the Grail families had against Cardinal Mazarin, according to the “Priory documents”, was his razing of Chateau Barberie, near Nevers, in the Nivernais region. It had been the official residence of the Plantard family after Jean de Plantard, a direct descendant of Dagobert II, married Marie de Saint-Clair of the aforementioned Saint-Clair/Gisors family in 1548. But by 1659, Mazarin, who had an unexplained obsession with possessing Nevers, finally bought the entirety of Nivernais on July 11, the date on which the “Priory documents” state that Chateau Barberie was burned to the ground. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail found evidence to substantiate this story, but they also found evidence to suggest that Mazarin had taken lengths to remove these facts, and the existence of Barberie itself, from the historical record.

Nicolas Poussin and Nicolas Fouquet

Cardinal Mazarin found another enemy in the figure of Nicolas Fouquet, the aforementioned Superintendent of Finances to Louis XIV who, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, was "the wealthiest and most powerful individual in the kingdom", and "was sometimes called the true king of France." He also planned to take over Brittany and become the duke of an independent duchy. His mother and brother Charles were both members of the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement, and Charles was the archbishop of Narbonne, located in the Languedoc. In 1656, Nicolas Fouquet, for some unknown reason, sent his brother Louis, a priest, to Rome. It was on this occasion that Louis wrote the letter quoted previously, alleging that he had learned a secret from Nicolas Poussin which "even kings would have great pains to draw from him."

Whether or not kings managed to draw the secret from him, King Louis XIV certainly caught wind that something was up, and that it had something to do with Nicolas Poussin. For in 1661, he had Nicolas Fouquet arrested on murky charges of "sedition", and "misappropriation of funds." He seized all of Fouquet's property, and insisted on solely, personally, privately going through Fouquet's papers and documents himself.

Meanwhile, the prosecution of Fouquet became the "trial of the century", lasting for four years, with public opinion split, during which time the brother, Louis Fouquet, died. The Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement used all powers available to them, including the membership of one of Fouquet's judges in their order, to try to get the charges dismissed, or the sentence demanded (death) diminished. The court finally decided on eternal banishment as an appropriate punishment. King Louis, furious, had the entire panel of judges replaced with those he found more compliant. They still refused to put Fouquet to death, and sentenced him instead to life in prison. The king then dictated the conditions. He was kept in what we would now call "solitary confinement", where he could neither write nor speak, and the soldiers guarding him were forbidden to talk to him on penalty of death. Some authors theorize that Fouquet was in fact the "Man in the Iron Mask."

Coincidentally, in 1665, the same year in which Nicolas Fouquet was imprisoned, Nicolas Poussin died. For the next twenty years, King Louis jockeyed for possession of what he regarded as Poussin's most important work: The Shepherds of Arcadia. When he finally got a hold of it, he did not put it on public display, but hid it away in his private quarters, and let no one view it without his expressed permission.

Curiously, although Nicolas Fouquet went down in disgrace, his grandson became the Marquis of Belle-Isle and, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail puts it, "the single most important man in France." In 1718 he traded Bell-Isle to the King of France, and received in return the duchies of Longueville and Gisors, both locations associated with families of Merovingian blood. Twenty-four years later, Gisors, with Fouquet as its duke, was declared a "premiere duchy."

Not far from Gisors is Les Andelys, the small town in which, in 1594, Nicolas Poussin was born. Early in his career he moved to Rome, only returning once to France, in the 1640s, under orders from Cardinal Richelieu, who had hired him to do a special job. Poussin's correspondence and papers reveal that, from the safety of Rome, he was heavily involved in the Fronde. He was also a keeper of secrets. His personal motto, with which he would sign his autograph, was "Tenet Confidentiam."

The Poussin work in question, The Shepherds of Arcadia, did not just spontaneously generate. It was based on an earlier painting of his, Et in Arcadia Ego, containing the same elements, which was itself based on a painting also called Et in Arcadia Ego by Giovanni Francesco Guercino, dating from 1618. Poussin's version of Et in Arcadia Ego includes the river god Alpheus, also the name of the "underground stream" of Rene d'Anjou's Arcadia, which set the precedent upon which both of these artists had designed their paintings. All three works - the two *Et in Arcadia Ego*s and The Shepherds of Arcadia - contain the shared elements of a tomb, shepherds, and the phrase "Et in Arcadia Ego."

In his own illustrations Rene d'Anjou had depicted the underground stream in Arcadia issuing from something that looks somewhat like a tomb. The skull in Guercino's painting is a motif used, among other things, in the mysteries of the Knights Templar and the Freemasons. Interestingly, in the painting, the skull appears to have been trepanned in the manner of the Merovingian kings. It is also interesting to note that Masonic themes can be found throughout Guercino's other works, even though Masonry as a formal institution was not yet in existence. One, called The Raising of the Master, even depicts the story of Hiram Abiff, architect of Solomon's Temple, who is such an important figure in Freemasonry.

The phrase "Et in Arcadia Ego", seemingly ambiguous in meaning, would appear to have been a sort of code during this time period for those "in the know" - members of the Priory of Sion and those with knowledge of their secrets. The concept of Arcadia as a Hermetic ideal seems to have been implicit, symbolizing the hope for a new order based on cosmic principles of divine order, the kind of world of which the Rosicrucians spoke. It is always associated with a mysterious ancient tomb of unknown import, as if the world for which they hoped was in fact the rebirth of a world that had once existed in the far-distant past, the "golden age" of which the ancients spoke. The phrase "Et in Arcadia Ego" has also been, according to the “Priory documents”, on the official device and family crest of the house of Plantard since around the 13th century, when Jean de Plantard married Iodine de Gisors.

Robert Boyle

Johan Valentin Andrea’s grand mastership was followed by that of Robert Boyle. He was the so-called “father of modern chemistry” who was among the earliest to theorize upon the existence and structure of the atom, and who was one of the most renowned intellectuals of the Age of Enlightenment. His father was the Earl of Cork, and he himself was offered peerage, but turned it down. His provost at Eton College, which he attended, was part of the circle surrounding Frederick of the Palatinate. After completing school, Boyle toured Europe, including the Medici-dominated city of Florence, then a haven for esotericists, scientists and philosophers persecuted in more Catholic-dominated lands. He also spent nearly two years in Geneva, where he studied demonology and occultism. There he acquired a book called The Devil of Mascon, which he hired his friend Pierre du Moulin, son of Catherine de Bar’s personal chaplain, to translate.

When his European tour was completed, he returned to England, and there fell in with a social set surrounding Johann Andrea's good friend, Samuel Hartlib. It was at this time that he began to write letters to friends referring to the "Invisible College", which sounded, from his description, like a powerful secret society of initiates into the occult mysteries, much like the Rosicrucians. He even specified in one letter that, "the cornerstones of the Invisible College or (as they term themselves) the Philosophical College, do now and then honour me with their company." It is entirely possible that this was a reference to his induction into the Priory of Sion.

In the 1650s, Robert Boyle spent much time at Oxford with Frederick of the Palatinate's former chaplain, John Wilkin. In 1660, with the dismantling of Oliver Cromwell's anti-monarchist Protectorate, the monarchy was restored and the Stuarts of Scotland, direct descendants of Merovingian blood, were once again the kings of both Scotland and England. It was around this time that, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail theorizes, the Priory of Sion might have transferred the bulk of its efforts and loyalties away from the French branches of the Grail family, like the House of Lorraine, and onto the House of Stuart. When Charles II came to power, Robert Boyle was one of his first and most outspoken supporters. Charles II also became the Head of the Royal Society, a conclave of scientists and intellectuals with official royal patronage. Most of the members of the Royal Society were Freemasons, and most coupled their scholarly pursuits with esoteric ones, making the Royal Society appear to be much like the "Invisible College" which Robert Boyle, one of the society's most prominent members, had previously described. He became an even more prominent member of the society after 1668, when he moved permanently to London, residing with his sister - wife to one of Johann Valentin Andrea's good fiends, John Dury. Here, Robert Boyle entertained some very important guests, such as Cosimo III de Medici, soon to be ruler of Florence and grand duke of Tuscany.

But Boyle's most frequent visitors were the philosopher John Locke and the scientist Isaac Newton, the latter of whom would follow him as Grand Master of the Priory of Sion. With Newton, the relationship revolved largely around alchemy, which Boyle had supposedly taught Newton the secrets of. For John Locke, commonly thought to have been a member of the Rosicrucians, meeting Boyle inspired him to take a long vacation in Southern France. He specifically visited Carcassonne, Narbonne, Toulouse, and perhaps even Rennes-le-Chateau. These were all important sites in the history of the Cathars, which Locke was particularly interested in studying there, as well as the legends in Southern France about Mary Magdalene and the Holy Grail. He even visited Saint Baum, where Magdalene was supposed to have lived, as well as the graves of Nostradamus and Rene d'Anjou. He also consorted, while in France, with none other than the duchess of Guise.

Boyle, on the other hand, was busy exchanging letters with a fellow alchemist in France, Georges Pierre. These letters reveal Boyle's involvement in an occult fraternal order to which also belonged the duke of Savoy and Pierre du Moulin. Boyle published a couple of alchemical texts called Incalescence of Quicksilver with Gold and A Historical Account of the Degradation of Gold. Then in 1689 he announced in writing that he would no longer entertain guests on certain days that he had scheduled to conduct alchemical experiments, which he described as, "less simple and plain than those barely luciferous ones I have been wont to affect... though the full and complete uses are not mentioned, partly because, in spite of my philanthropy, I was engaged to secrecy."

The details of Boyle's experiments were never publicly revealed, but when he died in 1691, he left to his friends John Locke and Isaac Newton all of his papers, as well as an unknown "red powder" which was integral to his experiments - perhaps the same red powder mentioned previously in the account of Nicolas Flamel.

Isaac Newton

If Robert Boyle was the father of modern chemistry, Isaac Newton was certainly the father of physics as a serious study. He is known mostly today for his Theory of Gravity, Theory of Light, Laws of Motion and Laws of Thermodynamics, as well as the invention of the Calculus. He claimed to be a descendant of "ancient Scottish nobility", and as benefits an aristocratic Brit, he attended school at Cambridge. He was inducted into the Royal Society in 1672 at age thirty, where he met Robert Boyle in 1673. He met their mutual friend, John Locke about sixteen years later. It was around this time that he also encountered a Genevan aristocrat named Nicolas Fatio de Duillier, a former spy against Louis XIV. According to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, de Duillier "appears to have been on intimate terms with every important scientist of the age", and he immediately struck up a close friendship with Newton that lasted for ten years.

Six years after meeting de Duillier, Newton was made warden of the Royal Mint, and was therefore involved in fixing his country's gold standard, an interesting occupation for a practicing alchemist presumably capable of creating gold at will. He was elected president of the Royal Society four years later, and also became acquainted with a Frenchman and Royal Society member named Jean Desaguliers - whom, as I shall soon discuss, was instrumental in the spread of Freemasonry across the continent.

Although I have no proof that Isaac Newton was a Freemason, he did belong to a quasi-Masonic organization called the Gentleman's Club of Spalding, to which the poet Alexander Pope also belonged. And Newton was clearly interested in the subjects to which Freemasonry addresses itself. For instance, he considered Noah to have been a far more important source of God's wisdom than Moses - a common theme throughout Freemasonry and a detail that will assume greater importance when I later discuss the relationship between the biblical Flood and the mystery of the Holy Grail. He also wrote a very interesting book called The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended, which traced the origins of the institution of monarchy, especially the Jewish monarchy of King David. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail describes it, Newton "attempted to establish... the primacy of Israel over other cultures of antiquity." Like many Freemasons, Newton believed that the ancient Jewish mysteries contained true revelations and divine secrets, but that they had largely been corrupted over time by the editors of the Torah and the Holy Bible. He had great interest in the theories of Pythagoras, especially the "music of the spheres", which he considered to be an analogy for his own gravitational theories. He was interested in the Masonic and Pythagorean science of sacred geometry, and believed that there were numerological connections between music and architecture. In fact, an even more overtly Masonic belief he held was that the secrets of alchemy were embedded into the precise dimensions of Solomon's Temple. His favorite alchemical metaphor was the myth of the Quest for the Golden Fleece. He believed this story to be key to properly dating the events described in both classical and biblical myth, which he considered (as I do) to be real historical records. Newton's library contained copies of The Rosicrucian Manifestos covered in his own scribbled notes, and over a hundred books on alchemy. One of these alchemical texts was written by none other than Nicolas Flamel, and had been hand-copied by Newton himself. Newton continued to correspond with his friends Robert Boyle, John Locke, and Nicolas Fatio de Duillier about alchemy for the remainder of his life, even at times writing these letters in cryptic codes.

As if it was not obvious from what I have already discussed, Newton was an enthusiastic embracer of heresy. He denied the existence of the Trinity, the divine nature of Jesus, and the veracity of the New Testament. He also avidly studied and wrote about Gnosticism, rejecting the mechanistic theories of the universe held dear by his fellow scientists in favor of a material world that derived itself from the spirit. There was another Gnostic-oriented, Cathar-like group in whom Newton, along with his friend Fatio de Duillier, held considerable interest: the Camisards, also known as the "Prophets of Cevennes." This group had arisen out of the same areas of Southern France as the Cathars, and just like their predecessors had been driven out by the Vatican with military force, escaping into Geneva and London in the early part of the eighteenth century. They too hated the Catholic church and denied the divinity of Jesus, and just like both the Cathars and the Knights Templar, they dressed themselves in white tunics.

As interesting as Isaac Newton's life was, his death was, perhaps, even more so. Sensing his impending doom weeks ahead of time, he and his closest friends set about cremating large portions of his private papers, presumably to preserve the secrets of alchemy, as well as the secrets of the Priory of Sion. And in an eerie parallel to the death of Berenger Sauniere, who was refused Last Rites, Newton specifically requested that he not receive Last Rites.

Although there is little doubt about the depth of Isaac Newton's genius, there are some, shall we say, "interesting" circumstances surrounding his two greatest discoveries: the Theory of Gravity, and the Calculus. We are all familiar with the story of the apple that supposedly fell on Newton's head as he sat under a tree, providing the inspiration for his Theory of Gravity. Is this story a metaphor for divine inspiration, or for receiving the "forbidden fruit" of secret knowledge? The apple is certainly emblematic of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge consumed by Eve in the Garden of Eden, and the story of it falling from the tree onto Newton's head brings to mind the story of the Grail stone falling from Heaven. The tale surrounding Calculus is even more suspicious. As it turns out, Newton had been working on the Calculus for some time, and he was not the only one. He was in a neck-and-neck race with a German mathematician named G.W. Leibnitz. In either a bizarre twist of fate or a bizarre conspiratorial plot, he and Leibnitz completed their formulas for the Calculus on the same day. To Leibnitz's great dismay Newton went down in history as the man who "invented" Calculus. However, the German may have gotten the last laugh, for it is his far more simply expressed equations which are used in mathematics today.

Charles Radclyffe and the Scottish Rite

Following Isaac Newton as the Head of the Priory was Charles Radclyffe, son of an illegitimate daughter of the Stuart King Charles II. Radclyffe was, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, from "an influential Northumbrian family", who since the time of James II had been the earls of Derwentwater. He was thus cousin to both Bonnie Prince Charlie, the Stuart king de jure who never made it to the throne, and to the Earl of Lichfield, George Lee, also the son of one of Charles II's bastards. Charles Radclyffe and his older brother James became key figures in the "Jacobite movement." After Charles II's successor, James III was sent into exile, this movement attempted to reestablish and secure the Stuart throne.[11] That year, in 1715, there was a Jacobite Scottish rebellion in which both Charles and James Radclyffe participated, and there were arrested and imprisoned. James was executed, but Charles managed to escape, and fled to the protection of Jacobite sympathizers in France. He immediately became secretary to James II's successor as king-in-exile, Bonnie Prince Charlie. It took thirty years, but finally Bonnie Prince Charlie and his ranks arrived in Britain in an attempt to retake the throne. Charles Radclyffe was captured on his way to join them, and the following year, when the Jacobite attempt was crushed, he was beheaded at the Tower of London.

But there was more than just Jacobite politics on the minds of Charles Radclyffe and his compatriots. They were also deeply involved in Freemasonry, particularly Scottish Rite Freemasonry, believed to have been inherited from the rituals of the Stuart dynasty. This brand of the [11] Interestingly, while James III was in exile, he resided with the duke of Lorraine at Bar-le-Duc.

Craft included many more degrees than regular "York Rite" masonry, which of course meant that it contained greater, deeper and more voluminous secrets. These mysteries were supposedly derived from Scotland, and from there, some even older source. The Scottish Rite rituals included more overtly "occult" material - Hermetic, cabalistic, Rosicrucian and alchemical material - and initiates were taught specifics about the origin and history of their organizations' practices. Furthermore, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail blatantly states, "It is probable that Scottish Rite Freemasonry was originally promulgated, if not indeed devised, by Charles Radclyffe." Charles also founded the first European Masonic lodge in Paris. He was shortly thereafter declared "grand master of all French lodges", which he remained for at least a decade more. Therefore the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail state that, "The dissemination of 18th-century Freemasonry owes more, ultimately, to Charles Radclyffe than to any other man." But Radclyffe did not work alone, nor did he accomplish everything hands-on, but worked through middlemen and accomplices, such as Chevalier Andrew Ramsay.

To a large degree, Ramsay associated with the same crowd as Isaac Newton, including Jean Desaguliers, who was one of the Royal Society's "two curators of experiments" and one of the age's leading proponents of Freemasonry in Europe, as well as a friend of Charles Radclyffe's.

Ramsay was further the master of the lodge at the Hague, where, in 1731, under his leadership, the first European prince to join Masonry was initiated: Francois, duke of Lorraine, soon to be Holy Roman Emperor through his marriage to Maria Theresa of Austria. Ramsay also studied math under Newton's best friend, Nicolas Fatio de Duillier. As for Newton himself, Ramsay practically worshipped him, regarding him as the era's leading sage. And like both Newton and de Duillier, Ramsay had a keen interest in the heretical Camisards. He was also a member of a Masonic-like secret society called the Philadelphes.

Ramsay moved to Cambrai in 1710, where he became part of the close circle surrounding Fenelon (the former cure of Saint Sulpice who was famous as an occult philosopher, and whose name pops up repeatedly in regards to this mystery). He became a dedicated Jacobite shortly after meeting Charles Radclyffe, and even worked for a period as tutor to Bonnie Prince Charlie. Although he was a known enemy of the presiding government in England, he returned there in 1729 with no problem, and almost immediately joined the Royal Society, as well as the aforementioned "Gentleman's Club of Spalding."

The following year he returned to France to campaign for Freemasonry. Here he was patronized by relatives of Frederick of the Palatinate, the House of Tour d'Auvergne, viscounts of Turenne and dukes of Bouillon. The duke of Bouillon in particular was a cousin of Bonnie Prince Charlie and an outspoken champion of Freemasonry. Ramsay became his son's tutor, and was given property to live on by the duke. However, Ramsay's greatest contribution to the growth of Masonry came in 1737, when he delivered his Oration, which specifically detailed the origins and history of the order. This Oration later became incorporated as an official Masonic document, and its claims have become part of Masonry's basic tenets. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail states, "On the basis of this Oration, Ramsay became the preeminent Masonic spokesman of his age." But, they continue, "Our research convinced us ... that the real voice behind Ramsay was that of Charles Radclyffe." It was, after all, Charles Radclyffe who, as master of the lodge at which Ramsay gave his Oration, presided over the event. It was also Radclyffe who acted as chief signatory at Ramsay's funeral in 1743. And there was another contribution to Masonry, particularly the Scottish Rite, that Radclyffe was to make as well.

In 1742, four years before Charles Radclyffe's death on the chopping block, a German-born man named Karl Gottlieb von Hund was initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry. But this initiation was far from ordinary. According to Von Hund, it was presided over by three "unknown superiors" who conferred upon him a new system of Masonry as yet unrevealed called “the Strict Observance”, so named because of the stringent oath of obedience it required. These unnamed initiators claimed that the Strict Observance was a direct inheritance of the Knights Templar, specifically the ones who had escaped King Philippe’s persecution and settled in Scotland. Moreover, Hund had been a large contributor to the Scottish Jacobites, and he believed until the end that the man in charge of his initiation had been either Bonnie Prince Charlie himself, or one of his close associates. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail concluded that the man in question was in fact Charles Radclyffe, which would mean that the Rite of the Strict Observance, derived from the rituals of the Knights Templar, was installed in the degrees of Scottish Rite Freemasonry by none other than the Priory of Sion.

Unfortunately for Von Hund, no one in his own time believed his tale about the “unknown superiors”, who, although they had promised to contact him in the future and initiate him further, never did so. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail theorized that what had actually happened was that the Jacobite cause had collapsed, and that his initiators, Charles Radclyffe and friends, had all been either killed, imprisoned, or sent into exile.

But there is more evidence to confirm Baron von Hund’s story, and the involvement of the Priory of Sion. One of the few pieces of information von Hund did manage to obtain from his sole contact with the "unknown superiors" was a list of the Grand Masters of the Knights Templar - a list identical to the one provided in Secret Dossiers. This list, as I have said, was established by the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail to be more accurate than any other list of Templar Grand Masters they had previously seen. But Von Hund's list was written when most of the vital documentation on the Templars that would have made such a list researchable was still hidden away in Vatican vaults, proving that Von Hund's sources had access to inside knowledge.

Charles de Lorraine

After the Jacobite cause was put to rest, Von Hund was patronized by the current Holy Roman Emperor, Francois, duke of Lorraine. And Francois' own brother, Charles de Lorraine, became, according to the "Priory documents", Grand Master of Sion following Charles Radclyffe's death. It was Francois whom I mentioned previously as the first European Prince initiated into Freemasonry. Not long after his initiation, he went for a lengthy visit to England, where he promptly joined the Gentleman's Club of Spalding.

Thereafter Francois de Lorraine was one of continental Freemasonry's leading figures, and, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail puts it, "His court in Vienna became, in a sense, Europe's Masonic capitol and a center for a broad spectrum of other esoteric interests as well." As per example, Francois had an alchemical laboratory installed in the Hofburg, his imperial palace. When he inherited the title of grand duke of Tuscany from the Medicis, he became instrumental in protecting the Freemasons of Florence from harassment by the Inquisition.

However, in order to receive the archduchy of Tuscany, Francois had been forced to abdicate his claim to Lorraine, which was ceded to the French crown. His brother Charles, however, refused to recognize this, and instead presumed to take on the mantle of the duke of Lorraine himself. In 1742, he raised an army and marched on Lorraine in an attempt to reclaim it. Only the distraction of a French invasion of his territory in Bohemia prevented him from doing so.

Charles' chief military adversary was Frederick the Great, himself somewhat of a mystic who, despite their differences, maintained considerable respect for Charles, about which he was very outspoken. Nevertheless, Frederick defeated Charles at the dramatic Battle of Leuthen in 1757, marking the end of Charles de Lorraine's military career.

After his retirement, Charles set up court in Brussels, where he became the region's chief patron for the arts. His court very much reflected that of his esteemed forefather, Rene d'Anjou. He also became, in 1761, Grand Master of the Order of Teutonic Knights. Nine years later, he appointed his favorite nephew, Maximilien coadjutor of the Order. Maximilien was as close to his uncle as could be, and when a magnificent equestrian statue of Charles was unveiled in Brussels, on the specifically chosen date of January 17, Maximilien was in attendance. Not surprisingly, then, Maximilien followed his uncle as Grand Master of the Priory of Sion.

Shugborough Hall

There is another connection to Charles Radclyffe which has left a significant mark on the mystery of the Holy Grail and Rennes-le-Chateau. It pertains to the House of Anson, present earls of Lichfield. When Radclyffe escaped from Newgate Prison in 1714, avoiding the fate of his brother, James, his escape was assisted by his cousin, the earl of Lichfield. Although that particular line became extinct later in the 1700s, the title of earl of Lichfield was bought by the Anson family, and is retained to this very day. Their family seat currently rests at Shugborough Hall in Staffordshire. It had once been the home of the brother of George Anson, who was famous for circumnavigating the globe. And when the old "nautonnier" George Anson died in 1762, a curious poem was read aloud by in Parliament by friends of his - one which appeared to refer to the very elements of Poussin's painting, The Shepherds of Arcadia. It read:

> "Upon that storied marble cast thine eye.
> The scene commands a moralising sigh.
> E'en in Arcadia's bless'd plains,
> Amidst the laughing nymphs and sportive swains,
> See festal joy subside, with melting grace,
> And pity visit the half-smiling face;
> Where now the dance, the lute, the nuptial feast,
> The passion throbbing in the lover's breast,
> Life's emblem here, in youth, and vernal bloom,
> But reason's finger pointing at the tomb!"

What makes the connection to Poussin even more explicit is that right there on the Shugborough Hall property stands a marble bas-relief bearing a mirror-reversal of Poussin's The Shepherds of Arcadia. Called "the Shepherd's Monument", it was made by Peter Scheemakers in the 1700s, and beneath the relief we find written a code which, until recently, had not been deciphered. It said:

O.U.O.S.V.A.V.V.

D. M.

The likeliest explanation has come from an 18th century poem by Anna Seward called The Swan of Lichfield, which contains two lines that, apart from a single letter, the above code is a perfect abbreviation for. They read:

> "Out your Own Sweet Vale, Alicia
> Vanisheth Vanity Shepherds of Arcadia
> 'Twixt Deity and Man thou Shepherdeth the Way."

Charles Nodier

The next to take the helm of the Priory of Sion was Charles Nodier, a prolific and hugely famous writer during the nineteenth century whose fiction has been compared to that of Edgar Allan Poe. Nodier was the son of an apparently orphaned girl named Suzanne Paris, who married a solicitor in Besancon. His father was also a member of the Jacobite Club who later, during the French Revolution, became the town's mayor and president of their revolutionary tribunal. He was also a known and outspoken Freemason.

Nodier was something of a child prodigy, and had achieved celebrity status as a writer by age eighteen. He continued to write on a non-stop basis for the rest of his life. In addition to his fiction, he also wrote nonfiction on a wide variety of subjects, including art, literature, law, travel, etymology, zoology, psychology, archeology, and of course occultism, as well as a body of personal musings. Esoteric subjects, however, appear to have been a distinct preoccupation of Nodier's.

In Nodier's prodigious eighteenth year, he was made the chief librarian at the Arsenal Library, which was, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, "the major French depository for medieval and specifically occult manuscripts." These included a large collection of works by Nicolas Flamel, as well as Cardinal Richelieu's entire library, which was rich in Hermetic and cabalistic texts. There were also a number of manuscripts taken from French monasteries during the Revolution, and a large portion of the Vatican's archives, which had been plundered by Napoleon. This contained numerous records pertaining to heresies, the Inquisition's information on the Knights Templar, and books on a variety of occult subjects.

It was to this material that Nodier, along with his friends Eliphas Levi and Jean Baptiste Pitois devoted much of their attention. Levi, whom I have mentioned previously, was then and is still now one of the most highly-regarded authors on the subject of the Western magical tradition, whose contributions include the modern conception of the Devil as the Templar idol, Baphomet. Pitois has a similar reputation, and his History and Practice of Magic is still cherished by occultists today. (It also includes a dedication at the front to Charles Nodier.) It was to these three figures that the "occult revival" of their age can be attributed.

One of Nodier's published works during this time was a series of books about interesting historical sights in France, in which he includes a considerable amount of material pertaining to the Merovingian era, as well as the Knights Templar, and Gisors. He was especially intrigued by the cryptic "Cutting of the Elm" event which took place there and purportedly constituted a ceremonial separation of the Templars from the Priory of Sion.

Nodier gathered around him a flock of young disciples, or "aesthetic potentates" as he called them, to whom he played the role of mentor. This group included Balzac, Delacroix, Dumas, and Victor Hugo. It was Hugo who was Nodier's closest friend, and Hugo followed him as Grand Master of the Priory of Sion. His friends also included a man with the curious name of Francois-Rene de Chateau-briand, who had visited Nicolas Poussin's tomb in Rome and there placed a stone reproduction of The Shepherds of Arcadia. The writings of Nodier's salon set bear specific references to the mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau and related subjects, such as a book from 1832 by Auguste de Labouisse-Rochefort called A Journey to Rennes-le-Bains, which, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail states, "speaks at length of a legendary treasure associated with Blanchefort and Rennes-le-Chateau." This person also wrote a book called The Lovers - To Eleonore which bears the phrase "Et in Arcadia Ego" on the title page.

Like everything else in his life, Charles Nodier became involved in secret societies at a very early age. By the time he was ten, he had joined the Philadelphes, and created his own version of the group at age thirteen. It was to this group that one of its members, a close friend of Nodier's, addressed an apparently coded essay which exists in the archives of the Besancon Library, titled The Arcadian Shepherd Sounds the First Accents of a Rustic Flute. Later, in 1802, Nodier admitted belonging to a secret order which he in writing described as "Biblical and Pythagorean."

Fourteen years later he wrote an anonymous text called A History of Secret Societies in the Army Under Napoleon, in which he attributed a number of historical events to the covert action of these organizations, including Napoleon's fall. Nodier wrote in this book that all secret societies were under the control of a single, supreme secret society, which he names as being none other than the Philadelphes. He also wrote, though, about an "oath that binds me to the Philadelphes and which forbids me to make them known under their social name", indicating that this may have been just another front for the Priory of Sion. In this book he quotes a speech that he claims was made at a meeting of the Philadelphes by one of the leading plotters against the regime of Napoleon - interesting because Nodier's self-made group of Philadelphes from his childhood supposedly included a young man who would later become one of Napoleon's biggest enemies. The quoted individual, speaking in regards to his newborn son, purportedly stated:

"He is too young to engage himself to you by the oath of Annibal; but remember I have named him Eliacin, and that I delegate to him the guard of the temple and the altar, if I should die ere I have seen fall from his throne the last of the oppressors of Jerusalem."

Nodier's book succeeded in fanning the flames of an already-persistent secret society paranoia that abounded during the post-Napoleonic era. In fact, Nodier seems to have gone out of his way to establish a reputation as a dangerous conspiratorial plotter himself. He had at first, because of his family's affiliations, had a favorable attitude towards the French Revolution, but later changed his mind, and had the same transformation of attitude about Napoleon. In 1804 he wrote an anti-Napoleonic satire call Le Napoleone, then made great efforts to try and gain attention from the authorities for having written it. They were sluggish to react, and only after much prodding, including a letter to Napoleon himself by the guilty party declaring his deed, did they arrest and imprison him for a month, leaving him to continue his actions against the emperor. He at once became involved in the anti-Napoleonic plots of 1804 and 1812.

The Catholic Modernist Movement

Charles Nodier's disciples continued his writing tradition after his death. Take, for instance, Jean Baptiste Pitois, who in 1833 went to work as an administrator in France's ministry of education. The ministry immediately undertook a plan to publish all documents pertaining to French history that had, up until that point, been censored. Two committees were formed for the occasion, upon which sat none other than Victor Hugo, as well as two influential authors, Jules Michelet and Baron Emmanuel Rey. Under the ministry's auspices Michelet published a compendium of records from the trials of the Knights Templar by the Inquisition, called Proces de Templiers. Also under the ministry of education Baron Emmanuel Rey published books about the Crusades in which he presented, for the first time, the Priory of Sion's original charters. More charters were printed in the Revue de l'Orient Latin, the official journal of Baron Rey's archeological foundation, the Societe de l'Orient Latin, published from their headquarters in Geneva.

The ministry of education instigated a fresh approach to scholarship that spread throughout Europe, especially Germany - an approach that relied on rigorous analysis and the comparison of multiple source materials to establish clear facts. This approach had led to such philosophies as Darwinism and atheism, which became serious threats to the church. Even more threatening was when such scholarship techniques were turned on the Bible itself, the result of which was a veritable crisis of faith among many of the Church's former devotees.

To combat this, the Church sponsored the "Catholic Modernist Movement", an attempt to train a new breed of clerics who could strike down anti-biblical arguments with the same rigid reliance on fact that the arguments themselves purported to be based on. But the results of this attempt actually worked against the Church. When armed with the techniques and background knowledge of 19th-century scholarship, these "Modernist" clerics could see for themselves the flaws in the Church's traditional interpretation of the scriptures. By the turn of the century, Modernism had itself become the heresy it had been formed to combat. Modernists were placed on the Vatican's official watch list, and all clerics forbidden to associate with the movement, even forced to take an oath not to embrace any Modernist ideas. The Modernists were even, interestingly enough, accused of being "Freemasons" by the Roman authorities. But Modernism continued to proliferate, spreading throughout Europe and Britain as it grew fashionable with the era's intelligentsia. And the center for the dissemination of Modernist thought was the Seminary of Saint Sulpice.

Victor Hugo

There are some other details about the life of Victor Hugo, besides what we have already gone over, that are worth mentioning. Best known for his plays Les Miserables and The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Hugo came from a purportedly "aristocratic" lineage stemming from Lorraine. He was born in Besancon, home of the Nodiers and center of post-Revolutionary occult conspiracies. His father appears to have been acting as a double agent during Napoleon's reign, serving a general under the emperor while at the same time consorting with those who plotted against him. One of these consortees was, in a bizarre and kinky twist, his wife's adulterous lover, who lived with the family and was godfather to young Victor.

As a teenager, Victor Hugo became one of Charles Nodier's proteges, from whom he appears to have acquired an appreciation for Gothic architecture, which would later figure into his writing. At age seventeen Hugo, along with his brother and Charles Nodier, started a publishing house that produced a magazine which Nodier edited. He was later married at none other than Saint Sulpice. In 1825, Hugo and Nodier took their wives on a lengthy tour of Switzerland and then attended Charles X's coronation. Hugo continued to model his life on Nodier's, even forming his own salon in the Nodier tradition which included many of the same people. At Nodier's funeral in 1845, Hugo was one of the pallbearers.

Hugo's esoteric interests and heretical beliefs were undeniable. Like his predecessor Isaac Newton, he rejected both the Trinity and the divinity of Jesus. And of course, as a disciple of Nodier, his thinking was saturated with Gnosticism, Hermeticism, and cabalistic concepts. He even joined a version of the Rosicrucians to which Eliphas Levi also belonged.

It is interesting to note that Victor Hugo was, throughout his life, a devoted monarchist, although he maintained an affection for Napoleon, who had married into the Merovingian bloodline, and who had attempted to link himself to that dynasty by attaching King Childeric's golden bees to his coronation robe. Although Hugo supported the restoration of the Bourbons to the throne, this would appear to have been merely an outgrowth of his desire for the trappings of monarchy. His attitude towards the Bourbons themselves was a bit wishy-washy, and in the case of Louis XIV, downright negative. He did, however, support the cause of the so-called "Citizen King", Louis Philippe, who had married the niece of Maximilien de Lorraine.

Claude Debussy

The Grand Master to follow Hugo at the helm of the Priory was also the Grand Master who led them during the years of the Berenger Sauniere saga - the renowned composer, Claude Debussy. From humble beginnings, Debussy nonetheless achieved fame, like many Priory Grand Masters, at an early age, and was performing for the mistress of the President of France by the time he was a teenager. He had already established contact with the President himself, as well as a number of other powerful people and well-known socialites. At age eighteen, a female aristocrat from Russia who had also patronized Tchaikovsky decided to adopt him, and took him on tours throughout Italy, Russia and Switzerland. He won a much esteemed music award in 1884, and then continued his travels throughout the continent. During this time, he established an inner circle consisting of men and women from noble families whose names he went to great lengths to keep secret.

However, a greater turning point in his life was meeting Victor Hugo, to whom he was introduced by the poet Paul Verlaine, and he shortly afterwards put to music a number of Hugo's best works. At this time, Debussy also fell in with a group of "symbolists", then one of the dominant art movements in Paris. Among this circle: Berenger Sauniere's mistress and dedicated occultist, opera singer Emma Calve; Emile Hoffet, the cleric from Saint Sulpice who deciphered Sauniere's parchments, and who introduced Sauniere to Debussy; poet Stephane Mallarme, who wrote the poem upon which Debussy based one of his most famous works, L'Aprês-Midi d'un Faune (The Afternoon of a Faun); Maurice Maeterlinck, who wrote a "Merovingian" play called Pelle et Melisande, which Debussy transformed into a hugely successful opera; and Comte Philippe Auguste Villiera de l'Isle-Adam, who wrote Axël, a play of "Rosicrucian" content that was warmly embraced by the symbolists and which, originally, Debussy had planned to turn into an opera as well. Also included: famous writers Oscar Wilde, Stefan George, Paul Valery, Andre Gide, Marcel Proust and W.B. Yeats; the founder of the Cabalistic Order of the Rose-Croix, who was also friends with Emma Calve; Satanist Jules Bois, again friends with Emma Calve, who helped S.L. MacGregor Mathers establish the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn; and the famous mystic Papus, spiritual advisor to Nicolas and Alexandra of Russia.

Papus was also involved with Jules Doinel, a librarian at Carcassonne who started a "neo-Cathar" church that included both he and Papus as bishops, and which was situated in the Languedoc. He declared himself to be "Gnostic bishop of Mirepoix and Alet", counting both the parishes of Montsegur and Rennes-le-Chateau among his domains. The church was consecrated at the home of Lord James Sinclair's wife. Their "neo-Cathar" movement raised alarm at the Vatican, and the Papacy even issued an official condemnation of the church for promulgating "the ancient Albigensian heresy." Doinel was well-acquainted with Emma Calve, as well as the cure of Rennes-le-Bains, Abbe Henri Boudet. He was also a frequent visitor to the region of Rennes-le-Chateau, so he may indeed have known Berenger Sauniere.

Debussy had a friend in Josephin Peladan, as associate of Papus and Emma Calve who, towards the close of the 19th century, proclaimed that he had discovered the true tomb of Christ while visiting the Holy Land. The location he gave was not the Holy Sepulcher, which is the traditionally acknowledged site, but underneath the foundations of the Mosque of Omar, which had at one point been under the control of the Knights Templar. Of Peladan's discovery, one of his disciples wrote that it was, "so astonishing that in any other era it would have shaken the Catholic world to its foundations", indicating that something about the tomb itself revealed some earth-shattering secret. Perhaps it provided the basis for Peladan's insistence that Jesus had been a man, not divine.

Peladan founded his own Hermetic order in 1890, which he called "The Order of the Catholic Rose-Croix, the Temple, and the Grail." He also decided to embark upon a career as an artist, playwright, and composer. He summed up his artistic approach as that of “a knight in armor, eagerly engaged in the symbolic quest for the Holy Grail.” The theater company which he created specialized in particularly Arcadian themes, including, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail states, “Orpheus, the Argonauts, and the Quest for the Golden Fleece, the Mystery of the Rose-Croix, and the Mystery of the Grail.” Claude Debussy was one of the company's chief patrons. Peladan also initiated a series of annual art exhibitions titled “Salon de la Rose + Croix.” His mission with these salons was, “to ruin realism, to reform Latin taste, and create a school of idealist art.” Certain styles and themes were explicitly disallowed at these salons, including, “all landscapes except those composed in the manner of Poussin.”

Finally, another friend of both Peladan and Debussy was Maurice Barres, who had once belonged to a Rosicrucian order with Victor Hugo. Barres’ most successful novel was La Colline Inspiree (The Inspired Mount), which, it has been theorized, is partially allegorical of the story of Berenger Sauniere. Interestingly, though, the actual location in which the story takes place is the aforementioned village of Sion in Lorraine.

The Protocols of Sion and the Hieron du Val d'Or

Around the turn of the century, a controversial document was published, the effects of which reverberated well into the middle of the next century: the notorious Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, long held by scholars to have been a hoax. As the czar and czarina's involvement with the occult and reliance on mystical advisors grew, so too did the paranoia in Russia about secret societies and their influence on national politics. The mystical advisors in question - Rasputin, Papus, and a mysterious figure named Monsieur Philippe - also had a powerful enemy: Grand Duchess Elizabeth, who wished to see her own hired puppets acting as advisors to the throne. One such puppet was Sergei Nilus, who in 1903 presented to the czar The Protocols of Zion. These were documents purporting to be the minutes of the World Jewish Congress, a Jewish conspiracy that supposedly intended to take over the world. Unfortunately for Nilus, the czar recognized it as a fraud, declared that all copies of the document were to be destroyed, and banished Sergei Nilus from the court.

Over the years, however, the document was published again and again, becoming a cult classic among anti-Semites, who fervently believed in the document's authenticity. The Protocols were used to fuel the fire of anti-Jewish hatred after the Russian Revolution of 1917, as well as by the Nazis a few years later. Although at times a bit over-dramatic, there is something inherently believable about the Protocols. They lay out in straightforward rhetoric the Machiavellian steps which an international conspiracy would go through to take control of the world's governments and institutions, and to maintain power, largely through the manipulation of the masses, as well as those already in power. It recommends the proliferation of dangerous creeds, philosophies, religious and political ideas such as Marxism, Anarchism, Atheism, and Darwinism, all to sow discord and cause the breakdown of traditional institutions, clearing the way for the new hierarchy of which the Protocols speak. It is bone-chilling to read such a document as this, written in the 19th century, which predicts perfectly the results of a conspiracy that in every way resemble the world in which we currently live.

But what the Protocols outline is much more than your typical paranoid New World Order scenario. They speak of a global monarch, the "King of the blood of Sion", of "the dynastic roots of King David", who as ruler of a new "Masonic kingdom" will be both the "King of the Jews" and "the real Pope", acting as "the patriarch of an international church." Of him, the Protocols state, "Certain members of the seed of David will prepare the Kings and their heirs... Only the King and the three who stood sponsor for him will know what is coming." Finally, the Protocols end with a curious postscript: "Signed by the representatives of Sion of the 33rd Degree."

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail presented a theory regarding the Protocols with which I overwhelmingly concur. They proposed that the "Learned Elders of Zion" were in fact the Priory of Sion, and that this document had been, originally, the minutes of one of their meetings, which fell into the wrong hands and was subsequently transformed into a weapon for anti-Semites. It certainly bears all of the earmarks and catch phrases for a "Priory document", and overall the goals that are set forth within, as well as the methods proposed for achieving them, fit my conception of the Priory's own objectives, although I imagine that in certain sections of the document the original version might have been phrased more delicately. Furthermore, there is circumstantial evidence to indicate that this was indeed the case. The earliest known version of the Protocols was actually written in French, and most scholars believe it to have been partially based on a political satire written by Maurice Joly against Napoleon II which was published in Geneva in 1864. Maurice Joly was also a member of the Rose-Croix order, and good friends with Victor Hugo. But perhaps it was the other way around. Perhaps the "Protocols of Sion" and the anti-Napoleon satire were themselves based on the same Priory of Sion document, which Joly, as a potential member of the Priory, could possibly have had access to. We cannot know for sure, but it is known that in 1884, copies of the Protocols of Zion were found circulating amongst the members of a Masonic lodge to which Papus himself belonged - the lodge where the aforementioned legend of the wise Egyptian sage named Ormus (whom the Priory of Sion called themselves after) first surfaced.

Furthermore, there was during this period in time a secret society with stated goals very similar to those enumerated in the Protocols of Zion, and they were in fact, apparently, an auxiliary order of the Priory of Sion. They were called "The Hieron du Val d'Or", which, Holy Blood, Holy Grail notes, contains an anagram of the place-name "Orval", a location that frequently crops up throughout this mystery. Notably, the word "Orval" contains the syllables which, in French, mean "gold" and "valley." Thus "Val d'Or" means "Valley of Gold." In his 1979 book Le Tresor du Triangle d'Or (The Treasure of the Golden Triangle), Jean-Luc Chaumeil (a one-time spokesman for the Priory of Sion) states that the Hieron practiced a version of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, and the upper degrees of this order constituted the lower degrees of the Priory of Sion itself. Chaumeil describes the group's disposition as "Christian, Hermetic, and aristocratic." They proclaimed themselves to be Catholic, even though the Church of Rome condemned them. Their mystic teachings contained, according to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, “a characteristic emphasis on sacred geometry and various sacred sites... an insistence on a mystical or Gnostic truth underlying mythological motifs”, and “a preoccupation with the origins of men, races, languages, and symbols... .” The order was, “simultaneously Christian and ‘trans-Christian.’ It stressed the importance of the Sacred Heart... sought to recognize Christian and pagan mysteries”, and “Ascribed special significance to Druidic thought - which it... regarded as partially Pythagorean.” The Hieron du Val d’Or was also unabashedly pro-monarchist, and sought a restoration of the Holy Roman Empire. But this one would be built, unlike the previous one, on an ultimately spiritual basis - a vision specifically echoed in the Priory of Sion’s own literature, which I will soon discuss. The new empire would have been a reflection of Heaven on Earth, that specifically Hermetic Arcadian ideal. Jean-Luc Chaumeil described the Hieron’s ideal state as:

“...a theocracy wherein nations would be no more than provinces, their leaders but proconsuls in the service of a world occult government consisting of an elite. For Europe, this regime of the Great King implied a double hegemony of the Papacy and the Empire, of the Vatican and of the Habsburgs, who would have been the Vatican’s right arm.”

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail were quick to point out that this envisioned scenario accords with the Nostradamus prophecy about the "Great King" who would issue from Lorraine, since the Habsburgs essentially were the House of Lorraine. At the same time, though, this vision accords with that shared by numerous other cultures throughout the world and throughout history who have embraced the myth of the King of the World, an archetypal quasi-divine global monarch who appears in many ancient legends. It further accords with the "King of the blood of Sion" image discussed in the Protocols of Zion.

Perhaps even more shocking, Chaumeil claims that Berenger Sauniere, Abbe Henri Boudet, Emile Hoffet, and the Bishop of Carcassonne were all members of this organization, and that it was a political scuffle within this organization which led to Sauniere's premature death. Chaumeil describes Sauniere as a pawn in the Priory of Sion/Hieron du Val d'Or's bizarre plot regarding Rennes-le-Chateau and the surrounding area. According to this version of the story, Sauniere had been involved with the order since before his arrival at the parish of Rennes-le-Chateau, and had actually been dispatched there by them for the purpose of finding the parchments. But in 1916 he is said to have had a falling out with the order, which supposedly explains his mysterious death the following year. Chaumeil states that Sauniere’s “handler” with regard to lodge business was actually the cure of Rennes-le-Bains, Abbe Henri Boudet, who is said to have orchestrated all of Sauniere’s activities, including the remodeling of his church and the surrounding domains. Boudet was also purportedly the middleman who passed along Priory of Sion hush money - not to Sauniere, but to his housekeeper, Marie Deneraud, who was also in their employ and to whom all checks were made payable. She also, says Chaumeil, was the agent through which Boudet transmitted all of his highly specific instructions for Sauniere. And Chaumeil tells us that Sauniere did not even know true nature of the “treasure” and “secret” which he protected until 1915, one year before his supposed falling out with the order, when Boudet made a deathbed confession to his fellow cleric and conspirator. What exactly that was we may never know.

Jean 23

Following Claude Debussy, the next Grand Master of the Priory of Sion was Jean Cocteau (1889-1963), an influential poet, playwright, novelist, artist and filmmaker from the early half of the twentieth century.

He was a contemporary of people like Pablo Picasso, Igor Stravinsky, and Marcel Proust. He was born on July 5, 1889[12] in Maisons-Laffitte, a Parisian suburb, to a cultured, aristocratic family. As Holy Blood, Holy Grail states: "Cocteau was raised in a milieu close to the corridors of power - his family was politically prominent and his uncle was an important diplomat." His father, a painter, shot himself when Cocteau was only nine years old, and so he clung to his mother, maintaining an unusually close relationship with her for the rest of her life. As is the case with many geniuses, Cocteau did poorly in school, and dropped out in the equivalent of high school. He ran away from home at age fourteen, and spent his time in Venice, as well as the "red light district" of Marseille. He was soon ingratiating himself with the salon crowd of Paris, impressing some of the world's most well-known artists and intellectuals with the brilliance of his work. He presented his first poem to his salon friends at age fifteen.

Before long, Cocteau was patronized by some of Europe's most wealthy and respected nobility. His fame and reputation grew, and by the latter part of his life, he had been elected to the prestigious Academie Francaise, inducted with a ceremonial sword that had been designed by

[12] Cocteau's full name was Clement-Eugène-Jean-Maurice Cocteau, but he enjoyed using "Jean Cocteau" because it could be initialized as "J.C.", the same initials as "Jesus Christ."

Picasso. He had also been named “Poet of the Year”, made a “Chevalier of the Legion of Honor”, and was invited to Oxford to become an honorary Doctor of Letters. Once, he was even invited by Charles de Gaulle’s brother to give a national address on the general state of France. Though some think otherwise, there is no doubt in my mind that Jean Cocteau had every attribute required to be the Priory of Sion’s Grand Master, and had accomplished everything necessary to be listed among the greatest poets and artists of all time.

Cocteau consorted with a number of people who, if they were not actually members of the Priory of Sion, made superb candidates. Picasso, for instance, to quote John Richardson, “was of noble lineage; what is more, his uncle Salvador had married into the Malagueño aristocracy. ‘I’ll dine with the duke’ is how he ends one of his notes.” In 1917, he even had an audience with the King of Spain. His art, too, shows his interest in Hermetic subjects: his obsession with the bull symbol, his use, on more than one occasion, of the alchemical symbol of the Black Sun, and his undeniable use of pentagonal geometry in many, if not most of his cubist paintings. Another candidate was Salvador Dali, whose “surreal” and “cubist” works often centered around strangely Hermetic religious themes, and the two films that he worked on, The Andiluvian Dog and The Golden Age, both used the classical Grail-themed works of Richard Wagner as a soundtrack. They were even financed by the same noble family - the Noailles' - that financed Cocteau's first film, Blood of a Poet. Furthermore, Dali's bust was once sculpted by the same artist - Arno Breker - who also sculpted a bust of Jean Cocteau. But besides these two, Cocteau had connections to people who were almost undeniably members of the Priory. Cocteau was good friends with Jean Hugo, grandson of the Priory's twenty-first Grand Master, Victor Hugo. He was also on close terms with Jean's wife Valentine Gross Hugo, whom he called "my swan." Together they collaborated on countless projects. Cocteau was quite enamored with the late Victor Hugo himself and even made a film adaptation of Hugo's Ruy Blas. Cocteau also had a direct, public relationship with the man who purportedly preceded him as Grand Master of the Priory of Sion: composer Claude Debussy. In 1962, one year before his death, Cocteau was commissioned to design the set and costumes for a production of Pelle et Melisande.

In addition, Cocteau maintained a life-long respect for Leonardo da Vinci, the Priory's ninth Grand Master, and quoted him often. It was from da Vinci that Cocteau obtained his theory of the use of line in his artwork, which was one of his main methods for communicating the secrets he had learned from the Priory of Sion, using sacred geometry and symbolism.

Cocteau's lines were often subtle, implied - which, he believed, made the statements encoded in them all the more powerful.

Although he displayed a lifelong interest in Hermeticism and pagan mythology, and although he had never been particularly pious, Cocteau re-converted to Catholicism, the religion of his birth, in 1925. With a seemingly libertine lifestyle saturated by opium and young boys, Cocteau might have seemed an unlikely convert, but, in a way, that might have been part of what drove him back in the first place. Then again, it could have been something far more complicated.

Cocteau's 1925 re-conversion came he when met the poet Jacques Maritain, a Catholic who "sought a reconciliation between Christianity and the twentieth century." Maritain had first become acquainted with Cocteau's work when a disciple named Charles Herion gave him a copy of Cocteau's pamphlet Le Coq et l'Arlequin. Herion soon became ordained as a priest, and it was from him that Cocteau took the sacraments for the first time since his childhood, during the Feast of the Sacred Heart. This "Sacred Heart" symbol played a large part in Cocteau's passionate conversion. According to William Emboden, when Cocteau was introduced to Father Herion, he:

> "...looked at the swarthy priest wearing a cloak with a red cross above a red heart - the symbol of his order - and all but swooned as he dropped into the arms of the church. When he wrote afterwards of Father Herion as an angel in costume, we cannot help but look back to the opium drawings of only months earlier with the theme of the angel with the heart on his chest. ...Cocteau was now in the same 'club' as Picasso and Stravinsky; he had converted back to Catholicism."

Indeed, it would appear that Cocteau was already a member of a club that included those two - specifically, the Priory of Sion. The Sacred Heart symbol which so attracted him, and which had been a theme of his art even prior to his conversion, was a symbol used by the Hieron du Val d'Or, and would appear to be an adaptation of the rose-cross.

Cocteau's beliefs were, and always had been, highly unorthodox - much like those beliefs held by other members of the Priory of Sion. For instance, the Priory of Sion reserves a special reverence for the biblical figure of Mary Magdalene (or "Madeleine" in French), who seems to have significance for them both as the mother of Christ's children and as an embodiment of the Venus goddess archetype. Cocteau, too, seemed to bear a similar reverence for this figure. As William Emboden writes, "[Cocteau] spoke of a mystical effluvium of the Madeleine Church [in Paris], like the emanations from some antique temple, that kept him in the region of that edifice." The Priory of Sion has, in the past, purposely used the letters "MM", or sometimes just "M" to symbolize Magdalene, and Cocteau used them as well. In the Church of Notre Dame de France ("Our Lady of France") in London, which Cocteau decorated with fantastic murals, this letter "M" is mysteriously placed on the altar, directly beneath the depiction of the crucifixion.[13] To the left are depicted the dice thrown by the Roman soldiers, who according to the Gospels, cast lots to determine who should get Christ's clothing after he died. The number of dots that are shown on the dice is fifty-eight, a significant number. The skull of Baphomet, which the Templars and were said to have possessed was referred to cryptically as "Caput 58M", and I have already shown how this could be a coded reference to Mary Magdalene.

The same statement is being made in Cocteau's mural at Notre Dame. This statement is further reinforced by the fact that the "M" on the altar is directly below a rose that Cocteau has placed on the cross, precisely beneath Christ's feet. Not only does that make it a "rose-cross", but the rose is directly above the initial "M" for "Mary." The term "Rosemary" is used in occult parlance to refer to the female consort of a [13] Another, similar-looking and oddly-placed M. can be found on Cocteau's glass sculpture entitled Stele, and numerous Ms have been found in his mural at the Chapel of Saint Peter.

God or demon (thus the title for the film Rosemary's Baby.) This is exactly what Magdalene's symbolism entailed. The fact that the rose, as well as the blood drops beneath it, are colored both red and blue may indicate the "blue blood" of the Grail bloodline. Given all this, the Church's title "Notre Dame De France" is interesting. Most would assume this to be a reference to the Virgin Mary, who is referred to by Catholics as "Our Lady." But the true "Lady of France" is the goddess Marianne, their national symbol. Perhaps "Marianne" and "Magdalene" are representations of the same archetype. Cocteau did indeed make a number of drawings and sculptures featuring Marianne. One of the drawings even ended up on a national French postage stamp.

Notre Dame de France is located in London's red light district. Cocteau had always, for some reason, held a special place in his heart for prostitutes, who had taken him in when he ran away to Marseille at age fourteen. William Emboden writes of Notre Dame that: "This church was dear to Cocteau because it was French and because it was in an area frequented by prostitutes and the poor of London. After his mural was completed, the local prostitutes took up a collection and bought a blue rug in honor of the Virgin and as a tribute to Cocteau's work." The irony of a group of pious Catholic prostitutes paying homage to a virgin cannot be ignored, and perhaps someone was making a veiled reference instead to Mary Magdalene (the real "Notre Dame" honored in Cocteau's mural) under the guise of the Virgin Mary.

Another heretical belief posited by the Priory of Sion seems to be present in Cocteau's work: the idea that not Christ, but a substitute died on the cross, while the real Jesus went on to raise his royal family in the south of France. This concept is illustrated in the Notre Dame mural, where only the feet of the crucified man can be seen, leaving his identity undetermined. Looking on, with a scowl on his face, and tears of blood dripping from his eye (which has been made to resemble a fish) is a man who is unmistakably Christ - the real one. On the opposite side of the cross, Cocteau has depicted himself, with his back turned to the crucifixion, as if to show that he rejects the orthodox version of the story. The theme is picked up at the Chapel of Saint Blaise, which Cocteau decorated and was buried in. Here we see two Christs depicted. We see only the head of the central one, wounded with his head slumped over as though he has just died on the cross. Above him, however, is another Christ, wounded in the hand, but perfectly alive. On either side of the two figures are two identical crowns of thorns, repeating the "dual Christ" theme. Finally, in the Chapel of Saint Peter that he painted, Cocteau has made another unorthodox statement on the nature of Christ. In his own words: "I concealed the image of Christ in a curve of the Roman vaulting.

You can't see it as you enter the chapel. You have to get close to the altar to spot it. The construction of the vaulting reveals it only to the Priest, unless you go up and look." In other words, the true nature of Christ is concealed to all but the initiated, and is not to be found in the man who died on the cross.

The belief that John the Baptist was the true messiah, and not Christ, is one that, it has been posited, is also held by the Priory of Sion. Because of the special reverence that they seem to hold for him, all of their Grand Masters since the Cutting of the Elm have taken the title "Jean (or, if female, "Jeanne") upon assumption of the office. It has been noted by authors Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince that a hand signal associated with John the Baptist (a raised forefinger) can be found at the mural at Saint Blaise being made by Christ.

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail have also made the point that Jean Cocteau, as the twenty-third Grand Master of the Priory of Sion since the Cutting of the Elm, would have been "Jean 23." In 1958, during Cocteau's Grand-Mastership, a new Pope came to power - Angelo Roncalli - who also called himself John XXIII. It was this Pope that finally revoked the ban on the practice of Freemasonry for Catholics, making members of the Priory of Sion (which has described itself as a "Hermetic Freemasonry", legitimate Catholics again. What is more, the 1976 book The Prophecies of Pope John XXIII, allegedly written by the Pontiff himself, stated that he was secretly a member of the Order of the Rose-Croix, with whom, to quote Holy Blood, Holy Grail, "he had become acquainted while acting as papal nuncio to Turkey in 1935." Stranger still, in The Prophecies of Malachi, written by a 12th-century Irish monk, the assumption of the papacy by a "John XXIII" was predicted, and the descriptive motto he gave to this Pope was "Shepherd and Navigator." Well, "Navigator", of course, is the official title given to the Grand Masters of the Priory of Sion. Furthermore, Jean Cocteau identified himself with the Greek mythological figure of Orpheus, who was the subject of many Cocteau paintings, drawings, poems, plays and films. Orpheus was, traditionally, both a shepherd and a seaman. This tends to indicate that Pope John XXIII was a member of the Priory of Sion, and had a very close relationship with Jean Cocteau. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail suggest that, "Cardinal Roncalli, on becoming Pope, chose the name of his own secret grand master - so that - for some symbolic reason, there would be a John XXIII presiding over Sion and the papacy simultaneously." What could this symbolic reason possibly have been?

The Priory of Sion, as we know, has always been presumed to be at odds with the Catholic Church for a number of reasons. First, there is the fact that the Church had stolen the mythos of Christ for its own use, and the way the Church had purged the Bible of any reference to Christ's marriage, children, or real patrilineal ancestors. Then there is the fact that the Church has censored any interpretation of Christ other than its own faulty version, and "cleansed" the Bible of all texts that presented evidence to the contrary. Then, of course, there is the pact that the Church made with the Merovingian descendants of Christ, making them the perpetual heirs to the title "New Constantine" in exchange for their silence about their divine lineage. This pact was broken when the Church conspired to assassinate Merovingian King Dagobert II, and drove the Merovingians virtually out of existence.

But the Priory has often been composed of members who were nominally Catholic, and many of them have even been clerics. Furthermore, the Priory had, by Cocteau's time, begun calling itself "an order of Catholic chivalry", and Cocteau had taken care to make a public show of his re-conversion to Catholicism. The Priory had also recently announced its intention to create, through covert manipulation, a United States of Europe - much like what the European Union is becoming, and what the Holy Roman Empire (which the Merovingian bloodline first presided over) used to be. Such a feat would be as impossible today as it was back then without an alliance with the Catholic Church, which still holds the allegiance of much of Europe's citizens.

Yes it would - an alliance, or a coup. Evidence indicates that such a coup was attempted with the placement of John XXIII on the papal throne - a coup for which that other John 23, Jean Cocteau, was at the helm. Chillingly, John XXIII died in the same year as Jean 23 - 1963 - a mere five years into his papal reign, indicating that the attempted coup was snuffed out by the Vatican before it accomplished its ultimate goal: a reform from the inside of the corrupt Church of Christ, by those who possessed his true teachings, and his blood. But they certainly tried. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail state that:

> "...more than any other man, Pope John XXIII was responsible for reorienting the Roman Catholic Church - and bringing it, as commentators have frequently said, into the twentieth century[14] ... And in June 1960, he issued a profoundly apostolic letter. This missive addressed itself specifically to the subject of "the Precious Blood of Jesus." It ascribed a hitherto unprecedented significance to that blood."

This would be the blood whose bearers, in the form of the Grail family, the Priory of Sion was sworn to protect

It is interesting that both John 23s were thought of as prophets. Pope John XXIII's papacy had been predicted by the prophecies of Malachi, and there were a set of prophecies attributed to John XXIII as well. Cocteau had also been named "the Prophet" by the sculptor Arno Breker, for reasons that remain unexplained. But there is a clue in the first syllable of Cocteau's name - a symbolism which Cocteau himself emphasized in his work. He called himself "le Coq" ("the Cock"), and published a folded broadside of the same name with Raymond Radiguet in 1920. According to William Emboden, "Cocteau liked the concept of a bird alter ego. ... It is a symbol of the soul's flight." Cocteau referred to changes in his artistic style as "moltings", and his young disciples were referred to by others as "geese." The poet Apollinaire characterized Cocteau in writing as, "The bird that sings with its fingers", a line that was later used in Cocteau's film Orpheus. But it was the cock specifically, Emboden writes, in which Cocteau saw himself, "as a bird that calls the morning hour, and calls his name in part." A cock is an announcer of things, just like a prophet,[15] and thus he used the crowing of the cocks in his films Blood of a Poet and Testament of Orpheus. He also used the cock in the murals of the Chapel of Saint Peter, where the bird watches the Denial of Saint Peter from atop of a ladder.

[15] In this sense, then, "Jean the Birdman" could be code for "John the Prophet." In other words, Cocteau was again identifying himself with Saint John the Baptist, and all that he represents.

Recall that it was Peter who was said to have denied Christ thrice, by the third crow of the cock, on the morning of the Crucifixion. There is a further symbolic significance here. Saint Peter is regarded by the Catholic Church as the first Pope, and yet he denied the true Christ, as the Church still does today. They consider Peter (who was consumed with jealousy for Mary Magdalene's relationship with Christ, and who mischaracterized them both in his teachings) as their rock of foundation. Indeed, Peter's name means "rock", and it is also very close to "Pater" ("Father"), the title assumed by all Catholic priests upon ordination. In another mural at Saint Peter, entitled Saint Peter Walking on Water, Christ is shown standing with his right foot upon a white rock, presumably the "Rock of Zion" upon which he said his messiahship was founded (i.e., the bloodline of King David). Yet Christ also called Peter "my rock." On the left side of the picture is Saint Peter supposedly "walking on water", with the help of heavenly angels. But examination shows that he is not walking on the water so much as being held aloft by the angels while his feet are dipped into the water. The rites of baptism as practiced by the likes of John the Baptist involved the immersion of the feet in water - not the entire body, as is practiced today. This mural, completed in 1957, one year before John XXIII's assumption to the throne of Saint Peter, may have been Cocteau's way of prophetically announcing a reconciliation between the Rock of Zion (the Priory of Sion) and the Rock of Saint Peter (the Catholic Church), pronouncing that the Church, symbolized by Saint Peter, was about to be re-baptized.

But what exactly were Cocteau's religious beliefs, if they were not orthodox Catholic? To explain, I will quote a letter from one of Cocteau's friends, Jean Bourgoint (a monk also know as "Brother Pascal") to another of Cocteau's friends, Madame Jeannette Kandaouroff, apparently in response to a letter she had written him after Cocteau's death in 1963. He wrote:

"... I want to correct your mistake concerning Cocteau's death, which - quite the opposite of what you think, touched me profoundly... One thing I should like to clear up at once is the word Satan, which you think you remember and which I do not remember having used concerning him. Isn't there confusion here? Didn't I speak of Lucifer, bright name of the 'most beautiful of the Angels' before his fall? (In fact, don't you have a magnificent photograph of him, part of my 'estate', signed by him with that name?)"

Perhaps this identification with Lucifer is the source of what William Emboden calls, "Cocteau's preoccupation with angels, and the belief that all persons are angels in borrowed costume." Cocteau also repeatedly drew a figure called the "angel of flaming cheek", which could easily be identified with Lucifer. And of course, we should consider Cocteau's signature, with which he always included that perpetual symbol of Lucifer, the pentagram, complete with a little dot in the middle. Cocteau's explanation of his use of this star was that it represented a head wound that Apollinaire had received during the Great War. This may be a lie, but it represents an interesting metaphor: that of the divine ray of Lucifer entering into the brain of one who has just become enlightened. Henry Lincoln has pointed out that there is a geometrically implied pentagram in the mural at Notre Dame de France which radiates from the center of Cocteau's forehead. Does this represent a Luciferian epiphany? What, then, were Cocteau's plans for reforming the Church? Whatever these plans were, his work on them ended with his death in 1963. But they were to be carried on by his successors – among them Pierre Plantard de Saint-Claire.

Chapter Three: A Hermetic Freemasonry

"The Candidate must renounce his personality in order to devote himself to a higher moral apostolate."

- Article 7, Statutes of the Priory of Sion

In the year in 1956, during the grand mastership of Jean Cocteau, the Priory of Sion underwent considerable change. The order's statutes were rewritten, and the order's structure revised. The membership was increased five times, and they officially registered themselves with the French government. Their stated objective, according to the government's Journal Official, was "studies and mutual aid to members." At this time they took on the subtitle of "C.I.R.C.U.I.T.", which stood for "Chevalierie d'Institutions et Regles Catholiques d'Union Independente et Traditionaliste" (Chivalry of Catholic Rules and Institutions of the Independent and Traditionalist Union). C.I.R.C.U.I.T. was also the name of a magazine published by the order for its members.

It was at this point that the Priory began publishing the aforementioned "Priory documents" which, fifteen years later, had fomented into a firestorm of gossip about the Priory of Sion and Rennes-le-Chateau that proliferated throughout the country's popular magazines and newspapers. For instance, a 1973 article from Midi Libre purported that the Priory had chosen a candidate for the throne of a future Merovingian France by the name of M. Alain Poher. He had been the Provisional President of France both after the resignation of President Charles de Gaulle and after the death of President Georges Pompidou. He does have a possible connection to the Merovingian bloodline via an ancestor named Arnaud, Count of Poher, who married into the Plantard family. He was also a decorated hero of the French Resistance. As we shall see, members of the Priory of Sion played a number of key roles during the German occupation of France, and their true loyalties were not always clear-cut. Furthermore, the Priory of Sion would seem to have been manipulating French politics to a very high degree during this tumultuous period, in an apparent effort to further their long held goals of remodeling Europe according to their divinely-inspired ancient plan: a new Holy Roman Empire, or, as they now called it, a "United States of Europe."

At the head of this new empire would be a "Grand Monarch", a king whose throne had always been in existence, recognized by those who had been initiated into his secret, and was soon to make his power externally recognized as well. According to one Priory document:

"The King is shepherd and pastor at the same time. Sometimes he dispatches some brilliant ambassador to his vassal in power, his factotum, one who has the felicity of being subject to death. Thus Rene d'Anjou, Connetable de Bourbon, Nicolas Fouquet... and numerous others for whom astonishing success is followed by inexplicable disgrace - for these emissaries are both terrible and vulnerable. Custodians of a secret, one can only exalt or destroy them. Thus people like Gilles de Rais[16], Leonardo da Vinci, Joseph Balsamo, the dukes of Nevers and Gonzaga, whose wake is attended by a perfume of magic in which sulphur is mingled with incense - the perfume of the Magdalene."

If the Priory documents are correct, the Priory of Sion used such vassals as these throughout the twentieth century to manipulate affairs of state, across Europe and all over the world, to bring about their "United States of Europe." In accordance with the blueprint laid out in the Protocols of Zion, and in accordance with the Priory's past behavior, the Priory documents indicate that the Priory has been playing all sides of the political spectrum, sewing the seeds of discord by promoting not only monarchist sentiments, but also Socialism, Communism, Fascism,

[16] Gilles de Rais, a noble who was instrumental in the campaign of Jeanne d'Arc, was later convicted of raping and killing dozens of young boys in Satanic rituals.

Catholicism, anti-Catholicism, and Freemasonry. A document written by S. Roux in a self-published pamphlet asserts:

"One cannot say that the Church is ignorant of the line of the Razes [the Merovingian line from Dagobert II], but it must be remembered that all its descendants since Dagobert have been secret agitators against both the royal line of France and against the Church - and that they have been the source of all heresies. The return of a Merovingian descendant to power would entail for France the proclamation of a popular monarchy allied to the USSR, and the triumph of Freemasonry - in short, the disappearance of religious freedom."

Another Priory document, called Le Cercle d'Ulysse by Jean Declaude, declares that since the death of Jean Cocteau, an Abbe Ducaud-Bourget had been at the helm of the Priory, and that the order had since become, "a power capable of confronting the Vatican in the days to come. Monsignor Lefebvre is a most active and redoubtable member, capable of saying 'You make me Pope and I will make you King.'"

Abbe Ducaud-Bourget had been trained as a priest at Saint Sulpice. He was both a conventual chaplain of the Vatican's Templar-like Sovereign Order of Malta, and a well-known Resistance hero. He was an accomplished poet who had been admitted, like so many other members of Sion, to the Academie Francaise. But he was also known to lean to the right politically. He liked Mussolini and once voiced his desire for France to "recover its sense of values under the guidance of a new Napoleon."

As for "Monsignor Marcel Lefebvre", that would be Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, a fanatically traditionalist Catholic who openly defied Pope Paul VI, labeling him as too liberal, resulting in a brush with excommunication. Abbe Ducaud-Bourget was a member of Lefebvre's Traditionalist camp, and even led protests against the current leadership of the Church. He was also threatened with excommunication. Lefebvre had been a member of Action Francaise, considered to be an extremely right-wing organization, and had complimented Argentina's fascist regime publicly. However, in 1976, when Lefebvre appeared to be on the brink of excommunication, the Pope changed his mind. According to an article from London's Guardian, on August 30, 1976:

"The Archbishop's team of priests in England... believe that their leader still has a powerful ecclesiastical weapon to use in his dispute with the Vatican. No one will give any hint of its nature, but Father Peter Morgan, the group's leader... describes it as being something 'earth-shaking.'"

Later, around 1980, an article ran in the popular French magazine Bonne Soiree linking both Ducaud-Bourget and Lefebvre with the Priory of Sion, and claiming that they had both recently visited the site of Chateau Barberie, which was so precious to the Priory.

Pierre Plantard de Saint-Clair

Another article in Bonne Soiree from 1981 stated that Pierre Plantard had been elected the new Grand Master of the Priory of Sion in 1981, by a "Convent" of the Priory's 121 dignitaries. As the article described it, "The 121 dignitaries of the Prieure de Sion are all eminence grises of high finance and of international political or philosophical societies." It also stated that Pierre Plantard was the direct descendant of Dagobert II, which:

> "...has been proved legally by the parchments of Queen Blanche of Castile, discovered by the Abbe Sauniere in his church at Rennes-le-Chateau (Aude) in 1891. These documents were sold by the priest's niece in 1965 to Captain Roland Stansmore and Sir Thomas Frazer, and were deposited in a safe deposit box of Lloyd's Bank Europe Limited of London."

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail, in an interview with Plantard associate Philippe de Cherisey, were told that, "Francois Ducaud-Bourget had not been elected by a proper quorum." One possible explanation for this is a rift that occurred in the Priory around 1956, centered on Cocteau's new statutes. In addition to increasing the order's membership by five times, these articles, among other things, required that members provide the order with a notarized copy of their signature and birth certificate, and that they always admit to their membership with the Priory upon being asked about it by an outsider. Failure to do so would be considered resignation from the order. Many members were enraged because they felt that they were being "deprived of their anonymity." Perhaps Bourget was elected by a segment of the Priory that had broken off from the main group in protest, and which was no longer recognized by that main group. Indeed, such a schism does seem to have occurred, one which assumed proportions similar to the Cutting of the Elm, but which "was averted by the diplomatic skill of Pierre Plantard.

M. Plantard's biography is nothing short of fascinating, and more than a bit confusing. In addition to being a direct descendant of Dagobert

II, he is also a direct descendant of the owners of Chateau Barberie, and in an interview with Gerard de Sede once mentioned an "international secret" that is hidden at Gisors. In fact he seems to have been de Sede's main source of information for his books about Rennes-le-Chateau and the Priory of Sion. Plantard's grandfather was purportedly a friend of Berenger Sauniere, and Pierre Plantard owned a great deal of land near Rennes-le-Chateau, such as the ruins of the Blanchefort Chateau, and the land upon which the Church of Saint Dagobert once stood. A bizarre little biography of Pierre Plantard, which was written by his first wife, Anne Lea Hisler, in C.I.R.C.U.I.T. reads as follows:

"Let us not forget that this psychologist was the friend of personages as diverse as Comte Israel Monti, one of the brothers of the Holy Vehm, Gabriel Trarieux d'Egmont, one of the thirteen members of the Rose-Croix, Paul LeCour, the philosopher on Atlantis, the Abbe Hoffet of the Service of Documentation of the Vatican, Th. Moreux, the director of the Conservatory at Bourges, etc. Let us remember that during the Occupation, he was arrested, suffered torture by the Gestapo, and was interred as a political prisoner for long months. In his capacity as doctor of arcane sciences he learned to appreciate the value of secret information, which no doubt led to his receiving the title of honorary member in several hermetic societies. All of this has gone to form a singular personage, a mystic of peace, an apostle of liberty, an ascetic whose ideal is to serve the well-being of humanity. Is it astonishing therefore that he should become one of the eminence grises from whom the great of this world seek counsel?"

A researcher working for the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail contacted writer Jean-Luc Chaumeil, another associate of Pierre Plantard, on the Priory's political intentions. As they described it, he told them that:

"…in a few years... there would be dramatic change in the French government - a change that would pave the way for a popular monarchy with a Merovingian ruler on the throne... Sion was ... intent on presiding over a restoration of true 'values' - values, it would appear, of a spiritual, perhaps esoteric character. These values ... were ultimately pre-Christian..."

Chaumeil also said something very peculiar, making the abrupt and unsolicited comment that "not all members of the Prieure de Sion ... were Jewish", implying that the majority of them in fact were.

Vaincre* and the French Resistance

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail arranged a series of interviews with Pierre Plantard himself. In the first interview he claimed that the Priory possessed the treasures of Solomon's Temple, which would be "returned to Israel when the time is right." He also repeated Chaumeil's assertions about the coming political changes in France. Over a series of subsequent meetings, dealt with extensively in Holy Blood, Holy Grail and The Messianic Legacy, the authors learned much about both Plantard's intentions and those of the Priory of Sion. They also undertook their own investigation of Pierre Plantard. They discovered that he had indeed been very active in the French Resistance. Between 1941 and 1943, he had edited what purported to be a "Resistance journal", a strange little magazine called Vaincre. Between 1943 and 1944, he had supposedly been imprisoned by the Gestapo in Fresnes, although the authors were not able to confirm this.

They did, however, manage to track down copies of six issues of Vaincre, which they described as "printed on high-quality paper, which was difficult to obtain in France at the time." It was published by the company of Poirier Murat, a French Resistance hero and friend of Plantard. The first issue had a press run of 1,379, which had grown to

5000 by the sixth issue. “On the whole”, Holy Blood, Holy Grail concluded, “Vaincre represented a venture that could not possibly have been undertaken without some knowledge on the part of the authorities. It also represented a venture with substantial money behind it.”

Although Vaincre proved to be an actual publication, it was not what one would think of as a “Resistance journal”, and more of a new age publication, dealing with mythology, mysticism, Hermeticism, cabalism, etc. There were articles about Atlantis, the fabled underground city of Agartha, lost races, and talk of “secret masters” hidden in the mountains of Tibet. Most of these themes, interestingly enough, were also those embraced by the secret societies that spawned the Nazi movement. And there was indeed a secret society behind the publication of Vaincre: Alpha Galates.

Alpha Galates purported to be a chivalric order. It promoted the value of chivalry as a means for revitalizing spiritual values, and creating a new spiritual order throughout the world. As Vaincre stated, “...chivalry is indispensable because our country cannot be reborn except through its knights.” It also emphasized the need for chivalry, including the bestowal of knightly titles, to be based on spiritual and moral achievements, as they had been in the beginning of the chivalric era. Honors should not, as they later were, be handed out in return for political favors. Vaincre declared that, “The chevalier cannot live without the spiritual ideal, which is the reservoir for moral, intellectual, and spiritual force through coming generations.”

Vaincre reveals some direct links between Alpha Galates and the Priory of Sion, indicating that, if they were not the same order, they were at least sister organizations. Vaincre states that the order is divided into the “Legion”, who conduct “philosophical research”, and the “Phalange”, who train future members. This is exactly the divisional structure given to the Priory of Sion in Cocteau’s 1956 statutes. However, Plantard had previously stated that his membership in the Priory began in 1943, and his involvement in Alpha Galates began a year earlier. Yet one would think he had already been involved for some time by 1942, as he was already editing their official magazine, billed in the first issue as “Pierre de France.” By the fourth issue he had lengthened his name to Pierre de France-Plantard, and was named in Vaincre as the Grand Master of Alpha Galates, which was now headquartered at his own address in Paris.

Vaincre states that Alpha Galates had been registered with the Journal Official in 1937, but this was not recorded, and the French Ministry of Defense denies any knowledge of the order, as did the French Prefecture of Police, even though they did in fact have records showing that they had investigated the group. They definitely had reason to investigate, for the political bent of Vaincre would seem, on the surface at least, to be considerably right-wing. For instance, one of its frequent contributors was Professor Louis le Fur, who had been a well-known writer and journalist during the Occupation, and was appointed by Petain to a prominent educational post. Le Fur states in one of his articles in Vaincre that he has belonged to Alpha Galates for eight years.

Even more damning is the content of the magazine itself, which extols the virtues of Petain and the Vichy government. A romantic and patriotic hymn to Petain was even published in the first issue, and the Order of Alpha Galates was proclaimed to be “in the service of the homeland.” Also, what would a right-wing journal be without anti-Semitism, of which Vaincre contains plenty. One line reads, “To restore our homeland to its rank... it is necessary to eradicate... false dogmas ... and the corrupt principles of the formerly democratic Jewish-Masonry.”

The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail theorized that this might have been just a front, a cover for Vaincre’s real intentions. And Pierre Plantard, when confronted, told them the same. As they described it, “He hinted that beneath its pro-Vichy Petainist patina, Vaincre contained coded messages that would have been decipherable only to the Resistance.” Indeed, it is hard to reconcile the exoteric messages of Vaincre with the fact that so many of its contributors, and so much of the membership of Alpha Galates, including Pierre Plantard had been closely allied with the Resistance, along with Abbe Ducaud-Bourget, who may have presided over the Priory of Sion and is said to have inducted Pierre Plantard into the group. Furthermore, Pierre Plantard later served as an assistant to Charles de Gaulle, who is on record as having refused to work closely with former collaborators. Also, in November of 1942, a pro-Vichy and pro-Nazi publication called Au pilori published an attack on Pierre Plantard, Alpha Galates, and Vaincre, which would have been unlikely had they in fact been on the same side.

The commentary from Au pilori was obviously taken very seriously, for Vaincre dedicated an entire issue to rebutting it. It was announced that a member of Alpha Galates had been removed from the order, apparently for leaking information to Au pilori. Vaincre also clarified its mission: a "United States of the West."

This idea is one of the predominant themes throughout Vaincre, and is illustrated by a drawing that ran in the first issue. This drawing depicts a mounted knight riding down a road upon which is written "The United States of the West." This road divides areas labeled "Brittany" and "Bavaria." The horse is galloping towards a rising sunset marked with "1946" and the sign of Aquarius, indicating that the birth of the United States of the West will be the dawn of a new age.

For Alpha Galates, this was not merely a dream. It was a plan. Alpha Galates member Louis le Fur later founded a group called "Energie" that included Robert Schuman, another man who dreamed of a United States of Europe, and who later became an instrumental figure in the drafting of the plans for the European Economic Community. And it was not only the men of Alpha Galates and the French Resistance that were dreaming of a United Europe. The dream was alive in Germany, with both the Nazis and with the German Resistance.

The German Resistance movement was largely centered on an aristocrat named Claus von Stauffenberg, a nobleman and monarchist with a large and loyal following of acolytes called "the Kreisau Circle." Stauffenberg was responsible for the famous "Bomb Plot", the attempt to assassinate Hitler on July 20, 1944, now celebrated as Stauffenberg Day in Europe. Among his circle were his cousins Count Helmut James von Moltke and Hans Adolf von Moltke, the latter of whom was apparently a member of Alpha Galates. In the article in Vaincre in which it is announced that Pierre Plantard has been elected Grand Master, Hans Adolf von Moltke, who is described as "a great German, one of the Masters in our Order", is quoted as stating:

"I have the pleasure to say, before my departure for Spain, that our Order has at last found a chief worthy of it in the person of Pierre de France.

It is therefore with total confidence that I depart to perform my mission; for while not deluding myself about the perils I run in discharging my duty, I know that until my last breath my watchword will consist of recognition of Alpha Galates and fidelity to its chief."

Von Moltke had been the German ambassador to both Poland and Britain, and had just been appointed ambassador to Spain. His cousin Helmut James von Moltke had been attempting to circumvent Hitler by negotiating a peace deal with the Allies himself through associates in Sweden, and it is likely that Hans Adolf von Moltke was on a similar mission in Spain. Von Moltke died in Spain later that year, and although the Allies won the war, the peace that followed was not at all what the Kreisau Circle had in mind. Had they been successful in negotiating their peace deal, Europe may well have turned out much differently that it is today.

This link between the Kreisau Circle and Alpha Galates represents the first definitive link between the French and German Resistance movements yet known. And the relationship between the two groups seems not to have begun until 1942, the same year that Vaincre began publishing. Like the members of Alpha Galates, the Kreisau Circle became involved in the planning of the EEC through their associates in the Swiss branch of the British Foreign Office, and through Allen Dulles, then head of the Swiss station of the OSS - which later became, with Dulles at the head, the CIA. As I shall discuss, the Priory of Sion appears to have a special relationship with the CIA as well.

Charles de Gaulle and the Committees of Public Safety

During the mid-1950s, about the same time that a schism within the Priory of Sion was occurring, France was brought to the brink of civil war as a result of the fact that Algeria, which was under French control, was jockeying for independence. Coalition governments were collapsing at an alarming rate, and the situation, which lasted for eight years, appeared dire. Within the French Army stationed in Algeria, a network of secret societies was formed with the aim of keeping Algeria under French control. They were called the Committees of Public Safety, named and modeled after a similar network of secret societies formed during the French Revolution. These groups, which included a number of former Resistance leaders, embraced Charles de Gaulle (alleged by the Priory documents to be a pawn of the Priory of Sion) as the only man they felt could lead France out of the mire towards victory.

In the Spring of 1958, the French government decided that it would cut its losses with Algeria and grant their independence. In reaction to this, the Committees of Public Safety staged a coup d'etat, declaring their own government, meanwhile pleading with Charles de Gaulle to seize the French government and reunify the country. Within a couple of months, Committees of Public Safety began to appear in mainland France. One Committee took control of Corsica by force while another based in Algeria busied itself propagating a peculiar message: that the citizens of France must "choose between the star of Moscow and the Cross of Lorraine." In this brewing conflict former Resistance fighters and Vichy collaborators found themselves on the same team: French nationalism

Then all of the sudden, their dreams came true. In fear of a widely spread rumor that a coup was being planned in Paris, the ruling government simply resigned on May 28. The following day, the Committees of Public Safety organized marches throughout Paris in support of De Gaulle. Hours later, De Gaulle accepted the Presidency, and began forming a government that included many of the key figures in his rise to power. Among them was Andre Malraux, an associate of Jean Cocteau and an alleged member of the Priory of Sion.

But now that De Gaulle was in control, he was expected by the Committees, who had orchestrated his rise to power, to maintain Algeria's colonial status. Yet what they did not know was that he had no intention of doing so. As soon as they caught wind of this, many members of the Algerian Committees, feeling betrayed, formed the OAS (Organisation de l'Armee Secrete - Secret Army Organization), which for years afterward staged numerous assassination attempts on De Gaulle. However, none of them were successful, nor was this group considered a serious threat. The French Committees, though, were a threat, and De Gaulle feared that, like the Committees of Public Safety during the French Revolution, they might turn on him at any time and march him off to the guillotine. What De Gaulle wanted was for the Committees to be disbanded entirely. And with that, we once again come to the subject of Pierre Plantard.

According to Plantard himself, he had been asked by Charles de Gaulle to take control of the Parisian Committees, see to it that they completed their task of installing De Gaulle in power, and then dissolve them once this had been done. Presumed confirmation of this appears in a pamphlet by Anne Lea Hisler which was deposited in the Bibliotheque Nationale in 1964. In this she states that the headquarters of the French Committees was in the Parisian suburb of Aulnay-sous-Bois, directed by Michel Debre, Andre Malraux, Marshall Alphonse Juin, and Pierre Plantard, whom she calls "the Way.", she states). She then quotes a letter purportedly written by De Gaulle to her husband on August 3, 1958. It says:

> "My dear Plantard,
> In my letter of 29 July, 1958, I said to you how much I appreciated the participation of the Committees of Public Safety in the work of renewal I have undertaken. Now that the new institutions have been established, which will enable our country to rediscover her rightful status, I believe the members of the Committees of Public Safety can regard themselves as released from the obligations they have until now assumed, and can demobilize."

Further confirmation came from the Institut Charles de Gaulle. Although they were unable to find any mention of Pierre Plantard in their own archives, they did manage to scrounge up some references to him in France's leading newspaper, Le Monde. One article, dated June 6, 1958, quoted a communique that had been issued from the headquarters of the French Committees of Public Safety, stating:

“The Committees of Public Safety must express the wishes of the people, and it is in the name of liberty, of unity, and of solidarity that all French citizens must present today to aid Charles de Gaulle... Patriots, to your posts, and have confidence in the man who has already saved France...”

The author of this statement was signed as “Captain Way”, one of Pierre Plantard’s pseudonyms. Then two days later, another article appeared quoting another communique about the Committees, which was signed by “M. Plantard”, who also said that he could be called on his home phone by dialing “WAY-PAIX” (Way-Peace). Finally, on July 29, the day that de Gaulle wrote the aforementioned letter to Plantard, another article ran in Le Monde quoting yet another communique signed by “Captain Way”, this one announcing the dissolution of the committees. The article goes on to say that Captain Way is, in fact, “M. Pierre Plantard... who, together with certain friends, took the initiative of establishing this Committee.” It further states that Plantard will be “secretary in charge of propaganda” for “the ‘Movement’ which will comprise the successor to the Committee.”

C.I.R.C.U.I.T

Following Vaincre, Pierre Plantard lent himself to another publishing venture, the aforementioned C.I.R.C.U.I.T, which first appeared in 1956, that crucial year for the Priory. Actually, this was only the first series of C.I.R.C.U.I.T., the second of which appeared in 1959. The first series does not mention either Pierre Plantard or the Priory of Sion, and on the surface, at least, reflects little of the interests of either. Other than an article about a thirteen-house zodiac system used by the Priory (which I discuss in Appendix A of this book), the rest of the magazine appears to have been published by a low-cost housing association. It contains unremarkable articles about housing, and other seemingly extraneous materials such as, according to The Messianic Legacy, "crossword puzzles, contests for children on a housing estate, advertisements for pencils." The meaning of this is unclear, but it is quite possible that, like Vaincre, C.I.R.C.U.I.T. was operating on two levels at once, and that secret messages were being communicated through cryptic words inserted into otherwise uninteresting articles.

The second series of C.I.R.C.U.I.T, which began in 1959, while not at all straightforward, was at least an obvious organ of the Priory of Sion. Pierre Plantard is listed as Editor, though the Priory of Sion is not specifically mentioned. Instead, the magazine purports to be published by an organization called “The Federation of French Forces”, for which an address and phone number is provided. Unfortunately, researchers have determined that neither the address nor the phone number were correct, and they have not been able to find any information on the Federation of French Forces. But the street name mentioned in the address, “Aulnay-sous-Bois”, is the same street from which the central command of the Committees of Public Safety operated, indicating that the Federation of French Forces were somehow a continuation of the Committees. As if to verify this, the second issue of the 1959 C.I.R.C.U.I.T. series mentions yet another letter that Plantard supposedly received from Charles de Gaulle.

The second series of C.I.R.C.U.I.T resembles Vaincre in many ways, and even makes reference to the other magazine. Like Vaincre, it covers topics related to the occult, mysticism, chivalry, French nationalism, and European unity. Many of these articles are written by Pierre Plantard, who here, as in the pages of Vaincre, uses the pen name “Chyren.” Some articles are also, as in Vaincre, written by his wife Anne Lea Hisler. There is again an emphasis on the importance of a thirteen-house zodiac, and Pierre Plantard uses this system to predict France’s destiny for the next few decades.

There are other, more cryptic topics discussed in C.I.R.C.U.I.T as well. There is an entire article dedicated, seemingly out of place, to the details of viticulture and wine selling. Particular emphasis is put on something called “the grafting of vines”, which apparently is a coded reference to the intermarrying of royal bloodlines. Another peculiar line from one of Plantard’s articles is worth quoting, and its importance will become clear in the pages to follow. Philosophizing about the destiny of human civilization, he writes:

“...all is accomplished in accordance with well-determined cycles. A ‘Nautonnier’ guides the ark (‘arche’) in the flood.”

In regards to the politics of state, C.I.R.C.U.I.T does not confine itself to mere statements of opinion. They predict what they believe will inevitably occur. They argue for the abolition of the French system which carves the country’s geography into departments. They then lay out their own blueprint for the restructuring of the French government. It would include nine sections: “Council of the Provinces; Council of State; Parliamentary Council; Taxes, Work, and Production; Medical; National Education; Age of Majority; and Housing and Schools.” This doesn’t seem terribly radical. But then, in another article by Plantard, he enunciates plans for the restructuring of the entire world:

> "...the creation of a Confederation of Lands becomes a Confederation of States: the United States of Euro-Africa, which represented economically (1) an African and European community of exchange based on a common market and (2) the circulation of wealth in order to serve the well-being of all, this being the sole stable foundation on which peace can be constructed.".

The United States of Europe

One of the most consistently-stated goals of the Priory of Sion, and those associated with it, is a United States of Europe. According to Holy Blood, Holy Grail: "The Prieure de Sion seeks a United States of Europe partly as a bulwark against the Soviet imperium... a self-contained and neutral power bloc capable of holding the balance of power between the Soviet Union and the United States."

The idea of a united Europe was, as we know, popular amongst the French Resistance. It was espoused by people such as Andre Malraux, who advocated a "European New Deal" allied against the USSR. In 1942, Winston Churchill was quoted as saying, "I trust that the European family may act united as one under a Council of Europe. I look forward to a United States of Europe." Organizations such as Pan Europa, founded by Count Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi, began to pop up in the 1940s. Pan Europa included Jean Cocteau's friend Paul Valery, and is currently directed by Otto von Hapsburg. They employ a Celtic cross as their insignia.

Other groups that were interested in seeing European unity were the Western intelligence agencies, especially British and American intelligence, who sought to build a pro-European network amongst militant Catholic and right-wing political groups. When the OSS (Office of Strategic Strategies), precursor of the CIA, was under the control of William Donovan, they attempted to infiltrate the Vatican and put priests in top positions on their payroll. They made use of Father Felix Morlion, founder of Pro Deo (For God), a European Catholic intelligence agency which the OSS funded and installed first in New York, then in the Vatican itself. They also made use of the Society of Jesuits, which had been involved in Catholic espionage for years.

In 1948, the same year that the Congress of Europe met at the Hague, the OSS became the Central Intelligence Agency. Immediately the CIA began funding European political parties, particularly the Christian Democrats, in an attempt to manipulate European governments and pull them to the right. The following year, the ACUE (American Committee on a United Europe) was formed, and William Donovan was made its chairman. Allen Dulles, former head of the OSS in Switzerland, friend of the Von Moltke cousins and future head of the CIA, was Vice-President. The Director of the Council on Foreign Relations, and the future coordinator of the Trilateral Commission, George S. Franklin, was the Secretary. They even had another CIA agent, Thomas Braden, as their Executive Director. It was because of these men that the decision was made for the State Department to fund the European Movement. Following this, Joseph Retinger proceeded to collaborate with Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands and others to create the now infamous globalist think tank, the Bilderberg Group.

Meanwhile, the CIA busied itself funding organizations and newspapers all over Europe that were pro-Catholic and anti-Communist. A major recipient was Italy's Christian Democrat party, which had been started by the father of future Pope Paul VI, who was also on their payroll. He had been working as a spy and liaison for the OSS, then later the CIA, since during WWII. It has also been said that Pope John Paul II has been receiving weekly intelligence briefings from the CIA since 1978, although it is unknown whether that continues to occur given the Pope's current state of deterioration.

It was during the 1960s that the CIA began distributing funds to its favored groups through the Vatican's own bank. This was done with the help of a shadowy, pro-Catholic, anti-Communist Masonic lodge known as "P2", which allegedly had lodges not only in Italy, but also France, Portugal, Switzerland, the United States, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Paraguay, Argentina, and Venezuela. As author David Yallop has written:

"[P2] interlocks with a number of the military regimes of Latin America, and with a variety of groups of neo-Fascists. It also interlocks very closely with the CIA. It reaches right into the heart of the Vatican. The central common interest of all these elements is apparently a hatred and fear of Communism."

All of this came out in the Italian press when a massive banking scandal broke involving the official Vatican bank, Banco Ambrosiano, and P2. The main figures implicated were P2 members Michael Sindona (a high ranking official in the bank and P2's financier) and the lodge's Grand Master Licio Gelli. Gelli was a man with far-right viewpoints who, after the scandal broke, was found hanging from the Blackfriar's Bridge in London in 1982, in a manner consistent with Masonic ritual.[17] It also led to the murder of an Italian investigator, Giorgio Ambrosoli, and later that of Michael Sindona himself, who was the chief suspect in the other two killings.

It is known that P2 was under the direction of an even more powerful organization, which one former member, Mino Pecorelli, named as being the CIA. (Pecorelli was murdered after making this acknowledgement.) But there is another possibility as well. Supposedly, “P2” is short for “Propaganda Due”, the meaning of which is not elaborated on. However, we have received one suggestion from an informant that “P2” simply means “Priory 2”, and that it is a break-off group of the Priory of Sion.

Certainly it is interesting to note that P2 began in the 1960s, just about four years after the “schism” within the Priory caused by Jean Cocteau’s new statutes. Perhaps P2 is made up of part of that group which never got reintegrated into the order after the schism was resolved. This idea is further corroborated by a bizarre book called Scandals of the Prieure de Sion, written under the pseudonym “Cornelius.”

Cornelius states unequivocally that the murder of Giorgio Ambrosoli was ordered by a well-known Italian politician who was also one of the senior dignitaries of the Priory of Sion. He states that both Michael Sindona and a number of banks in the US have been involved in questionable financial deals with the Priory of Sion. He says that the Priory was intimately involved with the Italian Mafia, and with P2. Another person Cornelius alleged to be involved was Cardinal Jean Danielou, who was, according to The Messianic Legacy, "the Vatican's chief spokesman at the time on clerical celibacy." He was found dead in a scene that involved a female stripper and a large amount of cash - purportedly killed by a heart attack. Interestingly, Danielou had been a friend of Jean Cocteau, and had made a Latin translation of his play, Oedipus Rex. Cornelius implicates Danielou in the financial transactions between the Vatican, P2, and the Priory of Sion, and intimates that the Cardinal's death was somewhat less than natural.

[17] (When initiated, the Masonic candidate takes an oath swearing his loyalty and secrecy, on penalty of ritualized murder such as this.)

Finally, Cornelius says that in 1981, Pierre de Plantard, having recently been elected Grand Master of the Priory, had a meeting two days later with P2 Grand Master Licio Gelli at a cafe called "La Tipia" in Paris. This just so happens to be the same place where Plantard insisted on meeting the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail for some of their interviews.

The Knights of Jerusalem and the Knights of Malta

When the P2 scandal broke in 1981, and Licio Gelli's property was raided, they discovered links between P2 and other organizations that were very highly ranked within the Vatican. These included a Vatican intelligence agency called "Opus Dei", which controls Vatican Radio, and another group that actually claims descent from the Knights Templar: the Sovereign Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem. This order, which dates back at least to 1804, claims to have been created by the Templars' last Grand Master, Jacques de Molay, who purportedly drew up a charter prior to his execution which named his successor. They are a genuine continuation, they said, of the original order, and they were now dedicating themselves to "antiquarian interests." However, when the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail met with one of their representatives in 1982, and then did some research on their own, a much more complicated picture emerged.

The representative told them that they had just undergone a schism in which members of their group broke away to form their own, now headquartered in Switzerland. From this another group had spun off calling itself "Grand Prieure de Suisse", led by a man named Anton Zapelli, which made its headquarters in the Swiss city of Sion. This organization included a number of members who also belonged to the Grand Suisse Loge Alpina, and Zapelli had been named by one of the informants interviewed for Holy Blood, Holy Grail as being, “The real power behind the Prieure de Sion.” In their subsequent research, the authors came across internal documents from the Grand Prieure de Suisse. They dealt largely with two themes: international banking and European unification, specifically “the role of modern Templars in the reunification of Europe.”

If the ancient order of Templars lives on in the Sovereign Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem, so too does their ancient rival, the Knights Hospitaller, live on in the Sovereign Military Order of the Knights of Malta. They were first organized as the Order of Saint John in Jerusalem in 1070, three decades before the Crusades began, to provide medical care for pilgrims to the Holy Land. Over the next 60 years they transformed themselves into an impressive military and financial power on par with the Knights Templar and the Teutonic Knights, both of whom they had an antagonistic relationship with. Even while the other two orders, which both practiced similarly “heretical” rituals, were being persecuted by the Church, the Hospitallers were favored by the Pope, and were given many of the Templars’ former holdings after their dissolution. Over the years they moved their headquarters from Cyprus to Rhodes, which, as Holy Blood, Holy Grail describes, "they governed as their private principality." It was later transferred again to the Isle of Malta. Holy Blood, Holy Grail states that, "In the mid-sixteenth century, they were still one of the supreme military and naval powers of the Christian world, with strength and financial resources comparable to most kingdoms."

They were ousted from Malta by Napoleon in 1798, but reestablished themselves in Rome, taking on the name "the Knights of Malta" to avoid confusion with other organizations in Germany and Britain that were called "The Knights of Saint John", but were actually Protestant. They still held a considerable amount of political power as the world entered the twentieth century, and they were actually named as potential candidates to take control of Jerusalem after WWII. Today they maintain, from their seat in Rome, a prominent organization that spans the globe. Further, they are still recognized by international law as presiding over "an independent sovereign principality", as states Holy Blood, Holy Grail:

"The Grand Master is recognized as a head of state, with a secular rank equivalent to a prince and an ecclesiastical rank equivalent to a cardinal. The Order maintains formal diplomatic relations with a number of countries, especially in Africa and in Latin America, and in those countries its ministers enjoy standard diplomatic privileges."

The leadership of the Knights of Malta is in no way democratically chosen. All members of the upper degrees must come from an aristocratic family with a coat of arms that is at least 300 years old. The membership includes not only high-ranking members of the Church, but also high-ranking members of international business and politics. Not surprisingly, they are deeply entangled with Vatican intelligence units, and are described in Holy Blood, Holy Grail as being "one of the primary channels of communication between the Vatican and the CIA." Its membership is saturated with people from intelligence agencies the world over, and the American contingent is rather substantial. Among its ranks have stood CIA directors John McCone and William Casey, as well as Alexander Haig, Colin Powell, William Bennett, and William F. Buckley. CIA director William Colby was invited, but responded, "I'm a little lower key." Also among the Knights of Malta have been a number of members of the P2 lodge: Licio Gelli, Umberto Ortolani (Gelli's closest associate), Chiefs of the Italian Secret Service General de Lorenzo and General Allavena, General Giuseppe Santovito, once Chief of Italian Military Intelligence, and probably many others.

One of the Knights of Malta's primary activities in the last 20 years has been the fight against Communism in South and Central America. It is through them that the CIA has often funneled money to right-wing military groups in these areas to help them crush the left. As it just so happens, the one-time head of the Knights of Malta in the US, J. Peter Grace, also ran the Americares organization. This group was dedicated to the same right-wing cause. They are suspected of having funded the World Anti-Communist League with money provided by the Knights of Malta and, ultimately, the CIA.

Acknowledgement of a relationship between the Knights of Malta and the Priory of Sion came from Pierre Plantard himself, who admitted that a number of his order's members were also Knights of Malta. Abbe Ducaud-Bourget, the man who had brought Plantard into the order originally (and who has been cited by some authors as Grand Master of the Priory after Jean Cocteau), was Magistral Chaplain of the Knights of Malta for fourteen years.

A series of events surrounding some falsified documents which pertained to the present location of the Sauniere parchments convinced the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail that the Priory's relationship with the British and American intelligence network did indeed exist. It also led to yet another schism within the order. At one of the authors' many meetings with Pierre Plantard at La Tipia, he told them that this schism was caused by an "Anglo-American contingent" within the order who were trying to move the Priory's focus away from restoring monarchy in Europe and towards more practical and immediate goals. They were led to believe that this "Anglo-American contingent" consisted of spies from the CIA, MI5, and the Knights of Malta. Then he appeared to - almost - make an astounding proposition. As they described it:

"...M. Plantard paused and began to muse. There were, at present, two vacancies in the Order, he said reflectively. It would be a great advantage to have those vacancies occupied by 'foreigners' who would be sympathetic to the French and continental position. That would serve to counterbalance the influence of the 'Anglo-American contingent.' There was a long and pregnant pause. We said nothing. The conversation drifted to a different topic. But for a moment, it actually appeared as if M. Plantard had been about to offer us membership in the Order."

The offer was never accepted, however, and to my knowledge, the "Anglo-American contingent" was never defeated. At the authors' last meeting with Plantard, he expanded upon the Priory of Sion's political goals for the immediate future. He remarked, according to The Messianic

Legacy, that “Mitterand... had been a necessary stepping stone”, but, “had served his purpose, and was expendable.” He said that for some of the Priory’s members, their ultimate aim was a United States of Europe, to balance the power exercised by the Soviet Union and the United States. They also desired a larger “common market” of the Occident, which would include both Europe and the United States. About the involvement of the Vatican in this grand plan, Plantard said that Rome was “cooperating” in accordance with their “ongoing policy” on such matters, a policy “to which individual popes were bound.” Also, Holy Blood, Holy Grail, he said, had “caused quite a few ripples” within the Vatican.

Compared to the carefully-scripted trickles of information that they had received from the Priory thus far, Plantard was practically spilling his guts. A few weeks later, they learned why. They received a letter from him, addressed to the membership of the Priory, and dated two and a half months prior to the authors’ last meeting with him, stating that he was resigning not only his grand mastership, but his membership in the order. This was done “for reasons of health”, and “for reasons of personal and family independence.” Furthermore, his resignation was prompted by “certain maneuvers” made by “our English and American brethren”, and because of the numerous “false or falsified documents” about him that had been published "in the press, in books, and in duplicated pamphlets deposited in the Bibliotheque Nationale."

With Plantard's resignation, the Priory of Sion apparently went into hiding again. But the exposure of its mythos to pubic consciousness has caused the Priory of Sion's legend to expand exponentially in popularity. The primary reason is this: within the saga of the Priory, the Merovingians, the Grail, and Rennes-le-Chateau resides a mystique that all of us subconsciously relate to. Deep within or ancestral memory, we can all recall a time when the sacredness of certain bloodlines was innately understood, and the concept of a king as an incarnation of God needed no explanation. In our subconscious minds, we all know that there is a pattern to the events of history; that this is no random collection of occurrences, but rather, in many instances, the result of a highly-orchestrated plot perpetrated by the unseen hands of the elite. Within ourselves, we know that there must be some reason why the elite are who they are, and why they do what they do. Most of all, every one of us responds on an instinctive level to the religious and mythological symbolism, including the diabolical symbolism, employed by the Priory of Sion, which is the key to understanding their mysteries, as well as their grand political plan. In order to fully comprehend the enigma surrounding the Priory of Sion, we must begin by understanding their heretical religious beliefs.

Chapter Four: The Golden Age

"...When a stream is polluted it is necesary, if you are to find pure water, to go back to the source. It's the same with tradition - it only remains pure at its origin."

- Paul Le Cour, The Age of Aquarius

The Ancient Origins of Christianity

The membership list of the Priory of Sion and its related auxiliary orders is about as heterodox as one can imagine. It has included devote Catholics, Protestants, Christian heretics, occultists, atheists, even avowed Satanists and Luciferians, as well as adherents of some of the most extreme right and left-wing political causes of history. But despite their wide differences, they all seem to hold certain elements in common – namely an infatuation with the mythology of the Grail, and an insistence on the importance of certain royal bloodlines, most especially the Merovingian. The authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail determined that the Priory revered the Merovingians because they believed them to be descendants of Christ – carriers of his sacred royal blood, and guardians of the true teachings of Christ. Holy Blood, Holy Grail implied that the true Christian church, perpetuated by Christ's offspring, held religious beliefs shockingly heretical when compared with the dogma of the Catholic Church. In short, they asserted that the heresies which the Catholic Church persecuted throughout the Middle Ages were in fact the True Church – the Church of the Holy Grail.

An essential part of the secret doctrine of the Grail is the belief in the humanness of Christ. When the Catholic Church deified Christ, they stripped him of all family connections. The Church established the doctrine of the "virgin birth" to disconnect Jesus from the genealogy of his father, Joseph, a descendant of King David, and for a while tried to maintain that the Virgin Mary had herself been conceived in the same manner, thus disconnecting Jesus from her side of the family as well. They tried to establish the perpetual virginity of Mary, thus claiming that Jesus had no biological brothers or sisters, and maintained that the many "brothers" of Jesus mentioned in the Gospels were either children of Joseph from a previous marriage, or merely "brothers" in spirit. They then insisted that Jesus had remained chaste his entire life as well. The numerous passages in the Bible proclaiming Jesus as "King of the Jews", "the son of David", and "the Messiah" (a title bestowed traditionally upon the rightful king of Judah) have all been held by the Church to be metaphorical. Christ's real kingdom is in Heaven, the Church has always maintained - not in Israel. Pilate referred to Jesus as "King of the Jews" mockingly, they say. After all, how could he literally be king when he had no ancestors, no father, no brothers, no wife, and no heirs? Thus began a smear campaign and a genocidal persecution that has continued for approximately 2000 years. This then is the real reason why the Church deified Christ – to hide his lineage and descent. This is also the reason why they squelched all knowledge of his wife, Mary Magdalene.

But at the same time, while the Grail church revered the historical figure of Christ as a flesh-and-blood human being, allowing him a dignity that the Roman church robbed him of, they also understood the significance of Christ on a very deep symbolic level. It is no secret that the imagery with which the Church presented Jesus is identical to that of earlier pre-Christian Sun gods. The Christian cross, and the many variations of it, are all based on earlier versions from ancient cultures, where it was used to symbolize the Sun. The haloes seen behind the heads of Christ, the saints, and the angels in Catholic art are an old motif that can be traced back to ancient Sumer, where it represented the crown of the Sun god. The crowns worn by royalty throughout the ages, a practice that goes back at least to Sumer, represent the same thing. Their use signified the concept that the king was an incarnation of the Sun god. Throughout Egypt, Sumer, and Greece, deified kings have been referred to as “sons of the Sun”, or “the son of God.”

In fact, every mythical detail of Jesus’ life is identical to the myths of ancient sun gods such as Tammuz, Krishna, Mithras, Prometheus, and many others, including being born of a virgin on December 25, and dying on a cross at Easter. Christmas and Easter were originally pagan holidays, and this mythical tale symbolized the “death” and “rebirth” of the Sun throughout the course of the solar year.

While it is generally agreed that the Roman church shamelessly grafted pagan elements into the story of Christ in order to convert pagans to their dogma, the Grail church also seemed to revere the ancient symbolism of Christ as an incarnation of the Sun god. His wife Mary Magdalene was likewise seen as an incarnation of the goddess Isis or Venus. It is believed that adherents of the Grail church in France paid homage to the figure of Mary Magdalene in the form of “Black Madonnas.” These are identical to traditional Catholic idols of the Virgin Mary, but are simply black in color, and this is believed to be veiled reference to Christ’s hidden, secretly revered consort. Statues of the Black Madonna can be found throughout France and in other areas of Europe as well, usually inside Catholic churches or cathedrals. It has been remarked that Catholic depictions of the Virgin Mary resemble depictions of Isis or Venus also, and that Black Madonnas appear to be an even more overt depiction of this goddess. It has been speculated by authors such as Margaret Starbird and Nicholas de Vere that Jesus and his wife were the high priest and priestess of a sex magic cult, in which they personified the god and goddess in sacred sex rites, and that Christian heretics later perpetuated these rites. Indeed, several authors have posited that the original cult lead by Christ practiced Hellenistic mystery rites that would have been considered totally heretical by the prevailing Jewish orthodoxy. This perhaps explains why Jesus was viewed by the scribes and priests as a sorcerer, as recorded in the Gospels and in other chronicles.

But the Grail church does not revere Jesus because he was merely a perpetuator of these rites and traditions. It is clear from the mythos of the Grail family that the blood is the key. Jesus is perceived not only as a symbolic representation of the Sun god, but as a literal "son of the Sun god" – a blood relative. Holy Blood, Holy Grail attempts to explain the significance placed on the bloodline of Jesus by chalking it up to the fact that he was the rightful king of the Jews, and a descendant of King David, who in the Bible was anointed by God himself. But what would Jewish heretics care for King David? It may have been necessary for Jesus to assert his descent from King David in order to boost his claim for the kingship of Israel. And perhaps his descendants could use this to claim a right to control the Holy Land, which apparently he did. But the importance placed on Jesus' bloodline, and on the sacredness of his blood, cannot be credited solely to a connection with King David. There has to be another reason why the blood of Jesus, and thus the blood of his Merovingian descendants, was considered divine.

The Gods of the Sea

A most important clue pointing towards an explanation of this lies in the story of the Quinotaur, the "beast of Neptune" who purportedly raped the mother of Meroveus, the first Merovingian king. Thus insemination provides Meroveus with an ancestry which is partially human and partially divine. For the Quinotaur appears to be a Frankish permutation of the myth of the fish-god Dagon, who was known by many other names throughout history and throughout the world.

Dagon was a sea god worshipped throughout the ancient Middle East, described in the Bible as the patron god of the Philistines, and a constant source of antagonism for the Hebrew god. The root word "Dag" means "fish", and Dagon was portrayed in ancient bas reliefs as a creature part-man and part-fish. This could indeed be the source of the mythical Quinotaur creature, as well as the source of the Merovingian King Dagobert's name. "Dagon" is also the root of the word "dragon", and thus it is interesting that Dagobert's name is sometimes spelled "Dragobert." Dragons were originally viewed by the ancients a being sea creatures, such as the most famous biblical dragon, Leviathan. Albert Pike writes in Morals and Dogma that:

> "The Dragon was a well-known symbol of the waters, and of great rivers; and it was natural that... the powerful nations of the alluvial plains... who adored the dragon or the fish, should themselves be symbolized under the form of dragons."

Though often shown as a bearded merman with a Phrygian cap, as he is in Assyrian and Babylonian reliefs, other depictions show Dagon as a man wearing a fish for a hat, with the mouth on top of his head, pointing up, and the tail of the fish hanging down his back. These depictions have been said by many to be the source of the fish-like miter now worn by popes and other Catholic priests.

Dagon was said to have been a being who came out of the sea during the day to teach primitive people the arts of civilization: including writing, agriculture, architecture, astronomy, metalsmithing, winemaking, shipbuilding and navigation. At night, after dispensing his wisdom, Dagon would return to the sea, only to come once again the next morning. Because of this and other reasons, Dagon was perceived as an incarnation of the Sun, dispensing wisdom as the Sun dispenses light, and Dagon's name became the root of our modern word "day." Indeed "Dag", or "Tag", still means day in many languages.

Dagon seems to be quite similar to a figure named by the historian Berosus as "Oannes the Annedotus", whom he lists as one of the early Chaldean kings – a god-king. According to Berosus:

"In the first year there appeared, from that part of the Elyrian Sea which borders upon Babylonia, an animal endowed with reason, called Oannes, whose whole body (according to Apollodorns) was that of a fish ; that under the fish's head be had another head, with feet also below, similar to those of a man, subjoined to the fish's tail. His voice and language was articulate and human, and a representation of him is preserved even unto this day. This being was accustomed to pass the day among men, but took no food and he gave them an insight into letters and arts of all kinds. He taught them to construct cities, to found temples, to compile laws, and explained to them the principles of geometrical knowledge. He made them distinguish the seeds of the earth, and showed them how to collect the fruits; in short, he instructed them in everything which could tend to soften manners and humanize their laws. When the sun set, this being, Oannes, retired again into the sea, and passed the night in the deep, for he was amphibious. After this there appeared other animals like Oannes."

However, from the Chaldean depictions of Oannes, it appears that he was simply a man wearing a fish costume, and there followed after him a race of god-kings called the Annedoti that were all fish-gods, sea-kings, and dispensers of wisdom.

These stories are later versions of the older Sumerian myths. Sumeria, the original Mesopotamian empire, is the oldest civilization acknowledged by historians, and in many ways was more advanced then the civilizations that followed it. We are told that this was the birthplace of writing, architecture, agriculture, astronomy, math, writing, etc. However, their civilization seems to have arrived almost overnight, with no previous stages of development having yet been discovered. One obvious explanation for this is that their civilization might have come from somewhere else. The Sumerians must have been taught these arts by an outside race that conquered and ruled over them. Since Sumeria itself is the oldest civilization of which there is accepted historical proof, this means that there must have been a previous civilization, from which these conquering kings came, the remains of which were mostly destroyed, perhaps through some terrible cataclysm. Indeed, this is exactly what the Sumerian legends tell us.

In the Sumerian story, Oannes is called Anu, and the race of god-kings he spawns is called the Annunaki, a pantheon of gods including Anu's sons Enlil and Enki. In this version, apparently the gods had their own civilization here on Earth, but grew tired of working for their own livelihoods. So they created the race of mankind to work as slaves for them, with Enki being largely responsible for the task. But humans multiplied so rapidly that they became a nuisance. Enlil in particular was annoyed, and devised a series of cataclysms, culminating in a massive flood, to rid the Earth of the problem.

Enki and Enlil had been involved in an ongoing rivalry pertaining to seniority. They were both sons of Anu, king of the gods, and both had a claim to the inheritance of this crown. As author Nicholas de Vere describes in his book The Dragon Legacy:

> "Enki was the younger son of Anu's senior wife, Antu. Enlil was the elder of the two sons, but was born to Anu's second or junior wife, Ki.

In Annunaki culture, the female was the source of sovereignty, and by rights Enki… was therefore the rightful heir to his father.”

As the rightful heir, and as the original father of the human race, Enki objected to his brother’s decision to destroy humanity, a usurpation of his authority. He therefore conspired to help a remnant of humanity escape the catastrophe, by enlisting a single man to build a large ship, loading it up with his family, and with an assortment of animal life. After the Flood, Enki, along with other gods who took his side in the conflict with his brother, helped those humans who had survived by teaching them the arts of civilization, enabling them to build their own societies. And he passed on his royal, divine seed through this remnant as well, creating a race of human kings who carried the bloodline of the king of the gods.

Understandably, then, Enki became one of the chief deities of the subsequent Sumerian, Akkadian, Babylonian, and Chaldean civilizations. Also called “Ia” or “Ea”, he was known as the “Lord of the Earth”, “Lord of the Flood”, “Lord of the Deep Waters”, and “Lord of That Which is Below.” His seat of rule was believed to be the “Absu” – the Abyss, described as the waters beneath the Earth. Ancient bas reliefs show him seated in the Absu, holding pots overflowing with water and fish. A temple dedicated to him in the Babylonian city of Eridu – a staged ziggurat called the "Esaggla" or "lofty house" – was the site of ceremonial rites to Enki that featured water as their main focal point. The name "Ia" brings to mind the Hebrew "Jah", or "Jehovah." Indeed, certain characteristics of Enki were apparently appropriated into the character of Jehovah by the Hebrews, such as him being portrayed as the true father of humanity, and as the one who saved humanity from the Flood. However, certain characteristics of Enlil were incorporated into Jehovah as well, such as having caused the Flood in the first place. Like Jehovah, Enlil was a storm god, king of the heavens, and the element of air. It is with the figure of Jehovah that the legacy of Enlil now resides, and I believe that they are essentially the same figure.

The Divine Battle

In Greek myth Ouranos (believed by scholars to be the Greek version of Oannes, or the Roman Uranus) fathered a race of primordial gods called the Titans. As author Edith Hamilton describes it:

"The Titans, often called the Elder Gods, were for untold ages supreme in the universe. They were of enormous size and of incredible strength… They most important was Cronus, in Latin Saturn. Cronus…

was the Lord of the Universe, with his sister-queen Rhea. Finally one of their sons, the future ruler of heaven and earth, whose name in Greek is Zeus and in Latin Jupiter, rebelled against him… There followed a terrible war between Cronus, helped by his brother Titans, against Zeus with his five brothers and sisters – a war that almost wrecked the universe."

When it was over, Zeus was victorious, and had the Titans imprisoned within the Earth, upon the infernal Mount Tartarus:

> "Bound in bitter chains beneath the wide-wayed earth,
> As far below the Earth as over Earth is Heaven…
> …Tartarus, the brazen-fenced"

This war was won partially because one of the Titans' own, Prometheus, sided with Zeus and assisted him, although he later regretted it. And it was Prometheus who, in the Greek view, was largely responsible for creating the human race. Says Hamilton:

"He fashioned them in a nobler shape than the animals, upright like the gods, and then he went up to heaven, to the sun, where he lit a torch and brought down fire."

In this way, a divine spark of light from Heaven was passed down from one of the gods to enlighten man's consciousness. And in a more literal since, fire became the basis of a metalsmithing technology on which man was able to build his civilization. Zeus, however, was not happy with this, and punished Prometheus by sending him to the center of the Earth and chaining him to Tartarus as well. As he did this, he lectured Prometheus:

"Such fruit you reap for your man-loving ways.
A god yourself, you did not dread God's anger,
But gave mortals honor not their due."

In another Greek story, Prometheus again comes to man's aid, thus time helping his human-god hybrid son Deucalion and his wife, Pyrrha, to escape a global deluge. Once again, Zeus (the Greek equivalent of Enlil or Jehovah) brought about this flood because human beings were multiplying too rapidly. Prometheus, savior of mankind, warned Deucalion ahead of time, and had him build an ark, in which they floated to safety atop Mount Parnassus. In the Biblical story of Noah, when Noah finally comes down from the ark, he builds an altar on the mountain and performs a ceremony giving thanks to god for being spared. In the story of Deucalion and Pyrrha:

> "They found a temple all slimy and moss-grown, but not quite in ruins, and there they gave thanks for their escape and prayed for help in their dreadful loneliness."

It is then that they heard a voice instructing them to throw stones behind their backs, which they did, and as each stone landed, a human sprang up in its place. The Greeks believed that this is where our current human race came from – a race of stone people.

However, as with all cultures, there are many different versions of Greek myths. In Plato's Critias, he tells the story of the empire of Atlantis, which he had heard from the philosopher Solon, who in turn had heard it from an Egyptian sage while visiting that land. So the story is really a late Egyptian one viewed through late Greek eyes. But within the extraordinary details of this fable we glimpse an inherent truth – a memory of something that may have actually happened.

The Egyptian sage described an island continent ruled by god-men, with a magnificent civilization that colonized neighboring lands, creating a vast, mighty empire that greatly outshone that of Zeus and the Olympian gods of Greece. Plato reports that the Egyptian told Solon:

"Many great and wonderful deeds are recorded of your state in our histories. But one of them exceeds all the rest in greatness and valour. For these histories tell of a mighty power which unprovoked made an expedition against the whole of Europe and Asia, and to which your city put an end. This power came forth out of the Atlantic Ocean, for in those days the Atlantic was navigable; and there was an island situated in front of the straits which are by you called the Pillars of Heracles; the island was larger than Libya and Asia put together, and was the way to other islands, and from these you might pass to the whole of the opposite continent which surrounded the true ocean; for this sea which is within the Straits of Heracles is only a harbour, having a narrow entrance, but that other is a real sea, and the surrounding land may be most truly called a boundless continent.

Now in this island of Atlantis there was a great and wonderful empire which had rule over the whole island and several others, and over parts of the continent, and, furthermore, the men of Atlantis had subjected the parts of Libya within the columns of Heracles as far as Egypt, and of Europe as far as Tyrrhenia. This vast power, gathered into one, endeavoured to subdue at a blow our country and yours and the whole of the region within the straits; and then, Solon, your country shone forth, in the excellence of her virtue and strength, among all mankind. She was pre-eminent in courage and military skill, and was the leader of the Hellenes. And when the rest fell off from her, being compelled to stand alone, after having undergone the very extremity of danger, she defeated and triumphed over the invaders, and preserved from slavery those who were not yet subjugated, and generously liberated all the rest of us who dwell within the pillars.

But afterwards there occurred violent earthquakes and floods; and in a single day and night of misfortune all your warlike men in a body sank into the earth, and the island of Atlantis in like manner disappeared in the depths of the sea. For which reason the sea in those parts is impassable and impenetrable, because there is a shoal of mud in the way; and this was caused by the subsidence of the island."

According to Plato, Atlantis was ruled over by god-men, the descendants of the sea-god Poseidon and a mortal woman, Cleito. It was for her and their family together that Poseidon literally sculpted the island from clay, dividing it up into ten portions, each given to one of their ten sons (five pairs of twins) to rule over. As Plato relates:

“Poseidon fell in love with her and had intercourse with her, and breaking the ground, inclosed the hill in which she dwelt all round, making alternate zones of sea and land larger and smaller, encircling one another; there were two of land and three of water, which he turned as with a lathe, each having its circumference equidistant every way from the centre, so that no man could get to the island… He himself, being a god, found no difficulty in making special arrangements for the centre island, bringing up two springs of water from beneath the earth, one of warm water and the other of cold, and making every variety of food to spring up abundantly from the soil. He also begat and brought up five pairs of twin male children; and dividing the island of Atlantis into ten portions, he gave to the first-born of the eldest pair his mother's dwelling and the surrounding allotment, which was the largest and best, and made him king over the rest; the others he made princes, and gave them rule over many men, and a large territory. And he named them all; the eldest, who was the first king, he named Atlas, and after him the whole island and the ocean were called Atlantic. To his twin brother, who was born after him, and obtained as his lot the extremity of the island towards the Pillars of Heracles, facing the country which is now called the region of Gades in that part of the world, he gave the name which in the Hellenic language is Eumelus, in the language of the country which is named after him, Gadeirus."

The empire they created was grander than any that had existed before, or since:

"Now Atlas had a numerous and honourable family, and they retained the kingdom, the eldest son handing it on to his eldest for many generations; and they had such an amount of wealth as was never before possessed by kings and potentates, and is not likely ever to be again, and they were furnished with everything which they needed, both in the city and country. For because of the greatness of their empire many things were brought to them from foreign countries…"

Plato then went on to describe, in magnificent detail, the culture, empire, agriculture, architecture and religion of Atlantis. Not surprisingly, theirs was a sea and water-based religion devoted to the worship of their father Poseidon. It was their descent from him that allowed them to live as gods and rule as kings. But over time, their human nature got the best of them. Plato writes:

"For many generations, as long as the divine nature lasted in them, they were obedient to the laws, and well-affectioned toward the gods, who were their kinsmen... but when the divine portion began to fade away in them, and became diluted too often, and with too much of the mortal admixture... human nature got the upper hand, then, they being unable to bear their fortune, became unseemly, and to him who had eyes to see, they began to appear base, and had lost the fairest of their precious gifts; but to those who had no eye to see the true happiness, they still appeared glorious and blessed at the very time when they were filled with unrighteous avarice and power. Zeus, the god of gods, who rules with law, and is able to see into such things, perceiving that an honorable race was in a most wretched state, and wanting to inflict punishment on them, that they might be chastened and improved, collected all the gods into his most holy habitation, which, being placed in the center of the world, sees all things that partake of generation. And when he had called them all together he spake as follows:"

It is at this point that Plato's text breaks off abruptly, and was never completed. However, we know what fate befell Atlantis. Zeus sparked a war against its divine-human sea kings, and somehow this war resulted in the sinking of Atlantis. As Plato had stated earlier in the text:

“…the consequence is that, in comparison of what then was, there are remaining in small islets only the bones of the wasted body, as they may be called, all the richer and softer parts of the soil having fallen away, and the mere skeleton of the country being left."

The Origins of Civilization

The most essential text for understanding the myth of Atlantis is Ignatius Donnelly’s 1882 classic, Atlantis: The Antediluvian World. It starts out by analyzing Plato’s account of Atlantis both mythologically and archeologically. It explores myths of catastrophic floods from cultures all over the world, showing them all to be different versions of the same story. According to Donnelly, the myth upon which these are based is that of the destruction of Atlantis. He argues that in ancient times, far more ancient than recorded history, there was a highly advanced global culture made up of Atlantis and its colonies, a primordial “golden age” that preceded our current epoch, and was destroyed by a cataclysm of worldwide proportions, analogous to the biblical Deluge. It was from this Atlantean culture that all of our languages, symbols, customs, arts and sciences were derived. During their heyday, writes Donnelly, the Atlanteans went about spreading these advancements throughout the primitive world. They created civilizations on every continent and, according to Donnelly, it was the kings of Atlantis that provided the first mythical god-kings reported in the histories and legends of virtually every ancient culture on earth. For proof that there was a vast and highly advanced global civilization in ancient times, Donnelly shows the similarities of plant and animal species across widely separated continents, many of these species having been domesticated and cultivated by man for so many thousands of years that no trace of the original "wild species" can be found anywhere on Earth. He also shows that species of animals and plants which are absent on certain continents - for instance, in the Americas - can nonetheless be found depicted in the artwork of these continents' natives, proving that there was a time when these species did exist there, or else, at least, the people of that continent acquired knowledge of them through trade. South American Indian tribes have carvings, for example, of elephants and horses, neither of which are native to the region. Donnelly also shows similarities between the gods of various world cultures, arguing that these gods were, in fact, based on the actual historical kings of Atlantis. Donnelly's book was indeed the first of its kind, and all subsequent books on Atlantis have been based on his.

Another interesting aspect of Donnelly's work is his insistence that the kings of Atlantis are the same as the Titans, and the fall of the Titans the same as the fall of Atlantis. This, he asserts, is one and the same as the biblical deluge, as well as the "fall man" from the "Garden of Eden." All of these, he insists, are mythological traces of the same ancestral memory hidden in the antediluvian mists, beneath the waves that cover a long-dead era – the golden age of the gods.

Donnelly's identification of the Titans with the Atlantean kings does make some sense. In both stories, the mighty kings of a magnificent empire are crushed by Zeus, who ignites a cataclysmic, earth-shaking war. The Titans were sent down to the center of the Earth; the Atlanteans sank down to the bottom of the ocean. And Atlas, the foremost king and namesake of Atlantis, is named in other Greek myths as being one of the Titans. But that would put Poseidon in the position of being the same figure as Ouranos.

Indeed, the two deities are both very similar, both being sea gods. Poseidon is the patron deity of navigators, while Ouranos was credited as being the inventor of the mariner's compass. Ouranos, or Oannes, has been identified with Dagon, also called "Daonos", and Poseidon was also called "Poseidaon." Also, in another legend, Poseidon fathered a race called the “Tritons” who were described as “fish-men”, and who some think are the same as the Titans.

However, it is Kronos who seems to be remembered as the great, and later fallen, king of Atlantis. It was also quite literally believed by historians at one time that after he was deposed from the throne of Atlantis, rather than being imprisoned in the center of the Earth, or dying in a Flood, Kronos simply moved to Italy, then inhabited by primitive folk, and spread the Atlantean civilization to them, initiating a golden age there. Ignatius Donnelly states:

“In the first place, Berosus tells us that the god who gave warning of the coming of the Deluge was Chronos. Chronos, it is well-known, was the same as Saturn. Saturn was an ancient king of Italy, who, far anterior to the founding of Rome, introduced civilization from some other country to the Italians. He established industry and social order, filled the land with plenty, and created the golden age of Italy. He was suddenly removed to the abodes of the gods. His name is connected, in the mythological legends, with ‘a great Saturnian continent’ in the Atlantic ocean, and a great kingdom which, in the remote ages, embraced Northern Africa and the European coast of the Mediterranean as far as the peninsula of Italy, and ‘certain islands in the sea’, agreeing, in this respect, with the story of Plato as to the dominions of Atlantis. The Romans called the Atlantic ocean 'Chronium Mare', the sea of Chronos, thus identifying Chronos with that ocean. The pillars of Hercules were also called by the ancients 'the pillars of Chronos.'"

Donnelly then quotes Murray's Mythology:

"Saturn, or Chronos, came to Italy. He presented himself to the king, Janus, and proceeded to instruct the subjects of the latter in agriculture, gardening, and many other arts then quite unknown to them: as for example, how to tend and cultivate the vine. By such means he at length raised the people from a rude and comparatively barbarous condition to one of order and peaceful occupation, in consequence of which he was everywhere held in high esteem, and in the course of time, was selected by Janus to share with him the government of the country, which thereupon assumed the name of Saturnia – a land of seed and fruit. The period of Saturn's government was sung in the latter days by poets as a happy time when sorrows were unknown, when innocence, freedom, and gladness reigned throughout the land in such a degree as to deserve the title of the Golden Age…"

Donnelly connects Saturn’s “golden age” to the ancient pagan festival of Saturnalia, which begins more or less around the same time as the Winter Solstice, Christmas, and St. Dagobert’s Day:

“The Roman Saturnalia was a remembrance of the Atlantean colonization. It was a period of joy and festivity; master and slave met as equals; the distinctions of poverty and wealth were forgotten; no punishments for crime were inflicted; servants and slaves went about dressed in the clothes of their masters; and children received presents from their parents or relatives. It was a time of jollity and mirth; a recollection of the Golden Age. We find a reminiscence of it in the Roman ‘Carnival.’”

There is a great deal of confusion about the exact familial relations within the royal houses of Olympos and Atlantis. Even the Greek accounts vary, but when you begin to compare them with the mythologies of other cultures, it becomes even more confusing. It is certain that the closest thing we have to “antediluvian history” is in the legends of the world. Details get blurred horribly. We read from Donnelly that:

"…In the Phoenician mythology, Chronos raised a rebellion against Ouranos, and, after a great battle, dethroned him. In the Greek legends it is Zeus who attacks and overthrows his father, Chronos."

And elsewhere:

"Poseidon, the first king of Atlantis, according to Plato, was, according to Greek mythology, a brother of Zeus, and a son of Chronos."

It seems likely that in addition to the simple fact that we are dealing with legends that have been passed around through various cultures for upwards of 9000 years, surviving a devastating global cataclysm, some of the variations in the details of these stories are due to the effect of propaganda. If Zeus overthrew Kronos, he and his descendants may have reigned over Atlantis for some time before the disaster that befell it. According to Donnelly, this was indeed the case, and that is why Poseidon, his son, ruled it at the time of the disaster. It thus would have been Zeus and his subjects who reported the fall of Atlantis, and what had preceded it. The usurping kings undoubtedly took on some of their predecessors' legends of heroism as if they themselves had enjoyed such adventures. Such confusion occurred within family lines as well, with the son taking on the mythical attributes of the father. Thus titles like “Lord of the Earth”, “Lord of the Four Quarters”, “Lord of the Abyss”, “Lord of the Flood”, etc., were passed on from generation to generation, and could be taken over by rivals, as in the case of Zeus and Kronos. The deeds, mythical associations, and symbolic correspondences (such as with the Sun or the Moon, the sea, dragons, serpents, fish, bulls, goats, etc.) were passed along as well. All of this leads to the confusion and seeming incongruity we find when trying to compare and interpret ancient history and mythology.

However, regardless of this, all of these gods thus described seem to be representations of the same mythos. All are associated with the sea, with the creation of a vast empire based on the sea, with navigation, and with the spreading of human civilization. All of them are linked with the Flood, and with the revival of civilization after the Flood. All are also said to have passed their divine seed onto humans, who ruled as kings after the Flood.

The Flood is a tale common to almost all cultures throughout the world, and in so many versions, the overpopulation of humans was the cause of the Flood. In many versions, too, the god synonymous with Enki, Oannes, Dagon or Kronos is responsible for rescuing humanity from the Flood and helping them rebuild their civilization.

Many similar versions of this story have been told about other gods worshipped throughout the ancient world. For instance, there is the story from Hindu culture of the god Vishnu, who took the form of a fish, and warned a figure named Manu about an impending flood. The story can be read in the "Catapartha Brahmana" of the Rig-Veda, translated by Max Muller:

"One morning water for washing was brought to Manu, and when lie had washed himself a fish remained in his hands, and it addressed these words to him.

'Protect me, and I will save thee.' 'From what wilt thou save me ?' 'A deluge that will sweep all creatures away; it is from that I will save thee.' how shall I protect thee ?' The fish replied, While we are small we run great dangers, for fish swallow fish. Keep me at first in a vase; when I become too large for it, dig a basin to put me into. When I shall have grown still more, throw me into the ocean; then I shall be preserved from destruction.' Soon it grew into a large fish. It said to Manu, 'The very year I shall have reached my full growth the Deluge will happen. Then build a vessel and worship me. When the waters rise, enter the vessel, and I will save thee.'

After keeping him thus, Manu carried the fish to the sea. In the year indicated Manu built a vessel and worshipped the fish. And when the Deluge came he entered the vessel. Then the fish came swimming up to him, and Manu fastened the cable of the ship to the horn of the fish, by which means the latter made it pass over the Mountain of the North. The fish said, ‘ I have saved thee; fasten the vessel to a tree, that the water may not sweep it away while thou art on a mountain and in proportion as the waters decrease thou shalt descend.

Manu descended with the waters, and this is what is called the descent of Manu on the Mountain of the North. The Deluge had carried away all creatures, and Manu remained alone.”

Another derivation of this mythos is found in the Syrian goddess “Atargatis”, another half-fish, half-human deity believed to have come from the sea to teach man wisdom and the arts of civilization. Atargatis is thought by some to be the inspiration for the goddess Ashtoreth, Astarte, or Ishtar worshipped throughout the ancient world, also depicted as half-fish, and as the consort of Dagon. Atargatis is, interestingly, sometimes depicted as hermaphroditic – possessing both male and female sex organs. In his book, Ignatius Donnelly quotes an unnamed author from a treatise called “On the Syrian Goddess”, which connects Atargatis (here identified as the same as the Greek goddess Hera, wife of Zeus) with the Greek story of Deucalion and the Flood:

"The generality of people tell us that the founder of the temple was Deucalion Sisythes - that Deucalion in whose time the great inundation occurred. I have also heard the account given by the Greeks themselves of Deucalion; the myth runs thus: The actual race of men is not the first, for there was a previous one, all the members of which perished. We belong to a second race, descended from Deucalion, and multiplied in the course of time. As to the former men, they are said to have been full of insolence and pride, committing many crimes, disregarding their oath, neglecting the rights of hospitality, unsparing to suppliants; accordingly, they were punished by an immense disaster. All on a sudden enormous volumes of water issued from the earth, and rains of extraordinary abundance began to fall; the rivers left their beds, and the sea overflowed its shores; the whole earth was covered with water, and all men perished. Deucalion alone, because of his virtue and piety, was preserved alive to give birth to a new race. This is how he was saved: He placed himself, his children, and his wives in a great coffer that he had, in which pigs, horses, lions, serpents, and all other terrestrial animals came to seek refuge with him.

He received them all; and while they were in the coffer Zeus inspired them with reciprocal amity, which prevented their devouring one another. In this manner, shut up within one single coffer, they floated as long as the waters remained in force. Such is the account given by the Greeks of Deucalion.

But to this, which they equally tell, the people of Hieropolis add a marvelous narrative: That in their country a great chasm opened, into which all the waters of the Deluge poured. Then Deucalion raised an altar, and dedicated a temple to Hera (Atargatis) close to this very chasm. I have seen it; it is very narrow, and situated under the temple. Whether it was once large, and has now shrunk, I do not know; but I have seen it, and it is quite small. In memory of the event the following is the rite accomplished: Twice a year sea-water is brought to the temple. This is not only done by the priests, but numerous pilgrims come from the whole of Syria and Arabia, and even from beyond the Euphrates, bringing water. It is poured out in the temple and goes into the cleft, which, narrow as it is, swallows up a considerable quantity. This is said to be in virtue of a religious law instituted by Deucalion to preserve the memory of the catastrophe, and of the benefits that he received from the gods. Such is the ancient tradition of the temple."

Donnelly then connects the character of "Deucalion", here called "Deucalion Sisythes", with the Sumerian Flood hero, Xisuthros. And it is interesting that this temple is in Heiropolis, now in Turkey, the country where the supposed location of Mount Ararat is found.

Atargatis/Astarte is also believed to be the same figure as the Egyptian Isis, another goddess associated with the teaching of wisdom, and also depicted at times as having the tail of a fish. Here husband Osiris appears to be the Egyptian manifestation of this same primordial, civilizing god-king figure that he have already identified in other cultures. And in this version of events, the goddess is very much his partner and equal. As Albert Pike relates in Morals and Dogma:

"To Osiris and Isis, it was held, were owing civilization, the discovery of agriculture, laws, arts of all kinds, religious worship, temples, the invention of letters, astronomy, the gymnastic arts, and music; and thus they were the universal benefactors. Osiris traveled to civilize the countries which he passed through, and communicate to them his invaluable discoveries. He built cities, and taught men to cultivate the Earth. Wheat and wine were his first presents to men. Europe, Asia and Africa partook of the blessings which he communicated, and the most remote regions remembered him, and claimed him as one of their great gods."

Osiris, like so many gods of the ancient world, was a sun god, and associated with serpents, a symbol of the sun. The solar/serpent symbolism is interchangeable with that of the fish and the dragon. Osiris' brother Set (called "Typhon" by the Greeks) was a serpent-dragon, and the two had a war in which Osiris ended up getting chopped into fifteen pieces. These pieces were then dumped in the Nile River. However, Isis came along and collected all of the pieces, and reconstructed his body. The only part that was missing was his penis, which had been swallowed by a fish. Isis has a substitute penis crafted and impregnated herself with the god Horus. This same god archetype has been traced to the Norse sun-god Woden, also associated with serpents, and with the spreading of wisdom. His wife, Freya, is believed to be the same as the goddess Isis, and is likewise represented as being part-fish. Woden, also called "Odin", is said to have descended from Heaven to give his people civilization. He is credited with having invented the Norse alphabet, the runes, as well as the cabalistic system of magic that goes along with them. The Norse myths compiled in the epic poem called The Eddas tell us that Odin created the first kingdom on Earth, in the city of “Urd”, very similar to the prime Sumerian city of “Ur.”

Historians have long agreed that the city of Ur is most likely the original source of Sumerian civilization, and thus, of the civilizations that followed. The prefix “Ur” even means “primeval” in German. According to authors such as Donnelly and L.A. Waddell, this city was begun by the same colonizing race of god-kings I have discussed. Their race was known as the “Ur”, “Ar”, or “Ir”, and the Sumerian pictograph denoting this syllable is none other than the pentagram, also called the “plough sign” by Sumerians, to whom the word had a number of translations. The prefix “aur” means “light” in many languages, and so it is interesting that these people were called “shining ones.” Donnelly and Waddell claim that they are none other than the “Aryans”, a name given to a race of colonizing civilizers known to have spread their culture and language (Indo-European, once known as “Indo-Aryan”) all over Europe, the Indies, and the Middle East. The name of the nation Iran, as well as the name of Mt. Ararat, comes from this. It should not be surprising then that the pentagram is referred to in modern occult texts as “the sign of the Aryan race.”

Donnelly believes that the Atlantean empire not only spread their civilization far and wide through colonization, but that after the Flood which destroyed their homeland, they fled to the far-flung places of the earth spreading civilization to those who had survived the cataclysm. One of the titles these god-kings were known under, according to L.A. Waddell, was "Kad", "Gad", or "Khat."[18] Says Waddell, this title meant literally "King of the World", and was written in Sumerian pictographs as a double-barred cross, just like the Cross of Lorraine associated with the Angevin kings of France, descendants of the Merovingians. The sea-faring navigators of Phoenicia were also known as "Kads". Indeed, Waddell believes that the word "God" is rooted in this word, as well as many words in modern languages that begin with "Cad" and relate to sea creatures. The title "Kad" was used by the most famous Sumerian king, Sargon the Great, whose royal capitol, which he had constructed, was "Agade", rumored by the Sumerians to have been a dwelling place of the gods. Agade, or "Accad", was the source of "Akkadia", the name of the post-Sumerian empire that dominated Mesopotamia. This syllable can in fact be found all over maps of the ancient world. The pillars of Hercules were, at one time, called "the Firth of the Gads", and were located nearby cities named "Gades" and "Agadir." Ignatius Donnelly connects this syllable to Atlantis:

[18] An individual I spoke to at Rennes-le-Chateau, who was writing a book on the language of Atlantis (which he believed to be the root of all languages) mentioned the ancient word "Khat", and said that it was the root of the word "Cathar."

“Plato tells us that the dominion of Gaderius, one of the kings of Atlantis, extended ‘toward the pillars of Heracles (Hercules) as far as the country which is still called the region of Gades in that part of the world.’ Gades is the Cadiz of today, and the dominion of Gaderius embraced the land of the Iberians of Basques, their civilization taking its name from a king of Atlantis, and they themselves being Atlanteans.”

The words “Akkad” and “Ar”, I believe, may have been the roots of the Greek word “Arcadia”, the name of a region in Greece which housed, according to Greek myths, an “idyllic paradise ruled over by the Greek gods.” For this reason, the word “Arcadia” has been a code word among occultists for centuries, denoting the “golden age” of the long-distant past, when, occultists believe, the gods ruled kingdoms on Earth. The gods who ruled Arcadia were depicted in Greek myths as shepherds. It is interesting, then, that the god-kings I have examined in this chapter were often known under titles denoting them as “shepherds” of the people. Poussin’s painting, The Shepherds of Arcadia, definitely alludes to many hidden secrets, which I will soon explore.

It is worth noting, too, that the mythical Eden-like kingdoms of other mythologies also have names that may have been derived from

"Agade." The name "Asgarde" is given to the kingdom of the gods in Norse mythology, and in certain Eastern traditions, the "Lord of the Earth" is believed to reside in a subterranean kingdom known as "Agartha", its name so amazingly similar to the name of the goddess Atargatis. Another root word that appears to be important to our study is "Merou." From Donnelly we read:

"Lonormany insists that the human race issued from Upa-Merou… Theopompus tells us that the people who inhabited Atlantis were the Meropes, the people of Merou."

And earlier, Donnelly says:

"For the inhabitants of the Isle of Cos, the hero of the Deluge was Merops, son of Hyas, who there assembled under his rule the remnant of humanity preserved with him."

Interestingly, Eastern traditions tell of a primordial mountain of the gods, the "Axis of the World", named "Meru." Donnelly believes the name of the ancient people known as "Amorites" comes from this word also. And of course, the prefix "mer" means "sea" in Europe. Thus the word "Merovingian" means "Vine [or bloodline] of the Sea." It could also mean "Vine [or bloodline] of Atlantis."

Perhaps this explains Middle Eastern myths relating to an angel named "Marut" who descended on a golden rope from Heaven to teach people the arts of civilization. The same is said of the god "Mura" in Southern Afghanistan; the Mesopotamian god "Martu" (also called "Amurru"); and the Northern Arabian god "Marnas" (also called "Mura and believed to be the same as Dagon). Ignatius Donnelly also suggests:

> "Do the laws which control the changes of languages, by which a labial succeeds a labial, indicate that the Mero or Merou of Theopompus, the name of Atlantis, was carried by the colonists of Atlantis to South America… and became in time Perous or Peru?"

Indeed, many of these ideas seem to have been transplanted to South America. For there, we find tutelary deities almost identical to those of Dagon, etc., being worshipped as the chief gods. Moreover, they are depicted as bearded, fair-haired white men, sometimes with bodies that are half-serpent or half-fish. The depictions of these gods show them clearly with Caucasoid features not native to South America, and facial hair, which native tribesmen do not naturally have. This indicates that, just as Donnelly and Waddell have suggested, the survivors of Atlantis – the race of god-men recorded in Eastern cultures – also colonized and spread their civilization to the Native American tribes. It was this race of gods whom the natives were awaiting, and whom they believed had returned, with European explorers arrived on their shores. Unfortunately for them, they were sorely mistaken.

The detailed stories of these “gods” told by the natives leave no doubt that this was the case. For instance, the Incas believed that the enormous pyramid complex in the mountain city of Cuzco (made of stones so huge that scientists still are not sure how it was built) was in fact constructed overnight by a white-fleshed giant with a half-fish body named “Viracocha”, whose name means “foam of the sea.” He supposedly was able to bring down “fire from the heavens”, which was used to make the stones which built the complex at Cuzco “light as a cork”, so that he was able to build it quickly and easily. Like Dagon, Viracocha is credited with imparting all of the arts of culture to the Native Americans.

Another version of this figure is the Incan deity Manco Capac, who is described in The Royal Commentaries of the Incas by Garcilaso de la Vega,:

“After the waters of the Deluge had subsided, a certain man appeared in the country of Tiahuanaco... In the life on Manco Capac, who was the first Inca, and from whom they began to boast themselves children of the Sun... they had an ample account of the Deluge. They say that in it perished all races of men and created things insomuch as the waters rose above the highest mountain peaks in the world. No living thing survived except a man and a woman who remained in a box and, when the waters subsided, the wind carried them... to Tiahuanaco, where the creator began to raise up the people and nations that are in the region...”

The exact same figure is named in by other tribes as “Noach Yum Chac”, “Quetzalcoatl”, “Con Tiki”, “Kukulkan”, and “Votan.” I should note that Quetzalcoatl was credited by the Aztecs with building their massive pyramids, and with inventing their incredibly complex calendar, as Kukulkan is credited with inventing the Mayan calendar. He was half-serpent, and was sometimes known by just the last syllable of his name, “atl”, the South American word for “water” - an obvious connection to Atlantis. I should note also that “Noach Yum Chac” sounds like “Noah”; “Con Tiki” and “Kukulkan” could both be linked to the Biblical name of “Cain”; and “Inca” sounds like the Sumerian god “Enki”, as well as “Enoch”, the grandfather, according to the Bible, of Noah.

L.A. Waddell believed (and he is neither the first not the last to say so) that these same civilizing kings (whom he identifies as "Sumerian" or "Sumer-Aryan") morphed into the mythology of Jehovah, Satan, and the patriarchs of the Old Testament. In his work he extensively compared the names, titles, and mythological elements of all ancient kings, gods, and god-kings, including the biblical patriarchs, and he believed that the same main pantheon of god-kings was recorded in all of these myths. For instance, the Sumerian, Babylonian, and Chaldean kings lists all contain, at their beginning, a number of kings whose reigns were said to have lasted for tens of thousands of years. The names and attributes of these kings, Waddell found, link up with the names and attributes of gods worshiped by these same cultures, and by other cultures as well, including the characters in the Hebrew Bible. For instance, the Chaldean kings list contains, in this order, names similar to Abraham ("Irarum"), Isaac ("Asahk"), Jacob ("Akhab"), and Judah ("Gudia"), four of the main patriarchs of the Bible.

The Legacy of Cain

Waddell believed that one biblical figure in particular had a far-reaching effect on civilizations all over the world: the vilified figure of Cain. According to the Bible he was Adam's first-born son, and was said to have gone bad when he murdered his brother, Abel. But instead of being executed for his sin, he was exiled "to the land of Nod." Waddell identifies the first Sumerian king, Ukusi, with Adam, and the second Sumerian king, Qin, with Cain. Qin was said by the Sumerians to have built the cities of Erech, Lagash, Ur, Agade, and Babylon. He is also said to have taught the Sumerians agriculture, especially the growing of grain, and the brewing of alcohol. Cain's name actually means "grain" in Hebrew, and The Book of Genesis tells us that the source of Cain's jealousy of Abel was that God had accepted Abel's fleshy sacrifices, and rejected Cain's sacrifices of fruits and grain.

Waddell also identifies Cain with another biblical figure: Nimrod. Waddell says that one of Cain's titles was "Lord of the Tree of Life", which, in Sumerian/Babylonian language, was written as "Nimarrud", or sometimes "Maru or "Marud." (This may link up with the word for "sea" – "mer" – and the word for Atlantis – "Merou" – discussed earlier.) Nimrod was, historically, a Babylonian king, and there is very little in the biblical record to connect him with Cain. Instead of being the son of Adam, he is one of the descendants of Noah's son, Japheth, and instead of being a "tiller of the soil", as Cain was, Nimrod was called "a mighty hunter before the Lord." However, Nimrod was credited with building Babel, Erech, and Accad, Qin's cities, and was even believed by historians to have built the Tower of Babel. Also, the "Nim" in Nimrod's name can mean "fish." Many of Nimrod's associations seem to have contributed to the mythos surrounding Cain, Dagon, Oannes, etc. Nimrod's historically recorded wife, Queen Semiramis, was associated with fish symbolism, as well as with doves, and was labeled the "Queen of Heaven." Thus she seems to have contributed a lot to the image of the goddess Ishtar/Isis/Astarte, as well as the idolatry of the Virgin Mary.

The Sumerian king Qin was succeeded by his son, Enu, whom Waddell identifies with "Enoch." There are two Enochs in Genesis, and one is the son Cain supposedly had after his expulsion from Eden. In Genesis 4:17 it states:

"And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare Enoch: and he builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch."

This city is identified by Waddell, and by other authors, with the Babylonian city of Erech, also said to have been built by Nimrod. This, then would be more evidence linking Nimrod with Cain.[19] Waddell believes that the names "Erech" and "Enoch" are interchangeable. "Erech" is now the root of the name of the country of "Iraq." Waddell further identifies Enoch/Erech with the Greek figure of "Erechtheus", or "Erichthonius." He was, in Greek mythology, the father of Cecropes, the first king of Attica. Edith Hamilton describes "Cecropes" as being half-dragon from the waist down. She writes that "He had no human ancestor, and he himself was only half-human." Cecropes is known to have created some offense to the god Poseidon that caused the god to punish the Earth with "a disastrous flood." However, Hamilton also says of Cecropes:

"Most writers say that these events happened before the Deluge, and that the Cecropes who belonged to the famous Athenian family was not the ancient half-dragon, half-human creature but an ordinary man, important only because of his relatives. He was the son of a distinguished king…

His father, King Erechtheus of Athens, was usually said to be the king in whose reign Demeter came to Eleusis and agriculture began."

[19] Enoch City, by the way, is now a city in Arizona, built by the Mormons, who believe that "Enoch City" is synonymous with "Zion" or "the Kingdom of God."

What is more, Hamilton concurs with the opinion that Erechtheus is the same figure as that of Erichthonius, said to be:

"…the son of Hephaestus, reared by Athena, half-man, half-serpent. Athena gave a chest, in which she had put the infant, to the three daughters of Cecropes, forbidding them to open it. They did open it, and saw in it the serpent-like creature… When Erichthonius grew up he became the king of Athens."

Waddell believed that both Enochs in Genesis were in fact the same person, and that Enoch is also the same figure personified as the biblical Noah – that is, that it was he who piloted the ark during the Flood. Waddell stated with certainty that "Enoch… is regarded by biblical authorities as being identical with Noah of the Flood myth." Waddell demonstrated that the names of both Enoch and Noah have both been written as "Noach", and also as "Hanuk", in ancient texts. This theory is seconded by author Joseph Reiss in Language, Myth, and Man. Furthermore, Chaldean legends of the Flood do involve the Sumerian king Enu. Enu's son was "Ia-Patesi" – ("Priest-King of Ia"). Waddell points out that "Ia-Patesi" could easily be transliterated into the name of Noah's son in the Bible: “Japheth.” In addition, Waddell found an example of a title being applied to King Enu which translated as “Shepherd of the Vessel.”

This brings an interesting twist to certain legends surrounding Enoch, stating that he was a wise prophet and scribe, who inscribed a stone tablet with the wisdom of the ancient world, which was carried on board Noah’s Ark. This same tablet has been equated by occultists with the famed “Tablet of Hermes”, also inscribed with pre-diluvian wisdom from the age of the gods, and thus Enoch is equated with the Greek Hermes, or the Roman Mercury. Hermes was worshipped in Egypt as Thoth, the god credited with the invention of writing, and with the giving of hidden gnosis. This same wisdom of Thoth, Hermes, or Enoch was sometimes said to have been inscribed onto two pillars, one of stone, and one of metal. Such pillars were said by Plato to have been placed in the Temple of Poseidon in Atlantis. The two pillars of Enoch play an important role in the rites of Freemasonry, and similar pillars were said to have stood outside of Solomon’s Temple. The pillars of Enoch were apparently made in anticipation of the Flood, and were meant to ensure that some record of the knowledge of the old world would pass into the new. It is from these pillars that, some assert, a great deal of known history is derived. As Albert Pike writes in Morals and Dogma:

“Manetho extracted his history from certain pillars which he discovered in Egypt, whereupon inscriptions have been made by Thoth… in the sacred letters and dialect: but which were after the Flood translated from that dialect into the Greek tongue, and laid up in the private recesses of the Egyptian temples. These pillars were found in the subterranean caverns near Thebes, and beyond the Nile, not far from the sounding statue of Memnon, in a place called Syringes; which are described to be certain winding apartments; made, it is said, by those who were skilled in ancient rites; who foreseeing the Deluge, and fearing lest the memory of their ceremonies should be obliterated, built and contrived vaults, dug with vast labor, in several places.”

But if Enoch’s tablet/pillar was, as we are led to believe, the sole record of antediluvian history, then such a record could also be edited, misrepresented, and faked, either after Enoch’s death, or during his life, if he was either compelled to lie under duress, or seduced into willfully lying, by people with political motives for spreading propaganda.

There certainly does seem to have been some tampering with the records of Enoch’s birth. The Book of Genesis claims that when Abel was killed, and Cain was exiled, Adam had another son: Seth, to whom he passed on his inheritance. It is this figure, Seth, whom Enoch the scribe is supposedly descended from, according to Judeo-Christian tradition. But we know that Cain's own son was also called Enoch, and that he named a city after him. Now notice the peculiar similarity between the descendants of Cain that are given in the Bible (the last biblical record of Cain's activities, by the way), and those of Seth:

Cain's descendants are: Enoch, Irad, Mahujael, Methusael, Lamech..

Seth's descendants are: Enos, Cainan, Mhalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Mathuselah, Lamech.

Clearly, the descendants of Seth are just a muddled version of the descendants of Cain. This leads one to believe that Enoch's genealogy was altered to conceal his descent from Cain. The name "Cainan" has been added in as a hint of this, and two of Enoch's descendants, "Mahujael" and "Irad", are listed as his ancestors instead. Whoever compiled this list was definitely trying to cover something up.

The Jehovahite Cover-Up

Given that several generations of men (people said to have lived several hundred years each)were easily moved around in the Bible's pre-Flood narrative, it is not hard to believe that the Flood itself could have been inserted out of sequence, and thus that Enoch really could have piloted the Ark, instead of his supposed great-grandson, Noah. Remember that Eden and Atlantis are purportedly the same.[20] That must mean that Eden's rightful rulers were at one time overtaken and expelled, just as the Titans were by Zeus. And recall that Zeus is likened to the Sumerian Enlil, or the biblical Jehovah, the "Jove" of the Romans. Adam and Eve's expulsion would most likely symbolize this, and the Deluge which followed would be the same as the sinking of Atlantis. The Flood would have erased all knowledge of the previous history, including the history of the previous dynasty of kings "the elder gods." When the new dynasty ("the younger gods"), headed by Zeus/Jehovah and his chosen rulers took over, they would have rewritten the records to suit their own ends. They would have also gone to great lengths to destroy any true records that may have survived, or to silence anyone who may have known better.

We know that Cain's parents were expelled from Eden/Atlantis, and settled elsewhere. And we know that Cain was later exiled from that place too, purportedly for killing his brother Abel (whom L.A. Waddell believes is actually the ancient god-king Baal, a son of Enlil/Jehovah). He then apparently traveled around the world, building cities and spreading civilization to primitive people. Enoch did likewise, apparently following in his father's footsteps, and the cities they built, as well as accounts of the deeds from the people whose lives they touched, can be found in countries and cultures the world over. But as for the biblical record, none of this is reported beyond the exile of Cain, and the building of one city named after his son Enoch. Cain's life and descendants are almost entirely omitted from the rest of the biblical narrative, and the grandest thing Enoch is said to have done was to "walk with God." For this, he was rewarded by being taken to "Paradise" while still alive, something that does not happen to many other men in the Bible. But note how the description of the event is phrased in Genesis 5:24: "And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."

If by "God" they mean Jehovah/Enlil/Zeus, who took over Eden/Atlantis unlawfully, and who was the enemy of Enoch's father, Cain, then he was not taken to Heaven as a reward for his good behavior. Perhaps he was kidnapped, or somehow seduced or hoodwinked into going back to Atlantis. Perhaps he had inscribed his wisdom onto tablets which were meant to survive a deluge which he foresaw. On these tablets could have been written the true history of what had happened in Atlantis. His kidnappers, wishing to alter that history, thus took control of the person who made that record, and were able to change that record. This included creating a false genealogy of Enoch that made him one of their own, not a child of Cain. And while they recorded the story of the Flood, it was highly garbled, and placed out of sequence. The new historians began their history with post-Flood figures, but grafted onto them the legends and titles of pre-Flood figures. Thus is is almost impossible now to determine which is the true chronology, or the true genealogy, of these god-kings and their deeds.

It is interesting to note that Genesis hints repeatedly that Adam and Eve were neither the first nor the only human beings on Earth. Obviously there were women for Cain and Seth to marry. And if Cain was a "builder of cities", obviously someone had to occupy those cities. Prior to the creation of Adam and Eve in Chapter 2 of Genesis, the text states in Chapter 1, verse 27 that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." In the second chapter, he creates Adam in paradise, and after a while he creates Eve by using material in Adam's body. That is not the same creation story as the one from the first chapter. They seem to be two separate creations. And in the first, God tells them to “Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the Earth.” This seems to indicate that the Earth have been depopulated, perhaps because of the Flood, and needed to be repopulated. In other words, that this first creation story is placed out of sequence, and describes something that really occurred after the Flood. There are many parts of Genesis that seem to be similarly misplaced.

The Luciferian Legacy

It would appear that the Garden of Eden story is, in part, an allegory for Atlantis. The way Plato describes Poseidon as having constructed Atlantis sounds very similar to the way in which the construction of Eden by “God” is described in Genesis. Both appear to have been artificially constructed, as there is nothing natural about the way they were formed. Both also appear to be, in a sense, a petrie dish for divine-human breeding experiments. Recall that in Plato’s Atlantis story, Poseidon sired a race of kings for Atlantis with a mortal woman, Cleito, and bestowed kingship on his firstborn son, Atlas. Thus was the place named Atlantis, and its people Atlanteans. In Genesis, God creates a race of kings to rule over Eden. We can perhaps see a phonetic connection between Eden (or "Edin", as it is spelled in Sumerian) and Adam (or Adami, as the race of man is called in Sumerian), as well as a connection to Atlantis, or "Ad-lantis." The title "Ad" means "Lord" in Sumerian", as does the Egyptian title "Adon", and the Hebrew "Adonai", a word used for "God" in the Bible.

Adam and Eve's "fall from grace" on Eden, and subsequent loss of the kingdom (for that is what their expulsion symbolizes) was precipitated by their defiance of God. They were told specifically not to eat of the "Tree of Knowledge", which was guarded by a "serpent", believed by modern theologians to be "Satan." But they did eat from that tree, and they then obtained "knowledge of good and evil." Afterwards, Adam and Eve, who until that point had been living without clothes, suddenly became aware of their nakedness, and clothed themselves. They were shortly expelled from the Garden of Eden as punishment, and Eve was further punished by being cursed with "the pains of childbirth", which have purportedly haunted women ever since. (Even menstruation has been blamed on Eve's sin.) Soon after this, Adam and Eve had reportedly "known" each other, and had two sons, Cain and Abel. But Cain was the eldest.

However, there are apocryphal versions of this tale that tell it quite differently. They state that Cain is in fact the son of the serpent, who is named as Samael. This would mean that the "knowledge" which Eve obtained was carnal knowledge. She then shared this "knowledge" with Adam. This would explain why they were suddenly aware of their "nakedness." They had just learned what their generative organs were for, and afterwards, they naturally wished to keep them covered. Eve was pained with childbirth afterwards because she had just been impregnated by Samael. Since the serpent is called "Satan" today, and "Satan", is believed, is related to the name of Saturn, or Kronos, it is clear that Cain was fathered by Kronos, or Satan. Author Nicholas de Vere elaborates, referring us to the Sumerian version of the tale. He concurs that the story of the battle between Enki and Enlil is the Sumerian legends is the same as the battle between Zeus and Kronos in the Greek legends, or Jehovah and Satan in the Hebrew. He refers to this pre-diluvian race of gods as the "Dragon race", and states that:

"The story is repeated in the Greek tale of Zeus' hatred of Mankind and the war for supremacy and control of man waged between the elder gods, the Titans…and the Olympians, lead by Zeus.

It is repeated again in the tale of the war between Satan and Jehovah. In all these stories it is the son of the elder queen who is the rightful heir, and this is Enki-Samael-Prometheus-Satan, the friend, savior, and supporter of mankind.

Enlil or Zeus-Jehovah further objected to the idea of investing in man the right to kingship and self-rule, as this was, by tradition, the sole prerequisite of the Annunaki alone. A compromise was reached… and it was decided that an Annunaki queen would incubate a human ovum fertilized by Enki or Samael-Satan. The resulting child would be the first king or queen of the race of men, being mostly Annunaki. Several attempts were made at producing a suitable child by adopting varying permutations of the Annunaki-human interaction. Samael inseminated a Bijo woman, resulting in the birth of Adam...

The second experiment was between Enki-Samael and Eve, his daughter. The child they produced was Cain, who was mated to Lilith Lulluwa, the pure-bred Annunaki daughter of Lilith the Beautiful and Samael.[21] To Lilith Lulluwa, Cain and their sacred offspring was given… the Tiara of Dragon (not moral) kingship from the hand of their father

[21] This character of Lilith, who in cabalistic traditions was the lover of Adam before Eve was made, has been said by some to be the namesake of the word "lily", which denotes a type of flower that has been considered sacred since ancient times. The Old Testament makes numerous references to the "Lily of the Valley", which symbolizes the goddess. It seems likely that the royal device known as the "fleur-de-lys", which was originally associated with the Merovingians, is named after the flower of Lilith

Enki-Samael, the rightful overlord of the Gods, whilst Adam and his children were still considered by Enlil to be serfs. However, upon them the usurping Enlil conveyed his own kingship without the authority of the council of the Dragon Gods, the Annunaki. This he did in an attempt to gain support from humanity for his illegitimate claim to the leadership of the council…

Prometheus the Titan is the "elder god." He is Enki, later called Satan. Therefore the two stories, originating from a common source, attest to the idea that the holy, Draconian, otherworldly origin of the blood of kings ultimately derives from Satan or Samael-Enki, and Lilith. It does not come from their rival, the usurper Jehovah-Zeus or Enlil, and the race of Adam from whom is derived the origin of the later Tinker Kings, the false monarchies…"

So Cain was the first rightful human king, according to De Vere, carrying the divine royal blood of his father, Satan, Saturn, or Kronos, the true King of the World, and by right, of Atlantis, or Eden. But when Kronos and Cain were both exiled, they went about civilizing the rest of the world, which was full of primitive peoples, and he and his descendants became their kings. De Vere believes that Cain's name is even the source of the word "King", and there are words in other languages, such as

"Khan" in the East, which mean exactly the same thing. This is why the names of Cain and Enoch show up in the lists of both gods and kings of cultures all over the world, and in their place-names as well. Being exiled from Eden may have been part of what saved Cain's royal race. Ignatius Donnelly tells us:

> "The race of Cain lived and multiplied far away from the land of Seth, in other words, far away from the land destroyed by the Deluge. Josephus, who gives us the primitive traditions of the Jews, tells us that 'Cain traveled over many countries before he came to the land of Nod.' The Bible does not tell us that the race of Cain perished in the Deluge. 'Cain went out from the presence of Jehovah'; 'he did not call on his name; the people that were destroyed were the 'sons of Jehovah.'"

So it was supposedly the race of Adam and his son Seth, the sons of the usurper Jehovah-Zeus, who died in the Flood, not the sons of Cain? Plato tells us that the kings of Atlantis, just prior to their "fall", and the destruction of Atlantis, had allowed their half-human, half-divine royal blood to become ignoble by breeding outside of their race with normal mortals. They became grotesque, and their behavior tyrannical. This is the reason why their race was exterminated via the Flood. This is the same story told in so many mythologies, where the cause of the Flood is, in some way or another, the miscegenation of a royal-divine race and a mortal one – breeding a grotesque and tyrannical race of giants that need to be exterminated.

Donnelly tells another pertinent story:

> "Mr. George Smith, in the Chaldean account of the Creation deciphered from the Babylonian tablets, shows that there was an original race of men at the beginning of Chaldean history, a dark race… who were called Ad-mi, or Adami, they were the race 'who had fallen', and were contradistinguished from 'the Sarku', or 'light race.' The 'fall' probably refers to their destruction by a deluge, in consequence of their moral degradation and the indignation of the gods."

But in the distorted record compiled by the so-called descendants of Seth, they blamed the cause of the Flood on the tainting of the pure line of Seth by the descendants of Cain. Albert Pike states:

> "Cain slew his brother Abel, and went forth to people parts of the Earth with an impious race, forgetters and defiers of the true God. The other descendants of the common father of the race intermarried with the daughters of Cain's descendants: and all nations preserved the remembrance of that division of the human family into the righteous and impious, in their distorted legends of the wars between the Gods, and the Giants and Titans. When, afterward, another similar division occurred, the Descendants of Seth alone preserved the true primitive religion and science, and transmitted them to posterity in the ancient symbolical character on monuments of stone: and many nations preserved in their legendary traditions the memory of the columns of Enoch and Seth."

In the apocryphal Book of the Cave of Treasures, Adam and his children are shown as living upon a lofty, holy mountain. When Adam dies, after the murder of Abel by Cain, Adam's body is placed inside a very special tomb within this mountain called "the Cave of Machpelah", or "the Cave of Treasures" (the name of a real monument in Jewish legend which has been located near Jerusalem). After Adam's burial, it is then that Cain and his descendants are exiled, but not to some faraway location. Rather they are sent to the plains below the mountain. As the text states:

"And after the families and peoples of the children of Seth had buried Adam, they separated themselves from the children of Cain, the murderer. And Seth took Anosh, his firstborn, and Kainan, and Mahlalail, and their wives and children, and led them up into the glorious mountain where Adam was buried; and Cain and all his descendants remained below on the plain where Cain slew Abel."

Generations later, when Anosh (one of the falsified ancestors of Enoch) is dying, he makes his descendants swear an oath not to interbreed with the Cainites:

"… and he prayed over them and commanded them, and spake unto them, saying, 'I will make you to swear by the holy blood of Abel that not one of you shall go down from this mountain to the plain, nor into the encampment of the children of Cain, the murderer; and ye shall not mingle yourselves among them. Take ye good heed unto this matter, for ye well know what enmity hath existed between us and them from the day whereon Cain slew Abel.' And he blessed Kainan, his son, and commanded him concerning the body of Adam, that he should minister before it all the days of his life, and that he should rule over the children of his people in purity and holiness."

But sometime later, they break their oath, and the results are disastrous:

“And lasciviousness and fornication increased among the children of Cain, and they had nothing to occupy them except fornication--now they had no obligation [to pay] tribute, and they had neither prince nor governor--and eating, and drinking, and lasciviousness, and drunkenness, and dancing and singing to instruments of music, and the wanton sportings of the devils, and the laughter which affordeth pleasure to the devils, and the sounds of the furious lust of men neighing after women. And Satan, finding [his] opportunity in this work of error, rejoiced greatly, because thereby he could compel the sons of Seth to come down from that holy mountain. There they had been made to occupy the place of that army [of angels] that fell [with Satan], there they were beloved by God, there they were held in honour by the angels, and were called ‘sons of God’, even as the blessed David saith in the psalm, ‘I have said, Ye are gods, and all of you sons of the Most High.’

Meanwhile fornication reigned among the daughters of Cain, and without shame [several] women would run after one man. And one man would attack another, and they committed fornication in the presence of each other shamelessly. For all the devils were gathered together in that camp of Cain, and unclean spirits entered into the women, and took possession of them. The old women were more lascivious than the maidens, fathers and sons defiled themselves with their mothers and sisters, sons respected not even their own fathers, and fathers made no distinction between their sons [and other men]. And Satan had been made ruler (or prince) of that camp. And when the men and women were stirred up to lascivious frenzy by the devilish playing of the reeds which emitted musical sounds, and by the harps which the men played through the operation of the power of the devils, and by the sounds of the tambourines and of the sistra which were beaten and rattled through the agency of evil spirits, the sounds of their laughter were heard in the air above them, and ascended to that holy mountain.

And when the children of Seth heard the noise, and uproar, and shouts of laughter in the camp of the children of Cain, about one hundred of them who were mighty men of war gathered together, and set their faces to go down to the camp of the children of Cain. When Yared heard their words and knew their intention, he became sorely afflicted, and he sent and called them to him, and said unto them, 'By the holy blood of Abel, I will have you swear that not one of you shall go down from this holy mountain. Remember ye the oaths which our fathers Seth, and Anosh, and Kainan, and Mahlalail made you to swear.' And Enoch also said unto them, 'Hearken, O ye children of Seth, no man who shall transgress the commandment of Yared, and [break] the oaths of our fathers, and go down from this mountain, shall never again ascend it.' But the children of Seth would neither hearken to the commandment of Yared, nor to the words of Enoch, and they dared to transgress the commandment, and those hundred men, who were mighty men of war, went down [to the camp of Cain]. And when they saw that the daughters of Cain were beautiful in form and that they were naked and unashamed, the children of Seth became inflamed with the fire of lust. And when the daughters of Cain saw the goodliness of the children of Seth, they gripped them like ravening beasts and defiled their bodies. And the children of Seth slew their souls by fornication with the daughters of Cain. And when the children of Seth wished to go up [again] to that holy mountain, after they had come down and fallen, the stones of that holy mountain became fire in their sight, and having defiled their souls with the fire of fornication, God did not permit them to ascend to that holy place. And, moreover, very many others made bold and went down after them, and they, too, fell."

Shortly afterwards, the Deluge comes. Although it is not specifically linked to the interbreeding of the Cainites and the Sethites, the connection is certainly implied. The biblical version of this saga can be found in Genesis 6:

"And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, That the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose. And the LORD said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown."

It is uncertain whether the "giants" were the same as the sons of God, or if they were the same as the "mighty men of renown." For the Hebrew word that has been translated as "giants" is "Nephilim", which also means "those who were cast down", and thus it has been thought that the "sons of God" are the same as the Nephilim – that is, that they were fallen angels. Others identify the "Nephilim" with the progeny of the "sons of God", for that imagine that, when angels bred with humans, genetic deformities caused by the mixing of divine and human blood produced monstrous giants. However, the text does appear to be distinguishing between several different races: (1) the giants, Nephilim, or "those who were cast down"; (2) the "sons of God"; (3) the "daughters of men." However, we must remember that everything in the Bible is a muddled, distorted, and misremembered record of something, which has further been greatly mistranslated and misinterpreted.

At any rate, it is immediately after this story that "God" becomes frustrated with the "wickedness" of mankind, and the Flood narrative begins, with a distinct connection implied between the interracial/interspecies mating of the sons of God with the daughters of men. It also seems that the Lord made good on his promise to shorten the lifespan of man to 120 years. Prior to the Flood, the ages of the biblical patriarchs at death push the 1000-year mark. But after the Flood, the ages of the patriarchs at death gets gradually shorter.

The apocryphal text known as The Book of Enoch is a lengthy work written sometime between 2 BC and 3 AD. It deals entirely with this episode of divine-human miscegenation, and the Flood that followed. It states explicitly that the "sons of God", were angels, called "the Watchers" in this book, and that the offspring they produced were giants. It portrays this miscegenation as being an act of defiance against God, and hints that this was perhaps the spark of the "war in Heaven" of The Book of Isaiah, in which a third of God's angels, led by Lucifer, were cast out of Heaven for defying God. Now in The Book of Enoch, the defiant angels are quite aware that their transgression might bring about divine punishment from God, and so they swear an oath to one another before they begin, promising to go through with the act:

"It happened after the sons of men had multiplied in those days, that daughters were born to them, elegant and beautiful. And when the angels, the sons of heaven, beheld them, they became enamoured of them, saying to each other, Come, let us select for ourselves wives from the progeny of men, and let us beget children.

Then their leader Samyaza said to them; I fear that you may perhaps be indisposed to the performance of this enterprise; And that I alone shall suffer for so grievous a crime.

But they answered him and said; We all swear; And bind ourselves by mutual execrations, that we will not change our intention, but execute our projected undertaking.

Then they swore all together, and all bound themselves by mutual execrations. Their whole number was two hundred, who descended upon Ardis, which is the top of mount Armon.

That mountain therefore was called Armon, because they had sworn upon it, and bound themselves by mutual execrations."

"Mount Armon" is also called "Mt. Hermon", and it has been said to mean "Mount of the Curse", because the angels took their oath, and thus cursed themselves, upon that mountain. This, I believe, is connected to the name of the god "Hermes", who was apparently the Greek equivalent of the figure of Enoch.

As states previously, the progeny produced by the angels turned out to be monstrous giants, who destroyed the earth with their ravenous appetites, and warred against men:

"And the women conceiving brought forth giants, Whose stature was each three hundred cubits. These devoured all which the labor of men produced; until it became impossible to feed them; When they turned themselves against men, in order to devour them; And began to injure birds, beasts, reptiles, and fishes, to eat their flesh one after another, and to drink their blood. Then the earth reproved the unrighteous."

But this was not the only sin of the angels. They also sinned against God when they, at this time, began teaching mankind certain knowledge that God had apparently forbidden them to have:

“Moreover Azazyel taught men to make swords, knives, shields, breastplates, the fabrication of mirrors, and the workmanship of bracelets and ornaments, the use of paint, the beautifying of the eyebrows, the use of stones of every valuable and select kind, and all sorts of dyes, so that the world became altered.

Impiety increased; fornication multiplied; and they transgressed and corrupted all their ways. Amazarak taught all the sorcerers, and dividers of roots: Armers taught the solution of sorcery; Barkayal taught the observers of the stars, Akibeel taught signs; Tamiel taught astronomy; And Asaradel taught the motion of the moon, And men, being destroyed, cried out; and their voice reached to heaven.”

Another quote from The Book of Enoch demonstrates this amply. Referring to the iniquity and rebellion that caused God to bring about the Flood, Enoch tells Noah:

"They have discovered secrets, and they are those that have been judged; but not thou, my son. The Lord of Spirits knows that thou are pure and good, free from the reproach of discovering secrets."

The "secrets" taught by the angels, which God apparently did not want man to know, include both the secrets of sorcery, and also the basic arts and sciences of civilization. Clearly, "God" was deliberately keeping mankind in an enslaved, ignorant state, and these angels wanted to teach these secrets to mankind, presumably out of love for their children, so that their descendants could thrive. The motivation for this, however, was more than just altruistic, as we shall see. It was a political move, really. The angels who mated with humans, and who taught them this forbidden knowledge, did so because it gave them an advantage against Jehovah, with whom they were struggling for seniority in Heaven. Passing their lineage onto humans gained them allies, and it secured heirs for royal titles and positions of power which Jehovah was trying to control. And passing on these “secrets” empowered them, so that they could stand on their own without any need of help from Jehovah.

The actions of these angels are most definitely portrayed in The Book of Enoch as an act of rebellion against Jehovah. And the punishment he metes out is dire indeed:

“Again the Lord said to Raphael, Bind Azazyel hand and foot; cast him into darkness; and opening the desert which is in Dudael, cast him in there. Throw upon him hurled and pointed stones, covering him with darkness; There shall he remain for ever; cover his face, that he may not see the light. And in the great day of judgment let him be cast into the fire.”

Interestingly, even though the instigator of the sexual crimes committed by the angels is said to be Samyaza, the teaching of secrets was instigated by Azazel. So Jehovah decided to lay the blame most heavily upon him. The Book of Enoch quotes “God” as saying:

“All the earth has been corrupted by the effects of the teaching of Azazyel. To him therefore ascribe the whole crime.”

As for the “giants” born of angels and men, Jehovah decides to bring about the Flood in order to rid the Earth of them. But he also decides to thin their population as much as possible first, by sending his angels to instigate violence amongst the giants, so that they kill each other off.

“To Gabriel also the Lord said, Go to the biters, to the reprobates, to the children of fornication; and destroy the children of fornication, the offspring of the Watchers, from among men; bring them forth, and excite them one against another. Let them perish by mutual slaughter; for length of days shall not be theirs.”

Then the Watchers and their children are to be cast into the pit under the earth, where they shall suffer and await the Final Judgment:

“To Michael likewise the Lord said, Go and announce his crime to Samyaza, and to the others who are with him, who have been associated with women, that they might be polluted with all their impurity. And when all their sons shall be slain, when they shall see the perdition of their beloved, bind them for seventy generations underneath the earth, even to the day of judgment, and of consummation, until the judgment, the effect of which will last for ever, be completed.

Then shall they be taken away into the lowest depths of the fire in torments; and in confinement shall they be shut up for ever. Immediately after this shall he, together with them, burn and perish; they shall be bound until the consummation of many generations."

Interestingly, it is hinted in The Book of Enoch that Enoch himself was a human-angel hybrid. His birth is described thusly:

"She … brought forth a child, the flesh of which was white as snow, and red as a rose; the hair of whose head was white as wool, and long; and whose eyes were beautiful. When he opened them, he illuminated all the house, like the sun; the whole house abounded with light."

Noah's father Lamech is concerned that this is not his biological offspring. He goes to his father Methuselah, and says:

"I have begotten a son unlike to other children. He is not human, but resembling the offspring of Heaven, is of a different nature, being altogether unlike us. His eyes are bright as the rays of the sun; his countenance glorious, and he looks not as if he belongs to me, but to the angels."

In this story, Enoch is taken up to Heaven, speaks to the angels, and is forewarned about the Flood. He then passes the information on to his descendant, Noah. In the text, it is clear that the cause of the Flood involves a shift of the Earth's axis. The book states that "In those days Noah saw that the earth became inclined, and that destruction approached." However, it is unlikely that anyone but the gods, and those whom they chose to inform, were aware of what this implied.

L.A. Waddell believes that the Watchers in The Book of Enoch who bred with human women were lead by Cain, because "Azazel" is similar to "Azaz", or "Azag", a title sometimes used by the Sumerian king Qin. Also, in Persian mythology, the descendants of Azazel are called the "Djinn", similar to "Gin or "Gan", an alternate way of saying "Cain." Also, the arts and sciences that Azazel and his Watchers supposedly taught mankind are also associated with Cain and his children in many other traditions. The biblical figure of Tubal-Cain[22], who is probably Cain's descendant (if the Seth genealogy in Genesis is seen as erroneous) are both quite specifically said to have invented metalsmithing, and to have taught men to make weapons, as are the Watchers in The Book of Enoch, and the Djinn in Persian mythology. However, the whole thing may be a bit more complicated, as I am about to explain.

An Attempt at Antediluvian History

With so many different and conflicting versions of this saga to choose from, I felt it was necessary to boil the recurring myths down to their essentials and, isolating the most common elements, construct a rudimentary outline identifying what seems to be the likeliest order of events. Although this rough sketch is pure speculation, and although it is, admittedly, dangerous to try to reconstruct history based on mythology, what you read below is the model in which, I feel, all of the available data (from myths, history, archeology and anthropology) falls most snugly into place. And the picture thus painted is quite surprising.

If we take the myths to be based on truth, then we would have to agree that long ago, the earth was ruled by an entirely different order of beings, which I will call, for the purposed of this model, “gods.” While apparently related to the human race genetically, they were also, apparently, far more advanced in their development. The descriptions of them possessing horns, wings, fish tails, or reptilian features are most likely the result of elaborate costumes worn by the gods, symbolizing metaphysical concepts with which they wished to identify themselves. Such costumes were worn by human royals in ancient times, and the most common items of regalia used by royals have their origins in this golden age of the gods, as for example, the crown, inspired by the solar disc.

Their other most famous attribute was their ability to “shine.” They were called the “Ellu” in Babylonian myths, and “Elohim” in the Bible, both of which translate as “shining ones.” In fact, the name of the land of “Sumer” or “Shinar”, which they were responsible for civilizing, is related to the words “shine”, “shimmer”, and “summer.” These beings possessed not merely white skin, which most of their human descendants most certainly did, but in fact shined “like the Sun”, and just looking at them could blind a man or kill him. The light was especially known to radiate from their powerful, glowing eyes, which is why they were known as “the Watchers.” It seems that they were able to manipulate the properties of light, which is what their technology is based upon, and what made them so vastly superior to mortals, giving them powers which appeared to humans to be “magical.” They had access to higher dimensions than those which we currently experience.

These beings had a highly advanced and massive global civilization, the center of which was, most probably, the island of Atlantis. At the point at which we shall enter the story, the King of the Gods was Anu, Oannes, or Ouranos, the father of the Titans in Greek mythology. Their civilization relied very heavily on sea power, and thus their kings identified very heavily with sea symbolism. They also identified with the planets, the Sun, and the stars, most likely because of their vast knowledge of astronomy, and because of their ability to “shine.”

The next ruler of Atlantis, and of the world of the gods to follow Anu, was his son, the Sumerian Enki, the Greek Kronos, the Roman Saturn, and the Christian Satan. We will use “Satan” for the purposed of our model. It depends on which myth you believe whether Anu died, was killed by his son Satan, or simply retired. At any rate, Satan ruled Atlantis at length, and was renowned for both his wisdom and his ingenuity. Zecharia Sitchin refers to Enki as “the chief scientist among the gods.”

At this time, the Earth was probably populated by primitive forms of humanity as well, which also seems to be consistent with the mythological record. These people had not yet evolved to the status of present-day homo-sapiens, and lived savagely in the wild, largely ignored by the more highly-evolved “gods.”

At some point, however, the gods decided to breed a more advanced humanoid species, possibly a slave race. This would have bee the race of the Adami, and it is likely that the figure of “Adam” in the Bible is largely fictional, but in fact stands as a symbol of this pre-diluvian human race. The figure personified in the Bible is a replacement actor, meant to stand in as the prototype of the first divinely ordained human king (to supplant the real one, the maligned and largely excised figure of Cain). The word “Adam” is related to the word “Eden” (or “Edin”, as it is written in the Sumerian myths.) Eden was the location in which the breeding experiments took place, where the Adami were raised like livestock and taught to perform manual labor. Eden supposedly resided in “the center of the Earth”, which I here take to mean “in the heart of Atlantis.”

It was Satan who was ultimately in charge of the Adami breeding experiments. And it seems that, in his naturally scientific curiosity, he wished to see what would happen if these beings were endowed with a bit of the natural wisdom, understanding, and ingenuity that the gods themselves possessed. There may have been other motives as well, for he sensed an impending power struggle with his brother, the Sumerian Enlil, the Greek Zeus, and the biblical Jehovah. In order to maintain his power, Satan needed a race of beings to act as foot soldiers – beings with a bit more going on upstairs than the sheep-like Adami race. So he and his friends, including his wife (called in the Sumerian legends "Inanna"), interbred with Adami women to create a royal race among them that was half-god. This move was very controversial amongst the gods, and Jehovah was especially angered. One man in particular Satan created to be his royal heir: Cain. Satan bestowed the tiara of divine kingship upon him, and intended for him to become the first king of Eden, ruling over the rest of the Adami. It is uncertain whether or not he ever held this title de facto, or whether he ascension to the new throne was prevented by what happened next.

It was at this point that Jehovah launched his first offensive to take over Satan's royal throne. To make a long story short, he succeeded in accomplishing just that. Satan was exiled, and Jehovah declared himself the King of Atlantis - the Lord of the Earth. He installed his own appointees to all the official positions of government. This is the revolution of the "younger gods" over the "older gods", as reported in Greek and Sumerian mythology.

In exile, Satan perhaps fled to Iberia, as the legends report Saturn did, and formed a base of operations there amongst the primitive Iberians, whom he civilized, and turned into his loyal subjects. Indeed, he, may have traveled to many lands doing this. He also began consolidating a support base amongst the other gods who wished to see his return to the throne.

Back in Atlantis, Satan's son Cain, now deprived of the throne, continued to live, now ruled over by a new order of gods. As an insult to Satan, and because he felt threatened by Cain, Jehovah elected a new man to the throne of Eden: the Canaanite Baal-Moloch, known as "Abel" in the Bible. According to some versions, Baal was the son of the Canaanite god El, who is the same as Jehovah. So after criticizing Satan and his fellow gods for interbreeding with men, Jehovah engaged in it himself, not only breeding a royal heir, but an entire race of hybrid beings. However, not being as expert in the process as Satan was, Jehovah's sons lacked the noble nature of Cain, and they became more and more deformed with each successive generation.

Nonetheless, Jehovah raised Baal to the throne of Eden, and made all of the inhabitants bow down to him. But Cain, knowing himself to not only be the rightful ruler, but a much more highly evolved being than Baal, refused to pay homage to this false lord. For this he was sent into exile as well, an event that is memorialized in the Judaic and Islamic traditions which state that Satan was cast out of Heaven for refusing to "bow down to man."

When Cain was exiled, it is most likely that he hooked up with his father. He probably joined his campaign to overthrow Jehovah and reclaim the thrones that had been stolen from them both. They continued to civilize the primitives they conquered throughout the world, perhaps even working with a number of Adami and other hybrid races at that point, attempting to create an empire that would rival the one which Jehovah had stolen from Satan. This is how both Satan and Cain first gained their reputations as the great civilizers of mankind. And when they had created enough bases of operations, and amassed a large enough army, they attacked.

Thus began the "Edenic wars" that both L.A.Waddell and Ignatius Donnelly have written about: Satan fighting Jehovah for control of the Atlantean empire, and Cain fighting Abel for control of Eden within that empire. During the ongoing battles, Abel was killed, and Satan was somehow incapacitated as well. Many legends indicate that he was "imprisoned within the center of the Earth", either dead, or in a "death-like sleep" from which he is forever unable to awake. However, it is difficult to tell how to interpret such myths in a literal way.

Having done away with Satan, Jehovah naturally assumed that his struggle for power was over, and his throne was secured. But Cain continued to plot revenge. Furthermore, he himself had bred a royal heir, called in the Bible "Enoch" (after his grandfather, Satan, who was also called "Enki"). As discussed earlier, at some point Enoch was kidnapped by Jehovah, who probably feared his status as a royal heir, and was forced to live near Jehovah's royal capitol in Atlantis, where he was easier to control.

This is where the major turning point in the Edenic wars came: the Flood. Cain became aware of the impending disaster by watching the stars, and realizing that the Earth's axis was shifting. Cain knew this would result in a Flood, and that the disaster would wipe out a large portion of life on Earth. He thus began making preparations to preserve those elements of it which he considered worth saving. He somehow managed to get word to Enoch warning him about what was going to happen, and Enoch (going with the hypothesis that he and Noah are the same) then had a ship built in which to escape, upon which he placed "the seed of all living things", by which was probably meant genetic samples. He also supposedly brought on board a tablet, written on a special stone, upon which he engraved the most important secrets of the antediluvian world. We will discuss in the next chapter what may have been meant by this.

Biblical and other records depict Enoch/Noah as building the Ark and then waiting for the Flood to start. The boat only became seabourne in these stories when the Flood waters came to it. This makes sense if Enoch was unable to leave Atlantis because he was being restricted by Jehovah, and he had to wait for the chaos of the disaster to begin in order to slip out unnoticed. It is possible, though, that Enoch set out well before the Flood, and met up with his father. They then would have then moved the contents of the Ark into a “safe area” that Cain had already established, perhaps at the top of, and perhaps even inside, a tall mountain peak, as the legends suggest.

All of the other gods, including Jehovah, were well aware of the impending disaster, and many were able to find or construct a place of refuge. But, apparently on the direct orders of Jehovah, they neglected to tell the Adami, and all related races of humans and hybrids, about the Flood. Jehovah had apparently become annoyed with all of them, and wanted to wipe the slate clean. By retreating to his own place of security and giving his human subjects no warning, Jehovah allowed Mother Nature to take care of the problem for him. The Flood wreaked havoc all over the world, and Atlantis was completely engulfed in Flood waters, never to return.

Plato puts the Flood at around 10,500 years ago, which jibes with the estimate of researchers like Graham Hancock and Colin Wilson, who have used not only mythological records, but also the findings from modern archeologists and other scientists to reach this conclusion. The Bible puts it at 4000 years ago, but of course, the Biblical chronology is highly flawed. We cannot be certain when the Flood actually occurred, or how long it too for the Earth to become largely inhabitable again. Cain and Enoch may have stayed in their mountain retreat for some time, perhaps even hundreds of years. And when they re-emerged, they began once again on the project that had occupied them previously: creating a global empire. Although most of humanity had been wiped out, Cain and Enoch had undoubtedly saved a number of the Adami, and maybe members of other hybrid races as well. There also would have probably been pockets of survivors all over the world, both primitives who lived in places that were not affected by the Flood, and Atlanteans/Edenites of the hybrid races who managed to escape to these unaffected places. After the Flood waters subsided, Cain, Enoch, and their brethren came out and started rebuilding civilization all over the world. This is what, more than anything, gains them their reputation as having been the inventors of every art and science, and the gods who taught wisdom to primitive mankind. Although this had been going on before the Flood as well, after the Flood, they were teaching these sciences to men who had never even seen them before, having been born in a post-diluvian world. These human-god hybrids were now the overseers of all primitive humanity, and to these primitive humans, their overseers seemed like the highest form of life on Earth. They thus became deified by their subjects, and were the objects of cult worship. “Man” had literally become “god”, a concept that has remained dear to occultists ever since.

As for the real gods, they were still around, but they seemed somewhat less accessible than they had before. The descriptions of human contact with the old antediluvian gods seem to take on a different tone after the Flood. They no longer ruled the Earth directly, but for the most part remained hidden, and could be seen except through veils. It was as if a dimensional shift of some sort occurred at the same time as the Flood, and they now spent most of their time occupying those upper dimensions that man could not access. They used their human-god hybrid descendants as conduits acting on their behalf. Their descendants became priest-kings, and were known as sons of the gods: indeed, as incarnations of the gods – the only ones capable of contacting the gods and acting on their behalf. This is the tradition that has defined human kingship ever since. And the first one to set the precedent was Cain.

Cain's apotheosis, according to my theory, occurred in a very interesting way. Having been cast out of Atlantis by Jehovah, and then having survived the Flood, Cain went about perpetuating a myth that he had died, descended to the underworld, and then been reborn as a god. He made people believe that he had become an incarnation of his father, Satan. He renamed himself Seth (or "Set"), a word derived from his father's name, and took on the sea-goat imagery that his father had been associated with.[23]

The story of Cain's death, according to Jewish mythology, is very interesting, as it contains elements very similar to the death of Dagobert II. He was killed in a hunting accident in the forest by "his great-grandson, Lamech", who, interestingly, shares the same name as the father of Noah, only that figure was purportedly a descendant of Seth! Anyway, the Cainite Lamech accidentally killed his great-grandfather Cain because when he saw the horn on Cain's head (which God had placed there as a "mark" supposedly so that he wouldn't be murdered), he mistook Cain for an animal, and shot him with an arrow. The imagery of a horned Cain living in the forest reinforces the idea that he actually took on a new identity as a goat-headed deity.

[23] Author Julius Evola wrote that Seth's name could be interpreted to mean "ruin" or "upheaval", but also "foundation" or "pole", "having an essential relation with the regal function generally conceived as an emanation of the power of the center."

After Cain's rebirth as the horned figure of Seth, he, with his son Enoch, and other family members, built a global empire in which the human-god hybrid races acted as the overseers of society, directing it with the Solomonic wisdom inherent in their blood. From the Bible, as well as other records, we gather that Seth-Cain and Enoch succeeded in forming a united world, which all spoke one language – the proto-Sumerian or Aryan language. If we believe the legends, the inventor of this language was Enoch, who was also responsible for teaching the upper castes of humanity how to read and write. The so-called "Tower of Babel" built in Mesopotamia was a monument to this unity. It was so tall, and so magnificent, and symbolized an accomplishment that was so massive, that Jehovah and his faction found it threatening. They launched a massive attack on the structure, and the Tower was destroyed. In addition to the Judaic myth, there are versions of this story in other cultures, too. And we know from both historical and archeological records that the Tower of Babel did once exist.

It is likely that the attack on the Tower marked the beginning of a renewed conflict between the Satanic and Jehovahite bloodlines, in which control of the post-diluvian human world was the prize. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah was probably another act of the Jehovahites. And it seems that Jehovah must have gained a great deal of ground, because after the Tower of Babel incident, the world’s languages were no longer united, but “scrambled.” Jehovah probably took over many or most of Cain and Enoch’s territories. He then instituted a different language in each region, so that the inhabitants would be more easily subdued, more ignorant, and less likely to be able to organize a rebellion. It was also easier to construct a false history in which Satan and Cain were portrayed as villains, while “Seth”, instead of being Cain himself, was portrayed as his brother, and as the true ancestor of Enoch. Eventually, Seth and Enoch became, in the Jewish tradition at least, Jehovahite heroes, and were portrayed as the ancestors of all the biblical patriarchs. The Cainites were accused of trying to steal the genealogy of Seth, when in fact it was there’s all along. Louis Ginzberg writes:

“Unfortunately, at the time of Methuselah, following the death of Adam, the family of Seth became corrupted after the manner of the Cainites. The two strains united with each other to execute all kinds of iniquitous deeds. The result of the marriages between them were the Nephilim, whose sins brought the Deluge upon the world. In their arrogance they claimed the same pedigree as Seth, and they compared themselves with princes and men of noble descent."[24]

But the true ancestry of the Hebrew, Jewish and Israelite kings was Satanic and Cainite in origin, and there is evidence that forces loyal to Satan continued to jockey for influence on them. Thus the history of the Hebrews, Jews and Israelites shows Jehovah constantly struggling to keep these people loyal to him, even his anointed priests and kings. It was probably a known secret amongst the priest, scribes, and nobles what their true heritage was. And it even seems that, at times, when the priests thought they were channeling messages from Jehovah, they were in fact contacting other gods from rival factions, which explains why "God" takes on radically different names and personalities throughout the Bible.

Outside of this strain, other cultures were heavily influenced by Jehovah's son Abel or Baal, who appears to have been put in charge Mesopotamia, and several other Middle Eastern territories. For in these cultures, Baal was remembered as one of the great god-kings who ruled over them in ancient times. His father Jehovah had always been thought of as a "storm god", associated with warfare (for obvious reasons). In this capacity he took on the imagery of a bull, and was known to wear bull horns on his helmet. His son Baal took on the bull imagery as well, and took it further, for he was actually remembered as a creature with a bull's head. He quite openly encouraged his subjects to worship him as a god, and it was his descendants who instituted bull and cow worship in the ancient world. King Nimrod claimed to be a descendant of Baal, and took on his title "Lord of the Earth." He also took credit (falsely, I believe) for building the Tower of Babel. He forced his subjects to worship him as an incarnation of Baal, and insisted that they sacrifice babies, a trait that has always marked Baal worship.

[24] According to Freemason and occult expert Albert Mackey, Cain and Seth are the sources of two separate systems of cabala – the Jewish science of numerology based on the mystical Hebrew alphabet.

L.A.Waddell believed that many words used in the ancient world were derived from Baal's name, which came to mean simply "Lord" in Middle Eastern languages. For instance, Waddell wrote that the Norse God Baldur was the same as Baal, and that the pagan holiday of Beltane was named after him. Also, his title, "Moloch", came to mean "king" in the ancient world, and developed into the Hebrew world "Malkuth", for "kingdom." It is thus at the root of the name "Melchizedek", the priest-king that Abraham paid homage to in the Bible. And it is perhaps related to the word "Michael", the lead angel that opposed Satan in the Christian story of the war in Heaven.

Waddell also thought that stories of heroes slaying bulls, such as Mithras slaying the World Bull, represent Cain killing Abel, or Baal. Likewise, stories about heroes such as Michael, or St. George, slaying dragons represent Jehovahites killing the descendants of Satan. Indeed, bull sacrifice was practiced in Crete, and in the rites of Mithras (a figure most certainly derived from Cain). Also, Plato said that bull sacrifice was practiced in Atlantis. And Zeus often took the form of a bull when he had intercourse with human females, such as in the case of his rape of Europa.

The story goes as follows. The young lady Europa was playing on the beach one day when a beautiful bull, Zeus in disguise, appeared from out of the sea. Europa was so enchanted by it that she climbed up on its back. He immediately carried her off into the sea and raped her. It has been speculated that the continent of Europe was so named because it was once populated by the descendants of those spawned by this union. The parallels to the story of the Quinotaur who raped the mother of Meroveus while she swam in the sea are startling.

A similar story involved the birth of the monstrous bull-headed man called the Minotaur, who lived underground at the center of an elaborate labyrinth on the island of Crete, imprisoned there by his father, King Minos. Remember, Crete was known for its famous bull sacrifice rituals, but in this case, it was the Minotaur to whom sacrifices were made, as young men and women were sent down there regularly to feed his insatiable appetite for human flesh. In the end, the Minotaur was slain by the hero, Theseus (son of Neptune), which is perhaps what the bull sacrifices of Crete were in commemoration of. The Minotaur was not the son of Minos biologically, though. According to fact-index.com:

"Before Minos became king, he asked the Greek god Poseidon for a sign, to assure him that he, and not his brother, was to receive the throne. Poseidon agreed to send a white bull on condition Minos would sacrifice the bull back to the god. Indeed a bull of unmatched beauty came out of the sea. King Minos, after seeing it, instead sacrificed another bull, hoping that Poseidon would not notice. Poseidon was very angry when he realised what had been done so he caused Minos' wife Pasiphae to be overcome with a fit of madness in which she fell in love with the bull. Pasiphae went to Daedalus for assistance, and Daedalus devised a way for her to satisfy her passions. He constructed a hollow wooden cow covered with cowhide for Pasiphae to hide in and allow the bull to mount her. The result of this union was the Minotaur. In some accounts, the white bull went on to become the Cretan Bull. In Greek mythology, the Cretan Bull was either the bull that carried away Europa or the bull Pasiphae fell in love with. Heracles had to capture it."

Given the similarities between the Minotaur and Baal, the conclusion reached by author Nicholas de Vere is almost obvious:

"The Minotaur has been said to be a version of the Phoenician bull-headed god Baal-Moloch, the son of Enlil… sacrifices were made to the Phoenician King enacting the ritual role of the god by wearing a bull's head as a mask."

As the Jehovahite cult gained supremacy amongst the Hebrews, Jehovah became jealous of the worship of his son Baal, or of any other gods, for that matter. The incident that occurred when the Hebrews were caught worshipping the golden calf in Exodus demonstrates this amply. "Baal" and "Moloch" were now considered "false gods" worshipped by "heathen nations." Nevertheless, the practice of idolatry was rampant amongst the Israelites and Jews, most especially the priestly caste, and was even performed by King Solomon within the Temple, using the Ark of the Covenant. Archeologists have found the bodies of hundreds of infants slaughtered in sacrifice to Baal. His name eventually morphed into the name of the demon Beelzebub.

Also, although "Seth" is remembered in Judaism as the forefather of the biblical patriarchs, the imagery of the goat-headed god which Seth really was became the prototype image for the Devil in Judaism and Christianity. Goat sacrifice became central to old Judaism. It was part of the observance of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. On this day, two goats were sacrificed. One was killed as a "sin offering", atoning for the sins of the Israelites, and taking their punishment for them in their steed. Upon the head of the other goat were placed "the sins of all Israel." This goat was then sent off into the desert to die of thirst, taking the curses of the sins with him, away from the people. But each goat was a separate sacrifice: "one for the Lord, and one for Azazel", as the text of Leviticus stipulates. The priests would choose two of the finest goats that they had for this, and then draw lots to see which one would be offered to Azazel.

It has been suggested by some that this ritual symbolism was used in defiance of the religion of Egypt, in which their goat-headed god, Ammon, was highly revered, and the sacrifice of goats was forbidden. The name of "Egypt" was originally "Egopt", sometimes just called "Gopt" or "Copt." (Thus the word "Coptic" is used to describe things that are Egyptian.) L.A. Waddell believed that "Gopt" was a title of Cain, a permutation of "Gad" or "God", and was thus the source of the name of the "Goth" tribe in Europe, and of course, the word "goat." Perhaps this word is also related to the name “Capricorn”, the sea-goat of the Zodiac, and thus “Cecropes”, the ancestor of Erichthonius who was half-dragon.

The name of Cain mutated not only into the words “king” and “queen”, but also “gentry” (meaning “nobility”). This includes the word “genetic”, and that entire family of words indicating bloodlines, such as “genealogy”, or “generation”, “genesis”, and even “genital” – all words denoting the idea of passing on seed. The related word “gan” meant “garden” in Hebrew, and “gan” meant “vessel” in old Egyptian. The race of the “Djinn” (demonic beings that are part of Islamic lore) were named after Cain, and were considered to be descendants of Azazel, one of Cain’s titles. From “Djinn”, or “Gin” comes words like “genie” (another word for a demonic spirit). Even “genius” comes from this root. It initially meant “an indwelling spirit”, and literally suggested that a person was possessed by a demon. Also, “Gin” is probably related to “John” and “Jeanne”, the names taken on by all Priory of Sion Grand Masters since the Cutting of the Elm.

His name of “Seth”, I believe, is not only the basis for the Egyptian character of Set, but also the name of the race known as “Scythian”, which author Nicholas de Vere identified with the Aryan. H.P. Blavatsky connects Seth’s name with “sod”, which she says means “mystery” or “arcanum.”

The name “Azazel” may be related to another title that L.A. Waddell ascribed to Cain: “Azag.” He believed that Cain was identical to the Sumerian king Sargon the Great, whom he identified also with an ancient Indian king, Sagara. This title “Sag”, “Zag”, or “Azag” he said, meant “seer”, and was thus the root of the English word “sage” or “sagacious”, indicating a wise and holy visionary. Waddell wrote that “Sag” was sometimes shortened to “Ag”, which is Egypt came to mean “fire within”, a testament to the fact that Cain’s race was one of metalsmiths and alchemists. Interestingly, the word “ageia” came to mean “goat”, and “aegis” came to mean “to rule.” “Ag” is probably also related to the word “agriculture”, which Cain purportedly taught mankind. This word may further be linked to “Aegaea”, the region around the Aegean Sea, as well as, again, Egypt. Also, “Agei” is the name of a Hindu fire god, and “Agathodaemon” is the name that was used by some Gnostic sects for their “savior”

There is reason to believe that this word mutated further yet into our word for the number “eight”, also called “og” or “oct” in other languages, resulting in words like “octopus and “octagon.” The figure eight looks much like the caduceus staff (entwined with two serpents) which Hermes or Mercury is always holding.[25] You will recall that Hermes or Mercury is the same as Enoch. This same figure was called "Thoth" or "Azag-Thoth" in Egypt, incorporating the "Azag" title of his father, Cain. And Azag-Thoth, Hermes or Mercury is believed in certain occult legends to have been the inventor of chess, which is played on an 8 x 8 board. This may be related to the Chinese I-Ching, which is made up of 64 "hexagrams."

The name "Enoch", as we know, is related to the Sumerian name of this figure's grandfather, "Enki", or Satan. Also written as "Kenoch" or "Hanuk", this name was probably the source of the word "Anakim", a race of giants who, according to Genesis, lived in Canaan, and who may very well have been descendants of Enoch. "Enki", "Enoch", and the name of the father god "Anu" are all sources for the Sumerian word "Annunaki", their name for the original race of gods, and probably the South American tribe of the Inca, who were civilized by these same god-kings. The word further mutated into "ankh", the Egyptian sun-cross which was also used, oddly enough, by the Cathars in medieval France, and which mutated into the Celtic cross. As "Enoch" was sometimes spelled "Anag", it may be related to the French place-name "Anjou", from whence came the Angevins, an offshoot of the Merovingian family.

However, Enoch's other name of "Erech", after which the Sumerian city of "Uruk" (or sometimes "Warka") was called (and thus the country of Iraq) was just as influential in our language. As we have said before, the word "Ur" (related to "Ar") has come to mean "primeval" in European language. It is not hard to see how the word "Erech", "Uruk" or "Warka" could transform into "Ark", as in the one that Enoch may have navigated during the Flood. Given the idea that civilization supposedly died during the Deluge, the Ark could then be the origin of all renewed civilization. Thus the word "arche", like "ur" in German, means "original" in Latin, and provides us with words like "archetype." Enoch was, like his father, an "architect", a science named after its fundamental building block, the "arch." And "arch" also denotes political rule, as in "monarchy", "anarchy", or "oligarchy."

The names of the other figures I have discussed in this chapter have many other linguistic connections as well. Anu, of course, is the same as Oannes, Ouranos, Uranus, and Enu, and he is the source of the race names "Annunaki" and "Annedoti." Also, as he was viewed in his time as the god of the heavens, the inventor of astronomy, and an incarnation of the Sun itself, the solar year was named after him in Sumeria, which is where we get our word "annual."

“Satan” is obviously related to the word “Saturn”, which is related to “satyr”, a form of goat-headed man who in Greek mythology occupied Arcadia. Their race was headed by Pan, who seems to be based on the goat-headed figure of Cain/Seth. Pan was seen as a “trickster god”, a malicious joker, and from the word “satyr” we get the word “satire.” This same figure of Satan was Kronos in Greek myth , or Cerrunnos in Celtic mythology, seen in those cultures as the inventor of farming. He was especially associated with wheat, or “corn”, as it is called in England, a word derived from his name. Of course, “Kronos” or “Chronos” was associated with the concept of time, and thus the word “chronology” was formed. It is also probably the root of the word “crown”, the headgear worn by a king.

This same figure’s Sumerian title of “Ia” was later absorbed into the name of “Jah” or “Jehovah”, who hijacked much of his rivals’ imagery. “Ia” contributed to the formation of the word “eye”, and the eye became a symbol for the world kingship that was once wielded by these god-kings. The eye symbol was used as a glyph for kingship in India, where it was called “the Royal Eye of Gopta”, and in Egypt, where it was “the Eye of Horus.” The symbol of the All-Seeing Eye was then adopted by Freemasons, who incorporated many Egyptian mysteries into their rituals. It was Freemasons who designed the Great Seal of the United States, in which the All-Seeing Eye replaces the capstone of the Egyptian Great Pyramid. This is supposed to symbolize the ideal political world order envisioned by Freemasons – one of autocratic global hegemony, a return to the world empire of the golden age of the gods.

The Fallen Race

Both the god-kings who descended from Satan and Cain, as well as those who came from Jehovah and Baal, have played monumental roles in human history, to say the least. If not for them, "humanity" as we know it would not exist, much less civilization, and the Earth would be populated by nomadic hordes of primitive mongrelized subraces. But the battles between the Satanic and Jehovahite factions, as well as the numerous subfactions, have wreaked havoc on our ancient history. We now have only echoes of truth in fragmented form, sprinkled throughout our mythologies and religious doctrines. Most so-called "occult" doctrines are no less a mixture of truth and falsehood. It is as if a veil has fallen over the light, and now we "see through a glass darkly."

One of the reasons for this, perhaps, is that almost all of the god-human hybrid races have died off. We know that they continued to live for a long time after the Flood. Although their ages at death gradually drop from hundreds of years before and immediately after the Flood, to more normal age ranges by the time of Moses, the patriarchs of the Bible, all the way up to and including the twelve sons of Jacob, are all reported in Jewish legends to have been giants, and to have been exceedingly beautiful, with captivating eyes, as well as being capable of superhuman feats of strength. The historian Eusebius wrote that "Abraham traced his ancestry to the giants. These dwelt in the land of Babylonia. Because of their impiety, they were destroyed by the gods." There were also other races of giants reported in the Bible, such as the "Anakim" and the "Rephaim", who were said to live in lands outside of Israel. These giants all seem to have been carriers of the blood of the pre-diluvian god-kings. Similar things (extraordinarily long lives, beautiful skin, and giant bodies) are reported about the kings of other ancient cultures, such as Sumeria, India, Egypt and Greece.

Nicholas de Vere details in his book The Dragon Legacy how races of divine-human hybrids acted as the "overseers", or "Dragons" (a word that he says comes from "derkesthai", which means "to see clearly") of ancient human societies. He depicts this as a harmonious, interdependent caste system headed by the Dragons, who served their "client races" with care. He believes that all legends of fairies, elves, dragons, vampires, devils, demons, and angels are remembrances of these creatures, or of their forefathers, the gods.

However, De Vere believes that these “Dragon” races, particularly those descended from Jehovah, eventually allowed themselves to interbeed outside of the Dragon family, to the point where their blood lost all of its divine potency. These people, now mere mortals, then began a systematic effort to exterminate those who remained “of pure Dragon blood”, and to take over the human societies they directed. De Vere details the chronology of this “genocide” in a chapter of his book called “The Thousand-Year Elven Holocaust.” It is because of this largely successful campaign that the world is, in De Vere’s eyes, now run by ignoble “robber barons” with selfish motives, still aspiring to the titles, prestige and power originally wielded by those whom they had hatefully eradicated. In this group De Vere counts also the majority of royalty born in the last several hundred years, whom he regards as nothing but the degenerate remnants of a fallen race. On this subject, he writes:

“It is known that in antiquity the Nephilim, the Elven sons of the Annunagi, interbred with humans… However it is recorded that these half-breeds were destroyed… and the slate was wiped clean.

The next experiment produced a lineage of pure-bred Elven queens and kings who were to supervise a race of quarterbreeds who were originally created for manual labor. The quarterbreeds, nevertheless, were eventually to gain their freedom and elect their own chieftains. They were helped by the Elven dynasty, the people whom Christians now think of as the spawn of Satan…

These people interbred with anyone and we know them now as the biblical race of Adam whose Elven blood today is so dluted as to be infintessimal. The pure Elven Queens and Kings, however, bred with no one but themselves and so throughout the past five or six millennia, the blood was kept more or less pure in several unbroken lines of descent until as late as the 8th century A.D. From that time, however, only one bloodline descent is recorded as being pure and unbroken."

But really, in terms of which race is "fallen" because of miscegenation between humans and gods, both the descendants of Jehovah and Satan"fell", in the sense that they both watered down the royal and divine blood in their veins by mating with common humans generation after generation. However, the mythological record seems to suggest that the Adamites, or Edenites, had polluted their blood prior to the Flood, and it was the monstrous and deformed race which resulted that was wiped out in the Deluge. It was because of the ignoble nature of what their race had become that Jehovah abandoned them. Interestingly, De Vere refers to the "Nephilim" as being lead by Jehovah, not Satan.

The fall of Eden may be the real source for the Hebrew myth regarding the "Fallen Kings of Edom", the ten "Children of Before" who "ruled before there were kings in Israel", until their kingdom was destroyed by God because of their evil nature. The Kings of Edom are now used in Cabala to signify the fallen kings of the "Kingdom of Shells", the "Qipploth" or dark shadow of the Tree of Life that, in this system, exists in the underworld. And the head of these ten "demon kings" in this system is named "Moloch", thus representing Baal, or Abel. Indeed, the first "Moloch" of the Edomites is listed in the Bible as "Bela", a derivative of Baal or Abel.

But regardless of who deserves the label of the "fallen race", the fact remains that, largely because of the propaganda spread by their enemies, the descendants of Satan were characterized as evil beings, bent on leading humanity to sin and then dragging their souls down to never-ending torment in the bowels of the Earth. Cain, or "Azazel", became "Asmodeus", the King of the Demons, but still retaining the title "Rex Mundi", or "Lord of the Earth" - this time in a pejorative sense, the Earth being seen as the Devil's domain. The entire noble race was cast as wretched, hate-filled, grimacing, ugly monsters. At best, they were depicted by the establishment as charming and harmless, but entirely fictional elves and nymphs – ridiculous, supernatural, and highly improbably creations of the human imagination, like Tinkerbelle and the Tooth Fairy. But numerous traditions continue to relate that Satan and his "devils", "demons", or "Djinn" descendants were in fact the harbingers of all the good things that civilization has brought to mankind. Indeed, they are remembered as the forefathers of modern humanity itself.

Surprisingly, the word "demon" was originally never meant to be a negative term, but really meant "wise one", and indicated the race of Satan or Kronos, the benefactors of mankind. As Ignatius Donnelly explains:

"Plato says, speaking of the traditions of the Greeks, 'There is a tradition of the happy life of mankind in the days when all things were spontaneous and abundant. . . . In like manner God in his love of mankind placed over us the demons, who are a superior race, and they, with great care and pleasure to themselves and no less to us, taking care of us and giving us place and reverence and order and justice never failing, made the tribes of men happy and peaceful . . . for Cronos knew that no human nature, invested with supreme power, is able to order human affairs and not overflow with insolence and wrong.'

In other words, this tradition refers to an ancient time when the forefathers of the Greeks were governed by Chronos, of the Cronian Sea (the Atlantic), king of Atlantis, through civilized Atlantean governors, who by their wisdom preserved peace and created a golden age for all the populations under their control--they were the demons, that is, 'the knowing ones,' the civilized.

Plato puts into the mouth of Socrates these words: 'My notion would be that the sun, moon, and stars, earth, and heaven, which are still the gods of many barbarians, were the only gods known to the aboriginal Hellenes. . . . What shall follow the gods? Must not demons and heroes and men come next? . . . Consider the real meaning of the word demons. You know Hesiod uses the word. He speaks of 'a golden race of men' who came first. He says of them,

'But now that fate has closed over this race,
They are holy demons upon earth,
Beneficent averters of ills, guardians of mortal men.'

He means by the golden men not men literally made of gold, but good and noble men; he says we are of the 'age of iron.' He called them demons because they were (knowing or wise)."

This is why, as the religions of Judaism and later Christianity coalesced, “Satan” and his “fallen angels” or “demons” became associated with the spreading of “forbidden knowledge.” Thus the story of Faust developed in Europe as a cautionary tale about a man who sold his soul to the Devil in exchange for obtaining ultimate wisdom. And although originally the wisdom that Satan, Cain and Enoch were said to have given mankind included all arts and sciences, as time wore on, the “forbidden” wisdom was narrowed down to all things “occult”: divination, alchemy, astrology, sorcery, necromancy, etc. – all of which became known as the “dark arts”, the practice of which was believed to damn the practitioner’s soul to Hell. Also included among these was the perpetuation of secret doctrines and heresies regarding God and the history recounted in the Bible. These are the things that constitute the “underground stream” of Hermeticism and Gnosticism later perpetuated by groups like the Knights Templar, the Freemasons, the Rosicrucians, and the Priory of Sion. Traditionalist philosopher Julius Evola wrote, using the historian Tertullian as a reference, that:

“…the works of nature, the secrets of metals, the virtues of plants, the forces of magical conjurations, and ‘all those alien teachings that make up the science of the stars' - that is to say, the whole corpus of the ancient magico-hermetic sciences was revealed to men by the fallen angels."

In the same vein, the following quote has been attributed to an ancient Hermetic sage from Egypt who called himself "Hermes Trismegistus":

"The ancient and sacred books teach that certain angels burned with desire for women. They descended to earth and taught all the works of nature. They were the ones who created the Hermetic works, and from them proceeds the primordial tradition of this art."

The Heresies of Christ

These Hermetic and Gnostic traditions were becoming quite popular and influential throughout both the East and the Hellenistic West by the time that Jesus Christ was born. At that time many Gnostic sects held that Jehovah was in fact the "Demi-Urge", the Devil, and that Satan or Lucifer was "the light bringer", the god (or sometimes goddess) of wisdom. There is reason to believe that Jesus himself was initiated into such a sect, and later started one of his own with his disciples, which became the first and true Christian church (the one purportedly represented by the Merovingians and the Priory of Sion).

We know that the first (and perhaps only) sect which Jesus joined before starting his own was that of John the Baptist – whose cult was mystical in nature, and is thought by some historians to have been an Essene offshoot, although nobody knows for sure. However, there is a Gnostic sect called the Mandeans (still existing in Iran) who claim their teachings were given to them directly by John the Baptist. They honor John as their true prophet rather than Jesus, and consider John to have been the spiritual son and incarnation of the goddess Sophia, which means "wisdom." Interestingly, a sub-sect of the Mandeans, called the Yezidis, take Gnosticism all the way to full-fledged Satanism and worship the goat-headed "Shaitan" as the bringer of wisdom.

This brings us to the goat-headed deity of Baphomet revered by the Templars, the Freemasons, and many other Satanic or occult traditions. His name has been said to be the result of encoding the word "Sophia" or "wisdom" in the Hebrew Atbash cipher used by the Knight Templar. This link with a female goddess of wisdom may explain why this otherwise male deity is sometimes depicted as hermaphroditic. But it has also been translated by Eliphas Levi (who provided us with the depiction of Baphomet most familiar to us) as meaning "Baptism of Wisdom." And of course, it is the very un-Jewish rite of baptism that John the Baptist was most well-known for. So if the head or skull that the Templars worshipped as a representation of Baphomet was, as has been claimed, really the skull of John the Baptist, perhaps it was because he was actually a priest of, and considered an incarnation of, Baphomet. But his disciple Jesus was seen that way as well, as we shall see.

Another interpretation of Baphomet's name is that it means "Father Mithras." As discussed earlier, Mithras appears to be yet another god based on the figure of Cain or Seth. He was known for slaying the "World Bull", as Cain purportedly slew Abel or Baal. He was also known for allowing himself to be sacrificed around the time of Easter, only to be born anew, just as Cain pretended to die and be reborn as Seth. There are many other similarities as well, and many similarities also between Mithras and Jesus. The rites of Mithras appear to be the major inspiration not only for the early Christian church, but for the rites of Freemasonry as well.

The rites of Mithras were perhaps the most influential cult in the ancient world at that time. Beginning in Persia, they spread to Rome, Asia Minor, India, China and Babylon. The original Persian strain inspired the first monotheistic religion of Zoroastrianism, which mutated in Babylon and there influenced greatly the development of Judaism while the Jews were in captivity in Babylon, which is when their earliest scriptures were written. In Rome the Mithras cult mutated into that of "Sol Invictus" – "the Invincible Sun." It is this cult which the Roman Emperor Constantine truly converted to when he instituted Christianity as the official religion of Rome.[26] During that period in Rome, the Sun was often called "the eye of Mithras."

The reported life of Mithras looks like a veritable blueprint for the story of Jesus. As author Ellie Crystal reports on crystalinks.com:

> "According to Persian traditions, the god Mithras was actually incarnated into the human form of the Saviour expected by Zarathustra. Mithras was born of Anahita, an immaculate virgin mother once worshipped as a fertility goddess… Anahita was said to have conceived the Saviour from the seed of Zarathustra preserved in the waters of Lake Hamun in the Persian province of Sistan…
> …The God remained celibate throughout his life, and valued self-control, renunciation and resistance to sensuality among his worshippers.

---

[26] Called the "thirteenth apostle", some authors state that Constantine's royal lineage included the blood of Jesus himself.

> Mithras represented a system of ethics in which brotherhood was encouraged in order to unify against the forces of evil….
> …In Armenian tradition, Mithras was believed to shut himself up in a cave from which he emerged once a year, born anew."

In the end, Mithras ascended to Heaven in a "Sun chariot", but before he did so, he shared a ritualistic "Last Supper" with his disciples in which bread and wine was served. This ritual became part of the practices of the cult of Mithras, in which the participants believe that they were consuming the blood and body of their deity – just as in Christianity! It is from the rites of Mithras that baptism comes as well, in which it was used to "wash away the sins" of the new convert. The priests of Mithras also wore fish-like miters just like Catholic bishops (a tradition that extends from the Syrian rites of Dagon as well), and it is likely that the word "miter" comes from "Mithras." Mithraic priests were called "Father", wore special rings, and carried a shepherds staff as well, just like Catholic bishops. They celebrated Mithras' birthday on December 25 (around the Winter Solstice, Saturnalia, and St. Dagobert's Day), and held services to the god every Sunday.

Even more amazing is that the ultimate purpose of Mithras' existence was similar to that which the Church has ascribed to Christ. It was believed that when Mithras died in sacrifice, he obtained freedom for his followers from the wages of their sins. And when he rose again, he obtained for them eternal life in Paradise. The curator of a website called “Borndigital” (http://www.borndigital.com/tarsus.htm), comments further:

> “It was believed that the partaking of the sacrament (of communion) ensured eternal life, the immediate passing, after death, to the bosom of Mithras, there to tarry in bliss until the judgment day. On the judgment day the Mithraic keys of heaven would unlock the gates of Paradise for the reception of the faithful; whereupon all the unbaptized of the living and the dead would be annihilated upon the return of Mithras to earth. It was taught that, when a man died, he went before Mithras for judgment, and that at the end of the world Mithras would summon all the dead from their graves to face the last judgment. The wicked would be destroyed by fire, and the righteous would reign with Mithras forever.”

Although a good deal of this imagery was probably added on to the cult of Christ by the Roman Catholic Church in an attempt to make their new religion palatable to the pagan populace of the Roman Empire, it cannot be doubted that much of it was quite consciously taken on by Jesus himself, and that the import of what he was trying to do was recognized at the time. The Zoroastrians even saw in Jesus a prophesized incarnation of Mithras, which is why magi were sent at his birth. Borndigital.com continues:

"Zarathustra had predicted a Messiah, and Jesus' birth was thought perhaps to be his arrival. In the Persian 'Avesta' (their religious writings), this Messiah will appear at the end of time to bring the triumph of good over evil. They call him the 'Saushyant', and according to the Bundahishn he will slay a magnificent bull, and make a potion of immortality for mankind from its fat, mixed with Hamoa juice."

As stated, many elements of Mithraic ritual made their way into Freemasonry. Mithraism was a highly secret mystery cult, in which only initiates were allowed to know the wisdom of Mithras, revealed to them in several stages, or degrees. In one degree (quoting Ellie Crystal again), "The neophyte wears a veil and carries a lamp in his hand. He is unable to see the 'light of truth' until the 'veil of reality' is lifted." In another degree "the neophyte had to kneel (submission to religious authority, naked (casting off old life), blindfolded with hands tied. He was then offered a crown on the point of a sword. Once crowned, his binds were cut with a single stroke of the sword and blindfold removed… He would then remove the crown from his head and placing it on his shoulder, saying: 'Mithra is my only crown.'"[27] In another rite, the initiate was given honey to anoint his hands and tongue. Honey and bees later became important symbolism to the Freemasons, and to the Merovingians.[28] All of these elements became part of Masonic rites.

Another element of Masonic ritual that originated with Mithraism was the secret handshake, and in fact, the handshake itself, which initially was used in their rites to symbolize the covenant that was made between the initiate and Mithras, as well as the friendship that existed between them. (In China, Mithras was actually called "the Friend.") The handshake was a symbol of one of the most essential concepts of Mithras. He was the god of contracts. In fact, Mithras' name is said to have come from the Persian word for "contract." As crystalinks.com explains:

"In The Avesta, the holy book of the religion of Zarathustra, Ahura-Mazda was said to have created Mithras in order to guarantee the authority of contracts and the keeping of promises… The divine duty of Mithras was to ensure general prosperity through good contractual relations between men. It was believed that misfortune would befall the entire land if a contract was ever broken."

---

[27] The same author states elsewhere that "Mithras was 'The Great King' highly revered by the nobility and monarchs, who looked upon him as their special protector. A great number of the nobility took theophorous (god-bearing) names compounded with Mithras."

[28] The highest degree of the Mithraic rites was dedicated to Saturn.

Obviously, this is significant because contracts, particularly oaths of secrecy and fidelity, have a particular importance in Freemasonry.

It was because of his association with contracts that Mithras came to be thought of as a wise judge, and as mankind's judge in the afterlife. He took on the title "the Mediator", and was thought to literally mediate between the Zoroastrian deities of Ahura-Mazda[29] and Ahriman (light and darkness, or Satan and Jehovah) as they struggled to influence the world and to defeat one another. In this sense Mithras is equal to Baphomet, or the Gnostic deity Abraxas, both of which were thought to be embodiments of the unity of opposites, including good and evil, as well as male and female.

There is evidence that Jesus saw himself as an incarnation of Mithras, and wished to do a little contract negotiation of his own between Jehovah, Satan, and humanity. As a royal scion of David, and rightful King of the Jews, he knew that he was a descendant of both Jehovah and Satan quite literally. But if he were to truly represent the Jewish people, he would have to uphold the many contracts that those people had made with Jehovah over the generations, the breaking of which could lead to curses afflicting multiple generations. Such contracts had been made between Abraham and "God" on behalf of the Hebrews, and then later between Moses and Jehovah. Numerous clauses had been added on to these contracts over the centuries also. The Bible makes it quite clear that Jehovah took these contracts very seriously, and the Jews and Israelites were very aware of this. The Jewish and Israelite people were essentially in bondage to Jehovah, crippled by their obligations to him, and yet he had delivered little in the way of property or power to these people beyond their supposedly "special" relationship with him, and their relatively small "land flowing with milk and honey": the Holy Land. While this land was apparently nothing to sneeze at, coveted by all surrounding nations as well, the Israelites and Jews could never hold onto it for very long without being captured and enslaved by their many enemies – curses purportedly placed on them by Jehovah for not observing their contract with him strictly enough.

[29] Ahura Mazda, the good god, would be, in a Gnostic world view, equivalent to Satan or Lucifer, the light bringer. This deity's name is the source of the name "Ormuzd", or "Ormus", whose name combines words meaning both "light" and "serpent." "Ormus" is, of course, the nickname taken on by the Priory of Sion after the Cutting of the Elm.

Yet the kings of Judah and Israel were not only anointed by, contracted by, and ultimately in some ways genetically related to Jehovah. They were also ultimately descended from Seth, or Cain, and thus Satan. Moreover, it does seem when one examines the Old Testament that Satan and Cain had their own influence on the kings of Judah and Israel, and may have had their own contracts with them. Officially, the Jewish kings were anointed by Jehovah, but secretly, many of them were “Dragon kings” allied with Satan. As a scion of this lineage, and an initiate into the Satanic mystery traditions that had been passed down from his forefathers, Jesus was no doubt aware of this situation. And I believe that he wished to break the contracts that the Jews and Israelites had with Jehovah, and release them from spiritual bondage.

The first part of his plan involved converting the consciences of the people. Jesus essentially went about preaching that people should ignore the letter of Jehovah’s law and concentrate instead on the spirit of goodness and virtue. These are values that are unique neither to Judaism or Christianity, but in fact, widespread and ancient, originating with the laws observed by the gods in their antediluvian civilization, and passed down to post-diluvian human society through Cain. Jesus encouraged them to worship the true God who created the universe, and whose essence can be found in all things, rather than remaining enslaved to a tribal demiurge that had essentially attached itself to the bloodlines of their forefathers for personal gain. He preached that they should love one another, including uncircumcised gentiles, rather than declaring that they should hate anyone outside of their own limited gene pool, or anyone who had not sealed a covenant with Jehovah by mutilating his penis. Jesus, and his mentor, John, baptized men in the name of “the Father” (Mithras), and washed away their sins, i.e., the guilt that they had carried all their lives because of their covenant with Jehovah. And for his closest disciples, Jesus allowed them to be initiated into the Mithraic mysteries. The wedding at Cana, the death and rebirth ritual played with Lazarus, the Last Supper, and finally the death and resurrection ritual enacted by Jesus himself, were all part of the Mithraic rites which he and his disciples were enacting. All of this worked to turn the hearts and minds of his followers away from Jehovah.

Jesus’ wedding to Mary Magdalene was also part of the plot. Many authors have asserted that Magdalene was a member of the Israelite tribe of Benjamin. And although they were a royal tribe, having provided Israel’s first king, Saul, they were also an accursed tribe. The Book of Judges tells the story of the “outrage at Gibeah”, in which Baal-worshiping Benjamites raped the wife of a Levite, instigating a war against the Benjamites by the eleven other tribes of Israel which decimated them, reducing the number of male Benjamites left to less than 300. After the war, the other tribes swore before Jehovah that they would not give their daughters to marry Benjamite men, and thus the remaining males were forced to marry women outside of Israel – outside of the covenant with Jehovah. The entire race of the Benjamites became associated with the worship of strange gods, the marrying of foreign women, and the curses of Jehovah. As a descendant of Benjamin (and possibly a Benjamite princess), Mary Magdalene embodied this symbolism by default, even though there was no injunction against marrying Benjamite women per se, but only the men. However, if at any point in Mary Magdalene's genealogy there was a union between a Benjamite man and a woman from one of the other tribes of Israel, and if this union had occurred after the "outrage at Gibeah" occurred, then her bloodline would definitely be cursed, as would anyone who married her, or any children born of her.

But there may have been something else about Mary that earned her a reputation as a "whore", and made her unfit for marriage in the eyes of the rabbis. There is a belief among Catholics that she was an "adulteress" - specifically that she was the same adulteress whom Jesus saved from public stoning and absolved of her sins. However, "adulteress", like "whore", is a versatile word, and would have applied to a woman who had been divorced as well. In the book The Legend of Thomas Didymus, James Freeman Clarke suggests that Magdalene had once been one of King Herod's wives, but had been divorced by him. In his version of the story, Magdalene was a high noble woman, and that was why Herod married her. But when he tired of her, he turned her out of his house, and married Herodias, the wife of his brother, making her his wife instead. According to James Freeman Clarke, it was on the grounds of Herod's previous marriage to Magdalene that John the Baptist objected to his new marriage to Herodias, and thus ended up getting beheaded. If Magdalene had been married previously, this alone would have made her a "forbidden woman", although she was probably the perfect candidate in many other ways to be Jesus' bride priestess. Jesus may have decided to go through with the marriage despite this, so as to intentionally commit a "sex crime" for ritual purposes - a sex crime that spawned a royal race, as that of Satan had done.

However, if this were true, John the Baptist would have objected to the marriage, as he would have believed that the marriage would bring a curse upon Jesus' royal line of descendants. (This may explain why Jesus' relationship with John turned chilly towards the end, as the Gospels seem to indicate.) So too would most other priests and rabbis, which may be one of the reasons why this community disdained Jesus so much. Even some of Jesus' own disciples may have felt that he was bringing shame to their movement by marrying Magdalene. Thus they may have chosen not to acknowledge Jesus' marriage or progeny, and to malign the memory of the Magdalene in their writings. The Roman Church followed suit later on for other reasons.

But at the same time, there were undoubtedly many advantages of Jesus and Magdalene getting together. As many authors have suggested, Mary might have been the chief royal heir of her tribe, a descendant of the first King of Israel, Saul. And although Saul's line was usurped by that of David after his death, "the Lord" did make promises to Saul that, in Jesus' time, had yet to be fulfilled - the promise that his seed would also provide a second king to Israel - the last king! For Jesus, connecting himself to the line of Saul may have been integral to meeting the expectations of the prophesized Messiah.

Occult traditions hold that Jesus and Mary Magdalene may have been the leaders of a royal sex magic cult, with Magdalene performing the role of a "temple priestess" or "sacred prostitute." Obviously, if this were true, then the belief system that Jesus represented was well outside of mainstream Judaism. Indeed, he and Magdalene were most likely followers of strange Satanic gods, the worship of whom involved sexual magic. The wedding at Cana may have been at once both a proper marriage ceremony and a sex magic ritual, the purpose of which was to (a) unite the King of the Jews with his royal dynastic bride; (b) anoint him ritually as the king, and; (c) to ritually conceive a royal heir. Thus, the metaphor of Jesus turning water into wine may have symbolized using sex magic to “graft the vines” of two powerful royal bloodlines. Mary Magdalene’s status as a Benjamite princess may have made her especially qualified to act as a sacred prostitute, as the Benjamites were associated specifically with the performance of rituals for strange gods. In Hebrew culture, such practices were equated with harlotry, and the women involved in these practices were thought of as being responsible for corrupting their husbands. This is yet another reason why Magdalene may have been seen as a “whore.” Such women were viewed as “foreigners”, i.e., outside of the covenant with Jehovah, and so were their children. When Israelite men married such women, it was believed that they brought onto the bloodline of their descendants the generational curses of strange gods.

This may impart yet another purpose to the marriage between Jesus and Mary Magdalene. Jesus was the qualified king of the Jews, and his son would have been the qualified king of all Israelites. But perhaps he aspired to something more than that. Perhaps he wished for his descendants to be the kings of foreign lands as well. But in order to set himself up to be king of the Jews, while at the same time setting his son up for something larger, he may have needed to simultaneously fulfill Jehovah’s messianic promises, and at the same time, break his family’s covenant with Jehovah. The "new covenant" had to be created - a covenant which those of gentile races could join into. He needed to break the exclusive hold that Jehovah had on his bloodline, and open it up to the blessings of other gods – gods who, as we now know, were probably his ancestors. Taking Mary Magdalene to wife and breeding the royal heir with her may have fulfilled this purpose.

If Mary Magdalene was indeed Jesus' wife, and indeed was the mother to his messianic heir, then the blessings and curses, the rights and inheritances that she carried in her blood were just as important as his in defining the characteristics of the Merovingian bloodline of France that descended from them. This would have especially been the case if she was a Benjamite, from a tribe practicing matrilineal inheritance. This would explain why she was so revered by the mystery cults of Southern France. But it also explains why they represented her in the form of the Black Madonna. For in the eyes of the Jewish priests of Christ's time, and in the eyes of the later Christian church. the Magdalene's marriage to Jesus would have been seen as bringing a curse upon the bloodline that descended from them. This is one of the reasons that the Church insisted that the bloodline's very existence be kept secret. I have written a book on this subject entitled The Choice Vine: Mary Magdalene, the Sacred Whore, and the Benjamite Inheritance, which is due out in late 2004.

The other act which Jesus committed in order to free his people from their obligations to Jehovah was, of course, his final known act – his supposed death on the cross. In the Gospels, Christ lays out in plain language the purpose of his death. He knew that the people of Israel were heavily laden and oppressed by numerous curses that had been laid on them by Jehovah, both as individuals and as a people, because of "sins" that they or their ancestors had committed against Jehovah. Jesus believed that he could somehow "take on their sins", as the scapegoat did at Yom Kippur, and that by being sacrificed on that day, he could take on their punishment himself, instantaneously breaking all of Jehovah's curses on them.[30] But more than that, he believed that this would atone not only for sins committed up until that point, but for any sins committed afterwards as well. Thus, the stranglehold that Jehovah had on these people would be broken. Free from the fear of curses as punishment (including the big curse, eternal damnation in Hell), the Israelites were free to act on their own consciences, instead of according to the strict, nonsensical, and seemingly arbitrary laws of Jehovah. The "New Covenant" which Christians speak of regarding Christ was formed, this time not between Jehovah and the Jews, but between Christ and all mankind, and those who served God were no longer obliged to observe the same restrictions on diet, marriage, etc., as the Jews had done. Now they merely had to follow the simple and enlightened rules of conscience outlined by Jesus in his sermons, which were timeless and universal.

[30] Galatians 3:13 states: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree."

But as a royal scion of the House of David, perhaps aspiring to an even greater throne for his son, would Jesus have sacrificed himself at age thirty-three, even for such a lofty goal? Perhaps not, which is why I am inclined to believe the theory briefly explored in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, which is an old and persistent heresy, stating that Jesus had a substitute die in his place. That way, the same sacrificial purpose of breaking the Jehovah covenant was fulfilled, and Jesus could live on to organize his church (while hiding in exile, of course), and to pass on his royal lineage.

Some of the earliest Christian scriptures have posited that this was the case. The idea is backed up by Jewish and Islamic sources as well. Moreover, the name of the unfortunate victim has been put forth also, and the answer is almost obvious: Judas Iscariot. Of course, if Jesus were to choose one of his disciples to die in his place, he would probably choose the one whom he knew was about to betray him.

The Gospel of Barnabas tells us that when the moment came for Jesus to be arrested, “God” changed the face of Judas into a likeness of Jesus. Thus, the Roman soldiers were tricked into arresting Judas in Christ’s stead.

But there was another disciple of Christ, also names Judas, who is said in apocryphal legend to have been Jesus' actual twin. That apostle is Judas Didymus Thomas, also known as "Doubting Thomas" and "Thomas the Twin." Although biblical scholars, and even the authors of the gospels themselves, have gone to great lengths to stress that Iscariot and Thomas were separate people, there is a great deal of subtle and circumstantial evidence to suggest that they were actually the same figure.

If Christ's own twin brother was sent to die in his place, the symbolic significance of the crucifixion can be seen in an entirely different light. The death of one twin brother in place of another, or the murder of one twin by another, is not an uncommon mythical archetype. The Christian myth would then resemble, even closer than it already does, the myths of Rome, Greece, and Babylon. And the crucifixion, then, can also be seen as a reflection of the Jewish scapegoat ritual of Yom Kippur - in which one goat is sent off into exile to carry the curses of sin away from people, while the other one is sacrificed to atone for sins.

Furthermore, such a hypothesis explains the otherwise inexplicable smear campaigns that were waged via the scriptures against the figures of Judas Thomas and Judas Iscariot - one identified as a "faithless doubter", the other a "betrayer." Also, if Thomas did indeed die at the crucifixion, one cannot ignore the possibility that the recorded sightings of Thomas in India and elsewhere after the crucifixion were in fact sightings of Jesus impersonating his brother. It is possible, then, that the scriptures attributed to Thomas, including The Acts of Thomas and The Gospel of Thomas, are instead the only Christian scriptures actually written by Jesus himself.

If such a tradition did exist within the Grail family, it might explain why the Knights Templar purportedly conducted rituals in which they spat upon or urinated on the Christian cross. If they believed this idea, then they undoubtedly rejected the symbol of the cross as a symbol of the lies that had been told about Jesus' death.

With this in mind, new light can be shed on a mysterious bas relief that can be found at the back of the Church of Mary Magdalene at Rennes-le-Chateau, France. It depicts Jesus making his "Sermon on the Mount", as a quote beneath the relief proves. But strangely, at the bottom of the hill he stands on is a little money bag, out of which an object, long presumed to be gold, protrudes. Nobody has ever satisfactorily explained the presence of this money bag on this bas relief. Most of those who have commented on it have claimed it to be a clue left by the church's abbot, Berenger Sauniere, regarding a buried treasure he supposedly found on the church grounds. But it would seem now that this must certainly be Judas' purse. He is always depicted with a moneybag such as this, because he was the treasurer of the twelve apostles, and also because the bag symbolizes the thirty pieces of silver he received from the Sanhedrin in exchange for betraying Jesus. And why is it placed in such a peculiar spot? Judas himself is not even depicted in the relief. But the church confessional is positioned directly under this mural, and a wooden crucifix is set on top, so that, when viewed from a few feet away, the crucifix and the money bag appear to stand right next to one another. Was Sauniere hinting at his belief that it was Judas, not Christ, who hung on the cross? If so, why is the purse shown at the bottom of a hill covered with flowers?

A prevailing theory about the treasure Berenger Sauniere supposedly found is that is somehow constituted "incontrovertible proof" that Christ did not die on the cross, and many think that this proof consists of Christ's own body entombed not in Jerusalem, but in Southern France. Yet if Judas had died in Jerusalem in the place of Jesus, where was he buried? The most obvious answer is what Acts and The Gospel of Matthew seem to be hinting at: the potter's field, the "field of blood." After all, it is specifically stated in Matthew that this field was used for the "burial of strangers." In other words, it is a field of unmarked graves. If the secret of the crucifixion of Judas were to be kept, Judas' grave would have to go unmarked. Perhaps the hill covered with flowers in Sauniere's bas relief represents Judas' grave. If so, then by showing Jesus preaching atop this hill, he is showing that Christ's ministry is built upon the sacrifice of Judas. By placing this directly above the confessional, Sauniere was confessing his knowledge of this secret.

Another clue can be found in one of the Stations of the Cross at the church, in which Christ is shown being carried into the tomb at nighttime, contrary to scripture. According to Holy Blood, Holy Grail, this station may depict Christ's still-living body being removed from the tomb by his fellow conspirators. But if my theory is correct, then it was Judas' body, not Jesus', which was stolen away from the tomb by Christ's closest disciples. This is the scene depicted in this Station.

In addition to hinting at his belief in the heresy of Judas' crucifixion, Sauniere also demonstrated his belief in twin Christs. At the front of the church, on either side of the altar, are statues of Mary and Joseph, each holding an identical Christ child, although one appears to have slightly darker hair than the other. A recurring theme in the church involves the multiple depiction of two twin angels, identical in look to the aforementioned twin Christ children, both emerging out of a seashell. And one of Sauniere's unsolved clues that he embedded in his redesign of the church grounds involves the repeated use of the number 22. Could this be indicating "two-two", "double-double", or "twin-twin." This would have to be a reference to Judas Thomas Didymus whose name "Thomas" means "twin" in Hebrew", while "Didymus" means "twin" in Greek.

If Sauniere believed this proposed idea that Judas Iscariot was Christ's twin, and that Christ had tricked his rival brother into dying on the cross in his place, it would have shattered his Christian faith, but it could have also turned him in the direction of Gnostic Christianity and other, even more damnable forms of occultism. Such beliefs would have been regarded by his clerical peers as the highest heresy. These topics are the subject of yet another forthcoming book by me called The Judas Goat, also scheduled for release in late 2004.

So in this Gnostic interpretation of the mission of Christ, he saw himself as an incarnation of Cain (Mithras, Seth, etc.), who allowed himself to be symbolically sacrificed in order to free his people from bondage to Jehovah. It is interesting, then, that a common alchemical icon used since the Middle Ages has been a Christian cross with a serpent upon it, identifying Jesus with Satan! This identification is further supported by the concept embraced by Christian cabalists that the cross of Christ is symbolically connected to the Tree of Life or Tree of Knowledge in the Garden of Eden, leading one to conclude that the serpent who lived in the Tree is then the symbolic equivalent of Christ on the cross.

The Satanic, Luciferian, and Baphometic nature of Christ, and of the early Christian church, is a notion supported in Nicholas de Vere's The Dragon Legacy. For instance, he writes that, "In Revelation 22:6, Jesus…

proclaims himself the bright and Morning Star… a priest-king of Lucifer...” De Vere even tells us Christ’s teachings inspired the witches of medieval Europe:

> “Witchcraft in Europe and Britain was run by the Templars and Cathars, and provided the groundswell of support at the grassroots level for the Fairy… Grail… Dragon families and the doctrines which made them distinct. Witchcraft is original Christianity, practicing Christian Gnostic Dualism and providing, in their tens of thousands, an army of support for the scions of Christ…”

According to De Vere, real witchcraft is “Baphometic.” De Vere claims that modern Wicca, which he considers illegitimate, has its origins in the “Baphometic Orders” of Britain, to which, he claimed, British nobles of the Dragon blood belonged to up until the twentieth century, and perhaps still do. They “trace their lineage back through the Templars to Jesus’ original teachings and the culture of the Druids.” In these witchcraft cults, “The central figure was the Baphomet, and the highest sacrament of the ‘Sabbat’ was the Black Mass.” De Vere continues:

"… Royal Witchcraft, or Witchcraft proper, from the early Dark Ages onwards owes as much to its clearly Christian as it does to its direct Druidic, origins. Both, in their original form, and in the publicly disseminated opinion of the Catholic popes, were and are Satanic. Jesus' heredity, and the descent of the Druidic dynasties both derived from an identical Dragon nascence that the Roman Catholics decided was devilish, because the descent of both bloodlines was from the Sumerian Enki who was the Akkadian Samael; the Roman Lucifer and thus the Catholic Satan.

In Jesus' case the Roman church, as do all outsiders who know they are onto a good thing, sanitized his rituals and concealed his descent. All those who continued to follow Jesus' original teachings – like the witches – they burned as 'heretics'… To call a witch a heretic meant that the witch was a heterodox Christian… Witches were 'original Christians' whose knowledge of the true, Druidic nature of Jesus' liberating Christianity had to be quashed at any cost if the Church were to achieve the political and pecuniary supremacy they desired by replacing it with their own enslaving dogma."

In De Vere's worldview, the Black Mass is:

"…the original mass of Jesus which the Catholics later stole and sanitized for public consumption…. The Black Mass had its roots in the ancient alchemical lore of Solomon and was simply a memento of teachings long past and an aide memoire for future generations, a mnemonic which was intended to remind those to come from whence the power and the wisdom derives…

…The Sabbatical Goat of the Black Mass was Chem-Zoroaster [another name for Baphomet], one of the early ancestors of the Dragon families. His symbolic presence at the Mass reminds one that Royal Witchcraft was strictly a family affair.

Witches actually called their 'god' the Antecessor, meaning 'the Ancestor.' This illustrated to later generations of readers that 'Satan', also called by the Witches 'Christ, son Dei', or Jesus Christ, Son of God', was in fact a flesh and blood being…

In the witches of the Royal covens honored Jesus as an ancestor-god, than they must have been Merovingian by descent and thus custodians of the Sang Royale."

On the subject of Baphomet specifically, De Vere writes that:

"Baphomet is a Nephilim… Baphomet is a type of Chem-Zoroaster who is the Quinotaur associated with Meroveus. Baphomet and the Mendes pentagram are genealogical badges."

The Merovingian Mythos

Like Baphomet, the Quinotaur represents the union of opposites. His name includes both the name of Cain ("Quin") and the name of Abel or Baal (the bull, "taurus", or "taur"), perhaps indicating a line of descent stemming from both figures. His aquatic qualities represent not only the sea associations of Satan and Cain, and the entire family of sea-gods and sea-kings from which the Merovingians ultimately descended, but also the fish associations of their more recent and illustrious ancestor, Jesus. Thus the Merovingian blood was connected not only to a figure representing archetypal evil (Satan), but also a figure representing archetypal good (Jesus). This is reflected in the dualistic symbol of the Cross of Lorraine, used by Merovingian descendants of the royal house of Lorraine, and by the Knights Templar. As discussed previously, it is a symbol that can be found in ancient Sumeria symbolizing the word "Kad" or "Gad", meaning

"Lord of the Earth." As a famous poem by French poet Charles Peguy declares:

"The arms of Jesus are the Cross of Lorraine,
Both the blood in the artery and the blood in the vein,
Both the source of grace and the clear fountaine;

The arms of Satan are the Cross of Lorraine,
And the same artery and the same vein,
And the same blood and the troubled fountaine."

The French word "Lorraine" comes from the German word 'Lothringen", which is itself a corruption of "Lohengrin", the name of the "Swan King" who makes an appearance in the Grail legends of France, England, and Germany. His identifying characteristics were that he traveled the world in a magic "swan boat", with a Cross of Lorraine emblazoned upon his shield. Wherever he would land, he would stay for as long as possible, ruling over the local inhabitants, bringing peace and prosperity to the kingdom. But all who knew him were forbidden to ask about his place of origin or family line of descent. When this happened, he would immediately depart in his Swan Boat, never to return again.

Obviously, there was something in his lineage, something perhaps divine or Satanic, which he was forbidden to discuss with those outside of the family.

Some similar mythical elements appear in the story of Lohengrin's descendant, Melusine. This woman was purportedly the daughter of Godfroi de Bouillon, who listed Lohengrin in his genealogy, and who was the man responsible for making the Cross of Lorraine an official insignia for the Knights Templar, which he was one of the founders of. Godfroi de Bouillon was also the "Defender of the Holy Sepulcher" of Jerusalem, and was succeeded by his brother Baldwin, who took on the title "King of Jerusalem." This title was then passed onto Fulk the Black from the French Angevin dynasty[31] (Merovingian descendants), who married Godfroi's daughter, Melusine.

As the story goes, Melusine insisted that Fulk should allow her to sleep alone one night a week, in which she was not to be disturbed. However, curiosity got the better of Fulk, and he burst in on her one of these nights, only to discover that her bottom half had transformed into the tail of a serpent. Upon realizing that she had been discovered, she slithered off, never to be seen again. But she remains in the genealogies of many prominent noble families in Europe, and her son Geoffrey d'Anjou became the first Plantagenet king of England. Geoffrey, and indeed all of the Plantagenet kings, were known for their hot temper, and thus it was said of Geoffrey that "From the Devil he has come, and to the Devil he'll return."[32]

[31] In some versions of the Grail romance, Parcival specifically proclaims that he is of Angevin descent.

The Satanic imagery associated with the Angevins and Plantagenets is just a continuation of the Satanic imagery associated with the Merovingians, which, according to this theory, is a tradition that they inherited from their ancestor, Satan himself, through their descent from Jesus Christ, as well as other collateral lines of Satanic descent. Perhaps this explains why the capitol of the Merovingian empire was once called "Satanicum", and why, even though the town's name has now been changed to "Stenay", their coat of arms still bears this image of a horned devil. Perhaps this also explains the Satanic imagery found at Rennes-le-Chateau, including the statue of Asmodeus in the church. There are also nearby landmarks called "the Devil's Armchair" and "the Devil's Fingerprint", and hundreds of years worth of local legends pertaining to the Devil.

So in the course of my research, I have confirmed the true origin of the "divine" and "infernal" nature attributed to the Merovingian bloodline. This was why the Merovingians were considered kings by right of their blood, and not by coronation of the Pope. This is why they were thought to have magical powers. This is why they were said to have been spawned by a semi-divine aquatic creature called the "Quinotaur." This is why Charles Peguy wrote that they carried the blood of both Christ and Satan. This also explains why the Priory of Sion, which purports to be continuing the true and original traditions of Christ, focuses so heavily on things seemingly occult and Hermetic, as Berenger Sauniere and his associates did also. And this would certainly explain why, if Sauniere had stumbled upon this secret, it would have changed his understanding of Christ, Jehovah, and "God" forever.

[32] I have already noted the similarity between an alternate spelling of Enoch's name "Anag", or "Ang", and "Angevin", which could then mean "Vine of Enoch."

It does not seem too far-fetched to believe that one of the secrets which Sauniere was initiated into when he joined Emile Hoffet, Abbe Boudet, and Emma Calve's occult group was about the true ancestry of Christ stemming from Cain and Satan. Perhaps, upon learning of the "true Christian", Satanic traditions, he decided to use his parish to set up a "true Christian" Satanic church, perhaps one practicing the old Black Mass of which Nicholas de Vere wrote. We know that Sauniere's parishioners were all royals and nobles, mostly from Merovingian-related bloodlines, and that the peasants in the area went to another church altogether. And if he were true to the traditions of the ancient world, he would have been charging his parishioners a tithe to participate in each mass, as well as any other priestly service he performed. This tithe would not be optional, as it is in Catholic Christian rites, and according to the traditions of the ancient world (including old Judaic traditions), the priest was to use these funds for his own livelihood and enrichment, as well as church business. There was no separation of the two in this more traditional approach. Given the stature of Sauniere's parishioners as noblemen, these tithes were no doubt of significant size. This explains his sudden wealth, and also explains why the church later suspended him as punishment for "selling indulgences." When Sauniere was banned from practicing in his church, he and his parishioners simply took their rituals to another building on the property.

Evidence that this was the source of his wealth can be found in certain letters he sent and received, quoted in The Templar Legacy, by Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince. These letters also indicate that these were not part of a normal tithe to the Catholic church. When the Bishop of Carcassonne demanded to know the source of Sauniere's income, he wrote in reply:

"I am not obliged… to divulge the names of my donors… To bring them into the open without permission would run the risk of bringing discord to certain families or households… the members of whom gave without their husbands', childrens' or heirs' knowledge."

And in a letter he received from a friend and fellow priest, it said:

"You have had the money. It is not for anybody to penetrate the secret that you keep. If someone has given you the money under natural secrecy, you are obliged to keep it, and nothing can release you from this secrecy…"

If Sauniere set up a Satanic church practicing the Black Mass, and believed that Jesus was a descendant and avatar of Satan, then it is no wonder why his deathbed confession warranted him refusal of Final Unction.

So now we know the significance of the Grail as the "Sangreal", or "royal blood" of Christ, the Merovingians, and their antediluvian, Satanic ancestors. But what of the notion that the "Grail" is in fact a stone – specifically a "stone of light" that fell to Earth from Lucifer's crown as he was tossed out of Heaven? And what of the notion that it was a sacred cup or vessel of some sort? The Grail cannot simply be a bloodline. It cannot even be reduced to a symbol of the secret doctrine of Satan, although it is that as well. It has to be associated with some physical object. And the particular significance of Rennes-le-Chateau has not been explained yet.

This I will do, but first, we must take a look at the concept of the Grail as "the Hidden Stone."

Chapter Six: The Hidden Stone

"Jesus said, 'Show me the stone that the builders rejected: that is the keystone.'"

- The Gospel of Thomas

V.I.T.R.I.O.L

We have talked previously about the symbol of the Grail as the "Lapsit Exillis": the "stone that fell from Heaven", knocked out Lucifer's crown during the battle with Jehovah. The stone seems to represent something that was passed down from the gods to Man, and preserved from the waters of the Flood. There is even a cathedral in Geneva, Switzerland that purports to house the plate and cup used by Jesus at the Last Supper, which was supposedly carved from the stone from Lucifer's crown. These items were discovered in a chamber underneath the Cathedral, hidden by a mosaic depicting the symbol of the Black Sun. The legend connected to these items, and the stone they came from, relate that that the stone bounced off of Cain's head as it fell to Earth, leaving a scar on his forehead in the shape of a red serpent: the Mark of Cain, supposedly. Other Jewish legends relate that the “mark” was really a horn, bringing to mind the horned crowns that were worn by the ancient god-kings. Thus we may surmise that the story of the stone fallen from Heaven represents the descent of kingship from Heaven to Earth, from god to man, from Satan to Cain, and from the antediluvian world to the post-diluvian world. This is what the Grail as stone represents.

Another permutation of this idea is the image of Lucifer as a star fallen from Heaven, the “Morning Star”, or so he is called. Freemasons represent this in their symbol of the “Blazing Star” that shoots from Heaven. Even today, shooting stars are considered lucky, a fond remembrance of their association with Satan and Cain, the benefactors of mankind.

The story of the Emerald Tablet of Hermes appears to be yet another incarnation of the Grail as stone. Hermes, as we know, was the Greek trickster god credited with inventing writing, mathematics, and alchemy – the equivalent of the Egyptian Thoth. He is said to have inscribed the secrets of alchemy upon an Emerald Tablet, which was then passed down to select mortal initiates. Many authors have equated this story with an apocryphal tale about the biblical prophet Enoch, who is said to have copied down the esoteric secrets of the Watchers from the “Tablet of Heaven” onto a sacred stone tablet given to him by the Watchers.

Therefore, just like the jewel from Lucifer's crown, Enoch's tablet was a "stone from Heaven." This makes perfect sense, seeing that Lucifer's stone is believed to have fallen from his crown during the war with Jehovah, which, according to my thesis, Enoch was a participant in and witness to. Enoch's tablet is said to have been carried on board the Ark during the Flood, and according to my theory, Enoch is the same as Noah. Therefore it was Enoch who created the "Tablet" out of the "Stone" that his father Cain inherited from his father, Satan. He then built the Ark to bring it safely through the Flood. The Legends of the Jews tells us that the Tablet was actually a "Holy Book" from Heaven, given to Adam by the angel Raziel. This was passed on generationally to Noah, who used the wisdom he acquired from it to build the Ark.

In the post-diluvian world, the wisdom inscribed on this tablet was, say the ancients, essential for the rebuilding of human civilization, and for the perpetuation of the ancient occult mysteries. One such "mystery" which Enoch's tablet undoubtedly contained the keys to is the science of alchemy. It is interesting to note that in The Book of Enoch, it says that the Watchers gave Enoch some sort of food or drink which caused him to be able to live forever[33], just like the alchemical "Elixir of Life", made from the Philosopher's Stone.

Amazingly, the alchemical Philosopher's Stone is also called the "Lapsit Exillis", as well as, sometimes, "the Hidden Stone." This last term refers to the notion that the Philosopher's Stone is hidden underground, literally in "the center of the Earth." This is the meaning behind the alchemical motto "V.I.T.R.I.O.L.", an acronym for Latin words that translate to: "Visit the Interior Parts of the Earth; by Rectification Thou Shalt Find the Hidden Stone." Rectification is the process of dissolving the "Prima Materia", supposedly the original matter from which all other forms were made, and extracting the Philosopher's Stone from it. The Stone represents the divine spark that brings life to material existence, and is thought to be "hidden" within matter (thus, metaphorically, "in the center of the Earth.") The Prima Materia is signified in alchemy either as a skull and crossbones (the "Death's head"), or as a "Black Sun", which after rectification becomes white (the same metaphor as turning lead into gold.)[34]

[33] The Sumerian Flood hero Upnapishtim, who was the pilot of the Ark in their version of the story, was also given the "Bread of Immortality" by the gods, further evidence of the identity of Noah and Enoch.

[34] In more than one tradition, the stone that fell from Heaven was originally a white stone, but became corrupted and turned black at the moment that Abel's blood hit the ground after being slain by Cain. Such a story surrounds the Muslim Kaaba stone, for instance.

This is very interesting, for it links up with the “Hollow Earth” theory that has been proposed by numerous people throughout the last few hundred years (and which is itself based on ancient legends.) Generally speaking, this is the belief that the Earth’s crust is actually a great deal thinner than modern scientists claim, beyond which exists not a mantle or a core, but a vast hollow space within which civilizations unknown to history have built great cities, foremost of which is supposedly called “Agartha.” These stories are based upon mystical Tibetan traditions which speak of such a subterranean city. And within the center of Agartha, at the very center of the Earth, supposedly resides the Black Sun, a ball of energy which allegedly radiates artificial light to illuminate the inner world. This light is called “the Green Ray”, linking it symbolically with the Emerald Tablet.

An interesting quote from the magazine Vaincre (published by Pierre Plantard and his pre-Priory of Sion mystical group Alpha Galates), demonstrates that they also believed in the Green Ray, and of the significance of green in general. In A Ray of Light, by “Alpha Rene”, it says:

“That we have received letters written in green ink is already in itself very significant, but that our copies of this periodical have been sent to us with a green crayon mark upon them serves to explain the interest that certain people have been taking in our activities. Since that is the way things are, let us shed a ray of light on this famous green mark: allow me to quote here two paragraphs from the volume La Grand Verite (The Great Truth) by Pierre de France:

'The Green Dragon Cerberus is the Order of Lucifer created by the new alliance that the Dragon has forged with the Reckless Princes through the mediation of the Cerberuses... Such is the supreme apex of the Pyramid, the three sides of which (symbolizing the three heads or flames) - the Christic, the theosophical and the Masonic - are only so many mirrors that reflect, from three different angles, the same summit: the Ram[35], that is to say the head of the Green Dragon.

The green line that acts as a link between the nations is therefore only the expression of the supreme apex... ."

The inhabitants of Agartha are called by some authors "Children of the Black Sun", and are said to worship this luminary as their divine ancestor. The Black Sun is equated by many with Saturn. The inner hierarchy of the Third Reich believed in the Hollow Earth and worshipped the Black Sun. (In fact, the inner order of Himmler's S.S. was called "the [35] The ram is, again, a symbol of Baphomet, or Cain/Seth.

Black Sun.") So too, perhaps, did the Merovingian kings, for at least one author, Nicholas Goodrick-Clarke, has documented Nazi claims that the Black Sun was a "Merovingian symbol." Perhaps the Merovingians, like the Agarthans, believed they were carrying the blood of the "Black Sun", Saturn or Satan.

In this way, the Lapsit Exillis can be seen as a representation of the divine seed that was passed down from the Watchers to their human descendants. The "descent" of the stone from Heaven to Earth can be likened to the "descent" of the Grail blood from the divine kings to the mortal kings. In many accounts the Grail stone, or Philosopher's Stone, it is described as being alive, and as having descendants. In Nicolas Flamel's Original du Desire, he writes: "There is an occult stone, concealed and buried in the depths of a fountain… This stone… is animated, having the virtue of procreating and engendering…" Likewise, Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival opens with the line, "This is the book of thy descent. This is the book of the Sangreal." In this story, the Grail stone is covered with writing describing the names of the members of the Grail family who have been called to serve the Grail. There is, in the same vein, a Masonic tradition regarding a perfect "cubic stone" (obviously analogous to the Grail) which issues forth blood. And in the

New Testament, Christ is said to stand upon the "Rock of Zion", which is thought to represent his descent from King David.

In many cases the stone is credited with giving life to the inanimate, as in the case of the Philosopher's Stone. This "death and resurrection" symbolism appears to refer to the Grail blood being carried through the Deluge by Cain and Enoch. According to my theory, it was they who nursed civilization back to "life" after it had all but "died" during the Flood, and Cain took on this resurrection symbolism when he allowed his old image to die and be reborn as Seth. So that is why the "stone from Heaven" is thought to be able to raise the dead. As Ignatius Donnelly writes:

> "We find that Ouranus, the first god of the people of Atlantis, devised Baetulia, contriving stones that moved as having life, which were supposed to fall from Heaven. These stones were probably magnetic loadstones; in other words, Ouranus, the first god of Atlantis, devised the Mariner's compass."

Furthermore, earlier in the same chapter Donnelley says that the Egyptians referred to the lodestone as "the bone of Hareori", and iron "the bone of Typhon." Hareori and Typhon were both descendants of Rhea, the goddess of the Earth. Donnelly continues:

> "Do we find in this curious designation of iron and loadstone as 'bones of the descendants of the Earth' an explanation of that otherwise inexplicable Greek legend about Deucalion 'Throwing the bones of the Earth behind him, when instantly men rose from the ground, and the world was repeopled [after the Flood]?"

Perhaps we can now begin to understand the Masonic notion of the "stone from Heaven", which in their rituals is said to have been lost in ancient times. Sometimes this is implied to have occurred during the Flood, while at other times it is indicated that it was lost upon the death of Hiram Abiff (whose name is a permutation of Hermes.) Thus they use a "substitute" stone in their rituals, made in the likeness of the original, but not "perfect", as the original stone is said to be.[36] Could it be that the stone represents Satan and the Titanic gods, who were cast from their thrones, but who passed their seed onto their mortal descendants, so that those descendants could act in their place – as substitutes?

[36] The same is said about the "Lost Word of Freemasonry", the real Masonic password, for which a substitute is also used in their rituals.

In this context, the stone easily morphs into a phallic symbol, as in the story of Osiris. You may recall that after being murdered by his brother Set (a corrupted version of the Cain and Abel story), Osiris was chopped up and dumped in the Nile. Later, all of the parts were rediscovered by his sister-wife Isis, except for the penis, which was substituted. She then used his dead body to conceive the child Horus. Julius Evola, in The Mystery of the Grail, sees in this post-mortem coitus a hidden reference to the repopulation of the Earth after the Flood.

In Greek myth, prior to the fall of the Titans and the usurpation of kingship by Zeus and the Olympian gods, there was another revolution that preceded it. This was when Kronos (whom we know is Satan, or Enki) purportedly dethroned his own father, Ouranos (a.k.a Anu, Oannes, Uranus, etc.) During the battle between them, Ouranos was castrated. The penis was cast into the sea and, as the story goes, created a cloud of sea foam from which the goddess Aphrodite (the same as Isis or Venus) emerged.[37] Up until that point, Ouranos had been the king of Heaven, but as Edith Hamilton writes in Mythology, “From that time on, for untold ages, Cronus… was lord of the universe.”

The descent of the flood waters from Heaven to Earth is also representative of the descent of the divine seed. In The Book of Enoch we read of the Flood:

"In those days shall punishment go forth from the Lord of Spirits; and the receptables of water which are above the heavens shall be opened, and the fountains likewise, which are under the heavens and under the earth. All the waters which are in the heavens and above them, shall be mixed together. The water which is above heaven shall be the male; And the water which is under the earth shall be female; and all shall be destroyed who dwell upon the earth, and who dwell under the extremities of heaven."

Clearly the Flood itself is being likened to this insemination, when the waters from above meet the waters below. The sky was literally falling. Heaven and Earth were becoming one. The divine wisdom (symbolized by the celestial waters) poured down onto Satan's human offspring, as his seed had poured into the human womb. Also, in The Book of Enoch, the Flood is sent as divine retribution for the sins of the Watchers, who bred with mortal women unlawfully. From the description of his birth in this text, where he is described as being "like the angels", it is clear that Noah (whom we know is Enoch) is one of the products of this unlawful breeding. In fact, in all of the flood myths throughout the world, the pilot of the "Ark" that saves humanity is a son of the gods (or daughter, in some cases). And in many of these instances, the god from which he descends is that culture's equivalent of either Satan or Cain, which is why H.P. Blavatsky described the biblical Noah as a "Saturn archetype", giving him the same associations as his father and grandfather. Because Saturn/Satan was the forefather of Cain and Enoch, who were responsible for preserving the royal seed through the Flood, and because he was the true ancestor of the first human kings, Saturn was sometimes called "the Forgotten Father." It is fitting, then, that in his book Aion, C.G. Jung associated Kronos, or Saturn with the Fisher King in the Grail stories. In some versions of the tale, the king's genital wound is especially sore when Saturn is high in the heavens. Like Kronos or Cain, the Fisher King represents the Forgotten Father, whom all the characters in the story are related to, but they are not aware of it.

We have examined the concept of the Grail as "that which descends." But as a cup or vessel, the Grail is also the container which receives and preserves that which descends. As the cup of Christ, the Grail preserved the blood of the Savior that dripped from his wounds. As the womb of Mary Magdalene, the Grail preserved the seed and bloodline of Christ . Like the Emerald Tablet, the Grail cup is sometimes said to bear ancient inscriptions, making it also the carrier of esoteric secrets, “passed down”, just like the bloodline, from gods to men.

Author Howard Buechner believed that the Grail cup was analogous to the cup of Melchizedek, the priest-king of Salem, who used that cup to share bread and wine with Abraham in the Bible. Buechner said that this cup was “handed down by God”, and inscribed with the hieroglyphic language of ancient Sumer. The message it bore said: “This is the cup of El, the One God whose name is Yahweh or I am that I am.” This statement would seem to be verified by L.A. Waddell, who writes that the Holy Grail was originally a trophy stone-bowl that was engraved with “the earliest known specimen of Sumerian writing.” He suggests that this bowl was the center of religious worship in Eden while it was being ruled over by Baal or Abel, but that Cain stole it from Eden at some point during the war with Abel. If this has any kernel of truth to it, then perhaps the bowl was in some way a symbol of kingship or sovereignty, which was being unlawfully wielded by Abel, and rightfully belonged to Cain.

The Grail is sometimes depicted as a stone within a cup, making it a hermaphroditic symbol – both male and female, womb and seed. One can see this depicted on the walls of Chartres cathedral, in which a stone is depicted protruding from a chalice, and on the altar of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau, where the Sun (a Grail symbol) is shown descending into a chalice (with waves of water bubbling up underneath). This is fascinating, because the word "Grail" can be translated as either "cup" or "stone" in a very literal way. Nazi Grail researcher Otto Rahn believed that the word "Grail" came from "gorral", which he claimed was an ancient term. He said that "gorr" meant "stone" and "al" meant "a splinter or stylus with which to write." Together they meant "precious engraved stone." But having looked at the Sumerian syllables, I have found another definition as well. The word "gar" in Sumerian means "vessel" or "bowl." This is the basis for the Egyptian word "qar", meaning "drinking pot." The syllable "al" means "all" or "totality", and that of course is where we get our word "all." It was also the root for "Allah", or "El", meaning "Lord." So the term "Graal" in Sumeria would mean "Cup of All" or "Cup of El" – that is, "Vessel of God."

The Egyptian symbol for the word "qar" brings to mind some interesting connotations. It is written as an inverted omega symbol. "Omega", of course, is the final letter of the Greek alphabet, and has been used in common parlance for centuries to signify "the end" of something, just as "alpha", the first Greek letter, signifies "the beginning." If an inverted omega symbol signifies a vessel full of water, then the omega symbol could be thought to represent the Flood – the vessel being overturned. Then it would truly signify “the end” – the disaster which ended civilization for a time. Since the letter “alpha”, or “A”, resembles a mountain peak, perhaps it can be thought to symbolize the Mount of Refuge that the Ark landed on during the Flood. This mountain would then symbolize the “alpha” – the point from which life, and civilization, sprang anew. Incidentally, these two symbols can also be seen to represent the Grail both as a stone (the “alpha” symbol, the mountain), and as a cup (the “omega” symbol, the vessel). The concept of the Grail as a stone within a cup has led author Graham Hancock to theorize that the Ark of the Covenant may in fact be the Grail, as it is a sacred vessel (a box) with magical powers which holds sacred stones – the Tablets of Testimony supposedly handed down by God to Moses. In occult lore, these tablets are equated with the Emerald Tablet of Hermes. There is a legend stating that Moses acquired the Emerald Tablet from the Priests of Egypt prior to the Exodus, and later passed it on to his sister Miriam. This brings to mind some interesting facts about the word “Ark”, and the concepts with which it is associated.

Like “Grail”, the word “ark” means “container and preserver.” We see the word “ark” being used this way not only in reference to the Ark of the Covenant, but also the Ark of Noah, which purportedly preserved the seed of humanity, divine kingship, and civilization from the Flood (as well as the Emerald Tablet). The word "ark" seems to have been used by many cultures throughout history to refer to a divine sea-going vessel. Sometimes it also referred to heavenly luminaries, which ancient man equated with boats, for they saw the night sky as an extension of the ocean, and called it "the waters of Heaven." "Argha" was the celestial boat of the Hindus, while the heavenly Boat of Ra was called the "Bark." Hercules, who sailed the night in the "Cup of Helios" (the Sun-boat), was sometimes referred to as "Arkaleus." "Argo" was the name of another mythological ship in which the Greek gods sailed (most notably, Jason and the Argonauts), and which itself was said to be made from the "guiding timber" of the "ark" of Deucalion, the Greek Flood hero. And quite notably, in other instances, "arks" are referred to as containers of divine seed. In the Masonic ritual of the "Prince of the Tabernacle", a box called an "ark" is proceeded around the room which is said to contain "the organs of generation of Osiris." Likewise, in the Grecian "Mysteries of Samothrace", a similar myth was re-enacted. As Albert Pike described it, "The Diosairi, tutelary Deities of Navigation, with Venus, were invoked." [Emphasis added.] Pike also wrote that the ceremony involved the mimicked the death of someone "slain by his brothers, who fled into Etruria, carrying with him the chest or Ark that contained his genitals: and there the phallus and the sacred Ark were adored."

Et in Arcadia Ego

We are now led to yet another meaning of the word "ark": a tomb, specifically the tomb of a long-lost father god. In Hebrew, the word "ark" means "coffin", which is strange, considering that the Bible describes Jehovah as actually living inside the Ark of the Covenant. But in some Jewish legends, the Ark of Noah was said to contain the body of Adam, making it a floating tomb.

This story is related in the apocryphal Christian text, The Book of the Cave of Treasures. In this embellished retelling of the biblical narrative, "Paradise" or "Eden" appears to be, in general, a region of mountains said to be located "in the center of the earth", and more specifically, one mountain in particular. In fact, the "Garden of Eden" in which Adam and Eve live in this story appears to actually be a subterranean cavern inside of this mountain. The text speaks of Adam and Eve's "expulsion… from the regions of Paradise to the Earth that is outside it: …and when Adam and Eve had gone forth from Paradise, the door of Paradise was shut."

But the place in which they are exiled to is just yet another cave within this same holy mountain, which is “in the center of the earth.” The location was christened “the Cave of Machpelah”, or “the Cave of Treasures.” Adam and his son Seth build a temple there to worship God. They and their descendants worship there, and are buried there, for the next several generations. When the Flood occurs, Noah is instructed by God to put the body of Adam into the Ark (so that it doesn’t wash away in the Flood). Afterwards, Noah instructs his son Shem:

“When I am dead, go into the Ark, wherein thou hast been saved, and bring out the body of our father Adam... and place it in the center of the earth... and let no man have knowledge of what thou doest... take heed that this story is never mentioned again in all your generations...”

Inside this same cave other biblical patriarchs were purportedly buried, up to and including Jacob. The Book of the Cave of Treasures says that the “secrets of the Church” were also buried therein. This may be the mythological equivalent of the Tablet of Enoch/Hermes, which supposedly now resides in a similar location.

The Emerald Tablet’s current whereabouts are most often described as being hidden within Hermes’ tomb. Hermes is said to never die, but to fall into periods of prolonged sleep, from which he is awakened at regular intervals by the periodic rediscovery of his tomb.[38] The same is said of the tomb of the mythical namesake of the Rosicrucian brotherhood, Christian Rosenkreutz. The details of the Rosenkreutz tomb can be found in the Adeptus Minor ritual of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. Here the tomb is described as "within the mountain of Albi-Genos" which is "in the center of the Earth." The tomb is "lit by an inner sun", just as the Black Sun lights the inner world in the Hollow Earth theory. The tomb is said to be symbolic of the tomb of Osiris, and indeed, the Egyptians described Osiris' tomb as being illuminated by a subterranean sun.[39] The walls of the Rosenkreutz tomb are covered with strange hieroglyphs, and it contains "mystery writings" detailing alchemical secrets (reminiscent, obviously, of the Tablet of Hermes). Within the tomb, Rosenkreutz' body lies undecayed, sleeping but not dead, and when his tomb was supposedly discovered in 1484, 120 years after his alleged death, it was not only Rosenkreutz, but the Hermetic secrets contained within that were resurrected. To quote Christopher Macintosh in The Rosicrucians, "This is more or less the time in which the Rosicrucian movement begins to be known in history, as if it literally sprang from beneath the ground."

[38] Ranked among the purported discoverers of the Hermetic tomb are both the alchemist Paracelsus and Alexander the Great.

[39] A fascinating Rosicrucian seal exists demonstrating this concept. It features a man within a rose, which is itself within a sun, all of which is further shown to be placed within the center of a pyramid structure.

It should not be surprising that this notion finds an analogy in the Grail legend, where it is symbolized by the "Dolorous Stroke" that wounds the Fisher King in his genitals. At this point the king loses the ability to properly perform his regal function (which is symbolized by his loss of virility, i.e., ability to pass on his royal blood), and the entire kingdom falls into a deathless sleep which is known as "the Wasteland." This may connect with the archetype of the fall of the Garden of Eden, or the fall of Atlantis via the Flood. The king thereafter must continue to nurse his festering wound, which will not heal, and no matter how much he wants to, he can never die, until the chosen knight comes to liberate him by learning the secrets of the Grail and taking up the mantle of kingship himself. His kingdom exists in a similar state of perpetual malaise, until the coming of a chosen hero, who will liberate the dying king and resume the proper function of kingship, thus bringing stability and equilibrium to the land. Again, these are common themes in world mythology. Most notably similar to the story of the Fisher King is that of his Greek mythological counterpart, Kronos, who, writes Julius Evola:

> "…after having been the Lord of this earth, the King of the Golden Age, was dethroned and castrated (that is, deprived of the power to beget, to give life to new stock). He still lived on, though asleep, in a region located in the Far North, closer to the Arctic Sea, which was also called the Cronic Sea."

It is also noteworthy that Kronos is sometimes called "the Hidden One", thus alluding perhaps to his seclusion inside of the Earth, in which he was purportedly imprisoned by Zeus.[40]

Thus, the sleeping, half-dead gods who inhabit the subterranean tombs of Kronos, Hermes, Osiris, and even Christian Rosenkreutz could all metaphorically represent the same fallen kingdom, which, having lost the Grail and its mandate to rule, has occulted itself, gone underground, become invisible, or fallen asleep, until such time as the proper individual shall come along to liberate it. Then the sunken kingdom shall rise, the dreaming lord shall awake, the phoenix emerge from the ashes, and the proper universal balance be restored. In the meantime, the secret royal doctrine is kept alive by the initiates/descendants of that sleeping god (the same doctrine that is written upon the Grail in its form as the Emerald Tablet, or “Gorral”).

[40] Author E. Richmond Hodges states that the names "Kronos" and "Saturn" both comes from root words meaning "to flee into hiding." The Egyptian god Osiris was also sometimes referred to as "the Hidden One."

The idea of the sacred tomb comes up again in regards to the concepts of “Arcadia” and “the underground stream”, so central to the Grail saga. Nicolas Poussin, in his painting The Shepherds of Arcadia, depicted a group of shepherds pointing to a tomb that was inscribed with the phrase “Et in Arcadia Ego.” This was believed by Henry Lincoln to depict a tomb that, until recently, still existed in the region of Rennes-le-Chateau. But the authors of The Tomb of God (Richard Andrews and Paul Schellenberger) think that the real tomb which Poussin was alluding to is not the one that Henry Lincoln found, but one that they say is buried between the twin peaks of nearby Mt. Cardou, which they believe to be the tomb of the one and only Jesus Christ. Their interpretation of the word “Arcadia” - specifically in the context of that phrase - is reached by breaking the word down phonetically, and then translating not just the letters, but the sounds from the Latin, thereby arriving at the result, “the tomb of God.” They write:

“It is not too difficult to imagine how Arcadia (arcar-deear - the contemporary pronunciation, not the modern one) could be identified with the sound of Arca Dei (arcar-dayee), thus suggesting an anagram. Arca Dei would mean 'Ark of God'... This, combined with the quite excessive emphasis of the idea of 'tomb'... convinces us that we are to interpret 'ARCA' as 'tomb'; this would be another legitimate translation of the word."

Using similar methods, they translate the entire phrase, "Et in Arcadia Ego" into an anagram which phonetically means, in Latin, "I touch the tomb of God." By adding the Latin word "sum" at the end of "Et in Arcadia Ego", which they believe to be implied by the sentence, and creating another anagram from that, they further render it, "I touch the tomb of God, Jesus." This tomb, they believe, can be found at Rennes-le-Chateau.

I concur with their interpretation of the word "Arcadia" as "Ark of God." But is it really the tomb of Jesus that lies at the heart of Rennes-le-Chateau? Is this the secret which has been preserved by some of the world's most elite and powerful secret societies for millennia? The mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau, and for that matter, the roots of Southern France's esoteric tradition would appear in fact to be much older than 2000 years. References to Jesus and his presumed wife, Mary Magdalene, are almost always coupled with or superimposed over images of other, far more ancient figures.

Is there any evidence that “Et in Arcadia Ego” is a signpost pointing towards the tomb of a much older god? To find such evidence, it might be helpful to examine the word “Arcadia” in another light. We are familiar with the use of word plays in regards to the Grail mystery, often with multiple layers of meaning. Since most languages, including Latin and Greek, have their ultimate roots in a form of proto-Sumerian, many words from languages both ancient and modern still retail the intrinsic meaning of the Sumerian syllables from which they are derived. Given that the Priory of Sion and the Grail families have been, I believe, the preservers of ancient traditions going back to Sumeria and, even further, to Atlantis, it is not inconceivable that members of the Renaissance “underground stream” may have been aware of these intrinsic meanings. The word “Arcadia”, then, can be thought of as containing the Sumerian syllables “Ar” and “Kad.”

When viewed in this way, patterns begin to unfold. “Ar” is symbolized in Sumerian hieroglyphs by, of all things, a pentagram. From this word came the name of the Sumerian city-state, Ur. From “Ar” the words “Aryan” and “Iran” were derived. Now the “Ar” sign, sometimes just referred to as “the Plough Sign”, actually has two very specific definitions. One explains the translation of “Plough”, and it literally means “to cause dirt to go up”, indicating digging in the earth. Of course, the plough was something that we are told was invented by Cain. Yet "Ar" has another meaning in Sumerian - one that is very pertinent to our examination, and that is "To shackle, to imprison."

In the stories of both Kronos and Satan, after they lost the heavenly battle, they were imprisoned in the underworld. So Kronos' tomb, in which he lies not dead but sleeping, is also a prison. Esoteric legends state that Kronos was shackled and bound to the underworld within a pentacle. It can hardly be a coincidence that the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau, which so many people believe contain a sacred tomb, form the shape of a pentagram (as will soon be discussed), or that this shape also shows up in the geometry of The Shepherds of Arcadia.

With this in mind, it is worthwhile to examine the prefix "Arc" in Latin a bit more. In a Latin dictionary, the first word we encounter in the "Arc" family is "Arca", which Andrews & Schellenberger have translated as "tomb." It does indeed mean that, but it also means "a cell for close imprisonment." This is amazing: "Arca" means both "prison" and "tomb." Kronos' title of "the Hidden One" and his burial within this secret prison/tomb may relate to the Latin word "arceo", meaning "to protect, keep safe", or "to hinder, prevent." From this we get the word "arcane", which literally means "concealed." In Holy Blood, Holy Grail, one suggested interpretation of "Et in Arcadia Ego" was an anagram, "I Tego Arcana Dei", which means: "Begone, I conceal the secrets of God." Interestingly, one of the meanings of the Sumerian king title "Kad" (the root of the second syllable in "Arcadia") is "be strong, protect, save", remarkably similar to the definition of the Latin word "arceo."

Thus, the intrinsic Sumerian root meanings of the syllables in the word "Arcadia" seem to contain a message pertaining to the prison/tomb of Kronos. "Et in Arcadia Ego" could then be interpreted to mean: "And I am in the tomb (and prison) of a god." The use of this phrase in conjunction with Rennes-le-Chateau a la The Shepherds of Arcadia seems to be indicating that this tomb is somewhere within that region's pentagonal mountain structure.

In this context it is essential to note that according to a Jewish legend, Cain and his descendants were imprisoned inside of a subterranean realm called "the Arka", which, although entirely underground, still "receives some light from the Sun." The legend states that the Earth literally "opened up beneath Cain, and the four generations sprung from Cain", and swallowed them up. Louis Ginzberg writes in The Legends of the Jews that "The Arka was surrendered to the Cainites forever, as their perpetual domain."

The Venusberg and the Tomb of Hercules

In the South of France there are a number of mountains in which gods or semi-divine heroes are purportedly buried. During WWII, when France was occupied by the Nazis, a young German author, researcher and SS Lieutenant named Otto Rahn was sent by the Reich to Southern France to look for the Holy Grail, which many in the Nazi hierarchy were eager to possess. The Nazis, it will be recalled, also believed whole-heartedly in the theory of the Hollow Earth, and sent expeditions down to Antarctica looking for the entrance. Furthermore, the Nazis had great admiration for the heretical Cathars, especially their disciplined lifestyle, vegetarian diet, and sophisticated Gnostic theology. In fact, there were elements within the Nazi hierarchy who were hoping to resurrect the Cathar religion. So it was only natural that Otto Rahn would go looking for the Holy Grail at the place where the Cathars were said to have left it - Montsegur. He also knew that in the Grail romances of the Middle Ages, the Grail is said to reside in a castle at the top of “Montsalvat”, which Rahn believed to be the same as Montsegur. One of the reasons for this was the similarity of the names. “Montsegur” means “mountain of security” and “Montsalvat” means “mount of salvation.” So Rahn stayed in Southern France for a number of years, off and on between 1928 and 1931, exploring the caves of Montsegur and the tunnels of the surrounding Languedoc, even Rennes-le-Chateau. Interestingly, another group of people were also exploring Montsegur at this same time. This group was known as the “Polaires”, a secret mystical society (influenced by Rosicrucian and Martinist teachings) that at one time included the author Rene Guenon.[41] And what were they looking for at Montsegur? Why, none other than the tomb of Christian Rosenkreutz, which according to a local newspaper, they suspected to be in the nearby ruined castle of Lordat.

More details on this can be found in Colonel Howard Buechner’s Emerald Cup - Ark of Gold: The Quest of S.S. Lt. Otto Rahn of the Third Reich. According to Buechner, Otto Rahn did discover something in the caves around Montsegur, just as Parzival had discovered the Holy Grail in a cave near Montsalvat. Buechner says that Rahn found the landscape to parallel exactly that of Montsalvat in Wolfram von Eschenbach’s Parzival, and Buechner writes: “The grotto and certain other rock formations in the story bear the same names as those in a massive cave near Montsegur.” It was the clues in Eschenbach’s book which, according to Buechner, led Rahn to make his first awesome discovery. Writes Buechner:

[41] Guenon wrote a book called The Lord of the World about the legendary kingdom of Agartha at the center of the Earth.

"He explored the grottoes of an area known as Sabarthez, notably the grottoes of Ornolac and the massive cavern of Lombrives. Here he found a huge chamber which was known to the local mountain people as the 'Cathedral' because it had served as a meeting place for the ancient Cathars. In the main hall was a great stalagmite known as the 'Tomb of Hercules.' In a third grotto, that of Fontenet, was a stalagmite which was white as snow. It was called the 'Altar'... Deep within the grottoes of the Sabarthez he found chambers in which the walls were covered with characteristic symbols of the Knights Templar, side by side with the well-known emblems of the Cathars... One very interesting image which had been carved into the stone wall of a grotto was clearly a drawing of a lance. This depiction immediately suggested the bleeding lance which appears over and over again in Arthurian legends, and which is, of course, the Holy Lance which pierced the side of Christ at the crucifixion."

Curiously, there is a line in Le Serpent Rouge that appears to be referencing the very same cave - albeit in a much more cryptic way - complete with the emblems depicted on the wall. It reads:

"It is not by the magical strength of HERCULES that one deciphers these mysterious symbols engraved by observers of the past."

The idea of the tomb of Hercules being located within Montsegur is interesting, for the tomb of Christian Rosenkreutz, said to be located "in the center of the Earth", is specified in the Golden Dawn ritual as being inside the "mountain of Albi-genos." This is amazing, considering that the Cathars were called "Albigensians." Clearly, the myths of the tombs of Hercules and Christian Rosenkreutz are connected in some way.

Pyrrha's name is related to the root word for fire: "pyr." Fittingly, both Deucalion and Pyrrha are directly related to Prometheus, who first brought fire to Earth. Pyrrha is said to have been named so because of her fire-red hair. Because "pyr" means "fire", the word "pyramid" has been translated to mean "fire in the middle." There is a much older, Sumerian word which also means "fire within", and it was a title used by Cain (as well as his son Enoch). This title was "Ag", and as I discussed earlier, it became incorporated into the name "Azag" used by Cain, which is related to his other name, "Azazel."

The Lord of the Mountain

This association of Cain with fire, specifically with "fire within", has to do with the association of the Djinn (descendants of Azazel or Cain) with volcanoes, and with blacksmithing. The Djinn were said to have emerged from the volcanic mountains inside which they lived to teach metallurgy and other crafts to mankind. In fact, in Cappadocia (modern Turkey) there are a series of so-called "Fairy Towers", which are conical, volcanic rocks, inside which temples have been carved, that were believed to have housed the Djinn. These and other similar volcanic structures, which can be found throughout Turkey, Iran and Kurdistan, are still used by members of the Yezidi sect when performing their rituals to "Shaitan."

In this same location, in an ancient city called Derinkuyu, there is a vast network of tunnels connecting thirty-six "underground cities", as they are called, which are believed to have been built by and resided in by Djinn. These tunnels and "cities" span miles underground, and it is estimated that they could have housed up to 200,000 people. It is evident that someone did live in them at one point, but no one is sure who.

Another permutation of the myth of Cain as a blacksmith god is the Roman figure of Vulcan, sometimes spelled "Vulcain", who lived inside of volcanic Mr. Ertha. Indeed, it is from his name that we get the word "volcano." Vulcan, like Cain, is said to have invented metalsmithing, and to have spawned a race of giants called Cyclopeses whom he used to work on his metallurgy projects, and when building massive monuments. His consort was Venus.

The closest Greek equivalent of Vulcan is Hephaestus, possessing identical attributes. He is said to have fathered a race of "blacksmith gods" called the Kabiri, who are almost universally considered to be identical with the Djinn. You may recall that one of Hephaestus' sons was Erichthonius, the first king of Athens, and obviously the same figure as Enoch. It is fitting, then, that Enoch is associated with the science of alchemy. The root word "chem." comes from "kham", meaning "black", and originally referred to the forging of metals (among other things, perhaps). It is for this reason that magic and alchemy are called "the black arts."

The idea that Cain and his descendants might have actually lived inside of a mountain or mountains for a period of time, as they lived in the Arka in Jewish legend, may explain certain elements recurrent in world mythology. In addition to the Djinn and Kabiri, there are quite a number of gods, or races of gods, or fairies, or elves, etc, who have been said to live inside of mountains. Even Jehovah was depicted as actually living inside of Mt. Sinai when he and Moses visited together. Thus he was called “El Shaddai”, the “Lord of the Mountain.” Perhaps he literally did live inside the mountain. Perhaps he and the other gods had to do this in order to escape the climactic conditions on Earth that immediately followed the Deluge. It is possible that, when Enoch/Noah parked his Ark on top of Ararat, Parnassus, or whatever mountain he landed on, he was met by his father Cain, who had already been hard at work creating a subterranean complex within that mountain for him and his descendants to live in while they waited out the Flood.

I have discussed how it seems that the “gods” who inhabited the Earth before the Flood largely went “underground”, figuratively, after the Flood, and were thereafter only seen by humans on special occasions, although they still continued to influence the world greatly. Perhaps they indeed went underground literally, because whatever Earth catastrophe caused the Flood changed the environment in such a way that the “gods” could no longer tolerate being on the surface for too great a time. However, their half-human descendants, such as the Cainites, would have been able to come out, once the flood waters had subsided and the Earth recovered enough, and then rebuild civilization on the surface. As they did so, Cain and Enoch instituted religions practices within their civilizations which honored their forefathers, who still lived within the mountains and “in the underworld”, or “in the center of the Earth.”

If civilization had actually been saved by Cain and his descendants living inside of a mountain both during and after the Flood, then they probably did have, within this mountain, a temple of some sort, just as Adam and Seth supposedly had inside the Cave of Treasures, according to The Book of the Cave of Treasures. After they emerged from the mountain to rebuild civilization, the mountain would have become a powerful symbol, and a center of worship. It would have been a symbol of death and rebirth, giving way to stories of a primordial womb or egg from which mankind emerged. (Such stories are replete throughout world mythology.) The Ark bears the same symbolism, and it is possible that the story of the "Ark" is less a remembrance of someone surviving a flood while on a boat than it is of someone surviving within the recesses of a mountain which is almost entirely submerged in water except for its peak, as Ararat supposedly was when Noah landed on it. After all, "Arka" is the name given to the subterranean world which Cain and his descendants lived in. Perhaps it was actually inside of a mountain.

Around the world, almost every culture has a myth about the sacred World-Mountain, where the peaks reach to the heavens. It is symbolically placed in the "center of the Earth", the world axis, marker of the celestial pole about which the world turns. This mountain is also often remembered as having been a refuge for both gods and men during the Deluge. According to many versions, the mountain was so high that the floodwaters could not submerge it, and those who occupied it (the gods) remained safe. It is possible that there is one true "Ararat", and all of these other myths are copied permutations of the original. It is also possible that, during the Flood, the same scenario occurred numerous times in various places, in which gods and/or people retreated within a mountain, and reemerged later when it was safe.

The first "world mountain" upon which all these archetypes were really based is the one which purportedly existed on Atlantis. This mountain was said to be "at the center of the Earth", and to provide the "world axis", just like those that followed. It is likely that this mountain provided some of the stories attributed to Mt. Olympus, which Greek legends say was tall enough to reach Heaven. Indeed, the whole idea that the "gods" came from "Heaven" may simply be a memory of them living at the peak of a very tall mountain. But after the Flood, it became this new mountain, the "Ararat" mountain, which was now at the "center of the Earth." It became the new "abode of the gods", and the new womb of civilization.

It would not be surprising, then, if Cain and his descendants were in fact buried within this mountain, or if they deposited the body of Cain's father there as well. But we know that this would have been Satan, not

Adam. This, then, would have been the real "Cave of Treasures" in "the center of the Earth", upon the Mount of Refuge - the new world mountain. If Enoch's tablet were deposited there as well, that would complete the symbolism of the "Grail stone" being buried within the "Grail cup" – the "Gar-Al" or "vessel of the Lord." The mountain itself would then be the vessel – the Ark! On this note, I should point out that the Grail has been depicted as a stone within a mountain before. Legends surrounding Montsegur in Southern France state that the peak of the mountain opened up, and a dove from Heaven carried the Grail stone in its beak, dropping it within the heart of the mountain, which then closed itself up again.[42]

House of God, Gateway to Heaven

When Cain and his descendants began rebuilding civilization, they created monuments that embodied the concept of the world-mountain: both the antediluvian and post-diluvian concepts of it. These monuments are the pyramids and ziggurats (stepped pyramids) of megalithic times – huge cyclopean structures, found on every continent, associated with different cultures and times, but all with very similar elements to them. Many of them are so huge, complex, and magnificent that nobody knows how they were built. Such can be said of the Great Pyramid in Egypt, and certain Aztec pyramids in Mexico, for example. And in every case the indigenous cultures were primitives who claimed that the "gods" came and built these structures in a long-lost era. As we know, the likely architects of the more early structures were probably Cain and Enoch. Others could have been made by those who followed them. They were probably built on the blueprint of a similar temple said to have towered over the heart of Atlantis.

[42] Otto Rahn believed that Montsegur had been the site of a battle between the armies of Lucifer and God over possession of the Grail. The armies of Lucifer supposedly wished to gain control of the Grail so that they could place it back in their leader's crown.

Both the pre and post-diluvian conceptions of the primordial mountain included the idea that the peak of the mountain was a "gateway to the abode of the gods", either in "Heaven", or within the mountain, depending on how the culture telling the myth envisioned it. The same concepts were embodied by the ziggurats and pyramids which became the religious temples of the post-diluvian ancient world. The primordial mountain in Atlantis had been on an island, surrounded by water, and the "Ararat" mountain had been surrounded by water during the Flood. This is why ziggurats and pyramids were often built on an island, or surrounded by a moat, or connected to an elaborate system of fountains (as some in Egypt and Sumer were). They also often had a sacred fire burning at the temple's peak, symbolizing the volcanic nature of the sacred mountain it represented – the "fire within" the pyramid. In this way the temples embodied the alchemical concept of the union of fire and water.

This conceptual union is a symbol also central to the practice of "sex magic", or "sexual alchemy", an ancient art as old as religion itself, in which the participants ritually embody the archetypes of a god and a goddess, then unite sexually to symbolize the union of male and female energies. These rituals, not surprisingly, took place in the inner sanctum of the pyramid and ziggurat temples. It is quite likely that these rituals were partly ceremonies commemorating the hierogamy (divine intercourse) that spawned the royal race of Cain, and it is quite possible that Cain was the first high priest to officiate these rituals. It is also likely that the figure on whom Venus is based was the first "high priestess" or "temple prostitute", for Venus has been called in ancient literature "the mother of harlots", which is another symbolic connection between her and the figure of Mary Magdalene.

In Europe, there are myths that the goddess Venus lives inside of a magic mountain, the well-known "Venusberg" tale upon which Wagner's Tannhauser is based, and which is connected to the tales of Melusine. Here she lived with her attendant gnomes and fairies, who occupied the numerous caverns and underground rivers that honeycombed the inside of the mountain. In Myths of the Middle Ages by Sabine Baring-Gould, this mountain is described as having, "its own mirror-world within, where trees and vaults grow, rivers run, and stars shine out from the hidden vaults of the roof."

In the Venusberg tale, the preferred habit of the mountain's mistress is to seduce some hapless young man into her abode and hold him there under a spell of sexual magnetism, sometimes for years at a time, the immortal goddess wasting the poor man's life away in orgiastic debauchery. In these legends, she is said to still be buried there today, lying in her tomb, not surprisingly, "in a deathless sleep", from which she can only be raised by the embrace of a new young man. Thus arose the primordial tale of "Sleeping Beauty", a myth referred to repeatedly in Le Serpent Rouge. An account of the discovery of the tomb of Lady Venus, and the undecayed body within, can be found in The Chemical Wedding of Christian Rosenkreutz, in which the tomb is found by Rosenkreutz himself.

The Venusberg tale may relate to a legend regarding the Pyrenees mountains. As it turns out, the Pyrenees were named after the goddess said to be buried within one of their mountains - "Pyrene", who, like the similarly-named Pyrrha, was the consort of another famous ark navigator - another god supposedly buried within a nearby mountain: Hercules. In fact, the figures of Pyrrha and Pyrene would appear to be the same, as would the figures of Hercules and Deucalion. This brings to mind the tantalizing notion that the words “Parnassus” and “Pyrenees” are in fact the same word expressed in two different languages. This would mean that the tale of Pyrrha and Deucalion landing their Ark on the Greek equivalent of Ararat actually took place somewhere near Rennes-le-Chateau! I will explore this idea in greater detail later on.

According to author Julius Evola, the sacred sex rite of hierogamy was once known as “pyr” – “magic fire.” Evola claimed that this ritual was secretly referred to by alchemists with the Latin phrase: “Rex igne redit et coningo gaudet occulto” (“The king returns with fire and rejoices in his hidden bride.”)[43] Given the connection between ancient temples and sacred fires, it is no coincidence that the ancient word for fire, “pyr, or “pir” - is related in Sumerian to “par”, “per”, “bar” and “ber”, all root syllables meaning “house” or “temple.”

The first ziggurat temple built after the Flood, according to the Bible, was the Tower of Babel. This, as I have said, was a magnificent structure, and is believed by many to have been built by King Nimrod. However, the story of the “Tower of Babel” and much of what is written about “King Nimrod” is the result of Jehovahite and Baalite propaganda, pasted on top of the true story of Cain and one of his most magnificent architectural creations.

[43] Undoubtedly there is also a connection to the myth of the phoenix, which rises from the ashes of the sacred pyre.

According to information provided by both Jewish and Babylonian lore, the Tower of Babel consisted of seven steps (seven being the number of godly perfection), and each step was painted with one of the seven colors of the rainbow, forming a "rainbow bridge" to Heaven, which was indeed what the temple represented. In fact, the Sumerian word for "ziggurat" is "duranki", which means "the binding of Heaven and Earth", and the word "Babylon" (where the Tower was located) means "Gateway of the Gods." Furthermore, Julius Evola claimed that in the Pyr ritual which was once performed in a temple's inner sanctum, the priestess was referred to as "Ianua Coeli" ("Gateway to Heaven.") This proves once again that the ritual which took place inside the temple represented the same concept as the temple itself. Traces of this function performed by the priest and priestess in ancient times can be found in the Latin word for "priest" ("pontifex"), which literally means "builder of bridges" - to Heaven, of course.

The Tower acted as a gateway to the gods, not only because its peak reached high into the sky, but because, like the original holy mountain (or mountains), which it commemorated, gods were believed to live inside of the Tower, or at least, to be able to access it from wherever they did live. If the gods did indeed live underground and inside of mountains after the Flood, then they may have been able to visit the Tower, perhaps through a network of tunnels underneath the structure. Many if not most ancient temples and ziggurats did have tunnel systems built underneath them, sometimes incredibly large and complex. There are tunnels spanning many miles, for instance, underneath the structures in Cuzco, Peru, connecting them all.

Imagine what it would be like to participate in a ritual inside such a structure, in which a "god" is summoned, and a literal, physical being climbs up from the depths of the Earth into your ritual chamber! That is exactly what was said to have occurred in the sex magic rituals inside these ancient temples, when human "priestesses" or "temple prostitutes", often as young as twelve, were sent into the temple to be impregnated by one of these gods. This took place at the Tower of Babel for sure. One ancient chronicler, quoted by Horizon Magazine's Book of Lost Worlds, wrote of "the temple at Babylon that:

"On the summit of the topmost tower stands a great temple with a fine large couch on it, richly covered, and a golden table beside it. The shrine contains no image, and no one spends the night there except (if we may believe the Chaldeans, who are the priests of Bel) one Assyrian woman, all alone, whoever it may be that the god has chosen. The Chaldeans also say (though I do not believe them) that the god enters the temple in person and takes his rest upon the bed."

This probably actually describes a later structure in Babylon, perhaps one built to imitate the original, although it could not have been as grand. Nonetheless, it demonstrates the concept that the ancients had of the hierogamy that went on inside the Tower. But there was more purpose to this structure than just the hosting of sex rituals.

Since according to the biblical narrative, the Tower of Babel was built relatively soon after the Flood, most of the people on Earth were essentially of one stock, and all of one culture. The Bible makes it sound as though the people who built the Tower were just arrogantly attempting to create a replica of the holy mountain on which the gods lived, as part of some narcissistic, self-serving effort to be more god-like. But subtle details in the relevant passage from Genesis make it clear what the original purpose was. Genesis 11:4 states: "And they said, "Go to, let us build a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth."

At the time in which the Tower of Babel narrative took place, the event which was at the forefront of every man's mind was the Flood, which had completely destroyed civilization, and done so relatively recently. Civilization had only survived because of the mountain that the Tower was created in commemoration of. Logically, then, the Tower of Babel was built to withstand another Flood. Just as the Ark (of Noah/Enoch) had purportedly carried Enoch's tablet through the flood waters, and just as the "Ararat" mountain acted as the new "Ark" for the tablet while Cain and his descendants lived in it, so the Tower would act as a new house for the tablet.

In Plato's description of the holy temple on Atlantis, it states that the entrance to the temple was marked by two pillars: one made to be imperishable by fire, the other imperishable by water. Onto these pillars was written the most valuable knowledge they had attained, so that, no matter what kind of cataclysm occurred, their knowledge, and their "name" (their identity, their culture and traditions) would be preserved for future generations. The Tower of Babel appears to have served the same purpose: the temple itself was a monument containing and preserving this sacred knowledge, most specifically the details of this original language. And if Enoch's tablet was in fact a pillar (remember that Masonic ritual talks about "the pillars of Enoch and Seth"), then it is not hard to see how it could have been incorporated into the architecture of the Tower of Babel. It is said that the Great Pyramid at Giza was once covered with Egyptian hieroglyphs, and it may be that the Tower of Babel was also covered with the written characters of this original language. If so, it would be an appropriate echo of the concept of the Emerald Tablet of Hermes. In some depictions of the Emerald Tablet, it is shown as a mountain covered with hieroglyphic symbols, fire issuing from its top.

In the case of the Tower of Babel, the Bible says that Jehovah and his allies saw fit to prevent this establishment of a "name", supposedly fearing that if mortals could build a mountain "reaching Heaven", then "nothing [would] be restrained from them."[44] In fact, this was simply an act of aggression on Jehovah's part against Cain/Seth and Enoch, who had created a global empire after the Flood and were instituting a common language. Jehovah and his allies were afraid that Cain was creating a powerful coalition that threatened their own power base. Jewish legends tell us that the creators of the Tower were planning on "taking Heaven by storm" and attacking Jehovah in his very own abode.

The Tower symbolized the unity of the empire, and the achievements of Cain and Seth. It also symbolized their identity, their "name." Jehovah's goal had been all along to take over the empire of Cain as he had the empire of Cain's father, Satan. Once he had done so, he wanted to either obliterate or distort all memory of them and their accomplishments. So the tower was smashed by the might of Jehovah, the true identity of the Cainites was lost to history, and their unified language scrambled into the multitude that we know today. Thus does our English word “babble”, for nonsense language derive from this story. The archetypal tale of the Tower of Babel, including the tower that reaches to Heaven and the bizarre, inexplicable connection with a universal language that got dispersed when the tower was destroyed, is common. It is confirmed in the records of other cultures, even as far away as Central America, indicating that the story is perhaps factually based.

[44] That there is more than one "god" involved in this story is made explicitly clear in that passage from Genesis which states: "…let us go down, and there confound their language…"

However, the word translated as “name” in “let us make a name” was actually the Hebrew “shem”, which other authors (Zecharia Sitchin and Laurence Gardner) have translated as “shining (or fiery) stone”, specifically, the capstone to a ziggurat temple! Such a “shem” is depicted in The Victory Stele of Naram-Sin from Akkadia, c. 2280 BC, where it is shown covered in Sumerian hieroglyphs. Interestingly, “Shem” is also the name of one of Noah’s sons in the Bible, and Shem’s descendants are listed immediately after the end of the Tower of Babel narrative. It is Shem after which the “Semitic” race is named, further linking the word “shem”, or “name” with the concept of a race – the race of the “fire stone”, or the stone from Heaven. The destruction of the Tower and the disintegration of the language represent the loss of that race and their heritage via the Flood. Symbolic similarities can be found in the later biblical tale of the twelve tribes of Israel, ten of which were "dispersed" and lost to history, again as part of a divine punishment. This led to the God-imposed captivity of the Israelites in Babylon. According to The Book of Jeremiah, God's purpose for the punishment of the Babylonian captivity was to scatter the Israelites across the globe, to cause them to lose their identity, and especially, their language. It is the same story as the loss of the Stone from Heaven, or the Lost Word of Freemasonry. The Stone, the Tower, and the Word are all manifestations of the same symbol. In Freemasonry, when both the Stone the Word were lost, substitutes had to be created.

This symbolizes the way in which the stories and genealogies found in the Bible were largely concocted as substitutes for the true heritage of Cain and his descendants. Examples of this, many of them already discussed in this book, can be found throughout the Bible. The Tower of Babel story represents the same destruction of truth: the moment that a veil was rent over our perception of reality. It seems that this story is a shortened version of a longer battle between Cain and Jehovah (and Baal), in which Jehovah eventually got the upper hand. And although the Cainite bloodline continued having influence on various societies throughout history, they often had to stay quiet about what their heritage really was, and perpetuate their secrets in an underground fashion. All the while, Jehovah and those he controlled waged a never-ending campaign of genocide against Cainite blood, until he had all but exterminated them. Yet certain remained, and do to this very day.

The Language of Light

But what was the nature of this language that the entire world, unified under Cain, spoke and wrote in the years following the Deluge? And how could the secrets of the antediluvian world be inscribed upon a single tablet or pillar? Well, the unified language spoken by mankind was probably the "proto-Sumerian" language which linguists believe is at the root of all languages – the "Aryan" language of which L.A. Waddell wrote. I have mentioned that the word "Ari' (the root of "Aryan") is related to the word "ur", which means "original." But when referring to a particular people, it meant, specifically, "shining ones." This is because the "Aryan" race was begun by Cain and Enoch, whose skin "shone" with light because they carried the genetic traits of their divine ancestors, the gods. Thus the word "Aryan" came to be attached to the royal, divine bloodline of Cain, and the race of his descendants, who became, after the Flood, the overseers of human society. This is why "Aryan" is now synonymous with the word "noble." But its connection with the concept of shining and light is important, and here's why.

If the secrets of Enoch were inscribed on a single stone, pillar, or set of pillars, they were probably written in the language of the gods – the language that preceded the Aryan language commemorated at Babel. Now we know that these "gods" were associated with light – that they seemed to have an almost supernatural control over the force of light, the highest and fastest form of energy in the universe, of which, it has been said, all other forms of energy are but lower permutations. It was this ability to control light, and to convert energy from one form to another, which gave them their seemingly "supernatural" powers over their environment. This is how the creation of the alchemical "Philosopher's Stone" is described by the sages. It really involves taking substances and transmuting them by bringing them up into a higher energy state through the application of heat and distillation. In other words, turning it back to light, the original, and most pure, form of energy, and then transmuting them into another, lower energy state that is nonetheless different than the first.

This was the alchemy that the “gods”, as well as Cain and Enoch, were adept at. Now interestingly, according to the alchemist Fulcanelli (and many others), learning to perform alchemy involves learning to speak the “alchemical language”, which he calls “the language of the birds”[45], or “the green language.” (Recall that Pierre Plantard made allusions to the green language within the pages of Vaincre.) But elsewhere, this language is called “the language of light.”

It is easy to see how an extremely complex language could be made from different wavelengths of light, or even digital “on/off” interspersions of light and darkness. In fact, a “light language” is already an integral part of our modern computer and telecommunications technology. In an article on spacedaily.com called “World will See Computers in Whole New Light”, dated January 22, 2002, the unnamed author writes that:

> “Computers created within the next two decades could revolve around a technology in which laser beams converge inside crystals the size of sugar cubes, forming holographic images for processing huge amounts of information, says the author, Purdue University physics Professor David D. Nolte.

[45] The “bird” reference probably just indicates that this is a “higher language”, made for a consciousness that soars above that of normal humans.

In his book, Mind at Light Speed: A New Kind of Intelligence, Nolte describes how optics-based computer technologies may evolve over three generations during the next century.

The first generation, which is well under way, has seen the Internet transformed by fiber optic cables, optical switches and other devices that are based on photonics, or using visible light signals to transmit data.

The second generation, perhaps by the year 2020, will revolve around new types of optical processors. These 'holographic computers' might use crystals that receive and manipulate data-laden images, processing information much faster than conventional computers.

Perhaps after 2050, a network connecting such computers might achieve intelligence, Nolte says.

'Imagine luminous machines of light made from threads of glass and brilliantly colored crystals that glow and shimmer, pulsating to the beat of intelligence', Nolte writes...

The third generation, possibly during the second half of the 21st century, could use 'quantum optical' technologies to create computer networks capable of solving problems that currently are 'uncomputable.'

Photonics is the optical equivalent of electronics: Instead of using electrons to transmit and process information, photonics uses photons, or tiny units of light…

The human eye is a good model for an optical machine, he says.

'Light is an intrinsically parallel data structure', Nolte says. 'Your eyes have a huge data-receiving capacity. Streaming into your eyes right now is about a gigabit, or a billion bits of information, per second.'"

We know that in Jewish legends these pre-diluvian gods were called "Watchers", from the Hebrew "ayin", meaning "to look", from which we get the English word "eye." It seems that this may point to these gods being able to use their eyes as their primary form of communication. This is why their eyes in particular were said to shine "like flaming fire." This is why both they and their half-human descendants could put a person under a spell, or communicate "telepathically" using their eyes to give and receive information in the form of light. As I have speculated, this is why the "All-Seeing Eye" became a symbol associated with divine government. Nicholas de Vere writes that the gods possessed a "hive mind" that they could all tune into if they wished, and thus could understand each other's thoughts. This came from their ability to "see with the same eye" – the All-Seeing Eye.

In the Great Seal of the United States, which was created by Freemasons, the All-Seeing Eye is shown replacing the missing capstone on the Great Pyramid of Egypt (which has been missing since ancient times, by the way, and nobody is sure what it actually was). R.T. Rundle Clark writes that:

> "The Eye is the commonest symbol in Egyptian thought… Originally it had been sent out into the Primeval Waters by God on an errand to bring back Shu and Neftut [the Egyptian equivalent of Adam and Eve] to their father [for they had become lost and could not see in the mire]… When it returned, it found that it had been supplanted in the Great One's face by another – a surrogate eye. This is the primary cause for the wrath of the Eye and the great turning point in the development of the universe, for the Eye can never be fully or permanently appeased."[46]

So the Eye represents the "stone that was rejected", and that was substituted. Later the Eye was said to have caused a Flood on Earth by its crying. The Eye morphed into the “burning eye of Horus”, which was gouged out by Set, supposedly, and which was taken apart, but reassembled:

[46] In this story, the Eye was temporarily appeased by being allowed to transform itself into a crown for God. It took the form of a cobra, wrapped itself around his forehead, and protected him from enemies from that point forward. All Egyptian kings thus wore a crown in the shape of a cobra.

“Seth flung it away beyond the edge of the world, and Thoth, the moon’s genius and guardian, went and found it lying in the outer darkness. Apparently he discovered it lying in pieces. He brought them back and assembled them again to form the full moon.”

He goes on to demonstrate how the Egyptian symbol for the Eye of Horus can be broken down into sixty-fourths, and intimates that it represents a mathematical puzzle of some sort. This same idea is apparently referred to in the Priory of Sion poem Le Serpent Rouge, which talks about a “stone” consisting of “64 pieces” which must be “reassembled.” I discuss this at greater length in Appendix B of this book. It represents the idea of reacquire ancient knowledge by learning to speak the original language of the gods, and learning to see the way they were able to.

Undoubtedly, the gods and human god-kings were able to see and communicate using wavelengths of light that we do not have access to. It is worth noting that planets put out waves of energy, including light, on a constant basis, which can be "tuned into" with modern electronic devices. How much more so could the gods and the god-kings, who associated themselves with the stars and planets, understand the language which the heavenly bodies spoke? Enoch purportedly learned from the Watchers how to read the "tablet of Heaven", and how to interpret the stars and planets. Mediums often say that they can tune into and speak with the stars and planets, which they say are living beings with tremendous intelligence. Perhaps there is more to this concept than just superstition.

Of course, human beings are not capable of sensing or interpreting light on such a subtle level, which is why we use an oral and written language. On a quantum level, sound is just light on a lower frequency, or a lower state of existence. This illustrates a cabalistic concept of creation which holds that before the universe as we know it existed, there was only the "Ain Soph Aur": the "Limitless Light." Then God created the current universe by "speaking the Word." As the cabalistic text Sepher Yetzirah states, "With 32 mystical paths of Wisdom he engraved Yah[47], and created his world." The Book of Genesis starts out by saying that God's first act of creation was to speak the words "Let there be light." The Gnostic Gospel of John tells us, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God… In him was the life; and the life was the light of darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." Gnostic traditions elaborate further and state that this universe was formed by the speaking of "the Word", or "Logos." But it was "Wisdom", or "Light" (Lucifer) that gave birth to "the Word."

[47] Recall that "Yah" originated with Satan's Sumerian title of "Ia", also related to the word "eye."

In an analogous way, the pure language of light used by the gods devolved after the Flood into an oral language used by humans. H.P. Blavatsky wrote that "the Adami" were not really the first human race, but the first race of speaking men, as their predecessors had communicated using pure thought. The Sumerian version of the Flood tale says that Enlil (Jehovah) brought about the Deluge to wipe out "the Adami" because their speech made too much noise and disturbed him. In reality, the "human language" probably consisted of non-distinct grunting, much like primates in the wild, until Enoch invented the oral and written Aryan language, and taught the most evolved specimens of humanity how to use it.

The Tower of Babel, then, would have been a monument to this new language. And the tablet of Enoch was perhaps inside of this monument at one time, either as its keystone, or its capstone, or a pillar, or set of pillars, within it. Perhaps something about the Tower itself contained the key to understanding the language of light – perhaps something about its geometry. We know that the Knights Templar, the Freemasons, the Pythagorean philosophers, the Egyptian priesthood, and the Jewish cabalists have all been preoccupied with the science of communicating cosmic secrets through "sacred geometry", and particularly three-dimensional geometry through architecture. This formed an integral part of the Hermetic science taught by Enoch/Hermes.

Geometry really involves the use of different "angles of light." So we are to understand, I think, that the Enochian/Hermetic tablet was probably a crystal in which the "secrets" were encoded using light. This links it to the Grail stone as well, a so-called "stone of light" chipped from the crown of Lucifer, the light bringer. Perhaps the Tower of Babel interacted with it somehow to translate its message into the Aryan language, so that it could be understood by all.

In order to explain how this might work, I would first need to explain how things such as light, geometry, and both oral and written language are intrinsically connected. The thing that holds them together is their mathematical relationship to one another, specifically a mathematical constant that they all embody. That is the Fibonacci sequence.

Also known as "the Phi ratio", the golden section is formed when a given length is divided into two portions, so that the first portion's relationship to the second mirrors the second portion's relationship to the whole. Each line of the pentagram is defined by the Phi ratio, also known as the Fibonacci sequence, the basic growth pattern of nature. Expressed in whole numbers the sequence begins with 0 and 1, mimicking the creation of the universe, in which the whole of existence emerged as the undivided monad out of the unmanifested void. Then, another 1 is added, making 2, the next stage in the creation of the universe, in which the undivided monad split into the duality of two opposing aspects (such as light and dark, male and female). From there, the sequence continues, adding the next number to the previous number in the sequence to create the one following. 2+1 = 3, 3+2 = 5, 5+3 = 8, and 8+5 = 13. Thus the sequence goes: 0,1,1,2,3,5,8,13... This sequence could go on and on indefinitely. When the numbers are divided by one another to form ratios (1/1, 2/1, 3/2, 5/3, 8/5, 13/8), the results, graphed on an x/y axis, form an undulating wave that starts out large and flattens out at an exponential rate towards an asymptote (a place approached but never reached) of 1.6180339…, with an endless series of decimals at the end.

In what is known as a "golden rectangle", this ratio can be expressed by dividing the rectangle into one-third and two-thirds sections.[48] Then you construct a larger golden rectangle around that, with the first golden rectangle constituting the smaller, one-third section of the larger golden triangle. Keep doing this for several steps. The whole of each rectangle, when divided by the larger, two-thirds section, will always equal the same ratio as the large part divided by the small part. After you have constructed a series of golden rectangles within golden rectangles, draw a line curving from the inside bottom corner of the larger section of the first rectangle to the upper left-hand corner of that box, then continue that through the larger section of the second rectangle, then the third rectangle, and on and on. This curved line will quickly develop into what is known as the Fibonacci spiral.

[48] The "Golden mean proportion" in geometry has long been known by visual artists as that which is most aesthetically pleasing to the eye, and paintings, photographs, etc. are often purposely constructed with the most important visual element located at the 2/3 mark for this reason.

As I have explained, the Fibonacci sequence of numbers represents the growth pattern of all living things in nature: the growth pattern of the embryo as it becomes a fetus, then a baby, then a child, then an adult, or of a seed that becomes a seedling, then a plant. The horns of a ram, the spiraling bracts of a pine cone, the whirlpools in the ocean and the storms in the sky also contain this pattern. The golden spiral, sequence and ratio can be found in the visual color spectrum, and in the thirteen-note musical scale. The vibration of each note is the sum of the vibrations of the two notes previous. The structure of a piano keyboard reflects this, with eight white keys, representing whole tones, and five black keys, representing sharps and flats, arranged in groups of threes and two, for a total of thirteen notes in a full octave. This contains the Fibonacci sequence of 2, 3, 5, 8, and 13. The most pleasing pieces of music are those which take full advantage of the Fibonacci relationship, striking a familiar cord with the Fibonacci spiral shape of our own ears, while music that sounds "off" does exactly the opposite. The syntax of words in poetry, in which some combinations of words are more pleasing than others, undoubtedly follows the same principles.

Indeed, the Fibonacci sequence may have been the basis for the original "Aryan" language. A California theoretical physicist named Stan Tenen discovered way back in the 1960s that the Fibonacci spiral is the apparent basis for the Hebrew alphabet, as well as the Greek, Arabic, and Sanskrit alphabets, making it, he theorized, the root of universal language. It all started when he discovered a pattern in the original Hebrew letters of the first sentence of Genesis - a pattern that appeared when he counted the letters in base three. He then placed these letters into geometric shapes based on that pattern. When put into a square shape, with like letters placed next to each other in concentric square rings, the result was what looked like a "bird's eye view" of a seven-stepped ziggurat like the Tower of Babel. When this was then placed upon a torus or "doughnut"-shaped surface, and the excess space stripped away, what Stan Tenen had was a three-dimensional representation of the Fibonacci spiral. This somewhat snakish, flame-like shape Tenen then placed inside of a crystal tetrahedron - a four-sided prism or pyramid. When light was shined through the object in a shadow-box, Tenen found that he could form every single letter of the Hebrew alphabet - in order - just by changing the position of the shape relative to the crystal. With a slightly different orientation, he was able to produce the letters of other alphabets as well. Appropriately, Tenen named the shape the "flame letter."

The name of Stan Tenen's research group, "the Meru Foundation", confirms the relationships between the concept of the world mountain (which Babel was a representation of), the alphabet, and the Golden Mean. "Meru" is the name of the world mountain in Eastern mythology, and it is depicted as forming a perfectly geometric stepped pyramid shape - as though it were artificially made. As Tenen points out in his videotaped lecture entitled Geometric Metaphors of Life, the word "Meru" is also used in Eastern India as a title for the number sequence known here as "Pascal's Triangle" - a whole number representation of the Fibonacci sequence. But most amazingly, Tenen also says that the Hebrew name for their sacred alphabet is none other than "Meruba."

Of course, this connects with the word "Merou", which purportedly was another name for Atlantis; "mer", a word meaning "sea" in many languages; and "Merovingian." It even connects with the name "Mari", a title that was applied to Isis by the Egyptians, and to both Jesus' wife and mother. The word "Magdalene", by the way, comes from the Hebrew “migdol”, which means “tower.” At Rennes-le-Chateau, there is a statue of the Magdalene with four towers on top of a crown upon her head – just as the goddess Cybele was depicted by the ancients. [49]“Cybele” is the same as “the Sibyl”, a figure whose mythos reflects that of the Melusine and Venusberg stories. It is interesting to note that, in 1627, a Sicilian witch interrogated by the Inquisition confessed that she had seen “Sybil” emerge with her fairy entourage from “a cave in the Tower of Babylon.” This connects Cybele, or Venus (the goddess who “lives within a mountain”) to the Tower of Babel.

Stan Tenen also claims that the Great Pyramid at Giza was called “Mera” by the Egyptians. Furthermore, he purports that it was once covered with brilliantly-colored tiles of limestone, also hued in seven bands that matched the seven colors of the rainbow, arranged from top to bottom in order of their temperature: with yellow, orange and red at the top, being warmest, the most “fire-like”, and green, blue, indigo and violet down at the bottom, being the coolest, the most “water-like.” Thus, the pyramid would have been like a massive standing representation of the world mountain reaching up out of the flood waters with fire at its peak. If so, this would make it very similar to the Tower of Babel, for which, according to Jewish legend, each of the seven steps had a different color, arranged just like the rainbow. This again links the Tower of Babel with the idea of a “rainbow bridge to Heaven.” And it is also easy to see how it could have been linked with the language of light, interacting with the stone of light that resided within its recesses.

[49] He also housed his library in a building called the “Tower of Magdala”, and Holy Blood, Holy Grail says that “Shortly before his death he was allegedly planning to build a massive Babel-like tower lined with books, from which he intended to preach.”

This, then, is another permutation of the image of the Tablet of Hermes within the tomb of Hermes – within the world mountain at the center of the Earth – and lit by an inner sun. The stone is the “sun”, the source of light – the “fire within.” That is the nature of the Grail stone, the “hidden stone” of the alchemists. And the Tower of Babel containing it is analogous to the holy mountain containing it, or the Ark containing it during the Flood, making them all symbols of the “Arca” – the “Grail cup” which contains the “Grail stone.” In the case of the Tower of Babel, the stone was perceived to be integral to the structure itself, and when it was removed, the structure collapsed. So the destruction of the Tower of Babel symbolizes the same concept as the loss of the Grail stone, and the loss of the original language. It is the loss of the kingdom of Cain.

Jacob’s Ladder

It seems that certain mythical elements of the Tower of Babel story reappear later on in Genesis, in the story of Jacob and his temple at Bethel. As the story goes, God sent Jacob to a place called “Luz” (“Light”), which was “in the land of Canaan.” Apocryphal tradition says that this was the same spot where his ancestor Abraham had once built “an altar to the Lord”, and where, according to certain Jewish traditions, he had attempted to sacrifice his son Isaac.[50] In Genesis 22:14 it says that Abraham “called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, “In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen”, identifying this location with “the mountain of God.”

The Legends of the Jews tells Jacob’s story in greater detail.:

“Jacob took twelve stones from the altar on which his father Isaac had lain bound as sacrifice, and he said: ‘It was the purpose of God to let twelve tribes arise, but they have not been begotten by Abraham or Isaac. If now these 12 stones unite into a single one, then I shall know for a certainty that I am destined to become father of the twelve tribes.’ At this point a ... miracle came to pass; the twelve stones joined together and made one, which he put under his head, and at once it became soft and downy like a pillow... He dreamed a dream in which the course of world history was unfolded to him."

The content of Jacob's dream about "world history" involved a ladder that reached to Heaven, with "angels" (or "Watchers", in extra-biblical versions of the tale) ascending and descending upon it. At the end of the dream, the "ladder", which is also called a "temple", is destroyed, just like the Tower of Babel. As Louis Ginzberg explains:

"From this wondrous dream Jacob awoke with a start of fright, on account of the vision he had had of the destruction of the Temple. He cried out, 'How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, wherein is the gate of Heaven through which prayer ascends to him."

A similar story is told in Genesis 28:17. These words from Jacob are the same words written above the front door of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau: "This place is terrible! This is none but the House of God, and this is the gate of Heaven."

After he awoke, Jacob then took the stone which he had used for a pillow and "set it up as a pillar", consecrating it with oil that magically poured from Heaven. We read in The Legends of the Jews that after he had set up and anointed the pillar, "God sank this anointed stone into the abyss, to serve as the center of the earth, the same stone, the Eben Shetiyah, that forms the center of the sanctuary, whereof the Ineffable Name is graven..."

However, there is a great deal more evidence to link the story of Bethel with the Tower of Babel. First of all, consider the "ladder to Heaven" which he witnessed. As Freemasonic expert and author Albert Pike wrote in Morals and Dogma, "The word translated 'ladder' is 'salem', from 'salal', raised, elevated, reared up, piled into a heap... a pyramid with seven stages." Other biblical scholars share in this consensus: the "ladder to Heaven" which Jacob saw in his dream was a seven-staged ziggurat reaching to Heaven, just like the Tower of Babel. Even the word "Bethel" is phonetically similar to "Babel." Yet there's more. The word "Beth-El", or "Beith-El", has been translated from the Hebrew as meaning "House of God", and also "Gateway to Heaven" - exactly what the word "Babel" is also said to mean.

Bethel, then, seems to represent much the same thing as the Tower of Babel – a representation of the world mountain, inside of which is a cavity containing the stone from Heaven, the Grail, located in the center of the Earth. And like the Tower, Bethel was thought to be a ladder upon which gods or angels could ascend and descend. Thus, like the world mountain and the Tower of Babel, Bethel's peak (if made in the likeness of the ladder in Jacob's dream) would have "touched Heaven." Perhaps this myth is the source of Judaism's most preeminent symbol, the six-pointed Seal of Solomon. The upward-pointing triangle could represent the mountain or tower, and the downward-pointing triangle could represent the cavern leading to the center of the Earth, and the stone. There is even a common alchemical emblem that seems to confirm this association: a six-pointed star with an "inner sun" drawn at the center of it.

It seems pretty clear then that the ladder to Heaven which Jacob dreamed of was the Tower of Babel. "Bethel", then, perhaps, was the original name of the Tower, before the name was changed in the scrambling of the languages. According to author Rene Guenon in his book The Lord of the World, "Bethel" is also related to "betyle", which he said means, "a stone believed to be the dwelling-place of the deity... Thus this stone must be the true 'divine habitation', the seat of the Shekinah." This concept is further elaborated on in his colleague Julius Evola's The Mystery of the Grail, where he writes: "lapis betillis, or betillus... may be a reference to baitulos, the stone fallen from the sky according to Greek mythology." Jacob built a temple upon his stone, and if he believed that the spirit of God actually lived inside that stone, then his temple would quite literally be a "House of God."

Indeed, there is a Judaic tradition stating that Jacob's pillow stone is none other than the "Rock of Sion" that served as the holy cornerstone for Solomon's Temple. The word "Sion" has been translated as "capitol", or "a sign or landmark"[51], and now is a generalized term for Jerusalem, the Temple Mount, and god himself. But originally it referred to the stone, in which God was believed to live.[52] One author specifically identified it as a "touchstone" which "tests the genuineness and purity of precious metals", a definition which makes Sion sound like the alchemical Philosopher's Stone. There can be no doubt that "Sion" is the stone from Heaven, the Grail stone, and that this is what the Priory of Sion named itself after. This is also the stone which Masons allude to in their rituals, "the hidden stone", the "Lost Stone", or the "stone that was rejected." Jesus identified himself with this "rejected" stone in the Gospels.

Furthermore, there is a cabalistic tradition that the place where Jacob built Bethel, and where Abraham built his altar, is the exact same spot of land where the Temple of Solomon – another "House of God", in which Jehovah Himself was believed to have lived - was later built. In fact, these apocryphal traditions purport that virtually everything of importance in the Old Testament took place in this very spot. As Louis Ginzberg relates:

[51] The word "Sion" is probably related to the word "sign", as well as the words "scion" (meaning "a royal heir"), "son" and "Sun", embodying the idea of the stone that represents the royal Grail bloodline of the "son of the Sun."

[52] In Chretien de Troyes version of the Grail romance, Perceval claims to have been born in Sinadon, which they connect with Valais, Switzerland, the capitol of which was once called "Sidonensis", and is now called "Sion."

"The place on which Abraham had erected the altar was the same whereon Adam had brought the first sacrifice, and Cain and Abel had offered their gifts to God – the same whereon Noah raised an altar to God after he left the ark; and Abraham, who knew that it was the place appointed for the temple, called it Yireh, for it would be the abiding-place of the fear and service of God. But as Shem had given it the name of Shalem, Place of Peace, and God would not give offence to either Abraham or Shem, He united the two names, and called the city by the name Jerusalem."

So not only was Jerusalem identified with the "center-point of the Earth", and said to be the land upon which all of these blessed events took place; it is actually named after a seven-stepped ziggurat – a "salem", such as the Tower of Babel, or Jacob's "ladder" to Heaven/Temple of Bethel. These were all erected as monuments to the stone from Heaven, which is apparently the same as the rock of Sion and the “Lost Stone” of the Freemasons.[53] Perhaps it would be worth looking into the lore surrounding Solomon’s Temple.

The Stone, the Ark, and the Temple

Despite the very specific dimensions detailed in the Bible regarding how many cubits high and wide it was, we really do not know what the Temple of Solomon looked like - only that it was built according to the specifications of Jehovah himself. However, most experts agree that it was built on the foundation of a much older, megalithic-style temple, obviously to another god. Although we do not know for certain that this previous temple took the form of a ziggurat, it would certainly seem to be implied by the name “Jerusalem”, containing that word “salem” which indicates “a seven-stepped pyramid.” Jerusalem was believed to be quite literally the center of the Earth, and throughout the middle ages was depicted on maps as being in the exact mathematical center, with all of the other land masses clustered around it evenly. And just as the Lord was believed to literally be living inside the cornerstone at Bethel, God was believed also to literally reside within the Ark of the Covenant, the Jews' most famous treasure, for which the Temple was supposedly built in the first place. The Temple was built with three concentric chambers, and the Ark was placed in the exact center of the Temple's inner chamber, the "Holy of Holies", right where the "Kaaba stone", supposedly the very Stone from Heaven of both Judaic and Islamic legend, is now placed inside the Dome of the Rock. Interestingly, it is upon this rock that the prophet Mohammed supposedly stood when the archangel Gabriel brought him to Heaven on a "ladder of light."

[53] The prophet Jeremiah, when addressing the Babylonians, said “they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations”, a clue hinting that the Tower of Babel story is illusory, a mask for the story of the real temple erected to the stone from Heaven.

The story of the loss of the Ark of the Covenant, and later of the Temple of Solomon being sacked is, it would seem, yet another manifestation of the archetype of "the Lost Stone", just like the destruction of the Tower of Babel. The rebuilding of the Temple of Solomon later on in the Bible represents the "substitute" concept. The ruined Temple of Solomon is, like the Lost Word, a powerful symbol in Freemasonry.

Jewish legends tell us that King Solomon conscripted the demon Asmodeus, and his entire host of fallen angels, to help him build the Temple of Solomon. Asmodeus is a permutation of Cain/Seth, as well as Satan, and it is interesting that he is here depicted as being the Master Mason behind the creation of this holy shrine. Such mythical elements link it further to the idea of the Tower of Babel/Bethel. The Tower had housed the tablet of Enoch, and the world mountain which preceded it had contained the "Arka" in which the tablet had been kept. The Temple of Solomon was created to house something eerily similar: an Ark (the Ark of the Covenant), which itself contained two tablets, supposedly inscribed by Jehovah himself.

According to the story, Jehovah inscribed "the law" (purportedly the Ten Commandments) with "his own hand", while Moses was meeting with him inside of Mount Sinai. During their meetings, the entire mountain was covered with a cloud described as "the glory of the Lord", and nobody but Moses was allowed into the mountain, for it was said that they would die if they approached it. "And the sight of the glory of the LORD was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel", the text of Exodus states. Interestingly, Moses was not allowed to see Jehovah's face, for he would die if he saw it, although he was allowed to look at the Lord's "back parts." And when Moses descended from the mountain, his face was glowing. All of this serves to indicate that Jehovah was still a light being, and still using an ancient alchemical process to inscribe a message onto the stone using the language of light.

However, when Moses came to present his two divine tablets to his people, he found them in the middle of a Baal-worship ritual, something which Jehovah had forbidden. (It was actually one of the laws written on the tablet!) Upon seeing this, Moses purportedly became so angry that he "sprouted horns" and threw down the tablets, breaking them. Later, Jehovah made him a new set of tablets which he was able to present to the people.

The whole story seems allegorical of the loss of the original tablet of Hermes/Enoch, which, coincidentally, was said to also contain a set of ten laws, these ones pertaining to alchemy. The breaking of the tablets represents the destruction of the Tower of Babel, and the true stone from Heaven becoming occulted or hidden. The new tablets forged by Jehovah represent the false history and religious beliefs promoted by Jehovah and his cultists – the "substitute stone."

At any rate, after the second set of tablets is given to Moses, Jehovah gives him specific instructions for how to create the Ark of the Covenant to put the tablets in. Moses was then told how to build a tabernacle for the elite Hebrew priesthood, in which the Ark could become an object of worship, for Jehovah himself was believed to reside inside that box. But more than that, the Ark, with its tablets inside, and placed in a precise position at the center of the tabernacle, which itself had very precise dimensions, was for the priesthood a way of actually communicating with their God. It worked in conjunction with two objects called the "Urim and Thummin", made out of a very specific array of precious stones, and a "Breastplate of Judgment" worn by the High Priest that was also arrayed with precious stones. These different colored stones would light up in various ways to communicate Jehovah's message to them. In other words, he was speaking to them via the language of light![54]

Jacob's Stone, Judah, and the British Connection

Crystals and other special stones have been used as oracular devices throughout human history. Part of this stems from the idea that a deity might be able to actually reside inside of the stone. Part of it stems from the idea that stones can be used by a deity to communicate, either visually, or even auditorially (for crystals are components in radio transmitters and receivers). From the Middle Ages unto present time, crystal balls have been used for "scrying", or having "spirit visions." Every Merovingian king is known to have used them. And Dr. John Dee, one of the forefathers of modern Western occultism, famously used a crystal ball to divine the "Enochian" or "angelic" alphabet and language, upon which he based his system of "Enochian magic."[55] Dee was instructed to lay out the alphabet, which consisted of strange angles, upon a "Great Table" which resembled a chessboard. This was John Dee's version of the "tablet of Enoch." Perhaps the angles of the letters in this alphabet look so strange because this was Dee's attempt to represent the three-dimensional angles of light that he saw in his scrying stone upon a two-dimensional surface.

[54] Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, claimed to have discovered the Urim and Thummin hidden underground in New York state. He purportedly used them to translate the golden plates of The Book of Mormon, which he also discovered, with the help of the angel Moroni.

This brings to mind a strange possibility that would otherwise seem unthinkable. The being which John Dee contacted dictated to him what was called an "angelic" language made of strange angles. It makes one think about a possible connection between the words "angel" and "angle." The word "angel" comes from a Hebrew word meaning "messenger" – as in, one who speaks the language of light, and can communicate it in verbal language. "Angel" may also be related to Enoch, a.k.a "Anag", or "Ang." The people known as the "Anglos", the English, may be Enoch's descendants. Thus the language of English, or "Angel-ish", would be directly related to the light language.

[55] Incidentally, John Dee is known to have made the search for the Urim and Thummin a lifelong pursuit of his.

A similar opinion was put forth by Berenger Sauniere's friend from Rennes-le-Bains, Abbe Henri Boudet in Le Vrai Langue Celtic (The True Celtic Language), and seconded by modern-day author Jean-Luc Chaumeil in his book Alphabet of the Sun. Chaumeil, as you may recall, was at one time a spokesman for the Priory of Sion. His opinion seems to be backed up by L.A. Waddell, who in The British Edda wrote:

> "I have shown… that the civilized ancient Britons, Anglo-Saxons, Normans and Scandinavians were 'Goths', and that the English language is directly derived from the Gothic… the ancient Swedish language still retains the title of 'sueo-Gothic', and the old name for Denmark is 'Goth-land', and its dialectic 'Jut-land.'"

Amazingly, another name that was once given to Denmark was "Anglin."

The possible identity of the words "gad", "god", "got", "goat", "goth", or "kad", "khat", and "cat" with "jut" or "jud" beings to mind interesting correspondences with the word "Judah." The ancestors of the Anglo-Saxon kings supposedly included Biblical figures such as Judah, Jacob and Isaac, as well as Scandinavian gods like Odin, and the legendary kings of Troy. And you will recall that figures with names and life stories similar to those of Judah, Jacob and Isaac show up on the Chaldean kings' lists. Indeed, there are a lot of Hebrew-sounding words in Old English, on maps of old England, and in the genealogies of its rulers. Author Herbert W. Armstrong has even interpreted the word "Saxon" to mean "Isaac's sons", and "British" to come from the Hebrew "berith", meaning "of the covenant" – referring purportedly to the Israelite covenant with "God."

Jacob in particular is important to the Britons, because it is purportedly this pillow stone – the stone from Heaven which he slept upon, and later founded "Bethel" upon, that the British now use to coronate their kings and queens. They believe it was brought to Ireland some years ago by the prophet, Jeremiah. It eventually migrated to Scotland, where it was used in the coronation of their monarchs, before it was stolen by the English and taken to Westminster Abbey, where it purportedly rests to this very day, inserted in a cubbyhole beneath the British throne. [56]

However, any patriotic Scot will tell you that this stone, which literally looks like a block of masonry, is merely a substitute – a red herring purposely left for the English to take. The real stone (called the [56] In Ireland there is a myth regarding a mythical race of beings called the "Tuadhe Danaan" who came to Earth bearding a magical stone, "the stone of the legitimate kings." They interbred with humans to create the race of Irish kings, bestowing all manner of wisdom and science upon the people. This same mythos also involves a magic cauldron called the "Cup of Dagda" that resembles the Grail cup.

"Stone of Scone" or "Stone of Destiny") is actually much more magnificent, and was hidden away somewhere by its protectors. It will not come out of hiding, they say, until Scotland has her independence. Once again, we have the symbolism of the Grail stone being hidden away and substituted by a fake.

The symbolism is fitting, for the figure of Jacob appears to be a bit of a fake himself. In another famous encounter in Genesis between Jacob and one of the Watchers, he got into a wrestling match with the angel for some reason, and actually managed to overcome him. On that day, he was given a new name: "Israel", meaning "he who has overcome." His previous name of "Jacob" meant in Hebrew "usurper." This alluded to the fact that he had usurped the birthright of his elder brother, Esau, who was starving at the time, by convincing him to sell his birthright for a bowl of porridge. This story mirrors the stories of Jehovah's usurpation of Satan, and Baal's usurpation of Cain. Interestingly, author E. Richmond Hodges writes of the figure of "Kronus or (Saturn), whom the Phoenicians call Israel ...."

It seems to me that this story represents the way that the Jehovahite, "Judaic" bloodline, and the false lineage of kings created by it, usurped and substituted itself for the original heritage and history of Satan, Cain and Enoch. It consists of muddled and corrupted accounts of several different events, all connected by the same mythic essence. There definitely seem to be some allusions to the ongoing battle between Jehovah and Satan, Baal and Cain. Recall that I have likened the Judaic and occult legends of the "fallen kings of Edom" with Baal and the fallen Adamite kings of Eden. The purported father of the Edomite kings is Jacob's brother, Esau, although the most well-known Edomite king was "Bela", Baal, or Abel. The figure of Esau is in every way a Baalite figure, the exact antithesis of Jacob, who in this instance is a Cainite figure. Louis Ginzberg writes in The Legends of the Jews that "it was the angel of Esau who had measured his strength with Jacobs's and had been overcome." And as it just so happens, during Jacob's vision of the ladder to Heaven, at the top of the ladder he saw, according to Ginzberg:

"…Edom mounted very high, saying 'I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High'; and Jacob heard a voice remonstrating, 'Yet thou shalt be brought down to Hell, to the uttermost parts of the pit.' God himself reproved Edom, saying 'Though thou mount on high as the eagle, and though thy nest be set among the stars, I will bring thee down from thence.'"

Thus, the Jewish scribes attempted to blur the story of the fall of Eden/Edom with the fall of Lucifer from Heaven, and the fall of the Tower of Babel/Bethel – typical of Jehovahite propaganda.[57] It is also typical of Jehovahite propaganda that the eldest son (Esau) is cheated out of his birthright, as occurred in the case of Jehovah and Satan, as well as Baal/Abel and Cain. An interesting detail is that, according to The Legends of the Jews, Jacob conned Esau out of another part of his birthright at a later date, in which he purchased Esau's portion of the Cave of Treasures with a large amount of gold. Immediately after the transaction was completed, "God" reimbursed Jacob for what he had paid for it.

The Satanic Secrets of Rennes-le-Chateau

There is another miracle which "God" supposedly performed for Jacob, according to Jewish legend, right before his vision of the ladder to Heaven. This detail is perhaps key to understanding how this story links up with our current inquiry regarding the Merovingians and Rennes-le-

[57] Other angels Jacob saw on the ladder included "the two angels who had been sent to Sodom. For one hundred and thirty-eight years they had been banished from the celestial regions, because they had betrayed their secret mission to Lot."

Chateau. For when Jacob came to Luz and found the stone upon which he was destined to fall asleep, “God” made the sun go down immediately, even though it was “high noon”, so that Jacob could fall asleep and dream his vision. High noon, when the Sun is at its zenith, seems to be an important time of day, as it has come up more than once in my study of these subjects. Hiram Abiff, architect of Solomon’s Temple according to Masonic legend, was said to have been murdered at high noon. Dagobert II was supposedly killed in the woods at high noon on December 23. And in the parchments purportedly found by Berenger Sauniere in his church at Rennes-le-Chateau, the second parchment ends with the words “I destroy this demon guardian at noon.”

The “demon guardian” referred to has always been thought to be the statue of Asmodeus in the church. And Asmodeus, you recall, was the demon who is said by Jewish cabalists to have built Solomon’s Temple (just as the Masons say Hiram did). By placing the demon directly inside of the front door of his church, it is as if Sauniere is likening his church to the Temple of Solomon. And indeed, other actions on Sauniere’s part appear to make this link as well.

Shortly before his death, Sauniere commissioned a custom-made topographical relief map of Rennes-le-Chateau. This item was only discovered recently by author and Grail researcher Andre Douzet, who writes about it in his book Sauniere's Model and the Secret of Rennes-le-Chateau. The author discovered that Sauniere never even saw the map he had commissioned, because he died just before it was finished. Strange indeed. But even stranger are the custom alterations that Sauniere specified on the map. Instead of applying the traditional, known names to all of the landmarks on the map, he had them all changed to reflect the names of prominent landmarks in the Holy Land, such as Gethsemane, the Tomb of Christ, the Tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and Golgotha. We know that the circumstances of Sauniere's death were suspicious. Perhaps he sensed his fate beforehand, or even planned it, and commissioned this map as a posthumous message to future researchers regarding the nature of the mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau.

The word "Golgotha" means "place of the skull", and usually refers to the place where Christ was crucified, which supposedly was littered with the remains of others who had been executed before him. But according to apocryphal tradition, the place was already so named because it was the place where Adam's body, or particularly his head, was placed "in the center of the Earth" after the Flood. The symbol of a skull has turned up repeatedly in this mystery. Mary Magdalene is often shown holding a skull, and is depicted with it twice within the church at Rennes-le-Chateau. On the altar, she is seen sitting with the skull inside of a cave.

A skull (and a particularly large one) is shown in Guercino's original version of Et in Arcadia Ego. The skull in this painting appears to be trepanned, just like the skull of Dagobert II, which is on display in a French museum. Of course, the skull worshipped by the Templars comes to mind as well, revered as an idol of "Baphomet", which represents Cain's reincarnation as Seth. And there is an ominous-looking skull and crossbones over the entrance to the graveyard at Sauniere's church.

Also, on the gate to the graveyard, there is also a strangely altered Masonic symbol, a winged hourglass. Usually depicted with angelic wings, it is meant to represent the ever presence of death, and the fleeting nature of time in one's life. But here it is shown with bat-like, demonic-looking wings. The combination of the time imagery with the Satanic imagery seems to point to Kronos, "Father Time", who is also Satan. The fact that this symbol is shown on the entrance to a graveyard points to the idea of Satan's grave.

Sauniere invoked the imagery of the Tower of Babel as well. As I stated earlier in a footnote, he housed his library in a building called the "Tower of Magdala." Considering that Magdala comes from the Hebrew "migdol" which means "tower" as well, this is a bit like calling it "the Tower Tower", which is a bit odd, unless you consider that he may have been implying the idea of two towers: one the real article, and one a false historical substitute concocted as Jehovahite propaganda. Sauniere again connected Mary Magdalene with the idea of towers when he had a crown containing four of them placed above a statue of her in the courtyard of his church. He intended to create more towers on his property as well, for Holy Blood, Holy Grail says that "Shortly before his death he was allegedly planning to build a massive Babel-like tower lined with books, from which he intended to preach."

According to some researchers, Sauniere and his cult used the Tower of Magdala for sex magic rituals, just as the Tower of Babel had been used. In The Templar Legacy, by Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince, the authors state that:

> "During one of our trips to the area in 1995 we took with us Lucien Morgan, a television presenter and Tantric authority, who was amazed to discover that the Tour Magdala and ramparts were built according to the ancient principles of a certain kind of sex rite. He believes that Sauniere and his secret circle practiced occult sexual rituals that were designed to facilitate clairvoyance, put them in contact with the gods…"

This is exactly what the Tower of Babel, the Temple of Bethel, and the Temple of Jerusalem were built to do.

There seem to be a number of clues linking Rennes-le-Chateau and the surrounding area to various mythical mountains, tombs, and temples said to be located “in the center of the Earth.” The clues discussed in this chapter link it to Solomon’s Temple, Jacob’s ladder and Bethel temple, the Tower of Babel, the tomb of Christian Rosenkreutz (and thus the tombs of Hermes and Osiris), the Cave of Treasures (where all of the biblical patriarchs were buried), and “Golgotha”, where Adam’s skull was purportedly buried after the Flood. All of these places are said to be “in the center of the Earth.” The entire mythos surrounding this area also seems to be saturated with imagery pointing towards Atlantis and Eden, which were, again, said to be in the center of the Earth. I suggest that this is not merely the result of confusion, but of change over time. I submit that this is the result of the migration of something sacred, symbolized by the “Grail stone” which “fell from Heaven.”

As an object of value, and one that, apparently, bestowed power upon those who possessed it, the stone was coveted by all, and thus it had to be moved periodically over the millennia. Sometimes this was done for safety reasons, because it was in danger of being captured or destroyed. Sometimes it was captured, and hidden away by the enemy. Wherever the stone found its home, that place was called "the center of the Earth." It was not the location itself that was important, but what was located there.

According to Julius Evola, the "stone from Heaven" represents the seat of global sovereignty, the foundation stone of the empire of the "Lord of the Earth", Kronos, or Satan. And wherever it was located, that place became the capitol of the empire, the symbolic pole or axis of the Earth. Significantly, while visiting Rennes-le-Chateau several years ago, I was told by the town's mayor that "this place is the center of the Earth."

If the Grail stone were indeed hidden within a mountain at Rennes-le-Chateau, where would it be? In The Book of the Cave of Treasures, the mountain that the Ark of Noah lands upon, and within which the body of Adam is placed, is called "Kardo." Amazingly, this is the name of the tallest mountain in Rennes-le-Chateau – Cardou! This mountain has been the focal point of much Grail hunting, and has been suggested by the authors of The Tomb of God to be the final resting place of Christ. Certain documents published by the Priory of Sion, some written by Pierre Plantard himself, suggest that something called "the Roseline" runs through Mt. Cardou - something which they insinuate was once the "prime meridian line" of the ancient world.

In fact, this is what the word "Kardo" or "Cardou", apparently means. In Ignatius Donnelly's The Antediluvian World, we read:

"The Romans and the Persians called the line of the axis of the globe cardo, and it was to cardo the needle [of the compass] pointed. Now Cardo was the name of the mountain on which the human race took refuge from the Deluge… the primitive geographic point for the countries which were the cradle of the human race. From this comes our word 'cardinal', as in the cardinal points."

The idea of linking Rennes-le-Chateau with the Flood, and with the landing-place of the Ark, seems substantiated by the fact that, as I have discussed, the pilots of the Ark in Greek legend, Deucalion and Pyrrha (a.k.a. Hercules and Pyrene) are purportedly buried somewhere within the mountain range that runs through the area, and that the word "Pyrenees" is probably a corruption of "Parnassus", the mountain upon which Deucalion's ark landed.[58] Also, Rennes-le-Chateau used to be called "Rhedae", and was named after Rhea, who was the mother of both Deucalion and Pyrrha.

This idea receives further support from yet another Priory document, the previously-mentioned poem Le Serpent Rouge. The setting of the poem clearly takes place in Rennes-le-Chateau, and the main character is a mysterious “friend” whom the author describes as “...like the pilot of the imperishable Ark... .” As the poem continues, it makes two mysterious references to “the line of the Meridian” (the “Roseline”). There is also a repeated use of the phrase “deliver me from the mire, so that I do not sink”, another seeming reference to the Flood. Then, towards the end, the narrator states that the sky “opens its floodgates”, a clear allusion to the biblical Deluge. The poem seems to be saying implicitly that Noah landed near Rennes-le-Chateau. This is a document written by the Priory of Sion itself! It is worth noting here the fact that one of the townships near Rennes-le-Chateau, spelled “Arques”, is actually pronounced just like “ark.” Then there is that painting, The Shepherds of Arcadia, which depicts a mysterious tomb within the landscape of Rennes-le-Chateau. In it, the mountain of Cardou is featured prominently.

Does this imply that Cardou is the “Arca-Dia” – the Ark (vessel, prison, or tomb) of “God” (the lord Satan)? Notably the word “Cardou” can, like “Grail” (“Gar-Al”), be broken down into syllables that in certain languages mean “vessel” (“Car”) and “god” (“dou”, which sounds like “dieu”, the French word for “god”). And if Cardou is the location of the sacred tomb supposedly lit by an “inner sun” (the Grail Stone), which Rosicrucians symbolized as a “rose”, this may explain why the meridian which purportedly passes through it is called the “Roseline.”

As I discussed earlier quite briefly, Cardou is but one of five mountains in Rennes-le-Chateau that form, as the research of Holy Blood, Holy Grail co-author Henry Lincoln has proven, a perfectly mathematical pentagram when their peaks are traced on a map. The odds against this occurring naturally are, as one would imagine, astronomically high. However, no one has yet been able to explain how this could have occurred, although, according to the myths of ancient man, the gods of old were quite capable of moving mountains using their light-based technology.

The pentagram has been a sacred symbol for ages, and was the central geometric figure of the Pythagorean mysteries. Its angles embody the Phi ratio and golden mean geometry, and as such this figure appears a great deal in nature, including the human body, which is why Priory of Sion Grand Master Leonardo da Vinci used it as a symbol of the divine proportion in man. The planet Venus, called “the Morning Star” and associated with Lucifer, actually forms a perfect pentagram from the perspective of the Earth as it cycles through its orbit, the only planet in our solar system to display such properties. Given its association with the Luciferian “Morning Star”, and with the hidden mathematical mysteries of nature, we can understand how this symbol has become linked in the modern mind with Satanism.

But recall that the pentagram can be traced back to ancient Sumeria, where it was called the “Ar”, “the Plough Sign”, and was linked to “Aryan” race spawned by Cain and Satan. Furthermore, recall that the word “Ar” also has the secondary meaning of “to shackle or imprison”, which the word “arca” in Latin came to mean as well. Then recall the legends of Satan being imprisoned underground by a pentagram, and the legend that Cain and his descendants were later jailed within an underground realm called “the Arka.”[59] The word “ark” or “arca” also means “tomb.” This prefix is further linked to words regarding secrecy, and digging or hiding things underground, as I have established earlier in this chapter. And Henry Lincoln has found that the tomb in the painting The Shepherds of Arcadia is set within an implied geometrical pentagram.

Is the pentacle of mountains at Rennes-le-Chateau the one that “imprisoned” these figures, and entombed them, occulting their hidden wisdom, written on the stone from Heaven?

In regards to this possibility, I should note something about the phrase “This place is terrible”, written above the door of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau, right next to an etching of a star shooting down from Heaven.[60] This is most definitely a quote from the story of Jacob’s ladder, for above the doorway is also written “This is the house of God and the gateway to Heaven”, which are the same words that follow “This place is terrible” in the Jacob story. However, there is another instance in which the phrase “This place is terrible” appears. In The Book of Enoch, Chapter 21, Enoch is taken by the Watchers to a place where there were:

[59] Even in modern times, pentacles are used in ritual magic to “contain” ethereal entities while evoking them.

“…stars of heaven bound in it together, like great mountains, and like a blazing fire. I exclaimed, For what species of crime have they been bound, and why have they been removed to this place? Then Uriel… answered… These are those of the stars which have transgressed the commandment of the most high God; and are here bound, until the infinite number of the days of their crimes be completed. From there I afterwards passed on to another terrific place; Where I beheld the operation of a great fire blazing and glittering, in the midst of which there was a division. Columns of fire struggled together to the end of the abyss, and deep was their descent. But neither its measurement nor magnitude was I able to discover; neither could I perceive its origin. Then I exclaimed, How terrible is this place, and how difficult to explore!

riel, one of the holy angels who was with me, answered and said: Enoch, why are you alarmed and amazed at this terrific place, at the sight of this place of suffering? This, he said, is the prison of the angels; and here they are kept for ever."

So Enoch said "This place is terrible" when he saw "the prison of the angels." And what does one see as soon as one passes through the door of Sauniere's church, marked by the words "This place is terrible"? Why, an image of the fallen angel Asmodeus bound in chains.

In Andre Douzet's Sauniere's Model and the Secret of Rennes-lee-Chateau, the author discusses the purported last words of Berenger Sauniere: "John 23." He suggests several possible Bible references that this might correlate to. One of them was The Revelation of St. John the Divine, Chapter 20, verses 1-3, which reads:

"Then I saw an angel coming down from Heaven, having the key to the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. He laid hold of the dragon, that serpent of old, who is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years; and he cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal on him, so that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years were finished. But after these things he must be released for a little while."

Recall that in The Legends of the Jews, Louis Ginzberg described how Cain and his descendants purportedly wound up inside the "Arka", writing that "The earth opened her mouth an swallowed up the four generations sprung from Cain – Enoch, Irad, Mehujael, and Mathushael." Five generations. Five kings of the Cainites. Five mountains in the pentagram at Rennes-le-Chateau. Are these things all coincidences?

I submit that the five mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau contain the royal tombs of Cain and the four generations of kings that succeeded him. The tomb of Enoch also contains the tablet of Enoch, which was written on the stone from Heaven – the Holy Grail. It was believed that this stone somehow contained the living essence of Cain's father, Satan, and thus, the Arka was his tomb as well. It was also the "Arka-dia", the "Grail cup", the "Vessel of God" (the true God, Satan). Because of the legend that Satan and the Cainites were imprisoned in the center of the Earth by the other "God", Jehovah, the "Arka" became remembered as a prison as well.

The stone was believed to contain the wisdom of Enoch, and this is the source of the stories about the tombs of Hermes and Christian Rosenkreutz, both of which purportedly contained this treasure. The stone was associated this the alchemical "Philosopher's Stone", and thus the symbol of the “Black Sun”, the “inner sun”, or the “rose” came about - said to light the inner world of Agartha, the tomb of Osiris, and the tomb of Rosenkreutz.

Because this location became the repository of items and people associated with the Flood, the area itself became associated with the Flood, and with Mt. Ararat. It later became a royal capitol[61], and a sacred site, revered by the people who lived in that area, especially those who could trace their ancestry back to the divine kings buried within – the Grail bloodline of the Merovingians. That is how Rennes-le-Chateau became steeped in imagery of holy temples, such as the one in Bethel. And because it was the repository of the “foundation stone”, it became associated with the polar axis, or the “center of the Earth.” This is why the “Roseline” meridian was based upon it.

We know that the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau contain vast networks of mines and other tunnels throughout their interiors, created over thousands of years, many of which have never even been explored in modern times. Many more have been added by treasure seekers looking for a secret passageway to hidden riches. Holy Blood, Holy Grail suggests that Berenger Sauniere may have found, beneath Rennes-le-Chateau

[61] The idea that it was a capitol is strengthened by the fact that it is marked by a pentagram. The capitol of the United States, Washington D.C., has been laid out according to pentagonal geometry by the Freemasons who were put in charge of designing it. Recall that the word “Sion” means capitol also, and Rennes-le-Chateau has been identified with “Sion.”

"… an underground crypt… under a manmade pool ... In fact, a manmade pool does exist near Rennes-le-Chateau – near a site called, appropriately enough, Lavaldieu (the Valley or Vale of God). This pool might well have been constructed over an underground crypt – which, in turn, might easily lead via a subterranean passageway to any of the myriad caves honeycombing the surrounding mountains."

Digging of any kind has been forbidden in Rennes-le-Chateau for decades. It is my belief that if exploration were to continue, someone would eventually find the network of tunnels that leads to the tomb of the Cainites, and to the Grail stone. One is also likely to find an underground shrine or temple built into the mountain by those devoted to Cain and Satan. Furthermore, this network of tunnels probably links up to a larger network spanning the entire region of mountains, including Montsegur, in which one is likely to find other ancient treasures in the same vein.

I believe that many of the locals, including those of Merovingian blood, as well as the Knights Templar and the Priory of Sion, have been aware of the existence of this fantastic underground treasure the whole time. For all these years they have essentially constituted a loosely-linked cult dedicated to revering and protecting the sacred treasure. They are also dedicated to making it once again a foundation stone for an empire ruled by the Grail blood of Cain and Satan. No wonder, then, that they do not want anybody to know about it. No wonder also that groups like the CIA and the Vatican have wanted to control it, for it really could bestow omnipotent worldly power on the right person, if used in the right way.

I realize that most of what has been proposed in this book will seem fantastic to many of you, and of course, it is impossible to prove any of this at the present time. But I do believe that, regardless of the truth or falsehood of the theory itself, I have made a convincing case that this, or something like this, is what the Templars, the Priory of Sion, and the Merovingians have believed about Rennes-le-Chateau and the Grail. I have also proven that there is a consistent theme running through occult lore, through the Bible, and through world mythology. This theme revolves around a royal, divine bloodline that can only be described as Satanic, and an underground repository for a sacred "stone from Heaven" which somehow contains that bloodline's right of sovereignty. This repository is said to be a mountain located "in the center of the Earth." There is sufficient evidence that the south of France has been the repository at one time, and may continue to be.

Whether you believe it or not, this theory, or something very similar, is embraced by the Priory of Sion, an organization that has counted some very elite people amongst its membership, and is purportedly a hidden but significant force behind European politics. To corroborate their belief in these ideas, we turn to the writings of Pierre Plantard, and the publications of his Priory-linked fraternal order, Alpha Galates.

Chapter Seven – The Enigma Decoded

“Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.”

- Matthew 7:7 – 7:8

Unanswered Questions

When I began my investigation, I was dealing with a mystery that had been explored ad infinitum by hundreds of previous authors, and yet it seemed to me that few of the most fundamental questions had been satisfactorily answered. What secret did Berenger Sauniere stumble across at Rennes-le-Chateau that not only made him fabulously rich, but caused an untimely death, and caused him to be refused Final Unction at his death? What could possibly have captured the devotion of men like Godfroi de Bouillon, Nicolas Flamel, Rene d’Anjou, Botticelli, Leonardo da Vinci, Robert Fludd, Robert Boyle, Isaac Newton, Charles Nodier, Victor Hugo, Claude Debussy, and Jean Cocteau, holding these diverse figures in a common bond of brotherhood stretching over an entire millennium? Why were men like Cardinal Mazarin, Louis XIV, Philippe the Fair, and Pope John XXIII so obsessed with this secret? Why did the bloodlines stemming from the Merovingian kings appear to consider themselves sacred, with a divine mandate to rule, and why would others, apparently not themselves of the bloodline, share this conclusion? Why are there, and exactly how is it that there are, five mountains at Rennes-le-Chateau in the shape of a perfect pentagram? And what does the secret of Rennes-le-Chateau have to do with the traditions of Freemasonry, Rosicrucianism, or heretical sects of Christianity? Then add to these questions the numerous other riddles, coded messages, strange bits of imagery and metaphor associated with the Rennes-le-Chateau saga that had never been properly explained when I first began my research. Twenty years after the publication of Holy Blood, Holy Grail, I believe I have made much more substantial progress towards answering these questions than anyone else in this field of research, except, of course, for the originators: Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh, and Henry Lincoln.

Most of the authors who have written on this subject since the publication of Baigent, et. al.'s monumental classic have chosen to focus their efforts on picking apart minor details of the theories presented in that book, while never offering any convincing counter-explanations for the phenomenon that is Rennes-le-Chateau. Many are desperate to somehow "prove" that Pierre Plantard and company are charlatans, that the Priory of Sion is a hoax, and ergo, there is no mystery to be found at Rennes-le-Chateau. Even Henry Lincoln himself has chosen now to ignore all aspects of the mystery which pertain to the Priory of Sion or the Merovingians, and to focus solely on the pentagonal geometry that he has discovered (although he also refuses to speculate on the meaning, purpose, or origin of the geometry).

However, I have chosen not to share in what I consider to be a pseudo-intellectual pursuit: debunking. And while I have maintained a healthy amount of skepticism throughout my research, I see no gain in obsessing over minutia or trying to impress my scholarly colleagues with how critical I can be. I do not pretend to know for a fact whether or not the modern Priory of Sion really does possess the ancient pedigree or political connections that it has boasted of, but I do think that they must be the bearers of some genuine secret pertaining to Rennes-le-Chateau. After all, they were the keepers of the parchments in which Lincoln first discovered the geometry that he later applied to the landscape of Rennes-le-Chateau - the only aspect of the mystery which Lincoln considers to have any value. Whether they concocted it themselves or whether they had been preserving it since Sauniere's time, the fact remains that they were the possessors of these documents.

Furthermore, I cannot ignore the inner logic of the theories presented in the "Prieure documents" discussed in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, which largely formed the basis for the hypothesis presented in that book. The theories linking the Merovingian bloodline with the Judaic line of Christ and King David, and then linking the Merovingians' descendants with the Knights Templar, the Ordre de Sion, the Rosicrucians, the Compagnie du Saint-Sacrement, the Hieron du Val d'Or, the Freemasons, the French Resistance, and the modern Priory of Sion - these theories are too logical and well-argued to ignore. I think that the authors of Holy Blood, Holy Grail, prompted by the material published by the modern Priory of Sion, properly identified a cult of heretical Christianity, linked with various secret hermetic societies throughout the centuries, and linked politically with the same influential European families throughout the centuries. They clearly established at least one facet of what the cult believed: that certain European noble bloodlines were derived from Christ, King David, and the patriarchs of the Bible. They also clearly established the connection between this cult and the region of Southern France surrounding Rennes-le-Chateau.

Those less critical souls who have chosen to pursue the mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau (as opposed to those who see no mystery in it at all) have still elected to go with the theory presented in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, that the body of Christ is the treasure buried beneath Rennes-le-Chateau. In this view, the secret which has been the cause of so much angst for over a thousand years is this: that Christ did not die on the cross, and that he wed Mary Magdalene, fathering with her a royal bloodline in what is now Southern France. These people further assert that this was the impetus behind all of the heretical cults and secret societies associated with the saga of Rennes-le-Chateau. While this theory does explain how the secret of Rennes-le-Chateau could have been considered heretical in the time of the Templars, and even, to a lesser extent, in Sauniere's time, it does not explain why such ideas would be considered so now, and thus, why they would need to be kept secret. Why then, do none of the people who clearly know the secret reveal it? In an era where Christ has been called gay, Black, female, a non-existent archetype, and everything else, the suggestion that he may have been married, or that the story of his death might diverge from the biblical narrative seems mild indeed. Extremely conservative Catholics and Protestants might get upset for a short time, as they did when Holy Blood, Holy Grail was first published. But in the larger scope, this is not the kind of thing at which the general public would bat an eyelash. Holy Blood, Holy Grail, and the many books that followed, have over the years presented numerous clues contained within the Rennes-le-Chateau mystery, including the Priory of Sion documents, hinting that Christ's tomb can be found at Rennes-le-Chateau. It does appear to me that this is one of the conclusions Berenger Sauniere and Pierre Plantard wanted us to come to. But it also appears to me that this is not an end in and of itself, but merely another clue pointing towards something larger.

Many chroniclers have written about the cult of Mary Magdalene, and the statues of the Black Madonna that they believe represent her, claiming that she was revered in secret as the wife of Christ. These same writers also link Magdalene and the Black Madonna to the goddess Isis, or Venus. They then go on to state that Christ and Magdalene were the high priest and priestess of a sex magic cult continuing the mysteries of Isis - one that has since been corrupted into the form of modern Christianity. The association of Rennes-le-Chateau with this cult is, some believe, further indication that Christ and Mary Magdalene are buried in the village.

I have no reason to disagree with this. It does seem that Christ and Mary Magdalene were the leaders of such a cult, and that they shared a sort of alchemical union, embodying the ancient principles of hierogamy and sex magic. The alchemical nature of their wedding ceremony at Cana, where water is transformed into wine, is obvious. And the notion that Christ and Magdalene were laid to rest together at Rennes-le-Chateau is not one that I can or would wish to refute. But if Christ and Magdalene patterned their own images after Cain and Venus, taking on the exact same symbolism, does it not seem then that the iconography of Christ and Magdalene could be used as a coded reference for older gods? In other words, when we see clues at Rennes-le-Chateau indicating that Christ and Magdalene are buried there, could these clues really be saying that ancient god-kings and queens are buried there? Such an idea would explain the extreme secrecy that has surrounded this mystery, the controversy that it has sparked, and the interest that it has held for some of the world's most powerful men for the last 1000 years. It would explain why it is considered "heretical" and dangerous even by modern standards. This is truly a "secret which kings would have pains to draw." The discovery of this secret could have colossal consequences for the entire civilized world.

To find the remains of gods, or semi-divine descendants of gods, who have features different than what we would call "human", would cause us to reevaluate our entire understanding of things like: biology, anthropology, archeology, history itself, and of course, our religious beliefs. We would then have no doubt that all which we know as "civilization" has a common antediluvian origin – that it was brought to us by these gods and their descendants. It would be especially shocking to learn that the true heritage of Jesus "Christ" and the "Grail blood" was actually Satanic in nature; or to learn that Satan's descendants, the Cainites, and their descendants, the Grail family, have played a very decisive role in shaping the course of history. It was they who brought civilization, as well as every kind of wisdom and enlightenment, to mankind, so many years ago. I can only assume that the tradition is being carried on by their descendants, those of the Grail blood, in a secret, obscure fashion. The Priory of Sion would appear to most definitely be a manifestation of this.

Furthermore, the discovery of a vast underground realm, such as that proposed, of which these tombs would be but a part, could hold secrets beyond our wildest dreams. There we would find remnants of a world that dates back to the gods themselves. We would learn all about their technology, their beliefs, their customs, their history, things which eventually became our technology, beliefs, customs, and history. If we can actually find and decipher the Grail stone there (the "Gor-al", or "precious engraved stone", which is also the tablet of Enoch/Hermes), we will be able to read this history as one reads a book. Perhaps we, like our ancestors before us, could actually use the stone to communicate with the deities themselves. Who knows: there could even still be Cainites living underground, the source of the myths of elves, fairies, Djinn, and the like.

I was satisfied with my hypothesis. Although there was no way of proving it, I thought I had done the best job of any Grail/Rennes-le-Chateau researcher so far at penetrating the heart of the mystery. The final step involved simply reviewing one more time (and in some cases, for the first time) the numerous clues left by the Priory of Sion, Berenger Sauniere, and other secret initiates, to see if I could now interpret these clues in the light of my hypothesis.

The City of the Alpha

As I entered the final stages of my research into the mysteries of the Grail, the Merovingians, and Rennes-le-Chateau, something was still troubling me. Although I had followed the clues to what seemed like an obvious conclusion regarding these matters, it bothered me that many of the subjects that I had linked to the Grail and Merovingian mythos had not even been mentioned in those textbook tomes Holy Blood, Holy Grail and The Messianic Legacy. If the subjects of Atlantis, subterranean realms, and the Black Sun were indeed connected to the Grail lore and the Rennes-le-Chateau mystery, would not the Priory of Sion have at least hinted at it somewhere along the line?

The answer to this question came when I discovered, on the website of Mr. Paul Smith[62], his excellent translations of the articles that appeared in Vaincre, the wartime journal published by the Order of Alpha Galates and edited by their Grand Master, Pierre Plantard, supposedly before he joined the Priory of Sion. However, as I have said, it is apparent that the Priory and Alpha Galates were one and the same. Vaincre, therefore, is a Priory document. And what these articles said confirmed my suspicions beyond my wildest imaginings.

Alpha Galates, as revealed by Vaincre, obviously believed in Atlantis, and in the Atlantean origin of the French race. In fact, Alpha Galates claimed to be perpetuating the Atlantean tradition, which was also practiced, they said, by the Druids. In an article by "Le Comte de Moncharville" entitled The East and the West, it is written that:

"...France, through Brittany, was also familiar with the Atlantean tradition, of which the Druidic cult (with its sacrifices to the Sun, the ceremony of mistletoe, menhirs and dolmens, and institutions of chivalry) is merely the survival. ... When Catholicism chased the Druids out of Gaul, some of the monks collected together the Atlantean traditions and formed the Alpha, which then split into two branches: the Cistercians, who adopted Christianity, and the Chivalric Order of Galate, which preserved the Atlantean tradition."

De Moncharville's assertions match those expressed in a book called Preadamites, cited by Ignatius Donnelly's Atlantis: The Antediluvian World (although the author of the book is nowhere mentioned.) The passage cited reads:

"The Gauls possessed traditions upon the subject of Atlantis which were collected by the Roman historian Timagenes, who lived in the first century before Christ. He represents that three distinct people dwelt in Gaul: 1. The indigenous population, which I suppose to be Mongoloids, who had long dwelt in Europe; 2. The invaders from a distant island, which I understand to be Atlantis; 3. The Aryan Gaul."

The source of the word "Galates" in "Alpha Galates" probably has to do with the word "Gaul", the ancient name for the area that is now France. "Alpha Galates" would then probably mean "source of the Gauls", with "Alpha" indicating the "beginning" or "source." The source of the Gaulish race, they claimed, is Atlantis, and is Druidic as well. Interestingly, the same claim was made by the psychic Edgar Cayce, who said that Atlanteans fleeing the Flood had escaped to the Pyrenees. The word “Gal”, by the way, means “navigator” in Hebrew.[63] And “navigator” is the title given to the grand masters of the Priory of Sion.

Another article from Vaincre, entitled The ‘Southern Cross’ - Rallying Point for the Pure of Heart, by Auguste Brisieux, connects Atlantis directly to France, specifically the province of Brittany, and describes in fantastic terms Atlantean civilization, as well as its downfall. It states:

“Lemuria, a small country situated on the ancient continent on Atlantis, of roughly the same size as our Brittany, and which is now no more than the vestige of a thousand years of history, rich in spiritual, moral and intellectual glory, of which the Southern Cross was the national emblem, appears to us today to be shrouded in mystery, a mystery that many legends have helped preserve. In reality, however, this was the Land of Initiates, and whereas we ourselves are still in our infancy the Lemurians already knew about the power of the waves, the laws of the Cosmos and karmic cycles - they knew both how to govern and how to obey... This great continent collapsed into materialism, fell prey to the dark forces, rejected the rule of law, destroyed its temples and [its people were] massacred in large numbers, although those who survived succeeded in establishing themselves on our present continent, in our Brittany. But for men, as for nations, the law of karma exists - Atlantis, submerged beneath the putrefying flames, suffered the penalty for its sins. However, the Southern Cross, a constellation of the Southern Hemisphere... remained the happy insignia of the great initiates of the West.”

The symbol of the octopus, which appears on the tombstone of Marie de Blanchefort in Rennes-le-Chateau, and also within the pages of the Priory of Sion’s Secret Dossiers, is another symbol of Atlantis, it seems. It can be found at the end of an article about the Hieron du Val d’Or (translated in an appendix to this book), and is actually lifted from a book by Paul le Cour called The Age of Aquarius. The article is dated June 24th, 1926, which is the same date upon which the French Magazine Atlantis was founded. This was a magazine edited by Le Cour, which, it is said, the Priory of Sion published.[64] In The Age of Aquarius, the octopus is referred to as “a symbol of the primitive tradition.” By “primitive”, they probably just mean “original” or “primordial”, for they saw the Atlantean tradition as the most pure. In one of the issues of Vaincre, a quote from Paul le Cour is included which states: “...When a stream is polluted it is necesary, if you are to find pure water, to go back to the source. It's the same with tradition - it only remains pure at its origin." This "stream" of tradition is the "underground stream" of the Grail lore.

[64] This date is also St. John’s Day, a high holy day in Freemasonry. Recall also that the Priory of Sion grand masters take on the title “John” upon assuming office.

And it is underground where the publishers of Vaincre see the remains of the Atlantean tradition, preserved in subterranean cities populated by an advanced race who use an advanced light-based technology.[65] In The East and the West, by Le Comte de Moncharville, is a most astounding passage:

"During the mission to Tibet I succeeded in making contact - while I was in Lhasa, in the Forbidden City of Agartha, which is the seat of the Government of the Living Buddha, the 'Dalai Lama' - with several monks of the great monastery there. During the several years that my mission to Lhasa lasted I managed to win the confidence and friendship of them all, and I learned what probably no other initiate of the West has ever known, compared to which the famous Secret Doctrine of H.P. Blavatsky seem only a fragment of the truth. When I was on the point of leaving, the monks led me along seemingly interminable staircases carved into the mountain into a veritable underground town located underneath the temples. And there they gave me a glimpse of the collection of objects that had been brought from Atlantis before the catastrophe there.

Then I visited the Sanctuary of the Dragon, where, for the first time since the Orient, I attended a ceremony of a Superior Rite, and finally, during my last few days there, I had the opportunity to contemplate electrical machines of a kind unknown today, which had been brought from Atlantis and which made it possible to impart to the subterranean rooms a light and atmosphere that was exactly the same as that of the open air, which had so surprised me during my first visit to the heart of the mountain. These machines were also used by the 'Dalai Lama' to erect around the Forbidden City of Agartha magnetic barriers that prevented undesirable strangers from penetrating therein."

De Moncharville even hints that the Sanctuary contains the key to an ancient and universal language:

"What most caught my eye was a collection of indecipherable signs covering the largest part of the granite walls of the 'great work'. Seeing my perplexity, one of the Masters of the Secret hastened to explain to me, to help me understand, that only three symbols were sovereign, and that these formed the unity of all symbols."

The symbols which he then shows are a plus sign, a zero, and a closed parenthesis, which he says correspon to "atom, spark, and wave."

This massive underground structure, "the Sanctuary of the Dragon", was, according to Le Comte de Moncharville, constructed by "Galatean knights", precursors of the Knights Templar who were the preservers of the Atlantian tradition, and the originators of chivalry. He writes:

> "...they worked the But-Or ('the Gold Mines') and constructed below-ground the city of the Alpha, the biggest city in the world, and completed ... the Sanctuary of the Dragon on one of the Mounts of the Dragon. Then, in the year 812, they suddenly disappeared. Some days later, amid a rumble of thunder, the sea covered the places where the last Atlanteans had lived. From this time onward, only one of the Mounts of the Dragon, towering above the waves, remained to provide evidence, through the existence of its sanctuary, of the activities of the Galatean[66] knights."

Le Comte de Moncharville reveals the location of the Sanctuary to be, once again, the French province of Brittany, and the "Mounts of the Dragon" are actually located on the site currently known as Mount St. Michel, where Saint Michael supposedly defeated "the Dragon", who is Satan. You will recall that I have suggested that this story is based upon the ongoing battle between Jehovah and Abel on the one hand , and Satan and Cain on the other. Michael, of course, represents Jehovah and Abel, whose title of "Moloch" (as in "Baal-Moloch") is the root of the name "Michael." The Dragon, of course, represents Satan and Cain. And what did Michael do with the Dragon after he defeated him? Well, he chained him up and imprisoned him within the bottomless pit, of course. Once again, the idea of Satan's underground prison is evoked in regards to a mountain in France. And here it is being written of in a magazine published by Priory of Sion Grand Master Pierre Plantard.

What's more, Mt. St. Michel is just one of several mountains which form what one author has called "the Saint Michael line": a series of sacred sites (all named after Saint Michael) that can be connected in a straight line. They are located in Jerusalem, Greece, Brittany and Cornwall. Those in England and France are placed far enough off the coast that they constitute islands. English legends state that the coastal island of Saint Michael's Mount was actually constructed by giants long ago.[67] According to the Priory of Sion's Secret Dossiers, Mont. St. Michel in Brittany once served as one of their commanderies.

Brittany is also the location of a site of megalithic standing stones, in a place called Carnac, very similar to the name of an ancient Egyptian city, Karnak. According to H.P. Blavatsky, "The Egyptian Karnak is twin brother to the Carnac of Bretagne, the latter Carnac meaning the Serpent's Mount."

At any rate, Moncharville continues his amazing description of this underground temple in Brittany which he called "the Sanctuary of the Dragon":

> "The Sanctuary of the Dragon was not abandoned - a new monastery was constructed on its site. And so, beneath the crypt located underneath the flagstone of the Galatean Knights, a crypt more ancient still, dating from this period, gives access to the old Sanctuary. It was through the Sancutary of the Dragon that the first knights passed to meet with the subterranean dwellers, who led them to the heart of the Breton crypts 379 meters down, in the City of the Alpha, where the Temple of Aga[68] was located. Is this still the only entrance to the City of the Alpha? No, but it is very certainly the oldest."

When I first read the above-quoted passages, I was absolutely astounded. For whatever reason, Baigent, et.al. had chosen to ignore this information completely.[69] But now I had corroboration directly from the publications of the Priory of Sion that they believed in underground cities like Agartha, the fabled city located in the center of the Earth, which they maintained was built by Atlanteans, and that the oldest entrance to this vast underworld was located in France. This passageway was thought to reach to the center of the Earth, and not just far underground, as indicated by a line from Moncharville's article which reads:

"Finally, in the Round Table, my guide pointed something out to me. I immediately approached it, as I had racognized the small round altar of Lhasa, but here there were some voices that I had already heard, nonetheless muffled, as if they came from the center of the earth."

[69] When asked, Henry Lincoln told me that they excluded mention of these subjects in Holy Blood, Holy Grail because they exist in "realms of pure speculation, wishful thinking and fantasy."

So then, I thought, if such a thing exists in Brittany, many miles to the North and on the other side of France, why could there not be something similar at Rennes-le-Chateau? From the above-quoted passages, one line in particular struck me as odd: “And so, beneath the crypt located underneath the flagstone of the Galatean Knights, a crypt more ancient still, dating from this period, gives access to the old Sanctuary.” For in the Church of Saint Magdalene in Rennes-le-Chateau, it was underneath “The Knight’s Flagstone” that Sauniere discovered, soon after finding the parchments, an underground crypt. He was extremely secretive about it, and would not allow the workmen who helped him lift the stone to see what was underneath it. It is believed that the “Knight’s Flagstone” depicts Templar Knights because two of them are seen seated on the same horse, an earmark of the Templars. But the flagstone is badly damaged, and the knights are very crudely depicted anyway, making it unclear exactly what sort of people they are. Perhaps the “Knight’s Flagstone” was placed there as a clue, mimicking the flagstone of the Galatean knights in Brittany. Perhaps, like its Breton cousin, it conceals an entrance to a subterranean realm – one that includes the Grail stone and the graves of the Cainites. Such a conclusion definitely seems to be hinted at here, in the text of literature published by the Priory of Sion’s own front organization.

Dagobert II: The Return of the King

The life and death of Dagobert II seems quite ritualistically significant in the context of my hypothesis. Like Christ, Dagobert appears to have modeled every aspect of his image upon that of mythological heroes from the past. His entire life, as historically recorded, is mythological and archetypal. The word “dag” means, in ancient languages, “fish”, while “ber” can mean “priest”, or “house, temple.” Therefore “Dagobert” could be rooted in syllables meaning “Priest of Dagon”, “Priest of the Fish”, or “Priest of the Temple.” That he was also called “Dragobert” evokes the image of Satan as “the Dragon.” Indeed, from the very beginning his life embodied the mythos of a fallen king who has returned – an archetype based upon the prototype of Cain dying and being reborn as Seth. You will recall that his father had been assassinated when he was five, and that he had been kidnapped by his family’s enemies. They sent him into exile in Ireland, while an elaborate ruse was concocted to make everyone believe that he was dead. There he lay in wait for the opportunity to reclaim his father’s throne.

This opportunity showed itself in the year 671, when he married Giselle de Razes, daughter of the count of Razes and niece of the king of the Visigoths, allying the Merovingian house with the Visigothic royal house. This had the potential for creating a united empire that would have covered most of what is now modern France. The marriage was celebrated at the Church of Saint Magdalene in Rhedae, the same spot where Berenger Sauniere's Church of Saint Magdalene at Rennes-le-Chateau now rests. It is said that Dagobert found something there: a clue which led him to a treasure buried in nearby Montsegur. This treasure supposedly financed what was about to come: the re-conquest of Aquitaine and the throne of the Frankish kingdom. As Baigent, et. al write in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, "At once he set about asserting and consolidating his authority, taming the anarchy that prevailed throughout Austrasia and reestablishing order." The fallen king had risen from his ashes, born anew as Dagobert II, and had come to once more establish firm rule and equilibrium in his country. The similarities to the Parsifal/Grail story, where the Fisher King dies and the Grail knight becomes the new king, are fairly clear.

I have discussed, since the time of the Merovingian King Clovis I, the Merovingian Kings had been under a pact with the Church, in which they had pledged their allegiance in exchange for Papal backing of the their united empire of Austrasia. They would forever hold the title of "New Constantine", a title that would later morph into that of "Holy Roman Emperor." But that allegiance on the part of the Merovingians towards the Church began to wear thin after a while. Obviously, given their infernal and divine origin, their spiritual bent was slightly different from that of organized Christianity. In addition, as direct descendants of Jesus, they would have possessed access to the secret teachings of Christ, no doubt shockingly different from the ones promoted by the Church, and reflecting more of the "secret doctrine" of Satan and the Cainites that I have talked about in this book. Any public knowledge of this would have been disastrous for the Church. Seeing in Dagobert a potential threat, they conspired with his enemies to assassinate him on December 23. He was stabbed through the left eye, purportedly by his own godson.

There are many aspects to this event that appear to be mythologically significant. For one thing, it may have taken place on a hunting expedition in the "Forest of Woevres", long held sacred, and host to annual sacrificial bear hunts for the goddess Diana. Indeed, the murder may have taken place on such a hunt. This bears a close similarity to the purported death of Cain, who according to Jewish legends died in a hunting accident in the forest, killed by his descendant, Lamech. The forest that Dagobert died in was located near the royal Merovingian residence at Stenay, a town that used to be called "Satanicum" (perhaps named after Dagobert's ancestor, Satan). We must also consider the date itself, which is close to the Winter Solstice, the shortest day in the year, when the ancients believed the Sun died and turned black, descending into the underworld. That date was also almost precisely at the beginning of the astrological period of Capricorn, and traditionally marked the beginning of the pagan festival of Saturnalia, a debaucherous ritual celebrating the powers of Saturn (Satan) that were believed to rule during the time of Capricorn. The murder is further said to have taken place at the ritualistically important time of midday.

The fact that the murder was committed by a family member is significant too. Not only does this match the circumstances of Cain's death, but it is also similar to the "Dolorous Stroke" that wounded the Fisher King in the Grail story, something which also took place at midday and was inflicted by the king's own brother. In this story, the brother who wounds the Fisher King is known as the "Dark Lord", and during the fight he is wounded in the left eye, precisely as Dagobert was wounded. The same thing happened to Horus in Egyptian mythology, fighting his uncle, Set. The "Left Eye of Horus" came to symbolize the hidden knowledge of the gods, and, as I have shown, represents the Grail stone. Thus, Dagobert's death appears to follow the same patterns as many other fallen kings or murdered gods whose deaths are considered ritualistically symbolic, and who it is believed will one day rise again. These deaths are meant to symbolize the concept of the lost or fallen kingdom (the golden age), just as the Dolorous Stroke does in the Grail story.

Clearly, Dagobert's death meant the end for the Merovingian kingdom. All subsequent Merovingian kings were essentially powerless, and they were officially thought to have died out with Childeric III. But as we know, in 872, almost 200 years after his death, Dagobert was canonized as a Saint, and the date of his death, December 23, became "Saint Dagobert's Day." Like the skull depicted in Guercino's Et in Arcadia Ego, Dagobert's skull was ritually trepanned, and became - like the skulls of Adam, Cain (Baphomet), and John the Baptist, a religious idol - believed to have fetishistic powers of protection.

Sauniere's Saga Revisited

Seen in the light of what I have so far gleaned, mysterious tombstone of Marie de Blanchefort gives forth new meaning. On the sides of the stone, as we know, the message "Et in Arcadia Ego" is inscribed, using a mixture of Greek and Latin letters. I have already discussed how this can be seen as a reference to the "Arka" - the tomb of the Cainites which I believe to be beneath Rennes-le-Chateau. I have also discussed how the term "Arcadia" applied to the Greek notion of Paradise. Furthermore, the word "Etin" (the first four letters in the phrase) was once an alternate spelling of "Eden", the Judeo-Christian notion of Paradise. Both of these things symbolize "the center of the Earth", and the golden age of the gods. But on the Blanchefort tombstone, the message actually reads: "Et in Arx Adia Ego." The words "Arx" and "Adia" are separated so as to emphasize "Arx." This word, in Latin, means "a fortress, citadel, or stronghold." This points to the idea that there is an entire subterranean complex built around the tombs beneath Rennes-le-Chateau, which at one time had multiple functions, and that this location may once have been the capitol of an empire. This leads us directly to the message "Reddis Regis Cellis Arcis" in the center of the stone. The word "Reddis" is supposed by most researchers to be derived from the old name of Rennes, which was once called "Rhedis", "Redis", or "Rhedae", named after the goddess Rhea, who was the mother to the two Greek Flood heroes. Meanwhile, "Rennes" means "reins" in French, and may perhaps be a name derived from the belief that the Cainites and Satan were imprisoned or shackled within his tomb. But "reddis" is also a Latin word meaning "you return" or "you restore", from which the French "rendre" and the English "render" are derived. "Regis" means "royal, "Cellis" means "a basement or cave", and "Arcis" means the same thing as "Arx": a fortress, or an "ark", in the sense of a box or enclosure. Thus the statement being made here is "Return to (or Restore) the Cave of the Royal Ark." The words at the bottom of the stone, "Prae-Cum", imply the notion of "the time before", indicating the antediluvian golden age. The octopus symbol below it, as we have learned, represents "the primitive solar religion of Atlantis" - that it, the primeval religious tradition that defined the Golden Age. Even the person whose grave the stone was supposedly made for, Marie de Negre de Blanchefort, whose name means "Black Marie of the White Fort", appears to be used in this context as a symbol of the goddess archetype of Isis or Venus, queen of the Golden Age. But we know that this was not Marie de Blanchefort's real grave, which was actually located in the crypt beneath the church at Rennes-le-Chateau. The faux gravestone was simply a clue left for Berenger Sauniere by his predecessor, Abbe Bigou, as a clue about the sacred tombs within the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau.

The letters "P" and "S" are at the top of the stone, surrounded by a Fibonacci spiral. The same "P", "S", and spiral can be found at the bottom of the first parchment found by Sauniere. These letters, presumably, stand for "Priory of Sion." At the bottom of Parchment Two, the word "SION" is spelled backwards, and the "O" has a dot in the middle, causing it to resemble the astrological sign for the Sun – which points again to the idea of a hidden sun within the sacred tomb. As I looked at these clues again, with the benefit of all of the research I had already done, I began to see the secret which these clues pointed to. A pertinent line from Le Serpent Rouge reads: "I pivot, looking from the rose from P to that of the S, the from the S to P…" I began to wonder if this line, the "P", "S", and spiral, as well as the word "SION" spelled backwards were all clues telling me to transpose the letters in the words "Prieure de Sion." I eliminated the article "de" and with little effort, came up with "Pieurrenois", which, when pronounced with a French accent, would sound very much like "Pyrenees." The first syllable in "Pieurrenois" - "Pieurre" - is similar to "Pierre", the French word for "rock." Of course, the first syllable of "Pyrenees" – "Pyr" - means "Fire." This indicates that the "rock of Sion", the "fire-stone from Heaven", can be found at Rennes-le-Chateau.

The message of the second parchment also took on an enhanced meaning now that I knew what I did. The words "Shepherdess - No Temptation, that Poussin and Teniers hold the key" would seem to be, perhaps, the most straightforward aspect of the message. "Shepherdess" and "Poussin", as we know, refer to Poussin's painting, "The Shepherds of Arcadia." However, the translation of the words "gardent la clef" as "hold the key" could perhaps be more accurate. "Gardent" really means "guard", rather than just "hold", and while "clef' does mean "key", it is a word also used to mean "keystone." So the parchment really tells us that "Poussin and Teniers guard the keystone", meaning they know the location of the stone from Heaven, which has been used as the keystone to a sacred temple at least once, if not several times (including the Tower of Babel, the Temple of Bethel, and the Temple of Solomon). Poussin's painting, The Shepherds of Arcadia, seems to point not only to the golden age of the gods, but to the "Arka-dia", the tomb of the forgotten God (Satan) and his children (the Cainites). The Poussin painting shows the tomb to be located in Rennes-le-Chateau, within the pentacle of mountains.

The David Teniers painting mentioned by the parchments is assumed by Henry Lincoln to be Saint Anthony and Saint Paul, the only Teniers painting featuring Saint Anthony which does not show him enduring his famous temptation by demons - thus the words "no temptation." In this painting, the two saints are sitting in front of an altar upon which stands a crucifix and a skull. This, again, points toward the location of the sacred tomb, "the place of the skull", or Golgotha. The painting shows one saint pointing up towards a descending dove that is carrying the holy host, a representation of the Grail stone.

The words "peace 681" proved more difficult to decipher. I could only note that 681 was the year that Sigisbert IV, Dagobert's son, was purportedly smuggled into the Languedoc region to perpetuate the Merovingian bloodline in exile, and to become the first of the Plantard line. It is suggested that Sigisbert stayed with his mother Giselle de Razes at Rennes-le-Chateau. Perhaps, I thought, this date was associated with "peace" because it signified the end to the turmoil that Dagobert's assassination had brought, as the continuity of the royal line was now secured, even if it was no longer on the throne.

"By the Cross and this Horse of God" I found difficult to interpret as well. The cross was, like the octopus, an ancient sun symbol dating back to Atlantis, and was also used to denote the pole, or center-point of the Earth. The horse was a symbol of Poseidon, the sea god and purported king of Atlantis. And in some cultures the Sun was viewed to be a chariot drawn by celestial horses.

However, a tip that I have received from a party purportedly "in the know" on these matters has suggested an interesting new take on these parchments. The informant in question contacted me by email, claiming to be involved with a group called "the Order of the Blue Rose", which he said had been started by Jean Cocteau's close friend, Jean Marais. It was also strongly hinted that this group was really a front organization for the Priory of Sion. Anyway, the informant suggested that the parchments found by Sauniere were never meant to be viewed as instructions for locating a buried treasure. Rather, they had been left there by Berenger Sauniere's predecessor as priest of Rennes-le-Chateau, Abbe Antoine Bigou, as part of Sauniere's initiation into a mystery cult.

In an earlier chapter of this book, I discussed the possibility that Sauniere was initiated into a quasi-Masonic order, the "Hieron du Val d'Or" ("The Sanctuary of the Valley of Gold"), which itself may have been a front for the Priory of Sion. Then in yet another chapter I suggested that this may have been a part of something larger – that most of the nobles in Rennes-le-Chateau and the surrounding area were all part of an essentially Satanic cult, revering the Grail bloodline descended from Cain and Satan. If Rennes-le-Chateau really does stand over an underground structure containing the tombs of these figures, then it makes sense that Rennes-le-Chateau would be the center of this cult, and Sauniere would have, when fully initiated, have become its high priest, as Bigou had undoubtedly been before him. This church would have probably operated along the lines of the underground "true Christian" cults described by Nicholas de Vere, which were Satanic in nature and celebrated the Black Mass as the "true Christian" mass.

My mysterious informant from the Order of the Blue Rose seemed to corroborate this idea. He claimed that the parchments contained the formula for a ritual that was to be performed by Sauniere, regarding a curse that has for centuries afflicted the Grail bloodline. He said that this curse could not be abolished, but only appeased, by periodic "blood sacrifices." Two of the most significant sacrifices that had been made in this regard were those of Jesus Christ and of Dagobert II. But in the case of Jesus, my informant insisted that a substitute was able to die in his place. He said that the line "by the cross and this horse of God" referred to this substitute.

As astounding as this claim was, he also stated that the remains of these sacrificial victims were treated as holy relics, which were believed to ward off the ill effects of the curse on the Grail bloodline. One of the goals of the "Grail cult in Southern France", as he called it, was to collect as many of these relics as possible and deposit them beneath Rennes-le-Chateau. This is the reason, he claimed, why the first parchment refers to Dagobert II being "here dead" - buried there at Rennes-le-Chateau. This is also the reason why the second parchment refers to "681", the year that Dagobert's remains arrived at Rennes-le-Chateau, brought along with Sigisbert IV. “Blue apples”, my informant wrote, is a code meaning, simply, “blood sacrifice.” This idea was also symbolized by Cocteau in the blue rose that he placed beneath the feet of the crucified man in his mural at Notre Dame de France, which they had named their order after. The two genealogies that Sauniere found along with the other two parchments were there because they listed the line of the curse’s descent, which was passed down intergenerationally.

I wrote back to my informant asking him several questions. Among them: In what way is “horse of God” a code for the substitution of Christ on the cross? Was that substitute Judas? How exactly does “blue apples” translate as “blood sacrifice.” And what about the lines “I complete this demon guardian at noon”? However, the email message immediately bounced back to me. My informant had disappeared.[70]

Although I could not confirm any of the information this man had given me, it did put an interesting spin on things. The term “blue apples” has been explained by previous authors as an idiom used locally in Southern France to refer to grapes, and therefore, its use in the parchments is a reference to the symbol of the vine, representing the bloodline of the Grail. And royal blood is often called “blue blood.” But there is perhaps another level of meaning as well. The fall from the Garden of Eden was supposedly caused by Eve eating a forbidden fruit, usually depicted as an apple, from the Tree of Life. As I discussed in an earlier chapter, this whole story is a metaphor for the breeding that occurred between Satan and a human female (Eve), resulting in the bloodline of Cain. Jewish and Christian legends make it clear that Cain's bloodline was cursed by Jehovah because of this. So perhaps "blue apples" is a code for this cursed bloodline, and for the blood sacrifices that were necessary to alleviate this curse.

[70] A few months earlier I had been contacted by another self-proclaimed member of this order, who similarly vanished after a few emails.

Furthermore, I already suggested that Jesus' supposed death on the cross was an effort to break a curse placed upon the Jewish and Israelite people by Jehovah. But I also suggested (as confirmed by my informant) that Jesus had another (I suggest his twin brother Judas Thomas) die in his place, as a "sin atonement" in the Jewish tradition. I suggested that he himself played the part of the scapegoat, taking the weight of the sins upon himself and away from the people, by going into exile. However, if this act did not fully remove the curse, then it would remain attached to the bloodline of Jesus, and perhaps, as my informant suggested, this curse would require more blood atonement from his descendants.

It is interesting that my informant's "Order of the Blue Rose" was purportedly connected to Jean Marais, Jean Cocteau, and the Priory of Sion. Cocteau demonstrated in his mural at Notre Dame de France that he believed in the crucifixion substitution theory. And in his mural at St. Blaise, he showed his belief in the “twin Christ” theory”. Sauniere also demonstrated his belief in both of these theories in some of the decorations he placed in his church – something I have discussed elsewhere in this book. This makes sense if Sauniere and his parishioners (cult members) performed rituals that pertained to this curse, and the sacrifices that were made to control it.

If the curse in question really was passed on to Jesus’ descendants, this might explain why Dagobert II’s death seems so much like a ritual sacrifice, and why it was considered to be a martyrdom by those who believed that Dagobert’s remains contained magical powers. Perhaps these remains were moved secretly to Rennes-le-Chateau, and the ones on display at the convent at Mons, France are fake.

If we are willing to consider these possibilities, perhaps we should also consider the possibility that Berenger Sauniere was also sacrificed for the same reason – and that he may have willingly allowed this. Perhaps this is why his stroke occurred on the Feast Day of Saint Sulpice, which may have been sacred to the cult. After all, the Priory of Sion, which the cult was undoubtedly derived from, operated a base at the Chapel of Saint Sulpice in Paris. And as we know, his housekeeper had ordered his coffin just a few days prior to his stroke.

The fact that his dead body was placed on display so that his parishioners could pluck the tassels from his robe also points to a ritualized death. This is a practice that took place in Merovingian France, ancient Israel, and even ancient Mesopotamia, where for those of royal blood, the tassels of their robes were symbols of their nobility. To take the tassels from a nobleman's robe meant that you were taking for yourself some of his royal power.[71] Holy Blood, Holy Grail states that for the Merovingian kings, "the tassels on the fringes of their robes were deemed to possess magical curative powers." Likewise, there is a story in the Gospels of Jesus instantaneously curing a woman of an illness when she tugged upon the end of his robe.

As for the lines "I complete this demon guardian at noon", this might be explained in the context of this sacrificial ritual. First of all, the "demon guardian" would have to be Asmodeus, who seems to guard Sauniere's church from the doorway. As the builder of Solomon's Temple, he is analogous to Hiram Abiff, who according to Masonic ritual was murdered at noon, just like Dagobert II. This may have been the prearranged time for Sauniere's death. Finally, the words translated "I complete" are really "J'acheve", which might be better translated "I achieve", or "I become." The message then reads: "I become the demon guardian at noon." High noon was probably the time that the sacrifice occurred.

So Sauniere may have, in a ritual sense, achieved an apotheosis in which he became Asmodeus – who represents both Satan and Cain. This would be the equivalent of "manifesting the Baphomet", as the Templars purportedly did. Compare comments made by Templars during their confessions to the Inquisition with the description given in Holy Blood, Holy Grail of the priest who attempted to take Berenger Sauniere's final confession right before his death. In Julius Evola's The Mystery of the Grail, we read:

> "The central ritual of Templar initiation was kept very secret. From one of the proceedings of the trial we learn that a knight who underwent it returned as pale as a corpse, and with a lost expression on his face, claiming that from then on he could never be happy again. Shortly after, the same knight fell into a state of invincible depression and died… What produces an extreme terror in some knights and causes them to flee… is the vision of an idol… the Baphomet."

And in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, we read:

"As Sauniere lay on his deathbed, a priest was called from a neighboring parish to hear his final confession and administer the last rites. The priest duly arrived and retired into the sickroom. According to eyewitness testimony he emerged shortly thereafter, visibly shaken. In the words of one account he 'never smiled again'… the priest, presumably on the basis of Sauniere's confession, refused to administer Extreme Unction."

Perhaps Sauniere, at the moment of death, became the demon that he and his Satanic church had been honoring the entire time at Rennes-le-Chateau, and then was sacrificed according to the family tradition, like Dagobert and Jesus before him. The Satanic cult theory explains everything. The obscure symbolic decorations which Sauniere placed throughout his church may not have been messages to future treasure hunters as much as they were simply there for the worshippers, participating in rituals that pertained to those symbols. The cult is the reason why all of Sauniere's parishioners seemed to be "in" on his secrets. And I have already explained how Sauniere's riches could have come simply from the sale of indulgences in his Satanic church.

Furthermore, there is evidence that a Satanic cult practicing human sacrifice was active in that area during Sauniere's time. A friend of his named Antoine Gelis, who worked in the parish in nearby Coustassa, was murdered on November 1, 1897, killed by several blows to the head. Before the murder, he had been in constant fear, keeping his door locked and refusing to see anybody. He had also come into a large amount of money for some unknown reason, all of which was found still in the house, having been left untouched by the assailant. In The Templar Revelation, by Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince, we read that the murder seemed ritualistic in nature:

"…[The murderer] had ritualistically laid out the body, crossing the arms across the chest, and leaving a piece of paper with the words "viva Angelina" written on it. No motive was ever discerned behind the crime.

There are a couple of particularly strange elements interwoven in the Gelis murder. His gravestone, in the churchyard at Coustassa, has been positioned – alone of all the graves – so that it faces Rennes-le-Chateau, which is clearly visible on the hillside opposite. The grave also bears a rose-cross insignia. And, although this brutal murder of an elderly and fragile priest shocked the local populace, the diocese seemed to have wanted the matter forgotten as swiftly as possible. When Gerard de Sede tried to investigate it in the early 1960s, he found no record of the murder in the diocesan archives at Carcassonne. It was not until 1975 that two lawyers reconstructed the story from local police and court records."

The arrangement of the body is a pose used in Freemasonry, in the ritual reenactment of the death of Hiram Abiff. It has its origins it Egypt. Jean Cocteau took this pose when acting in his own film, The Testament of Orpheus, in a scene in which he descends to the underworld, dies and is reborn.

Now that I had possibly deciphered the messages of the parchments, I noticed other clues on the parchments, besides the messages themselves, which needed deciphering as well. For instance, the words "Rex Mundi", meaning "King of the World", a title held by Satan and Cain, are embedded into Parchment One. Then there are the words "Redis Bles" and "Solis Sacerdotibus" written beside the main message of Parchment One. The way Henry Lincoln and other authors choose to interpret this, "Redis" means "Rennes", and "Bles" means "corn", which is what wheat was called in Europe and England prior to the discovery of maize (now also called "corn") in the New World. "Bles" ("corn") is also a local idiom for "money" or "treasure", like "bread" is in English. "Solis" means "solely", and "sacerdotibus" means "initiated." Lincoln thus reads the message as saying, "The treasure of Rennes is only for the initiated." But as I have said, "Redis" also means "return", and wheat ("corn") was also a symbol of Cain, who was thought to be the inventor of the plough, and the first to introduce the crop's cultivation. In fact, Cain's name actually means "grain." Furthermore, wheat, and the bread that is made from it have been important icons in religious rituals throughout history, ranging from the Greek and Babylonian mysteries to ancient Judaism and modern Christianity. Catholics celebrate communion by eating a wafer that represents Christ's body, and the ancient Jews had a special "shewbread" that was only administered to the Levitic caste of priests during certain rituals. "Solis" also means "Sun", and "sacerdotibus" specifically means "priesthood." Thus, "Redis Bles Solis Sacerdotibus" could be translated in any of the following ways: "Return the corn to the priesthood of the Sun"; "The corn of Rennes is for the priesthood of the Sun"; "The corn of Rennes is only for the priesthood"; or "Return the wheat solely to the priesthood."

I do appear to be on the right track with my interpretation, for the very text into which the code of Parchment One has been inserted is a conglomeration of quotes from three of the Gospels describing a scene in which Jesus and his disciples are walking through a cornfield, eating corn! As The Gospel of Saint Matthew describes it:

“At that time Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn and to eat.

But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto him, Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath day.

But he said to them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungered, and they that were with him;

How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests?

Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

But I say to you, that this place is one greater than the temple.”

So this is the “corn” that is “only for the priesthood.” But what lies beneath the symbolism of this story, and what statement is being made by connecting it with the phrase “Redis Bles Solis Sacerdotibus”? Is the parchment’s creator saying “Return the sacraments of the church (the true church in the tradition of Atlantis) to its rightful priests”? And what of the last line in the passage from Matthew: “This place is one greater than the temple”? If its use in the parchment is a reference to Rennes-le-Chateau and the treasures hidden beneath, this could mean that Rennes-le-Chateau is a much holier place than the remains of the temple in Jerusalem.

This may all help explain another curious message which is buried in the text of the second parchment: “Panis ΛΩ Sal” – the Latin words for “bread” and “salt” separated by the Alpha and Omega symbols. We know that bread used in Christian ritual, in the form of the communion wafer, represents the body of Christ. If used in a ritual performed by Sauniere and his cult, however, it probably represents the body of Cain, whose cult of Mithras was the first to use communion as a ritual. But more than that, bread and salt were once used in the rituals of Welsh country pagans, before they were fully Catholicized. When a wealthy person was dying, their family often paid a poor person to come and eat bread and salt in the same room as the dying person. They believed that by doing so, he was consuming, and taking upon himself, the sins of the dying person. The process was called “sin eating.” A popular British film from 2003 called The Sin Eater suggested the possibility that an elite and secretive order of Catholic priests was continuing this practice. If the principle upon which sin-eating is based is held to be real, one would think that a willing person could even absorb the sins of another while they are still alive. Instead of simply confessing your sins to your priest every Sunday, you could lay them upon his head, and be free of them, just as the sins of the Israelites were laid upon the head of the scapegoat at Yom Kippur, and just as Jesus took on the sins of his people. Now, this is exactly the sort of ritual that Sauniere's parishioners would have paid significantly to participate in. If Sauniere had absorbed all of the sins of his parishioners before his death, this would mean that he was truly following in the tradition of Christ. And this could have been yet another aspect of Sauniere's final confession that was horrifying to the officiating priest.

The code of Parchment Two is made using a passage from The Gospel of Saint John, Chapter 12, verses 1-7. Shortly after Christ raises Lazarus from the dead, he is having dinner with Mary Magdalene, Martha, Lazarus, and his disciples. Mary takes "a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly", and anoints Christ's feet with it, "wiping his feet with her hair." Judas Iscariot, disgusted at the waste of something so valuable, remarks, "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?" The passage continues:

"This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

Then said Jesus, Let her alone; against the day of my burial hath she kept this.

For the poor always ye have with you; but me ye not have always."

The scene this passage describes is also illustrated in a stained glass window on the ceiling behind the altar of Sauniere's church. What could its significance be in this context? The anointing of Christ's feet by Mary has been described by some authors as the ritual anointing of a king by his bride and queen, which we find perfectly reasonable. But Jesus specifically says that, "against the day of my burial hath she kept this", indicating that it was meant to anoint his dead body before it was placed in the tomb. Thus, this passage describes the events that preceded the crucifixion, and demonstrates how Judas' rude behavior beforehand foreshadowed his betrayal, and made him expendable to Jesus – who then, according to my theory, plotted Judas' death.

Another clue to the mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau which began to take on new meaning as my research continued was Sauniere's personal bookplate, now on display in the Berenger Sauniere museum right next to the church at Rennes-le-Chateau. At the top, we see an angel holding Asmodeus in chains, a symbol of Satan and Cain's supposed imprisonment in the center of the Earth. Below is an alchemical seal which Sauniere quite clearly copied from Henricus Madathanus' Aureum Seculum Redivivum. The main feature of the symbol is the Seal of Solomon, formed by two triangles, one black and one white. I have already demonstrated how this shape can be thought to represent the sacred mountain reaching up to Heaven, with the sacred tomb in its bowels, reaching down into the center of the Earth. And on this alchemical seal, at the exact point in the bowels of the symbolic "mountain" where you would expect to find the sacred tomb, the astrological sign of the Sun has been drawn in, like the Black Sun in the center of the Earth, and the "hidden sun" which lights the tomb of Osiris. Placed over this is an inverted symbol of Venus, the cross surmounted by a circle. In this version, the cross is pointing upward, near the top of the hexagram, as if it is meant to represent the cavalry cross of Golgotha where Christ was crucified, directly above the "Cave of Treasures", according to Christian apocrypha. The part of the Venus sign that forms a circle is surrounding the "hidden sun" symbol. And written on the circle are the Latin words "Centrum Trigono Centri" ("The Center in the Triangle of the Center.") In other words, "the cave within the mountain which is in the center of the Earth." On either side of the cross are the letters "BS", just as they are found throughout Sauniere's church. For some reason, all past authors have assumed these to be Berenger Sauniere's initials, and no one has thought to compare this seal to the alchemical manuscript it was copied from. These letters are part of the original. So the "BS" decorations Sauniere placed throughout his church are not just his initials. They are undoubtedly an abbreviation for some alchemical motto, but one which, unfortunately, I have yet to deduce.

Around the hexagram just described is another circle (representing the Earth, of which the hexagram represents the center) upon which are written the words “Tria Sunt Mirabilia: Deus et Homo; Mater et Virgo; Trinus et Unus.” This translates to: “Three are the Marvels: God and Man; the Mother and the Virgin; the Three and the One.” It speaks to the alchemical union of symbols represented by the center of the Earth. At the four corners of the seal are four cherubim, like those which guard the Garden of Eden, or those which flank the Ark of the Covenant. They are the guardians of the treasures at the center of the Earth.

The Priory of Sion: The Next Generation

“Today, in the shadows there lurk the ‘eminences grises’, who form the backbone of all political states or religious entities. Without them the ‘star performers’ that actually make all the headlines (be they Popes, Kings or Presidents) would simply not exist. Here and there we find them, initiates of high degree, entrusted with secret missions by the Grandmasters of the occult orders that rule the planet."

- Pablo Norberto, "The Origin of the Priory of Sion"

Le Cercle, 1992

It seems that virtually every aspect of the enigma surrounding Rennes-le-Chateau, the Priory of Sion and the Merovingians can be explained now in the context of this book's main thesis. When I finally reached this point in my research, I was proud to have been able to unravel so many mysteries. And it was just when my hypothesis was almost fully formed that I began to realize the extent to which my ideas were corroborated by documents written and published by the Priory itself. I have already talked about Le Serpent Rouge quite a bit, and a full interpretation of this poem can be found in Appendix B of this book. As I neared the end of my research, a friend sent me another Priory document that backed up my theories. It was a chapter from the Secret Dossiers, supposedly compiled by Henri Lobineau. This document (which I have fully transcribed in another appendix) is about the Hieron du Val d'Or, the strange cult which is believed to have been a front organization for the Priory of Sion, and to which Sauniere was believed to have belonged. The chapter describes the symbols employed by the organization, such as the Sacred Heart, and offers an esoteric interpretation of Christianity as a sun cult. The author of this chapter, who calls himself "Le Poulpe" (The Octopus) ends his piece rather evocatively:

> "It is in France, in Paray-le-Monial, that they have given birth to the devotion towards the Sacred Heart, which is the entitlement of the Hieron du Val d'Or. In Autumn of 1893 someone found, on the tomb of a Christian woman dating from the VI century, an inscription in Greek letters (it was said that Druids wrote in Greek letters). It comprises eleven lines, and the first letter of the first five form the word ICHTUS.
> Here is part of this inscription: 'O divine race of the celestial fish, receive with a respectful heart in immortal life among the mortals the waters of the divine ones. Friend, remake your heart with the eternal flood of the wisdom which gives treasures. It is a reservoir of nourishment, soft like the honey of the Savior of the saints. Eat with hunger: you hold the fish in your hands.'"

It seems that "the divine race of the celestial fish" would have to be the race descended from Satan, Cain, and the Atlanteans, who associated themselves with fish and, just as the passage states, the Sun as well. Also note the words "flood of wisdom", similar to the interpretation of Baphomet's name as "baptism of wisdom."

By far the most corroborative evidence for my theory is the articles in Vaincre, which I have already described in great detail. But not long before completing this manuscript, I received some shocking news, from the same person, Paul Smith, who originally translated the Vaincre articles into English. As Smith reports, a new series of Vaincre magazines began to be published in 1989. The new issues listed Pierre Plantard's son Thomas Plantard as the "Managing Editor", and one of them featured an interview with Pierre Plantard. A completely new list of Grand Masters was produced, in which many of the names have been changed, and it now only dated back to 1681 (the date the Children of Saint Vincent were created). The Priory of Sion now claimed to be completely disavowing any direct descent from the Knights Templar, and their Grand Masters were not listed. However, there was a complete listing of the Grand Masters from Jean Cocteau's death onwards, which had before remained a completely unanswered question.[72] Now it was claimed that Cocteau was followed by Francois Balphagon until 1969, and then a fellow named John Drick took over. In 1981, the office was assumed by Pierre Plantard, who as we know resigned in 1984. Vaincre now claimed that Plantard was followed by Philippe de Cherisey, who was quickly replaced by someone called Patrice Pelat in 1985. This person died in 1989, and then at the "Convent of Avignon", on March 9, 1989, Pierre Plantard was reinstated as Grand Master, just long enough to pass the title on to his son four months later, at "10 o'clock solar time", as its described in Vaincre.

[72] It is surprising to me that Jean Cocteau's heir, Edward Dermit, is not mentioned in this list as succeeding him, but then again, something about the list seems altogether faulty.

Many aspects of the Priory's new claims in this magazine appear to be attempts at obfuscation. They wanted the Priory of Sion to be at the forefront of everyone's minds once again, but they wanted to spread some confusion, to increase the intrigue. This series of Vaincre appears to have later morphed into Le Cercle, which was still subtitled Vaincre and still edited by Thomas Plantard. Its logo featured a cock crowing, a favorite motif often used by Jean Cocteau. Both Vaincre and Le Cercle are very queer in their phrasing, as all Priory documents are, and appear to contain many code words recognizable only to initiates, many of which are written in all caps for emphasis. And in one of these issues, a reprinted letter from Pierre Plantard purported to reveal the Priory of Sion's main secret. Plantard wrote:

"Our TREASURE, that of the PRIORY OF SION, is the SECRET of the BLACK ROCK ('ROC NOIR').

Revered since remote antiquity by those who believed in its immense power, it was confused with the DEVIL, and even LABOUISSE-ROCHEFORTE wrote, in a poem intended for the initiated:

'The Angel of the bastard race,
In a tone at once dry and crazed,
Keeps constant guard over
This immense income...'

and only the initiated could understand that the treasure was not gold, but the considerable energy that the MASTER of the genie - he who knows the secret - has at his disposal."

So in other words, Plantard was saying that that "Devil" is really a black stone that contains "energy" or power, and that there is a "bastard race" which descends from this stone. This is exactly what I submitted earlier regarding the Grail stone and its identity with Satan. I suggested that this stone might be buried at Rennes-le-Chateau, in an underground tomb or temple. The same was hinted at by Plantard, who wrote that the "Roc Noir" is in Rennes-le-Chateau.

Then, in another article called “The Dubosc Affair”, it was claimed that a mining shaft was sunk through the “Roc Noir”, the true purpose of which was to “re-establish a communicating ‘way’ between the old underground passages of the former Celtic sanctuary known as the TEMPLE ROND (Round Temple.)” Once again, the documents of the Priory itself completely confirm the main thrust of my hypothesis – that there is an underground temple (and sacred tomb) beneath Rennes-le-Chateau which is connected to a network of tunnels, and which contains the Grail stone. According to Pierre Plantard himself, the real “secret of the Priory” pertains to an underground temple beneath Rennes-le-Chateau which is associated with the Devil: the “angel of the bastard race” and “MASTER of the genie.” Yet another article, this time in Le Cercle, appears to link this temple with a 13-based numerical system[73], and claims that Priory of Sion meetings actually still take place there, specifically meetings of their inner order, the “Arch of the thirteen Rose-Croix.” In “The Arch – It’s Symbolism”, author Jacques d’Arthuys writes:

“For [the Priory of Sion] the ARCH placed on the surface of the waters seemed like the sign of PEACE and WISDOM amid the torment. This was the sign of alliance, the guardian of the very essence of the Great Tradition. Its shape was the true representation of the Hebrew letter [Cheth], the engine of life, its number was 8, it was the last line of defense, while the sum of its three sides was 22 and its centre was the path that guides the ARCH towards the STAR.

he ARCH was the origin of the foundation of the PRIORY of SION and in our own times represents its pinnacle. It is composed of 13 members. The ROSE+CROIX meets in the round temple of the Roc Noir which, according to legend, was formerly a temple of MITHRAS. It has the shape of a semicircle… having 13 seats of stone. Each seat is engraved with a letter, namely: AB URBE CONDITA On the ground is a GOLDEN SUN… bearing these letters: MM CD XXX IV, or 2434[74] in Roman numerals. It seems to be recent, no doubt engraved by a HAUTPOUL towards the end of the 17th century. The former entry is obstructed over a distance… but a drilling has opened up an entry to the south. In our own time the ARCH extends over a large part of the world. It is from its summit that the heads of state will come to search for PEACE."

Amazingly, this passage seems to confirm that the chamber which holds the Grail stone is also the "Ark", and seems to equate this with the Ark of Noah as well! A similar quote was found in the Priory of Sion's C.I.R.C.U.I.T. magazine, and was quoted earlier: "A Nautonnier [Grand Master of the Priory] guides the ark ('arche') in the flood."

Only for the Initiated

Perhaps the most evocative lines in this new Vaincre article are the last two: "In our own time the ARCH extends over a large part of the world. It is from its summit that the heads of state will come to search for PEACE." To me, this indicates that the Priory of Sion considers the "Holy Land" of Rennes-le-Chateau to be the foundation-point of an empire that not only existed in the past, but also one that will exist again in the future. The use of "Ab Urbe Condita"[75] by the Priory, referring to the foundation of Rome, says to me that they are, as they have stated in their own documents, planning a resurrection of the Holy Roman Empire through the United States of Europe. But in order for this to occur, I assume, the treasures of Rennes-le-Chateau would have to be revealed to the world. This would no doubt have a shocking impact upon the collective psyche of mankind, for it would cause us to re-evaluate not only our understanding of history, but our political, religious, and philosophical tenets as well. It would be especially shocking if it was proven that direct descendants of Satan are alive today, many of them in positions of power, using their positions to bring about a resurrection of the antediluvian golden age and the empire that ruled over that epoch.

[75] The words "Ab Urbe Condita" are usually translated as "From the founding of the city", and refer to the date of Rome's foundation, which was used in the dating system of the Roman and Julian calendars, in the same way "Before Christ" is used in our own dating system.

The thing most consistently said about the Holy Grail, whether it is depicted as a cup, a stone, a bloodline, a secret doctrine, or an ancient tomb, is that it contains the secret of earthly power, either for good or for evil. He who controls the Grail controls the world. He becomes the "Rex Mundi", the inheritor of Satan's title "the Lord of the Earth", and the embodiment of the Priory of Sion's "Grand Monarch" concept. It is no wonder, then, that groups like the Priory, the Templars, the Freemasons, the Nazis, the Vatican, MI5 and the CIA have struggled over the centuries to possess it. When the secret of the Grail is finally revealed, it will unleash a force as mighty as any the Earth has ever seen.

The power of the Grail is, as we know, a boon to the elect, and a curse to the uninitiated. It is therefore not to be trifled with. The unveiling of the Grail could be the most glorious event in known history. It could also be one of the greatest disasters. Let us hope, then, that whoever controls this power now, or whoever will control it in the future, uses it wisely.

A passage from The Chymical Wedding of Christian Rosenkreutz captures the essence of this perilous dynamic. It describes a Hermetic fountain of wisdom (the underground stream), whose waters contain the Elixir of Life. According to the story, the fountain was erected by Hermes (Enoch) himself, who inscribed its edifice with the following words:

"I, Hermes the Prince,
After so much injury
Done to the human race,
Through Divine Council
And the help of the arts
Made wholesome medicine
Flow here.

Drink from me who can: wash in me who likes: trouble me who dares.

Drink, brothers, and live."

Pierre Plantard, C.I.R.C.U.I.T. Magazine

In the magazine called CIRCUIT, published in the forties and fifties by the Priory of Sion, a thirteen-house zodiac system is described, with the insertion of the constellation of Ophiuchus - "the Serpent-Holder", constituting the extra house. The Priory also published a poem called Le Serpent Rouge (The Red Serpent), written, as I have theorized, by their twenty-third Grand Master, Jean Cocteau. This poem (which is discussed at length in Appendix B) consisted of thirteen stanzas, each dedicated to one of these zodiac houses, starting with Aquarius and ending with Capricorn, the sign under which King Dagobert was killed.

In Chapter Eight of Holy Blood, Holy Grail, the structure of the Priory of Sion is examined in detail. According to the statutes published in Secret Dossiers prior to 1956, the order consisted of seven grades, with a total of 1093 members, whereas the post-1956 statutes had it broken down into nine grades, totaling 9841 members. In addition, a set of twenty-two statutes written and signed by Grand Master Jean Cocteau describes a structure of five grades. However, in all three versions of the structure, the number of members in each grade is three times larger than the number of members in the next grade, and all of the numbers, except for one 1 and 3, are divisible by nine. It would appear that the only difference between the three versions of the structure is that the pre-1956 statutes are not counting the members of the lowest two grades. Also, the Jean Cocteau statutes have one-third as many people listed in each grade, with 243 members of a fourth grade that are considered part of an outer order, or laity, called the "Children of Saint Vincent."

In the post-1956 statutes, the structure is also broken down into provinces (each of which contains forty members), commanderies, and the "Arch Kyria", the name for the top three grades, which consists of a total of thirteen members. The structure, as quoted from Dossier Secrets, is as follows:

"The general assembly consists of all members of the association. It consists of 729 provinces, 27 commanderies, and an Arch designated "Kyria."

Each of the commanderies, as well as the arch, must consist of forty members, each province of thirteen members.

The members compose a hierarchy of 9 grades.

a) in the 729 provinces

1) Novices: 6, 561 members

2) Croises de Saint-Jean: 2,187

b) in the 27 commanderies

3) Preux: 729 members

4) Ecuyers: 243 members

5) Chevalieres: 81 members

6) Commandeurs: 27

c) in the Arch 'Kyria':

7) Connetables: 9 members

8) Senechaux: 3 members

9) Nautonnier: 1 member"

The total number of members, then, according to these statutes, would be 1093. Meanwhile, the statutes written by Jean Cocteau state the following:

"The hierarchy of the Prieure de Sion is composed of five grades:

1st Nautonnier, number: 1
2nd Croise, number: 3
3rd Commandeur, number: 9
4th Chevalier, number: 27
5th, Ecuyer, number: 81
total number :121"

The first two levels are part of a substructure called "the Arch of the 13 Rose-Croix." The other levels are part of a substructure called "the 9 commanderies of the Temple." In addition, Article 19 states that: "There are 243 Free Brothers, called 'Preux', or, since the year 1681, Enfants de Saint Vincent, who participate neither in the vote, nor in the Convents, but to whom the Prieure accords certain rights and privileges, in conformity with the decree of January 17, 1681."

While most of the numbers here (which I will hereafter refer to as the "Priory of Sion numbers") are, as I have stated, divisible by nine, the total number of members according to each version of the statutes is not. However, attempting to divide them by nine reveals some interesting relationships. For instance, the total number of members, according to the post-1956 statues, is 9841. 9841/9 = 1093.44444... - the same number, minus the decimals, as the total number of members according to the pre-1956 statutes. Then notice that 1093/9 = 121.44444... - the same number, minus the decimals, as the number of dignitaries (ranked members) according to the Cocteau statutes. 364, the number of total members according to Cocteau (including the 243 Children of Saint Vincent), when divided by nine, gives us 40.44444... - the same number, minus the decimals, as the number of members in each commanderie. And 121 (again, the number of dignitaries in the Cocteau statutes), when divided by 9, equals 13.44444... - the same number, minus the decimals, as the number of members in the "Arch Kyria", or "Arch of the Thirteen Rose-Croix."

I wondered if these numbers from the Priory of Sion might somehow relate to the thirteen-house zodiac. I decided to subtract thirteen from each of the numbers that would not divide evenly by nine, and then try the division again:

9828/9 = 1092 (Just one less than 1093, the total number of members pre-1956.)

1093 - 13 = 1080

1080/9 = 120 (Just one less than 121, the total number of dignitaries in the Cocteau statutes.)

121-13 = 108

108/9 = 12 (Just one less than 13.)

And:

364-13 = 351

351/9 = 39 (Just one less than 40, the number of members in each commanderie.)

And 39 is also 3 x 13.

Then I noticed another thing:

1+0+9+3 = 13

and:

3+6+4 = 13

But even more importantly:

“What exactly is going on here?”, I wondered. 364, number of total members according to the Cocteau statutes, not only consists of digits which add to 13, but is also evenly divisible by 13. And 364 is very close to the number of days in a year.

It was at this point that the meaning encoded in the Priory of Sion numbers came flooding into my mind. 28 is the average number of days in a lunar cycle, and there are thirteen lunar cycles in a solar year. 364 is not only close to the number of days (365.2424) in our current solar year, but is also the exact number of days it takes for the Moon to travel through the zodiac.[76] I decided to speculate: What would happen if we actually did observe a 364-day calendar? What would happen if, at some time in the past, the solar year had corresponded precisely with the lunar year?

[76] 28 is an interesting number because it is the sum of the numbers 1-7, and is equal to the sum of its divisors (1+2+4+7+14 = 28).

The answer is that then we could have a perfect calendar, consisting of thirteen months of twenty-eight days, each a complete lunar cycle, and each dedicated to one of the thirteen houses of the Priory of Sion's zodiac. Also, we could still have seven days in a week, exactly four weeks in each month, and exactly fifty-two weeks in each year. In our current system, the number of weeks in a month, and in a year, is neither exact nor consistent. But in this system, all months would begin and end on the same day of the week, matching each other perfectly. All floating holidays, such as Thanksgiving and Easter, would occur on the same day every year. The menstrual cycle of each woman would begin on the same day and end on the same day of each month, also making periods of high fertility easier to calculate. Since each zodiac sign would correspond to a single month, all zodiac periods would be of equal length, with no "cusps", and everyone could easily determine which sign a person was born under simply by knowing the month of their birth. One could even break down the hours in a day into a thirteen-based system. We could split the day into twenty-six hours, each consisting of fifty-two minutes, which would in turn consist of fifty-two seconds each. That would give you a total of 25, 590, 656 seconds in a year.

Before long I discovered that the calendar which I had proposed actually does exist, although it has not been put into use in the Western world. It is called the "Fixed Lunar Calendar", and it consists of the same 364 days and thirteen months that I have just described. It was first proposed in the late sixteenth century, during Pope Gregory XIII's counsel to reform the Julian calendar (although it was used by other cultures as well throughout the ages). But the Fixed Lunar Calendar was rejected, one reason being that it does not accurately represent the solar year, which is the true definition of a year.

For thousands of years, men have been trying to create an "aliquot calendar": a perfect system that would synthesize both the solar and lunar cycles with exact, whole numbers. But as Duncan Steel remarks in Marking Time: The Epic Quest to Invent the Perfect Calendar, "We have been stymied by the fact that the solar day and the lunar month are not an aliquot part of the year. That is, there is not an exact integer number of days in the year defined by Earth's orbit, nor lunations in that year." However, he also remarks that, "it has not always been this way. About 1.5 billion years ago there were precisely fourteen lunar months in a year, each lasting for thirty-one solar days, but there was no one around to notice the fact and construct a calendar based upon it." The number of days in a year has varied substantially over time, due to a number of factors. One of the most significant factors, however, is called "tidal drag", a force caused by the ocean tides, which are in turn caused by the gravitational attraction of the Moon. This is causing the rotation of the Earth to slow down, making it probable that we will reach a 364-day solar year at some point. Whether or not the number of lunar cycles in a year will synchronize with it at that point is, however, a matter of speculation, and probably a long shot.

But perhaps the Fixed Lunar Calendar could still be put to use, through the insertion of leap days. Historians tell us that ancient man used to regard the last few days of the year (varying in number from one through five, depending on the culture) as “non-days”, which were not observed as part of the year. No work was done on these days, and they were occupied with rituals of fasting instead. Is this what the Priory of Sion’s system is meant to include at the end of the calendar year? As soon as I considered this possibility, the next piece of the puzzle fell into place. For as I discovered, the larger Priory of Sion numbers, including 729, 1093, 2187, 6561, and 9841, all form a pattern when divided by 364. 729 = 2 x 364 + 1. 1093 = 3 x 364 +1. 2187 = 6 x 364 + 3. 6561 is 18 = 364 + 9. 9841 = 27 x 364 + 13. I thought that this might represent a system in which a 364-day year is used, and a leap day is added every two years, so that in twenty-seven years, thirteen leap days have been added.[77] This yielded a system which revealed a great many astounding numerological correspondences. For instance, after 243 years (the number of "Children of Saint Vincent" in the Priory of Sion), 117 leap days have been added.

The following chart demonstrates how the numbers encoded into the Priory of Sion structure (based on all three versions of the Priory's statutes) indicate cycles of 364-day years, with a leap day added every two years. The largest number in the Priory's structure is 9841, but I have extended the numerical pattern out a few steps for demonstration purposes. I have also shown, on the right-hand column, how all of the larger Priory numbers reflect the other numbers mathematically.

Priory of Sion #	# of 364-day years indicated	# of leap days added to the cycle	# of 28-day months in the cycle	Relationships with other Priory of Sion #s

I have reason to believe that the 364-day calendar was introduced by Enoch to humanity after the Flood, as their first sacred calendar. It has been observed and revered secretly by his descendants (such as those in the Knights Templar and the Priory of Sion) ever since. Perhaps the Priory of Sion numbers hint at a system they have created whereby they observe a 364-day calendar, which they attempt to synchronize with the current solar calendar as well through the insertion of leap days. This theory is discussed at length in my essay "The Cutting of the Orm", to be published in late 2004 in the book The Arcadian Mystique: The Best of Dagobert's Revenge Magazine.

There is evidence linking Enoch to the 364-day calendar. In The Book of Enoch, when Enoch is taken to Heaven and told by the angels that a flood will occur, they instruct Enoch on how to count the days of the year – a year that consists of 364 days. Perhaps this is why the sect known as the Essenes, who made use of The Book of Enoch, observed a 364-day calendar as well.[78] Also, the extra zodiac house used in a thirteen-based system is Ophiuchus, the "Serpent Holder", symbolized by the Caduceus. This is also a symbol of Hermes or Mercury, and thus of Enoch.

[78] Interestingly, Enoch is said to have lived exactly 365 years, and to have written a total of 366 books within this lifetime.

There is also evidence linking the Knights Templar to the 364-day calendar. Several authors have suggested that the Templars were responsible for introducing playing cards into Europe – the precursors of the mystical tarot. As it just so happens, hidden within the fifty-two cards of the standard playing deck is the Fixed Lunar Calendar! In The Playing Card Oracles, Ana Cortez and Charles Freeman demonstrate how the fifty-two cards correspond to the fifty-two weeks of the years, the four suits to the four seasons, and the thirteen cards in each suit to the thirteen months in each year, as well as the thirteen weeks in each season. If all of the values of the cards in each suit are added up, they equal 91, the number of days in each season. But perhaps most amazing of all, the total value of the cards in the deck is 364, the number of days in the lunar calendar.

It is fitting that the Templars would have been involved in concealing the 364-day calendar within the playing cards. The entire corpus of superstition surrounding the number thirteen, the basis of this calender system, has been attributed to the mystique surrounding the Knights Templar (although the superstition is probably older than this). The association supposedly exists because the Templars were arrested by Philippe the Fair's seneschals on Friday, October 13, 1307. But the Templars would appear to have already been associated with the number thirteen. As I have previously mentioned, it was encoded into the name of their idolotrous head, Caput 58M. (5+8 = 13, and M is the thirteenth letter of the alphabet). Some say that this was the same head they called "Baphomet", which they represented with their symbol of the skull and crossbones, also called the "Death's head", a symbol of death and rebirth in Hermeticism.[79] Later, this symbol was employed as the basis for the "Jolly Roger" flag used by pirates (many of them Freemasons), which featured, underneath the symbol, the number thirteen.

In addition, Friday is a sacred day in many traditions. It is the Sabbath of the Muslims, the beginning of the Sabbath for the Jews, and the day in which Christians are instructed to eat fish instead of meat.[80] This day is named after Freya, the Norse Venus/Isis figure, sometimes depicted with fish, or as partially a fish herself. Assuming that the number thirteen was held in reverence by the Templars, the date of Friday the Thirteenth may have been doubly sacred for them. Perhaps, then, this date was purposely chosen for their arrest by their enemies for ritual purposes.

But as I have said, there is much more to the superstition surrounding the number thirteen then just its association with the Templars. We are told that thirteen is an unlucky number. The number 13 has been shunned for centuries. In the past the thirteenth floor has been purposely omitted from office buildings. 13 is considered so baleful by some that there is actually a name - triskadekaphobia - for the psychological condition of the fear of 13.

[79] Interestingly, the phrase "Death's head" itself implies both a beginning ("head") and an end ("Death").

[80] We are also encouraged to "Thank God it's Friday."

But to the descendants of Satan, it appears to have been a sacred number. One of the reasons for its sacredness is that, like the Phi ratio, this number appears oddly integral to the patterns of nature. For instance, there are thirteen major joints in the human body. There are, as I have stated, thirteen lunar cycles in a solar year, and the moon travels thirteen degrees across the sky every day. Six circles placed around a seventh central circle form a model of geometric efficiency and perfection in the second dimension that has been known to mathematicians for ages. But this same configuration in three dimensions consists of twelve spheres arranged around one central sphere, making thirteen in all - the most compact three-dimensional arrangement recurrent in nature. A commentator writing about the Aztec calendar once said that, "Thirteen is a basic structural unit in nature. It means the attracting center around which elements focus and collect."[81] Is this, then, the reason for Christ's twelve disciples, or King Arthur's twelve knights?

The number 13 is also important to the founding of the United States, which began with thirteen colonies that turned into the first thirteen states. These states were represented on our first flag as thirteen hexagonal stars. (The stars were later changed to pentagonal shapes.) The number thirteen is all over the American one-dollar bill also, and on the Great Seal of the United States, created by Freemasons, who were heavily involved in the foundation of this country. On the backside of the seal, there is an eagle holding thirteen arrows, and an olive branch with thirteen leaves. His shield contains thirteen stripes, and above his head are thirteen pentagram stars formed into the shape of one large hexagram. In his mouth he holds a banner that says “E Pluribus Unum” - “Out of Many, One” - a phrase containing thirteen letters. The word “One” (or the number “1”) is also written on the dollar twelve times, unless you count the Latin word “Unum”, which would make thirteen. On the front side of the Great Seal are the words “Annuit Coeptis” and “Novus Ordo Seclorum.” “Annuit Coeptis” contains, again, thirteen letters, and is usually translated, “He [meaning God] agrees with the cause which we have started.”

However, this translation appears to have no basis in reality. All one needs is a simple Latin dictionary, and a little intuition. “Annuit” means “circuit” - like the circuit of the zodiac in the night’s sky, and the precession of the equinox. This meaning is further encoded into the word "Annuit" itself. "Annu" relates to "Anno", which means "circle", and "year", while "Nuit", which means "night" in French, is related to the Egyptian word for "night": "Nut." "Coeptis" means "new beginning." This goes along well with the words at the bottom of the Seal, "Novus Ordo Seclorum", which mean "New World Order." So the statement being made here is, perhaps, that at the beginning of the new astrological age - Aquarius - we will have a new secular order on Earth, symbolized by the eye and the pyramid.[82]

The dawn of this new age is symbolized by the tale of Dagobert II's death, which took place on December 23. Since "dag" means "fish", and "bert" means "house", this story could be thought to symbolize the death of the "fish house", the Age of Pisces, at the dawning of the Age of Aquarius. Interestingly, the Mayan calendar (which was invented, the natives say, by a "white god" whose description sounds strikingly similar to Enoch) ends on December 23, 2012, right on the brink of the Age of Aquarius, and on the anniversary of King Dagobert's death. The Mayan calendar is also, like the Fixed Lunar Calendar, based on the number 13. This point is made rather abundantly by Jose Arguelles, the author of The

[82] Recall that one of the illustrations in the Priory of Sion publication Vaincre depicted a man mounted upon a white horse and bearing a flag of the "United States of Europe" riding towards a sunset, upon which was inscribed the sign for Aquarius

Mayan Factor, who has also written another book, Time and the Technosphere, proposing the adoption of the 364-day Fixed Lunar Calendar as a way of harmonizing the spirit of man with the cosmos.

The Aztec calendar is based upon 13 as well, with 364-day years, and "long years" consisting of 52 years each. Like the Mayan calendar, theirs spans thousands of years, and counts the days until the "end of the world", supposedly. A hieroglyph at the top of the calendar which marks both its beginning and its end is called, significantly enough, "13 Cane."

Like many ancient cultures, the Aztecs (or rather, the god-kings who created their civilization) embedded the principles of their calendar into the architecture of their sacred temples. The Pyramid of Kukulkan in Chichen Itza, Mexico has four sides, each with ninety-one steps leading up to the top, for a total of 364. On the solstices, a trick of light and shadow produces the image of a gigantic serpent crawling down the sides of the pyramid, which then appears to join itself to the stone image of the serpent Kukulkan at the base of the pyramid. Once again, we have the imagery of Satan and Cain linked to the number 13 and the 364-day calendar.

Interestingly, in both the Latin and the Hebrew alphabet, the thirteenth letter is "M" (which is Hebrew is also a symbol meaning "water"). In both alphabets, "M" marks the center of the alphabet. In the original Runic alphabet, the thirteenth letter was "Eiwaz." It also marked the center of the alphabet, and symbolized the union of light and darkness. When the Runic alphabet was revised, this letter was taken out – perhaps as an act of triskadekaphobia.[83]

The number 13 has most definitely become associated with Satan in modern times. It is to be expected, then, that fear and hatred of the number 13 has been transferred by modern cabalists onto the mythos of Cain and his progeny. (Or perhaps, their fear and hatred of Cain is the true source of the superstition surrounding this number.) In The Pattern and the Prophecy, James Harrison, points out that that the names of the four generations of Cain's descendants mentioned in the Bible, when converted into cabalistic numbers, add up to 2223, which is divisible by 13. Bullinger then relates that the cabalistic value of the Hebrew word for "Satan" is 364!

The nature of this Satanic number, and the Satanic Calendar based upon it, will be explored in future writings.

[83] In Tarot, the thirteenth card is always "Death", which links up to its association with the Death's head by pirates.

Appendix B: Le Serpent Rouge Interpreted

As I discussed earlier in the book, the poem Le Serpent Rouge consists of thirteen stanzas, each dedicated to one of the thirteen houses of the Priory of Sion‘s zodiac system. The authors are purported to be Louis Saint-Maxent, Pierre Feugere, and Gaston de Koker, who were all killed shortly after the poem was published. Strange and frightening as this may seem, these men may not have in fact been the authors, for the poem does not appear to be the work of a committee, but rather a single quixotic mystic. My theory is that the true author of the poem was Jean Cocteau. One only needs to read Cocteau's known work, or view his film Orpheus, to recognize the style of writing and the symbolism employed. Also, it was published just a few years after his death, and it was during Cocteau's grand mastership that the publication of "Priory documents" such as this one began

Assuming that Cocteau was probably the author, and working with the conclusions about Rennes-le-Chateau that I have expounded upon in this book, I am now able to understand certain key phrases used within this queer poem. It is my belief that this poem is written from the point of view of someone following the occult clues that have been left by past initiates to discover the sacred tombs beneath Rennes-le-Chateau, and the "Ark" that contains the "Grail stone." The narrator likens his journey to the symbolic journeys of mythological heroes from numerous ancient legends. Several veiled references are made to Noah/Enoch and his ark; to the Grail stone and the mysteries it contains; and to the discovery of the tomb of Venus or Isis.

Let us now examine Le Serpent Rouge, as translated by Amy Keller, for its hidden meaning:

Strange are the manuscripts of this Friend, great traveler of the unknown.

I think that these "manuscripts" represent the wisdom of the tablet of Enoch. It is Enoch, as Noah, Deucalion, or Hercules, who is the "great traveler of the unknown." Hercules is mentioned later in the poem, and his tomb is said to be located in a cave within Montsegur. He was the pilot of the boat called the "Cup of Helios" (the "Sun-ark"). That would make Hercules (also called "Arkaleus") another manifestation of the archetype of Noah (whom I have identified as being the same as Enoch). Hercules is famous for enduring a series of twelve trials, all of which clearly represent the houses of the zodiac. Le Serpent Rouge may be presenting us with a strange allegory for the Labors of Hercules: one in which there are thirteen trials, and thirteen zodiac houses, instead of twelve. The "unknown" through which he travels, then, would be the zodiac - the Celestial Sea, also represented by the serpent.

They reached me separately, nevertheless they form a whole for him who knows that the colors of the rainbow give a white unity, or for the Artist, who, under his brush, is able to, from the six hues of his magic palette, make the night spurt out..

This passage refers to the peculiar property of the seven colors of visible light, which, when combined, form a pure white light, the radiance of divine illumination. This may be an allusion to the alchemical language of light. When all of the major pigment colors are added together, they form the opposite - black. The Grail has always symbolized, in part, the essential unity of diverse aspects of the universe in this manner, including the unity of opposites such as black and white. The author of this poem seems to be saying that that Grail has been broken into disconnected pieces and scattered about, like the pieces of Osiris' body, or the original language of the Tower of Babel.

This friend, how does one present him? His name remains a mystery, but his number is that of a famous seal.

"His name remains a mystery" because the true Enoch is hidden behind many veils of myth, and is given many names. The "seal" is the six-pointed seal of Solomon, which is associated in the occult with Saturn (Satan). I have discussed how this symbol also represents the "Arka" and the world-mountain.

How does one describe him? Maybe like the pilot of the imperishable Ark...

This is a direct reference linking the main character to the Flood hero.

… impassable like a column on a white rock, scanning towards the South, where the black rock is.

Here we have a reference to a white rock and a black rock. The Grail stone is said to be both white and black, and this will have a very particular significance later on in the poem.[84] The Ark's pilot standing "impassable" upon the white rock may also refer to the mountain that the Ark rested upon when the Flood subsided, like Mount Ararat in the Bible.

In my arduous pilgrimage, I was tempted to clear for myself, with a sword, a way towards the inextricable vegetation of the woods. I wanted the reach the mysterious house of the Sleeping BEAUTY in whom certain poets see the QUEEN of a fallen kingdom.

This describes the "Herculean" task of finding the tomb of the goddess-queen said to be buried in the Pyrenees. She embodies the goddess archetype of Venus, the Sleeping Beauty. The symbols of the labyrinth and the dense woods are identical and are often combined in other versions of the Tomb of Venus tale. Nicholas de Vere writes in The Dragon Legacy that, "Labyrinths were often placed in the center of groves. Sleeping Beauty, Diana and Rapunzel's tower were all located in the middle of groves or thick woods." And as the poem says, Venus was indeed a queen during the golden age. That kingdom is now "fallen", and it is that "fallen kingdom" which the Priory of Sion wishes to revive.

[84] Albert Pike stated in Morals and Dogma: "The Ancients adored the Sun under the form of a black stone, called Elagabalus, or Heliogabulua. The faithful are promised, in the Apocalypse, a white stone."

Worried about finding the way again, the parchments of this Friend were for me like the thread of Ariadne.

Here we have a direct reference to the aforementioned labyrinth, specifically the one built on Crete which is the center of the famous Greek myth of Theseus and the Minotaur, discussed earlier in this book. This labyrinth symbol repeatedly comes up in connection to the Venus myth and the Holy Grail. The labyrinth is often located inside the caverns of Venus's enchanted mountain, or, as in the Rapunzel story, can be entered through a tower that represents a mountain. In fact in Scandinavia labyrinths are referred to as "Babylons", indicating that perhaps a labyrinth was located underneath the Tower of Babel, like the labyrinths that have been found underneath South American ziggurats and the pyramids of Egypt. There may then be one underneath the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau. As Nicholas de Vere states, "The labyrinth, like the pyramid and its collaterals, is thought to be a development of the idea of the mountain cave."

De Vere also sees the labyrinths as a feminine, vaginal symbol, and the Sleeping Beauty story as a metaphor for sex magic. He points out that the word "labyrinth" very likely comes from "labia", and that, "On at least two occasions in England labyrinths have been euphemistically referred to as 'fishtraps'", bringing to mind not only a vaginal connotation, but one specifically associated with Venus, who was represented in myth by the fish, and who came from a race of "navigators", all of whom were associated with fish and water. In some versions of the myth of the Melusine - that half-woman, half-fish who was the spawn of Satan (clearly a representation of the Venus archetype), and who spawned the Angevin kings - de Vere says that Melusine is depicted as residing in the midst of a labyrinth. "The center of the maze", he writes, "incorporated a black cubic stone, from which spurted the waters of life, La Fontaine de Soif, and the blood of the Virgin Womb." This relates to de Vere's theory that the Grail kings of the ancient world regularly participated in a vampiric ritual that involved drinking the menstrual blood and female ejaculate of so-called "Grail maidens", the foremost of which was Venus herself, "the Queen of Harlots", and head of the temple prostitutes.

This ritual would have been cause itself for the Grail kings to observe a 364-day lunar calendar based on thirteen lunar (and menstrual) cycles of twenty-eight days each. Such a calendar would seem to be represented by the labyrinth on the floor of the Chartres Cathedral in France, of which de Vere writes that, "The radius of the maze is 21 feet, which is 3 x 7, representing the three fallow weeks of the menstrual cycle.

The week of menstruus would be represented by the point at the center of the maze, which is, on certain days, illuminated red." This is accomplished by use of a stained glass window through which sunlight shines upon the center of the maze. Here also can be found, according to de Vere, a "six-petaled Plantagenet or wild rose, carved into which there seems to be an M figure reminiscent of the symbol of Virgo."

In the myth of the Minotaur, the thread of Ariadne is what allowed Theseus to escape from the Labyrinth after slaying the beast. Every nine years, the Minotaur required a sacrifice of seven youths and seven virgins, who were placed as hapless victims inside the labyrinth, where they were torn apart and eaten by the monster. This state of affairs is what Theseus was sent to rectify by slaying the monster. As de Vere writes, "...by the time Theseus is said to have turned up, the tribute to the Minotaur in youths' and virgins' blood had been paid twice in 18 years. Gematrically this gives us a total of 28 victims, on one lunar cycle of 28 days."

Ariadne, while depicted as human in some versions of the tale, would appear to represent a spider who spins a magic thread. Note the similarity between the name of "Ariadne" and that of "Arachne", from whence we get the word "arachnid", denoting an eight-legged creature, such as a spider.[85] Arachne was a Greek goddess, the master spinstress of Olympia, who hung herself after she lost a web-spinning contest to the goddess Minerva. Her competitor then felt sorry for her, and reincarnated her in the form of a spider. This web-spinning goddess figure would seem to have a link to Sleeping Beauty, who, if you will recall, fell into a deathless sleep after pricking her finger on an enchanted spinning wheel. Theseus entered the labyrinth with the magic thread of Ariadne tied around his waist, like the cable tow of the Freemasons that is worn while "groping for light" (akin to traversing a labyrinth) during their initiation ceremonies. De Vere compares the story to that of Rapunzel, writing that, "In Rapunzel the golden thread is her hair, and the maze is substituted by the equally daunting but related structure, a Tower."

Thanks to him, from now on with measured steps and with a certain eye, I can discover the sixty-four dispersed stones of the perfect cube…

The "sixty-four dispersed stones" which form a "perfect cube" must be a crucial part of this mystery. There are sixty-four squares on a chessboard, and a perfect sixty-four-square chessboard is formed by the black and white tiles on the floor of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau, facing both the statue of the demon Asmodeus, and the statue of Saint Germain, as if they were opposing players in a game of chess. In addition, the cipher used in one of the Sauniere parchments is based upon the chessboard, specifically the “Knight’s Tour.” This is a mathematical puzzle, to which there are numerous solutions, the goal of which is to have the knight visit each square on the chessboard once only, using the L-shaped knight’s move. The Knight’s Tour was also used to form the encryption system used in the code found on one of Sauniere’s parchments.

The chequered pattern, and the game of chess itself, is associated with the Knights Templar, who purportedly acquired knowledge of these things through their extensive contact with Eastern mystics during the Crusades. The game of chess not only represents the eternal battle between the forces of good and evil, light and dark; it also represents something astrological. First of all, the board’s outer ring consists of twenty-eight squares, which, as Michael Schneider acknowledges in The Beginner’s Guide to Constructing the Universe, represents the twenty-eight days of the lunar cycle. The king and queen are solar and lunar symbols, as Schneider elaborates:

“The king, the most important piece, represents the Sun of this solar system... traveling only one step at a time, along both square and triangular lines, in any of eight directions. The king is virtually hidden from the action, yet the entire game revolves around it...The queen is the most powerful piece on the board, having unlimited movement in any of eight directions of manifestation... In another sense she is Regina Coeli, Queen of the Heavens, the widely traveling moon which always reflects the light of the Sun, the king.”

Besides the king and queen, other pieces on the board also have special significance. The four rooks, or towers could represent the “four watchtowers” that divide the zodiac into four cardinal points, and which were incorporated into the headdress of the goddesses Isis and Diana, as well as Mary Magdalene. (In fact, a statue of Mary Magdalene crowned with four towers can be seen just outside in the courtyard of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau.) The black and white squares could be considered alternating periods of day and night. The chessboard itself, made up of four concentric rings of squares, resembles a “bird’s eye view” of a four-stepped ziggurat, and thus represents the world mountain that in the eyes of the ancients provided the axis along which the cosmos metaphorically rotated.

In the belief system of ancient man, it was the cosmos, and the heavenly bodies contained within it, that controlled man's fate. The chessboard symbolizes an astrological mosaic of fate's possibilities. On the board there are six different types of pieces, and these six types of pieces can move in any of eight directions (the four cardinal points, and the four diagonal points). That there are sixty-four possibilities is fitting, since there are sixty-four six-part "codons", or "genetic words" in human DNA. There are also, notably, sixty-four hexagrams in the Chinese divination system known as I-Ching. The relationships between the pieces on the chessboard form, as Michael Schneider suggests, "...lines of force composing an energy web", like the web of the spider goddess Arachne, whose eight legs can be likened to the eight directions on a chessboard, as well as the eight squares that are on each side of the chessboard's outer ring. Schneider writes that, "The chessboard, the spider's web... and the I-Ching each in its own way represents the world's opposite forces weaving the eight-fold 'elements'... the warp and weft of matter's web." The Web of Arachne, or the "Web of Fate", was also likened by Nicholas de Vere to the Buddhist eight-spoked Wheel of Life, and to the Tarot's eight-spoked Wheel of Fortune, which both seem, in this context, to be not unlike Sleeping Beauty's spinning wheel, which controlled the fate of an entire kingdom.

There is another important connection as well. I discussed earlier how the Egyptian symbols of the Eye of Ra and the Eye of Horus represent the "Grail stone", the "stone that was rejected" and the "substitute" stone. Well, according to R.T. Rundle Clark's Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, the Eye of Horus consists of "64 parts" that have been scattered and need to be reassembled! He writes:

"It will soon be seen that if each part of the [Eye of Horus] represents a fraction of the descending geometric series 1/2, ¼, 1/8, etc., put together, they make 63/64… So Thoth[86] can say 'I came seeking the Eye of Horus, that I might bring it back and count it!'"

The Eye of Horus is a representation of the Grail stone as the "All-Seeing Eye" of Satan, with which all of his direct descendants are able to see as well. This would have to be the "Third Eye" of Hinduism, called the "Ajna" (which comes from "Az", a title used by both Cain and Enoch). Is this, then the "certain eye" which discovers the "sixty-four dispersed stones of the perfect cube"?

The "perfect cube" is also an important symbol in the ancient mysteries, being representative of the "Philosopher's Stone" of the alchemists. Albert Pike wrote that the Emerald Tablet was a cube. The cube contains, in its angles, magic numbers. As Pike wrote:

[86] Remember that Thoth is the same figure as Hermes, or Enoch.

"If we delineate a cube on a plane surface thus, we have visible 3 faces, and 9 external lines, drawn between 7 points. The complete cube has 3 more faces, making 6; 3 more lines, making 12; and 1 more point, making 8. As the number 12 includes the sacred numbers 3, 5, and 7, and 3 times 3, or 9, and 3 times 3, or 9, and is produced by adding the sacred number 3 to 9, while its own two figures, 1,2, the unit, or monad, and duad, added together, make the sacred number 3; it was called the perfect number; and the cube became the symbol of perfection."[87]

The "scattered stones" of the cube mentioned in this poem may also refer to the ruined Temple of Solomon, a building whose dimensions, delineated to the architects specifically by "God" himself, formed a perfect cube. Albert Pike writes of this: "The Holy of Holies of the temple formed a cube, in which, drawn on a plane surface, there are 4+3+2=9 lines visible, and three sides or faces..." Perhaps this is why the unit of measurement used by the Hebrews for the construction of the Temple was called, by Englishmen, the “cubit.”

[87] Aleister Crowley insisted that his student magicians construct their altars with two perfect cubes stacked atop one another, "symbolizing the Great Work... The height of the altar is equal to the height above the ground of the navel of the magician. The altar is connected with the Ark of the Covenant, Noah's Ark, the nave (navis, a ship) of the Church, and many other symbols of antiquity."

Given what we know, we can now look at one of the mysteries surrounding Jean Cocteau, the presumed author of the poem Le Serpent Rouge, with fresh insight. In the mural he created at the Notre Dame de France in London, he signed his name with the mysterious initials “D.D.D.” - a code which has never been explained. But if you consider that “D” is the fourth letter of the alphabet, and then cube the number 4 (4x4x4, or 4 to the third power), you get 64 - a perfect cube.[88]

… that the Brothers of the BEAUTY of the black woods, escaping the usurpers pursuing them, disseminated while they were fleeing the white Fort.

If the “beauty” is Isis, or Venus, then her “brothers” are the Cainites, who literally were her brothers. Also note that there is a woman whose grave, located on the grounds of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau, is very important to the whole mystery, and whose name, “Marie de Blanchefort”, means literally, “Marie of the White Fort.” Clearly her grave stone, and her name, are clues pointing to the grave of Venus, the real “Marie of the White Fort.”

---

[88] In this context, it is also worth noting that Cocteau was one of the major participants in Hans Richter’s film 8x8: A Chess Sonata, and he created one of the film’s most bizarre segments.

Reassemble the scattered stones, and work with square and compass to put them back in regular order;

The Freemasons’ most well-known emblem is the L-shaped, right-angled square and compass, and this reassembly of “scattered stones” indicates re-acquiring “that which was lost”, i.e., the Grail stone, by using the L-shaped, right-angled moves of the knight in the Knight’s Tour to “reassemble the scattered stones.”

…search for the line of the meridian that goes from the Orient to the Occident, then look from the South to the North, and finally in every direction to obtain the sought solution, stationing oneself before the fourteen stones marked with a cross.

This indicates using the “Roseline” meridian discussed previously. It has been suggested that the “fourteen stones marked with a cross” may actually refer to the fourteen Stations of the Cross within the church, each of which is surmounted by a Celtic-style cross with a circle. However, I am not certain that this is the correct interpretation.

The circle was the ring and the crown, and that was the diadem of this QUEEN of the castle.

This passage associates the Venus figure with the written symbol of Venus: a cross surmounted by a circle - the queen crowned. This sign is related to the Celtic cross mentioned above, and to the Egyptian Ankh, which was also used by the Cathars, who referred to it as “the Albigensian cross.” This imagery may further be related to that of the constellation Virgo, who is depicted in iconography as crowned with a circle of stars, as are Isis and the Virgin Mary.

The stones of the mosaic pavement from the sacred place are alternately white or black, and JESUS, like ASMODEUS, observes their alignments.

This again is the black and white chessboard tiling on the floor of the church at Rennes-le-Chateau, which both the statues of Jesus and Asmodeus are staring down on. Perhaps we are meant to observe the alignment of the chessboard with other items in the church, and/or to project these alignments outward through the wider surrounding landscape.

My view seemed incapable of seeing the summit where the Sleeping Beauty lay hidden.

Again, we have a reference to the goddess buried within the mountain: the Venusberg tale, upon which the story of Sleeping Beauty is based.

It is not by the magical strength of HERCULES that one deciphers these mysterious symbols engraved by observers of the past.

This is a reference to the cave known as the Tomb of Hercules (a.k.a Enoch), which is covered with hieroglyphic symbols, just as the tomb of Hermes (Enoch) supposedly is.

In the sanctuary, nevertheless the font of benediction, fountain of love of the believers, reminds us of these words again: "BY THIS SIGN YOU WILL CONQUER."

The holy water stoup at Rennes-le-Chateau is marked with the phrase, “By this sign you shall conquer.” This phrase was used by Constantine when he saw his vision of the sun-cross in the sky. The cross above the stoop is of the Celtic type described previously. However, it has been suggested in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, and in the literature published by the Priory of Sion, that the sign which Constantine really envisioned was the Chi Rho. This is a symbol made out of the first two Latin letters in the Latin word for “Christ.” It is pre-Christian in origin, but is now a common Catholic symbol.

From her who I wish to free, steams of perfume that impregnated the sepulcher climbed towards me. Formerly some called her ISIS, queen of the beneficial spring, COME TO ME ALL OF YOU WHO SUFFER AND WHO ARE AFFLICTED, AND I WILL COMFORT YOU. For others: MADGALENE, of the famous vase full of healing balm. The initiates know her true name: OUR LADY OF THE CROSS.

Here the author associates Isis, Venus, Virgo, and Mary Magdalene with the vase full of balm which all of these characters were supposed to have carried, and which can also be linked with the Holy Grail. The use of the term “Our Lady of the Cross” again associates the goddess with the Celtic circle and cross symbol. The idea that she needs to be “freed” from something indicates that she, like her brothers, the Cainites, is imprisoned within her mountain tomb, trapped “in a deathless sleep”, like Sleeping Beauty.

I was like the shepherds of the famous painter POUSSIN, perplexed in front of the enigma: “ET IN ARCADIA EGO…”!

It goes without saying that this is a reference to Nicolas Poussin’s painting, The Shepherds of Arcadia, which was mentioned in the Sauniere parchments, and which depicts the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau. The painting is a clue indicating the sacred tombs located within the mountains.

The voice of the blood made me form an image of an ancestral past. Yes, the lightening flash of genius cut across my thinking. I saw it again, I understood! I knew now this fabulous secret.

The author is perhaps experiencing ancestral memories pertaining to the secret of the Grail, for he may be of the Grail blood himself.

One must marvel that, during the jumps of the four horsemen, the hooves of one horse left four imprints on the stone.

The mention of horses brings to mind the "horse of God" that was mentioned in the Sauniere parchments. However, these "four horsemen" are the four knights on the chessboard, and their "jumps" are once again a reference to the Knight's Tour. They are also reminiscent of the four horsemen of The Revelation of Saint John the Divine.

There is the sign that DELACROIX had given in one of three tableaus in the Chapel of Angels. There is the seventh sentence that a hand had traced: DELIVER ME FROM THE MIRE, SO THAT I WILL NOT STAY HERE SINKING. Twice IS, embalmer and embalmed, miracle vase of the eternal White Lady of the Legends.

"Twice IS" is, of course, Isis, or Venus, the "Eternal White Lady of the Legends." Here, her vase is associated with the embalming of corpses, both her own and someone else's. Of course, Mary Magdalene's balm was supposedly used to "anoint" Jesus for burial. "Deliver me from the mire" is perhaps a prayer from the Ark navigator, asking to be saved from the Flood, to keep him from sinking into the mud that was swallowing up creation all around him. It also may link up with the story of the children of God, Shu and Tefnut, who in Egyptian mythology got lost in the Primeval Waters, and were saved by God's eye, which was sent out to find them. In the myth, the Eye was personified as female, a precursor to the idea of the goddess Isis.

Begun in darkness, my journey could only be completed in Light.

Here is yet another reference to the opposing but equal powers of good and evil, light and dark.

At the window of the ruined house, I contemplated the trees made bare by the autumn.

This "ruined house", like the story of the ruined Temple of Solomon, or the ruined Tower of Babel, represents the loss of the Grail wisdom after the cataclysm.

At the summit of the mountain, the cross detached itself from the crest under the midday sun. It was the fourteenth and highest of all with 35 centimeters!

I have already discussed the significance of the time of midday, or high noon, in regards to the Rennes-le-Chateau mystery. As for the rest of this passage, I have been unable thus far to decipher it conclusively.

Here I am, thus, on my knight's tour, on the circuit of the divine horsemen of the abyss.

Here is an even more overt reference to the Knight's Tour. The words "divine horsemen" would also seem to correlate with the "horse of God" reference in Sauniere's second parchment. "Crossing the Abyss" may be analogous to discovering the tomb, and "reassembling the scattered stones" – regaining the Grail.

Celestial vision for him who remembers the four works of E. M. Signol regarding the meridian line;

Emile Signol was a painter who produced four paintings of the old Paris meridian line, which the Priory documents suggest has some geometric relationship to the "Roseline" meridian. Signol also painted a famous portrait of King Dagobert II. All of these works are now on display in the Saint Sulpice church in Paris.

…at the choir of the sanctuary from where this spring of love radiates towards one another, I pivot, looking from the rose from P to that of the S, then from the S to the P…

I believe this line refers to the tombs hidden beneath the mountains of Rennes-le-Chateau: the "sanctuary." The word "choir" comes from "core", indicating the inner chamber of that structure, the "heart of the sanctuary." The word "heart" in French, is "coeur", and it comes from the Latin "cor" or "cordis", from whence we get the word "cardia", designating the heart organ   These words are also related to the ancient words "kar" and "gar", the key syllables in the words "Garral", or "Grail", and "Kardo", the name given in The Book of the Cave of Treasures for the mountain upon which the Ark landed, which I have equated with Mt. Cardou in Rennes-le-Chateau. I have already discussed the idea that Cardou/Kardo may have been, as indicated by the Priory of Sion's own writings, the "zero point" for the ancient prime meridian referred to by the Priory as the "Roseline", and thus was literally the "center of the Earth" in ancient times.

The “rose” mentioned may be the “hidden sun” said to be within the tomb, which is referred to metaphorically in occult ritual as a rose. It may represent, in this instance, the “heart” of Mt. Cardou. If the prime meridian of the ancient world passes through this point, this may explain why it is called “the Roseline.” The reference to the “heart” which “radiates the source of love for one another” identifies this “rose” with the Sacred Heart symbol as well, which was used by the Priory of Sion under their guise as the Hieron du Val d’Or, and which is discussed in Appendix C. The Sacred Heart symbol is further linked with the rose-cross, the Celtic cross, the ankh, and the Venus symbol. All of these represent this concept of the center of the Earth and the prime meridian.

The “P” and “S” represent the Priory of Sion, but also have another meaning regarding bread and salt, as explained previously.

…and the spiral in my mind becomes like a monstrous octopus expelling its ink. The tentacles absorb the light, I am dizzy.

The tomb of Marie de Blanchefort, which in its inscription reveals the coded words “Et in Arcadia Ego”, also has the figure of an octopus etched down at the bottom. The octopus is, according to Priory of Sion member Paul LeCour, a solar symbol used in Atlantis. It also contains the same symbolism as Arachne, the spider goddess, in regards to the number eight and the chessboard.

"The spiral in my mind" may signify the Fibonacci spiral. On the tombstone of Marie de Blanchefort, at the top, we find the letters P and S, linked by a Fibonacci spiral. Furthermore, when an octopus expels ink into water, the ink makes a perfect Fibonacci spiral, another peculiar property of nature. Spirals in general, however, can also be seen as yet another representation of the labyrinth, or maze.

I put my hand to my mouth, instinctively biting my palm, maybe like OLIER in his coffin.

This is the Masonic "Sign of Horror", made by raising the hand over the mouth and biting the palm, a perfectly apt sign to be made if, for instance, one has just discovered a tomb. In fact, this sign is used in Masonic ritual when reenacting the discovery of Hiram Abiff's tomb. Jean-Jacques Olier was the founder of the Seminary of Saint Sulpice. "Olier in his coffin" may just be a reinforcement of the image of the divine tombs, and the involvement of the Priory of Sion in this mystery.

Curses, I understand the truth, HE HAS PASSED in doing good, as did he of the flowery tomb.

"He has passed" is reminiscent of the phrase "he is there dead" from the Sauniere parchments, which in that case referred to the remains of King Dagobert being buried at Rennes-le-Chateau. As I have said, they were probably laid there alongside those of his ancestors, going all the way back to the Cainites. The "flowery tomb" reference is in regards to the supposed "rose (or "hidden sun") within the tomb of Enoch/Hermes.

There is a grave in the church graveyard at Rennes-le-Bains which appears to links up with this line as well - or rather, two graves. For in this yard there are two gravestones bearing the name of Paul-Urbain de Fleury, grandson of Marie de Blanchefort.[89] Henry Lincoln believes that the reason for the gravestone duplication is to draw attention to the man's name, which sounds a lot like "fleurie", the French word for "flowery."

But how many have plundered the HOUSE, leaving nothing but embalmed cadavers and metal objects that they could not have taken. What strange mystery is concealed within the new temple of SOLOMON, edified by the children of Saint VINCENT?

[89] Remember that Marie also had two graves attributed to her.

This is clearly a reference to the sacking of Solomon's Temple, the loss of the Grail, and the "ruined house" concept discussed earlier. The "new" Temple of Solomon reference alludes to the concept of regaining that which was lost. But it may also refer to Rennes-le-Chateau, linking it symbolically with the Temple of Solomon. In other words, Rennes-le-Chateau is the real "Holy of Holies", where the real "stone from Heaven", and the bodies of the real "holy patriarchs" are buried: the real "center of the Earth", and the ideal location to build a sacred temple, which I believe also exists within the mountains. The writer seems to be describing a tomb that has been partially plundered except for the bodies, and other objects that were too heavy to carry. This may indeed be the case with the tombs beneath Rennes-le-Chateau.

The "Children of Saint Vincent" are a subsection of the Priory of Sion mentioned in the statutes written for the order by Jean Cocteau, who, according to him, number 243, and who "participate neither in the vote, nor in the Convents, but to whom the Priory of Sion accords certain rights and privileges." This subgroup was created, Cocteau claimed, on January 17, 1681.

Cursing the profaners in their ashes and those who follow their ways, I leave the abyss where I was plunged while making the gesture of horror.

Here we have another reference to the Masonic "Sign of Horror" upon discovering a tomb. The "profaners" are those who have plundered the tombs.

Here is the proof that I knew the secret of the Seal of Solomon, and that I had visited the hidden houses of this queen.

Another reference to the six-pointed star, and to the "Sleeping Beauty" hidden inside of a mountain.

Take heed, dear Friend. Do not add or remove one iota; think and think again.

This indicates that clues are hidden in the precise wording of this poem, which you will understand more clearly every time you examine it. These are the same words used at the end of the Revelation of Saint John the Divine, which may not, in fact, be that last words of that book in its original form. A rumor persists that the Priory of Sion (and, I suspect, specifically Jean Cocteau) was in possession of a twenty-third chapter to The Revelation of Saint John the Divine that contained unknown secrets about the Apocalypse which the Vatican wished to remain secret. This theory is presented in Andre Douzet's book Sauniere's Model and the Secret of Rennes-le-Chateau, in which he links it to the mysterious phrase "John 23" uttered by Berenger Sauniere at his death. Just a few years later, Jean Cocteau assumed the title "John 23" when he took office as the Grand Master of the Priory.[90]

The base lead of my writing contains the purest gold.

These words imply that the tomb which the poem describes contains the secrets of alchemy, which it would if it contained the tablet of Enoch (Hermes).

Returning to the white hill, the sky has opened its floodgates.

In the Bible, the "floodgates" of the "firmament of Heaven" were opened to let loose the catastrophic Deluge.

---

[90] Remember that, since the Cutting of the Elm, all Priory Grand Masters have taken on the title "John."

There seemed to be a presence nearby, its feet in the water like him who comes to receive the mark of baptism.

Following the Flood reference, here we have yet another reference to water, specifically baptism. This could symbolize the cleansing of the Earth via the Flood, or the "baptism of wisdom" represented by the name "Baphomet" that was taken on by Seth/Cain. It could also refer in part to Christ's baptism by John the Baptist. In those days, the ritual was performed not by an emersion of the entire body, but only the feet. Note that Jean Cocteau's mural at Notre Dame de France in London shows only the feet of Christ. But there is another mural of Cocteau's that illustrates this principle even more clearly. It is the mural in the Chapel of Saint Peter entitled Saint Peter Walking on Water. The painting shows Peter being held aloft by an angel while his feet are dipped into the water, as though he were being baptized.

I turn again towards the East. Facing me I see rings unrolling without end, the enormous SERPENT ROUGE cited in the parchments. Salty and bitter, the enormous unchained beast became, at the feet of this white mountain, red in color.

This passage could conceal a hidden message regarding the combination of red and white powders in alchemy. The reference to the snake being “bitter” reinforces the association with the sulfurous red element used in that process.

My emotions were rising. “Deliver me from the mire!”, I said, and awoke immediately. My dream is over. I have omitted from telling you in effect that this was a dream I had this JANUARY 17th, feast day of Saint SULPICE..

January 17, as we know, is a date that recurs frequently in this Rennes-le-Chateau mystery. It is the day Marie de Blanchefort is recorded to have died, and the date on which Berenger Sauniere fell ill with a stroke, from which he died five days later. It is also the date on which Nicolas Flamel, one of the Grand Masters of the Priory of Sion, is recorded to have successfully completed his first alchemical transformation of base metal into gold, and the date upon which the Priory of Sion‘s “Children of Saint Vincent“ were created. Furthermore, it is, as the poem notes, the Feast Day of Saint Sulpice, and we know that the Priory of Sion took headquarters in the Seminary of Saint Sulpice for some time.

Recently I have discovered even more interesting connections regarding this date. The Birthday Book of Saints, by Sean Kelly and Rosemary Rogers, says that January 17th is also the feast day of St. Anthony the Hermit, the patron saint of buried treasure has cropped up elsewhere in the Rennes-le-Chateau mystery. But even more astounding is that, in addition, this date marks the feast day of "St. Roseline", whose name contains an obvious connection to the "Roseline" meridian (which, incidentally, runs through St. Sulpice in Paris). According to Kelly and Rogers, she was:

"… the mind reading prioress of Provence. When she was exhumed in 1334, four years after her death, her body was perfectly incorrupt. The astonished cleric in charge was so impressed by the beauty of her eyes that he scooped them out and took them home."

The details of this story clearly mimic the legend of Venus lying incorrupt within her tomb. The bit about the eyes being taken out connects with the idea of the "Watchers", and with the story of the missing eye of Horus.

Afterwards, my trouble persisting, I wanted after some reflection to tell you a fairytale by PERRAULT.

Charles Perrault, a seventeenth century French writer and poet, was the author of the book Sleeping Beauty.

Here then, dear reader, in the pages that follow are the result of a dream that cradled me in the world of the strange and the unknown. To him who PASSES BY, DO GOOD!

Here the writer seems to be suggesting that we use the clues embedded in the poem to explore the "world of the strange and the unknown", and to "do good" by solving the mysteries of the Grail, and of Rennes-le-Chateau.

There are many riddles still left to be solved within this poem. This may form the basis for a forthcoming book on the subject.

Appendix C: Le Hieron du Val d'Or

From Secret Dossiers by Henri Lobineau (attributed).

Translated by Tracy Twyman

The Greek philosophers were ignorant of the source of the knowledge contained in their mythology. Aristotle said that it came from the barbarians, and holy Clement of Alexandria expressed the same opinion. The word "barbares" is without a doubt closer to the Hebrew word "Ber." It is remarkable then that the Hebrew root "BER" means "source", an idea which is associated with that of an "origin."[91]

Cesar notes that the Welsh Druids used writing of a Greek nature. We are thus incited to see in Greek the writing of those who, along with bronze, brought to the Mediterranean basin their worship and their gods. It is also on these premises that they would have conceived of the myths collected by the Greeks.

The men of prehistory had, to our knowledge, been inclined towards the constellations of the North, and to the Great Bear (Grand Ourse)[92], the one named and illustrated by the ancients. However, the word “Aour” means light in Hebrew. The Great Bear is the great light, but what word is it in our language? The answer is rather unexpected and I give it without any reservations. Indeed, in Hebrew, as always, the name of the animal called “the Bear” is “CHR TZ”, where one discovers the word Christ.[93] The astonishing mystery is a source of constant admiration when one sees the relationships between the words, or the words by which the verbs manifest!

[91] In this translation, "Dagobert" would mean "source of the fish." The word "source" also indicates a stream in French.
[92] "Ourse" means "she-bear."

Is it not already obvious that to speak a poor French dialect that originated elsewhere will not make mankind become one single family, and that it is the call to transformation alone which must bring together the people into a single herd, led only by a single pastor?

As for the red flag, it is that of the Sacred Heart. Previously, a red cloth was thrown derisively on the shoulders of Jesus in front of Pilate, who then scoffed at his alleged office of King of the Jews. And in the Apocalypse, XIX, 13, it is covered in a red cloak that Christ returns in royal majesty. Red is indeed the crimson color of the kings, this primitive race having given to the world its rules and its laws, because all the people of Europe living on the banks of the Atlantic Ocean can claim the priestly heritage.

[93] Recall the sacredness of the bear to the Merovingian kings, who worshipped it as part of the cult of Diana. Dagobert II was probably killed during a ritual bear hunt as part of this cult, on a date very close to Christmas. Ursa Major, the Great Bear who accompanies Polaris, the pole-star, was also called “Arktos”, of which the root word is, notably, “ark.”

Red is the color of the primitive solar religion. If the skeletons of the Celtic epoch were buried in red earth, then the Peaux-Bouges, who polish the body in red in certain instances, are presently heirs to the Celtic tradition.

The color red is that of Hermes (that of the kermes). The black color (of anarchy) must, in the transformations of the substance principle, transform itself into a red color. The red flag has, besides other things, a long history which is connected to the universal Tradition in general and with that of France in particular.

When the Roman Empire extended itself down into Scotland, a red standard called the "vexillum" or "cantabrun" was used as the exclusive insignia of the more venerated armies. During battle, it was carried at the head of the troops. The guard was entrusted to fifty Praetorians chosen from among the strongest and bravest men. This standard consisted of a crossed lance made from a stick, from which fell a crimson veil with fringes of gold. The pole was surmounted with an eagle made of gold. After the famous vision of the monogram of Christ (not the cross like they mistakenly say) and his apparition in the Sun - a vision of that place surrounded by Autumn, which was accompanied by a voice saying to him, "By this sign you will overcome" - the emperor Constantine placed this monogram at the top of the pole of the red standard, consequently giving it the significant name of "labarum."

In fact, the monogram of Christ, about which they little question themselves, contains the necessary elements and symbolic systems sufficient to penetrate the labyrinth. A red flag was thus the first French flag, and this idea brings to mind the famous oriflamme (golden flame) preserved in the basilica of Saint-Denis, which on many occasions led the French to victory with the cry of "Montjoie Saint-Denis"[94], and which was a red banner cut out in points at the bottom, spangled with lily of gold, and bordered with a fringe of gold

This standard was originally the banner of the Abbey of Saint Denis. Its color indicates that of the wine devoted to Dionysus, because between Saint Denis and Dionysus there is an etymological relationship. The holy Denis lost his head, having been decapitated. Dionysus lost his heart. However, he who discovers the relationship which exists between the two legends has penetrated one of the mysteries of esotericism.

Dionysus is the divine spirit of evolution throughout the universe, the radiant spirit, alive with intelligence. We know that he was torn apart by the Titans, who devoured his members and interred his heart, but that Minerva (Athena) carried this heart into the sky, captioning an entire teaching of the Orphic tradition. The word Orpheus contains “Or- phos.” It is it a word composed of two words, the one Hebrew and the other Greek, and significantly both mean “light.”

[94] This phrase originated with Merovingian King Clovis, who is said to have shouted: "Mon Jou Saint Denys!" ("My Jove shall be Saint Denis!") while charging into battle. It became the battle cry of all French kings. (Source: The Lives of the Saints by Sabine Baring-Gould.)

The Devotion of the Sacred Heart

In reality, the devotion towards the Sacred Heart is nothing more than a popularization of a very old cult, that of the Heart of the Sky (the Sun). It is by a radiant heart that we represent the heart of Christ, that within which we do not see a gross materialization. The Church, in its psalms, glorifies it “In sole posuit tabernaculum suum.”[95] They thus regarded it as the gate to the vault of divinity, and, as in the famous credo, “that which is Lumen of Lumine.”[96] With far less devotion to Him, such consideration gives a considerable breadth and antiquity to Him, and unites with something larger the one and single Tradition to which belongs the Christian religion.

[96] “Light of Light.”

The crowned heart figure on megalithic monuments is part of the religious tradition of solarism. It was carried to Crete on vases dated several millennia ago, and it is not without some emotion that I have seen, in the windows of certain museums, Egyptian amulets representing a heart surmounted with a cross, identical to the modern badges of the Sacred Heart.

Templars, attached to a very old Tradition, held great honor for the crowned heart. A radiant heart in front of which a character is in worship is reproduced on one of the walls of the keep of Chinon, where there were imprisoned a certain number of Templars who covered the walls with graffiti. The image of the radiant heart can be seen also in their English commanderies.

The association of the heart of Christ with the Sun appears clearly in certain marble engravings dating from the XIII century and coming from Carthusians from Saint Denis-of-Orques. The wounded heart is indeed reproduced on this marble surrounded with the planetary signs, and signs of the zodiac.

It is in France, in Paray-le-Monial, that they have given birth to the devotion towards the Sacred Heart, which is the entitlement of the Hieron du Val d'Or. In Autumn of 1893 someone found, on the tomb of a Christian woman dating from the VI century, an inscription in Greek letters (recall that the Druids wrote in Greek letters). It comprises eleven lines, and the first letter of the first five lines form the word ICHTUS.

Here is part of this inscription:

"O divine race of the celestial fish, receive with a respectful heart in immortal life among the mortals the waters of the divine ones. Friend, remake your heart with the eternal flood of the wisdom which gives treasures. It is a reservoir of nourishment, soft like the honey of the Savior of the saints. Eat with hunger: you hold the fish in your hands."

Paray-le-Monial, February 5, 1926.

Notes from the Translator

This exerpt from Secret Dossiers was given to me by an acquaintance. The copy was very poorly produced, and the letters very small, so it was therefore very difficult to read. Any errors or omissions in translation are due to the inferior quality of the source material.

There are also many lines in this excerpt that do not entirely make sense. This document was undoubtedly written for initiates, who would have been familiar with the code words and esoteric references made throughout. However, in spite of these difficulties, there is much to be gleaned from this piece.

One of the most interesting things is the emphasis the author places on the ancient roots of words in modern languages, seeing a somewhat cabalistic symbolic connection between words that sounds similar but appear to have totally separate meanings. This shows that the approach I have taken to interpreting the language and word plays which have cropped up throughout my study was indeed the proper one. It is notable that the author seems to liken this root understanding of language to going back to the "source" of religious and mythological traditions.

That "ber" could mean "source" is an interesting idea, since this is a word that I have shown means "house" or "temple" in other languages. This brings to mind the concept that a temple, such as the Tower of Babel, could somehow embody the "source" or original language. The author's repeated emphasis on "light" and illumination indicates that he may be familiar with the concept of the language of light, and with the idea that the Grail bloodline originated with a "light race."

The author seems to see this original "source" religious doctrine of which he writes as being a "primitive solar religion", and interprets the symbol of the Sacred Heart in these terms. As we know, the Sacred Heart is essentially the same symbol as the Egyptian ankh, the rose-cross, the Celtic cross, and the sign for Venus. Such a connection seems to be drawn in these Secret Dossiers, where a version of the Sacred Heart is reproduced and labeled as "an Egyptian amulet." (This is also discussed in the text of the exerpt.) The image is said to have been taken from the "museum at Rennes." This links up with the assertion made by several authors that the Cathars used the Egyptian ankh symbol, and called it "the Albigensian cross." Also, it is interesting that he refers to this as a symbol of the "gate to the vault of divinity", or a gate to Heaven, as the Tower of Babel and Jacob's Ladder were seen to be.

According to Nicholas de Vere, the original Aryans descended from Cain had red hair, and many central figures that I have examined in this book, including Venus, Pyrrha, and Mary Magdalene, have had red hair. I have also discussed the importance of the association between the color red and the idea of (alchemical) "fire" which the Cainites were linked with. The link between the color of fire and the "black art" of "alchemy" (which is named after the word "khem", meaning "black") is made by the author also when he writes:

"The color red is that of Hermes (that of the kermes). The black color (of anarchy) must, in the transformations of the substance principle, transform itself into a red color."

That fact that blood is red is significant also in relation to the idea of a royal bloodline. The author's assertion here that "Red is indeed the crimson color of the kings, this primitive race having given to the world its rules and its laws" shows that he is fully aware of the royal, red-haired Aryan race, and the fact that they are responsible for civilizing the humanity.

The emphasis on Saint Denis is important as well. Denis is famous because when he was martyred, his head was chopped off. Yet like the proverbial decapitated chicken, he did not die right away, but ran madly about, for miles, they say, carrying his head in his hands. To this day, the seal of Saint Denis is a bishop holding his head, on a red field. The author of Secret Dossiers likens Denis to Dionysus, and indeed, other authors have suggested that Denis might have been "a Greek philosopher named Dionysus."[97] In fact, Saint Denis is "invoked against frenzy"[98] by superstitious French Catholics, and the cult of Dionysus, of course, was known for its frenzied, drunken, orgiastic rituals. Surely, there must be a connection. Secret Dossiers further links these myths with that of Orpheus, for just as Denis was decapitated, and Dionysus had his heart ripped out, Orpheus "was torn apart by the Titans…" This represents the same concept as the "scattered stones" or "that which was lost" – the Grail stone, and the Grail kingdom.

Finally, the excerpt could not have ended on a better note. The author connects the cult of Christ and the solar symbol of the Sacred Heart with "the divine race of the celestial fish." He also mentions "the waters of the divine ones", and "the eternal flood of wisdom which gives treasures", seeming references to the underground stream and the secret doctrine of Satan, which is here also likened to honey. This honey then appears to be representative of the Elixir of Life, as well as, of course, the Merovingians, whose royal symbol was the bee. Clearly, my theories linking Christ and the Merovingians to the race of Atlantean sea-gods, and to the water/fish symbolism thereof, were right on track. The link between the "eternal flood of wisdom" and Baphomet (Cain/Seth), whose name means "baptism of wisdom", has already been noted.

In addition, there is a line here which appears to shed further light on certain mysterious lines from the poem Le Serpent Rouge (discussed in Appendix B). That poem contains references to Constantine's vision of a sign of Christ, and the message he received: “By this sign you will conquer!” It also mentions, at an entirely different point in the poem, that the narrator “contemplated the trees made bare by autumn.” Although these two things are not connected in the poem, they are connected in this passage from Secret Dossiers, where it discusses the “famous vision of the monogram of Christ (not the cross like they mistakenly say) and his apparition in the Sun - a vision of that place surrounded by Autumn, which was accompanied by a voice saying to him, ‘By this sign you will overcome.’” So Constantine’s vision, then, took place in Autumn, something that is apparently significant to the Priory of Sion, and something that apparently has some bearing on the meaning of the poem Le Serpent Rouge. I have not, however, been able to fully interpret it thus far.

Medusa

In Greek mythology Medusa was a monster, a Gorgon, generally described as a winged human female with living venomous snakes in place of hair. Gazers upon her hideous face would turn to stone. The titles of this book, and its predecessor, The Medusa File—Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government, are taken from the story of Medusa. The head of Medusa in this context is a government that has many branches—the snakes—many of which are dangerous to the citizens of America, or are corrupt beyond the point of usefulness. Our "snakes" have not only covered up crimes, deceived the people, and participated in all kinds of evil enterprises, but have resisted numerous attempts of honest people to expose them and their activities. This book brings to light such events that were involved in the Oklahoma City bombing of the Alfred Murrah Building on April 19th, 1995, and expose those who would use fear and terror to accomplish their venomous agendas.

The sword that destroys Medusa in this case has a name: Truth!

This book is dedicated to the 168 Americans who perished in the Alfred P. Murray Federal Building in Oklahoma City on April 19th, 1995, and more than 650 who were injured.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

There were many good patriotic Americans who knew that what the controlled media was putting out concerning the Oklahoma City Bombing was not true. The story generated by the government and media changed on an almost daily basis. At first the bombing was blamed on a station wagon bomb, then because that was not powerful enough, a bomb in a pickup truck, and when bomb experts said that wouldn’t work, they increased it to a moving van filled with explosives.

On Day One, there were several witnesses who saw two men get out of the Ryder truck. Then, according to the media, it was just one. Even though witnesses described a John Doe 1 and a John Doe 2, and sketches were made of each, a few weeks later there was no John Doe 2 and McVeigh had delivered the truck all by himself.

There were, and still are, many of the good people who got on-board the investigation and formed loose relationships, often sharing information. All were only interested in two things: the Truth, and apprehending everyone who was involved.

Both goals have been elusive, but America needs to know what really happened on that fateful April day.

Those who went to the edge and beyond, Truth Warriors all:

INTRODUCTION

It has taken more than 20 years for me to finally sit down to begin writing this book. On April 19th, 1995 I was a veteran Tulsa, Oklahoma police officer. That terrible day was a Wednesday. On Friday afternoon my pager alerted me to a phone number that I would need to call. It was the local office of the FBI. Because the SAC (Special Agent in Charge) knew me and had read at least one of my investigative works, Kill Zone: A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza, and for other reasons, he asked me if I would be willing to do what I could to assist in the Oklahoma City bombing investigation. He also knew that I knew various patriotic groups around the state and certain individuals that I had interviewed in the past that would talk to me but not to "the Feds".

It was only 2 weeks since I had returned from Washington D.C. where I testified the House's Sub-committee on Crime on behalf of the Law Enforcement Alliance of America (LEAA) in support of the Second Amendment and against the so-called "assault weapons" and high capacity magazine ban. I was one of six police officers who testified, and two of us testified wearing the uniforms of our departments. This did not sit well with my chief of police at the time who, I found out when I returned home, was a closet liberal who hated the NRA, guns in the hands of citizens, and, by the time I got home, wasn't very fond of me either.

I spent the following week being attacked by our local liberal newspaper, The Tulsa World (which took every opportunity to attack anyone who had the audacity to say that the bombing suspects and plot concerned more than just Tim McVeigh and Terry Nichols). In my testimony before Congress I mentioned that I had spent three years on our department's Bomb Squad, that no matter what federal laws they pass, they had little impact on local law enforcement unless we requested a federal agency to help. Of the 52 bomb calls I had handled I never saw the ATF at any except one, and who never even asked for my reports.

Then Representative Charles Schumer (D-NY), appeared not to like anything I said in my 20 minute testimony, never addressed me directly or even asked me a single question (probably because I had a huge file on my table that was very impressive, but actually had only two pages of notes and the rest was blank paper! Large files are more impressive than thin ones).

Before I could return to Tulsa, Schumer had the ATF in Washington call the ATF office in Tulsa to complain that I said "they never did anything and didn't support the Tulsa Police Department" which was a total spin on what I said.

By the time I got home the SAC of the ATF (by then "upgraded" in name to the BATF and later the BATFE—Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives) had angrily visited the chief to lodge a complaint. Within a day the media was involved and I spent the next 12 days in a back-and-forth duel in the newspapers, AP and UPI, with the chief (primarily his Administrative Sergeant who was at that time running the Bomb Squad on the side, of which I was no longer a member and had not been a bomb tech for several years). The thrust of their attack was that I lied to Congress! They said that I was never a Bomb Tech, contrary to what almost every officer who served on our department between 1971 and 1974 knew. I was on the first squad, years before either the chief or his assistant were on the job with TPD. I grew tired of fencing with the chief in the media—we had gone back and forth in the newspapers every day for a week with "he said, but he said" articles—and called the chief's office. I said "Chief, you're the chief. I work for you. Instead of all the media garbage, call me in and we'll get this taken care of face-to-face."

He agreed and said he'd get back to me. (I was working as a helicopter pilot in the Air Support Unit and my office was at an airport north of Tulsa). His assistant, who by then I knew was driving the inquisition, had already contacted several officers who later told me that he had called them fishing for "evidence" that I was never on the Bomb Squad. Even my former Bomb Squad partner, Roger Harmon, who had since retired, was called by the Chief's office. Then, an Internal Affairs sergeant called to say that Internal Affairs had been ordered to dig up anything they could against me to support their position. This in spite of the fact that he could remember me as one of the original three members of the Bomb Squad, and there was no case. He advised the Chief's office of this, but they were told to keep digging.

Meanwhile I went to police personnel and pulled my personnel file. I knew that the orders from the chief at the time assigning me to the squad, and the travel documents and school records of Bomb School which we all attended in Dade County, Florida were in my file. I knew all of that was there, but when I pulled the file all documentation of my attending the school and being assigned to the bomb squad by then-chief Jack Purdie was missing! Someone had removed the orders, memo and documents.

I knew who that someone was. The Weasel, the chief's Admin Sergeant himself. No one else would have done this.

Fortunately my military training taught me long before to keep every record that was important. I had copies of all of the above and more in a file at home.

The meeting was to occur the following Monday, April 17th. But that morning the Weasel called and said it was postponed to the next day at 1 p.m.

When I arrived at the chief's office and entered the outer office where his secretary was located, our SID (Special Investigations Division) tapping and bugging specialist was just leaving—with his bag of tricks and tools. He grinned at me and winked as he passed me. He wanted me to know that he had bugged the chief's office so that whatever I said would be on tape.

I entered the chief's office and was told where to sit in a specific chair at a round table in the corner. He and the assistant chief seated themselves opposite me and the chief laid down a thin file in front of him on the table. I knew by the seating arrangement where the microphone would be. And I was right. I opened my briefcase, pulled out my very thick file (all full of pertinent documents and statements) and my bug detector's needle in my brief case pegged out on the RF meter and the "I sense a transmitter" light turned red. No problem.

A short conversation ensued in which the chief said he had evidence and witnesses that said I was never on the bomb squad.

I knew better. So I called his bluff.

"No you don't," I said.

“I don’t what?”

“You don’t have any such witnesses, and you don’t have any evidence.” I said.

He countered with “we checked your personal file and there is no record of you attending any bomb training.”

“That’s because someone took the records out. Maybe you should ask your little Admin Sergeant to take a polygraph on that!”

He then said “Well, Sergeant Guss Jones, the supervisor at the time for the Bomb Squad, doesn’t remember you.”

I chuckled and replied “Guss is in a nursing home in Texas and he has Alzheimers disease, and can’t remember what he had for breakfast.”

“We checked with Roger Harmon, who we know was on the Bomb Squad then and he said that you weren’t.” I knew the Chief was fishing and trying a very amateurish method of ambushing me with nonsense.

“That’s not true, Chief, and you know it. I talked to Roger this morning and he said if I needed him here to give him a call and he’d come up to your office. I also know that several officers, including sergeants in IAD, told you they remember me on the squad and answering bomb calls. Plus, I have all my reports and color slides of all the devices I dealt with in case you’d like to see them.”

He turned red, stammered a bit, and that’s when I laid out copies of the missing records.

His case went downhill from there. As he was mulling this over. I said “Chief, let’s cut to the chase. Was I on the bomb squad or not? Yes or no. When I leave this office I have to call D.C. and let the LEAA know the status of this. The LEAA is waiting and so is the NRA.

He almost choked as he cleared his throat and stammered “Okay, how would you suggest we deal with this?”

“Simple. You, or your media relations folks, get hold of the newspapers, and AP and UPI reporters that keep calling and tell them that I was on the bomb squad, and the mistake is because the department was missing the records—but I produced copies and cleared up the matter.”

His “apology” came out the next day, Wednesday, but ended up as a couple of paragraphs at the bottom of a back page of each newspaper. The headlines and the main story that day was “Oklahoma City Building is Bombed!”

It was April 19th, 1995.

I received a page that Friday afternoon at 5 pm, just after I had returned from patrol and had put one of our helicopters back into the hangar. I was on my way down to my office in the airport building, and was ready to do my fuel logs and report, then head home.

The assistant SAC at the Tulsa office of the FBI answered and said “You know about the bombing in Oklahoma City? We’re really trying to develop leads now. We have this McVeigh character in jail down there, but there’s got to be more people involved than just him. We were wondering if you might help us with the case by putting your feelers out—and we know you know and can talk to people that we can't—and see what you can find out about any Oklahoma connections. We'd also like to know if McVeigh is known by anyone in the State, and maybe find out about every place he might have been."

I said "I'll be glad to do what I can, but first there is one thing. I need you to call the Chief's office and have him assign me to help you. I'm sure you've seen the newspaper articles of my trip to D.C. and what happened when I got home, so I want to make sure he's the one who orders me to do it."

"No problem. I'll call right now."

In ten minutes the phone on my desk rang. It was the Weasel.

"Roberts, the FBI called us and requested your help in their Oklahoma City case. The chief has authorized it, but you still have to do all your duties here. Anything you do on that is on your own time, got it?" sneered the Weasel. I knew it was killing him to even have to talk to me, but obviously the chief didn't want to do it himself.

"Okay" I said. "I'll keep the Chief's office and my supervisor advised.

He hung up. Not very gently.

Getting assigned by the chief was the smartest thing I ever did. As it turned out I was the only Tulsa Police Officer assigned to the Oklahoma City bombing investigation.

We thought we ranked above the chance of ill.
Others might fail, not we, for we were wise—
Merchants in freedom. So, of our free-will
We let our servants drug our strength with lies.
The pleasure and the poison had its way

FOREWORD

People often ask me why I'm still alive. They say I know too much about too many things and too many people, and that I should have been taken out by now. It's a good question. I never hid from the truth, and was not shy about telling what I and others discovered during our months of investigating the bombing. I've done many radio talk shows, have videos on YouTube, I'm mentioned in other books, and during the investigation turned in many reports to the FBI, most of which probably went into the proverbial "Black Hole," never to be seen again.

I guess the simple answer goes back to what my grandfather told me just before I shipped out to Vietnam. I was visiting my grandparents and other kin in east Tennessee on the family farm outside of Maryville, at the base of the Smoky Mountains. I was sitting on the steps of his front porch and he was in a rocking chair, whittling on a piece of wood. He was a Primitive Baptist preacher as well as working at Alcoa Aluminum in nearby Knoxville. He had worked at the Oak Ridge lab during WWII when they were developing the atomic bomb, and, like so many others who worked there, he eventually developed Leukemia. But at this time, 1965, he was a tough Tennessee farmer and "hardshell Baptist," fire-and- brimstone preacher.

"Son," he said as he carved, "you're gettin' ready to go to that Vietnam place, aintcha?"

"Yes sir," I responded. All of us "kids" called him "sir" as that was the Southern gentlemanly way we were taught, just as we called Grandma "Ma'am."

"Well, them Vietnam boys, they gonna be tryin' to kill ya," he said, barely looking up from his carving.

"Yes sir, I know."

"Well, ya don't have to worry none," he said, as if it was no big deal.

"I don't?"

"No sir. When the good Lord calls you home, no one can stop it, and if He ain't ready, no one can rush it."

I lived my whole life, including the 11 months I spent as a Marine rifleman in I Corps, Vietnam in 1965-66, being a commercial diver on Catalina Island for four months, spending 27 years as a police officer in which I served on the TAC Squad (Tulsa's first version of SWAT and the predecessor to the current Special Operations Team), 3 years on the Bomb Squad, 14 years and over 3000 hours flying police helicopters (including 2 engine failures, one which totaled out a Hughes 500) and over 600 hours flying airplanes and seaplanes (with three emergency landings). Then after retiring in 1996 contracting colon cancer the following year and even flat lining on the table at St. Francis Hospital in August of '97. That was the closest I ever came to making that trip to the graveyard. But last year, 2016, I was hit with pulmonary embolisms in both lungs, sending me to the cardiac intensive care unit of a local hospital for four days.

I knew that being a 1946 model I wasn't going to live forever, so if I was ever going to write the OKC book, using all my files that I've preserved, and all my knowledge of what we discovered during our independent investigation which lasted over five years, the time was now or never.

It was not long after I entered the investigation in earnest shortly after the bombing that I discovered that there were others in Oklahoma City that were becoming involved in their own unofficial investigations. (The reader needs to know that Oklahoma City is 100 miles southwest of Tulsa, so it took me several trips down there to accomplish many of the various aspects of my investigation). It was during the ensuing months that I met several Oklahoma City folks that were also trying to uncover the truth that they all knew was different from the “official” version that the mainstream media kept spewing. They called it the Clinton-Reno-Freeh lie. For the younger readers who weren’t around then, Bill “Slick Willie” Clinton was in the White House, his FBI Director was Louis Freeh, and the Attorney General was Janet Reno, a woman picked by Hillary Clinton. Freeh seemed a good sort, but Clinton and Reno both had sordid pasts.

Their version that was shoved down the FBI’s throat (much to the chagrin of many good and honest FBI agents) was that McVeigh acted alone in bringing the Ammonium Nitrate/Fuel Oil, or ANFO-laden Ryder Truck to Oklahoma City, parking it in front of the Murrah Building, and then escaping in a yellow Mercury that had been prepositioned nearby and his buddy, Terry Nichols, helped him build the bomb. The only remaining problem with their case was that there was still the problem of dealing with a second person described as having been in the truck with McVeigh: the elusive John Doe.

There was also a loose team of civilians that had begun working together to find the truth and volunteered to help Oklahoma State Representative Charles Key, who questioned both the government version of events and the conduct of the manipulated Grand Jury. In my opinion, as I met them all over a period of a few weeks, they were doing more to get to the truth than the official government investigation, which by then had turned into a huge political spin to reinforce the story of the “Lone Nut With A Truck, Right-Wing Fanatic, Anti-Government Militia Wacko did it.”

It reminded me of my previous investigation into the Kennedy assassination when I was working on my book “Kill Zone” A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza.” In that case, the government did everything it could to pin the entire assassination on Lee Harvey Oswald. The parallels between the cases became more apparent every day that passed. It was as if this was an off-the-shelf spin job by the government. That worried me.

Those who turned over the stones and looked into the dark corners of the bombing events that I was to investigate, some of whom were also working with State Representative Charles Key (who formed a bombing investigation committee) were George Wallace, Vietnam veteran and former “Thud” pilot during the Vietnam war and by then a retired lieutenant colonel; Bill Jasper, editor and reporter for The New American magazine (John Birch Society); Pat Briley, an Oklahoma City resident and former Navy officer who served on nuclear submarines; Don Browning, an Oklahoma City police sergeant who, along with his K9 dog were some of the very first to arrive at the tragic scene; and Jayna Davis, a resilient report for KFOR-TV, Channel 4, in Oklahoma City who was the first to develop the Middle Eastern Connection—which is one of the most important parts of the case, but denied by the Justice Department and Bill Clinton.

On Day Three, the FBI raided Terry Nichols' brother, James Nichols farm in Decker, Michigan. The news that night had Clinton emphatically stating "There is NO Middle Eastern connection, period."

And from that point forward, the FBI, no matter what the witnesses said or saw, refused to look in that direction.

But we didn't.

It wasn't long before I met another individual who traveled to Oklahoma City from Berkeley, California, to investigate the case. His name was David Hoffman, and he was the editor of the Haight Ashbury Free Press. David was a leftie, by his own admission, and was just the opposite of me, a dyed-in-the-wool conservative. But we hit it off and began to correspond almost daily through emails (back then all there was was AOL, Genie and CompuServe!). I did my writing on a PC and he did his on an Apple II, so we couldn't exchange anything we wrote via computer. We had to retype everything we sent each other. Not efficient, but it was the only way we could do it.

Dave was Jewish. He had some contacts that I didn't via some Israeli connections including a few in Israeli intelligence. My main contacts were in the law enforcement sphere. Working together on many areas, we made a good team.

Dave was working on his book about the bombing, which when published was titled The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror. When the book was finally published it immediately ran into problems. He stepped on a lot of toes (which I've also been accused of doing), and one, former FBI Associate Deputy Director Oliver "Buck" Revell sued him for liable. That case would make a book in itself. The end result was that Dave's lawyer, Oklahoma City attorney Mike Johnston, defended David all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court. Revell lost the case, but the publisher, afraid of what might happen and what legal representation would cost, removed the references to Revell out of subsequent printings. The book eventually went out of print. The only references to Revell were in the first printing and very few copies remain.

Tragically, David's depression deepened over the months of the investigation and the years that followed. He decided next to investigate sex trafficking, first in California and then in the Czech Republic, where the Russian Mafia connection to sex trafficking in California led him. He moved to Prague and lived there for a year or so, but when he got close to those in power in the sex trade there (all Russian Mafia), all of a sudden the Czech secret police took an interest and arrested him. He spent several months in a Czech prison before being released and deported back to the U.S.

He settled in Boston, and would contact me occasionally, mostly in a depressed or not-to-sober state. I felt he was wearing down with too many years of fighting one-man battles and not seeming to get anywhere. As time went on even his emails became jumbled and incoherent.

I'm not sure exactly when it happened, but one day his father called and told me that Dave, who I had dubbed "The Rabbi," had committed suicide!

I was shocked. I couldn't believe it. I was always available during the months in Oklahoma City during the investigation to cheer him up and point him in a given direction. But not after he left for California. He was on his own then.

However, before he left Oklahoma, he gave me some disks with his files for his book and said "if anything happens to me, use all of this or whatever you need. Keep the truth out there!" I have in my files a letter verifying this. The letter, starting out with information concerning one of the strange deaths of witnesses to the Oklahoma City bombing, was accompanied by a disk of the draft of his chapters. He wrote: "Copy the book chapters onto your own disk, and keep them as a back-up for me. If something happens to me, use them as needed. Would you also let me know what you think? [about the chapters]."

At the time, I didn't think much about that as I was so involved in other writing projects and deadlines, and then came cancer which really set me back for months. My wife and I moved out of the city to the country in 1998 (after the Oncologist sent me home to die and told me I wouldn't last six months!). During the move, many things ended up in boxes and were never unpacked. They all went into storage.

About a month ago, after I was back on my feet from dealing with pulmonary embolisms in both lungs, I knew that if I was to ever write this book it had to be now. And, when digging through all my old files and disks and OKC records, I found Dave's disks. By this time I too was using an Apple computer. I was able to import the files of his manuscripts and go over them. I knew that I really needed to use many excerpts from them, so you will see excerpts and sections and even a chapter from the original manuscript of David Hoffman's Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror. You will also read excerpts from my book *The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Governmen*t. Hence the title for this book The Medusa File II: The Politics of Terror and the Oklahoma City Bombing. I don't intimidate very easily. It's the old Marine in me.

So here's to you, Rabbi. May God be with you. Here's to the truth, and to all my fellow Truth Warriors.

Day One 9:02 a.m., April 19th, 1995, Oklahoma City

It was like a scene from a war movie, or a horror movie. It was utter chaos. The television reporting showed a building that looked like a giant meat cleaver had taken off the whole front, leaving open floors, shattered concrete, bent steel rebar, and rubble everywhere. Victims were streaming out of the building covered with blood, fires burned cars that were parked outside and across the street, sirens were wailing, and police, firefighters, and ambulance personnel were racing into the carnage and rubble

As black smoke curled high above downtown Oklahoma City, no one could understand what had happened. At first it was reported as a "gas leak" that exploded, then, in less than an hour, it was a car bomb. Then, when bomb techs said a car bomb could not have done that amount of damage, it became a truck bomb, then finally a bomb in a "moving van truck".

The fires were being fought, first aid stations were being set up to treat victims, and everyone that could be evacuated was being shepherded out of the area. People were on the ground, requiring assistance to move or even stand up. Too many victims were still trapped on the various floors of the building, some pinned under rubble, all requiring rescue.

Damage was not limited to the Murrah Building. The shock wave of the explosions (that's with an "s" since there were more than one) shattered windows and damaged buildings for several surrounding blocks. A U.S. post office building was located northwest of the Murrah Building, the Journal Record newspaper building was located north, across the street and just beyond a parking lot. The Water Resources Board building was located just northwest across the street, the Regency Towers apartments were west of the post office. To the east was the YMCA. To the south, behind the building, was the Federal Courthouse. A block north, behind the Journal Record building, was the Southwestern Bell telephone building. All of these and more sustained damage.

In the vicinity were several surveillance cameras. Some of which looked directly at the Murrah Building and would bear witness to exactly what happened that morning.

Or would they?

Pat Baker was an employee of Southwestern Bell Telephone company and was attending a supervisor's meeting at the SWB headquarters building just a block north of the Murrah Building. She remembers quite vividly what happened that day:

"April 19th, 1995, was a typical Wednesday in mid-April, seasonably warm for early spring. I worked for (and retired from) Southwestern Bell Corporation (aka, formerly Southwestern Bell Telephone, currently AT&T) in Norman, Oklahoma, but I had a meeting that morning at "headquarters" at 8th and Harvey in Oklahoma City at 9AM. I didn't want to attend this meeting for some unknown reason, and in fact, I'd put it off three times before.

The drive into Oklahoma City was as normal as could be for morning rush hour traffic. I exited I-235 onto 6th Street and drove the few blocks to Harvey. I drove by the Murrah Building as I had done hundreds of times. The time was approximately 8:50 a.m. I was running a bit late and didn’t particularly notice anything out of the ordinary when I drove by the Murrah Building. I parked in a small corner lot at 7th and Harvey and ran across the street to headquarters. I made it to the meeting on the second floor in a room located on the south side before 9 a.m.

“The building had originally been Central High School before SBC purchased it and converted it to our headquarters location. Many of the exterior walls were huge thick paned tinted glass. The exterior wooden doors were large enough to hang in a castle and extremely heavy. The room I was in didn’t have any windows so we weren’t privy to see anything outside.

“We had just sat down and begun our meeting when there was a loud rumbling noise and the building shook. Wide eyed we all looked at one another and quickly slid from our chairs onto the floor under the huge wooden table. We had just made it under the table when another rumble came. The second was much louder and shook the building much harder. After a few moments, which seemed like hours, we emerged from under the table. Ceiling tiles had dropped from the ceiling onto the table and dust was everywhere. It was a little difficult focusing with all of the dust. I immediately advised the others we should leave the building as soon as possible. We opened the door to see massive destruction in the hallway. All of the windows were blown out and glass piled up 1 to 1 ½ feet tall. I stepped over a pile of glass going through what used to be a door onto a balcony. I tried being careful but ended up cutting my foot on the glass. The smoke that was rising and the debris that was falling from the sky was blocking the sun, making it look almost like nighttime.

“We all evacuated the building at approximately 9:15 a.m. and were told to stay outside while some officials were inspecting it for safety. We could then leave to work elsewhere or simply go home after advising our supervisors. Since I worked in Norman I planned to leave just as quickly as I could.

“While waiting I decided to walk around to see if I could see what had happened. I went to the north side of the SBC building and saw the glass was broken. The huge wooden door was still somewhat attached, but very crooked. It would take some major work to fix that one. As I rounded the corner and went on down towards where I could see a commotion, I noticed that debris was still raining from the sky.

“I made it outside and looked where the Murrah Building was and saw a sight that looked like a war zone. Strange thing that I remember everything being in black and white, except for the blood which was bright red. People were walking around in a daze clutching themselves or others. People were running for their lives. I realized that I didn’t belong there. I would just be in the way and I didn’t know what to do. So, I left and went back to SBC.

“While waiting for the okay to go back inside the building I saw a man walking at an extremely fast pace toward me. This would have been at approximately 9:30 a.m. His eyes were dazed and as “big as saucers.” His face had puncture marks dripping blood. The collar and front of his shirt was blood soaked. I began to get concerned when he came to within 15 feet of me, because I wasn’t sure if he was going to knock me down and run over me or attack me. I was beginning to build myself up for whatever was going to happen when another man ran up from behind him, grabbed him and led him off up the street. A few minutes later I saw them both leaving in a pickup truck with no windshield left.

"Once we'd been given the okay to return to the building at approximately 10 a.m. to gather what we needed, I didn't have to be asked twice. I immediately went to the room for my brief case and purse and took the time to make a few phone calls. I first called my husband, John, and told him I was okay. He hadn't heard of anything happening yet so I had to tell him there was some type of explosion but I was okay and would be home soon. I then called my secretary and told her the same. She'd not heard of anything yet either but would contact our District Manager to let him know.

"In the next few days our building was converted to a temporary command post for the rescue personnel.

"I gathered my belongings and left to go to my car. I was abruptly stopped by an OKCPD officer who was blocking the intersection and redirecting traffic. He told me I would have to go back from where I'd come. I couldn't go any further. I told him I couldn't go back and pointed to my car. I told him I just needed to get to my car and I was leaving. We had quite a discussion. He wasn't going to let me cross the street and I wasn't going to go back. He asked me if I heard the hissing sound. He pointed to the huge gas meters on the northwest corner and shouted there was a leak and could blow anytime. That was all I needed. I proceeded and succeeded in crossing the street. When I arrived at my car it was covered in dust and grime. I quickly ran around to make sure all four tires were up. I was good-to-go so I got in, started it up and proceeded to leave downtown Oklahoma City. What would normally take just a matter of minutes seemed to take forever. I can't even recreate the route I took because streets were beginning to be barricaded by the police. I finally made it back to I-235. My adrenaline was pumping so fast I probably had the strength of King Kong. I looked down at my speedometer and was shocked to see I was driving 95 MPH. I thought I'd better slow down but realized it didn't matter. All of the police were going the other direction.

"I made it home and pulled into the garage. John rushed out and looked at my car and asked me how I'd driven it. I looked and wondered the same thing. The windshield was pitted tremendously. I don't know how I saw anything through it. The top was rippled like water white-capping on the lake. The hood was nowhere near the bright red that it was just a few hours ago. I quickly ate lunch and returned to my office in Norman. John called the insurance company and arranged for my car to be repaired the next day. Lucky he acted so quickly, because in about two weeks State Farm would refuse to pay for any further claims because all were classified as 'terrorism.'

"A few months passed and I was contacted by the Audiology Department of the University of Oklahoma Health Department. They were performing a hearing study for those involved in the bombing. I agreed to do the study. I went every quarter for a hearing evaluation. The results determined that I have 60% hearing loss in my left ear which was the side that the blast occurred, and about 25% loss in my right ear.

"My car faired just as well. The electronics were somewhat fried and couldn't be repaired. The speedometer didn’t work correctly, showing a much lesser speed than I was actually traveling. So, when I was going 95 according to the meter, I was actually driving over 100 mph.

“I asked the health center if I would be able to obtain the results of their study but was advised they didn’t know who would be able to get a copy. I was told I would be contacted but have never heard from them again. “

Excerpt from David Hoffman’s The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror

“The entire façade of the nine-story superstructure had been ripped away, exposing its innards — dangling chunks of concrete, tangled strands of cables and bent pieces of rebar —into the choking, blackened sky. Now it stood smoking and eerily silent, except for the muffled cries of its few remaining inhabitants and the wailing of the sirens off in the distance.

“One man, n former Marine, likened it to carnage he had witnessed in war-torn Lebanon. Another veteran, Thu Nguyen, who had his five-year-old son Christopher in the Day Care Center, said, “I’ve seen war…. I’ve seen soldiers I fought with in Vietnam cut this way, cut in half, heads cut off. That was war. These are children. This is not a war. This is a crime.”

“The scene was surreal—almost too horrific to bear. There were bodies—and pieces of bodies — strewn about, along with children’s toys and workers’ personal effects—tragic reminders of what had moments before been the meaningful mementos of someone’s life. One passerby had been wrapped around a telephone pole, her head blown off. Workers who had been sitting at their desks were still sitting there… lifeless, morbid, like eerie figures out of a wax museum of horrors.”

Police detective Jay Einhorn remembers one scene: “There was a guy—a black guy—on the second floor, just sitting there. I knew he was dead. He’s looking at me, and I’m looking at him… if you don’t think that’s scary. We just said, man we gotta go up there and cover that guy up.”

“Daina Bradley, who was trapped under a slab of fallen concrete, was still conscious. With no way to remove her without upsetting the huge piece of concrete, doctors were forced to amputate her leg. As Bradley lay screaming in a pool of water, surgeons, using scalpels and saws, and without anesthesia, amputated her leg below the knee.”

The federal office building, home to over 550 workers, had also housed a day care center. Nearby, a makeshift morgue had been set up in what had once been the children’s playground. Refrigeration trucks lined up to haul away the dead bodies. Sheriff Clint Boehler, from nearby Canadian County, recalled, “We went flying down there at about 110 miles an hour… you never saw so many services running over each other.” As hundreds of volunteers poured in from all over the country, fireman, police and medical personnel began laying out the victims for identification. Shirley Moser, a nurse, began tagging dead children. “Their faces had been blown off, “ said Moser. “They found a child without a head.”

Those who were lucky enough to escape the carnage were wandering about, dazed and confused. One man, his face bloodied, wandered down the street, saying he was headed home, except that he couldn't remember his name or where his home was. Another man who was entering the building had his arm blown off, but was in such a state of shock that he didn't notice it as he went about trying to help others.

People who lived or worked nearby had been blown out of their chairs. Trent Smith, 240 pounds, was tossed seven feet into the air and through the window of his hotel room. Several blocks away, a bus filled with people was nearly blown on its side. The force of the blast extended for nearly 30 blocks, blowing out windows and heavily damaging dozens of buildings, causing damage to almost 400 more.

When it was all over, more than 169 people, including 19 children, lay dead, and more than 500 were injured. The damage was estimated in the hundreds of millions.

Federal authorities were calling the bombing the single largest terrorist attack in the history of the United States. Yet it was difficult to discern whether the bombing was some ominous precursor to an as yet undeclared war, or the result of some criminal plot gone horribly awry.

As rescue workers continued the difficult task of searching for bodies, and hospital workers began attending to victims, law enforcement agents began searching for clues. What was clear as law enforcement personnel descended upon the scene, was that the blast had left a 30 foot wide, 8 foot deep crater in front of the building. Fortunately, an ATF agent who had recently attended a course on the identification of car and truck-bombs just happened to be in the federal courthouse, located south behind the Murrah Building. This agent was able to identify the cause of the blast immediately. He telephoned his superiors in Dallas and told them that an ammonium nitrate truck-bomb had just blown up the Murrah Building.

Hoffman went on to write: "Investigators were busily searching the wreckage for clues that could lead them to the perpetrators. It didn't take long for investigators to find what they were looking for—a piece of axle and a license plate—believed to have been part of the truck used in the bombing. After FBI agents ran the VIN (vehicle identification number) and the plate through their Rapid Start computer system, they discovered the vehicle belonged to a Ryder rental agency in Florida. A check with the agency revealed that the truck, a 1993 Ford, was rented out of Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City, Kansas. Elliott's said that they had rented the 20-foot truck to a Bob Kling on April 17th, and gave the FBI artist a description of two men who had rented the truck, known as Unsub #1 and Unsub #2. McVeigh would use several alias's over a two year period preceding the bombing: Tim Tuttle, Robert Kling, Shawn or Sean Rivers, and Daryl Bridges.

"Kling—McVeigh—had listed his address as 3616 North Van Dyke Road in Decker, Michigan. The address was the home of James Douglas Nichols and Terry Lynn Nichols. A quick check of that address with the Michigan Department of Motor Vehicles revealed a driver's license in the name of Timothy James McVeigh.

The photos of the alleged axle from the Ryder truck showed a part number, not a VIN number. The number shown was EQ HT 5993 AB, unlike any VIN numbers in the U.S. VIN numbers in the U.S. start with the number "1" and include several numbers, and are 17 digits long. There was no way to trace this number to anything, much less a Ryder rental truck. The only way the FBI could know where the truck was rented was if they had the actual VIN number.

Hoffman continued: “FBI agents interviewing James Nichols and other relatives in Decker quickly learned that Timothy McVeigh was a friend of Nichols, who possessed large quantities of fuel oil and fertilizer. Armed with a search warrant, agents found twenty-eight 50-pound bags of fertilizer containing ammonium nitrate, a 55 gallon drum containing fuel oil, blasting caps, and safety fuse.

“Interviews with neighbors revealed that the Nichols brothers and McVeigh had experimented with explosives, using household items to produce small bombs using bottles and cardboard cartons, which they would detonate on their property for fun. Witnesses also claimed that in December of 1993, McVeigh and one of the Nichols brothers had visited Thumb Hobbies, Etc. to inquire about purchasing 100% liquid nitro model airplane fuel. One of these witnesses had reported that James Nichols had repeatedly blamed the U.S. government for all the problems in the world.

“Federal agents then decided they had enough evidence to arrest James Nichols, and to put out a warrant on his brother Terry, who was living in Herrington, Kansas. On April 22, Terry Nichols, wondering why his name was being broadcast on television, walked into the local police station in Herrington.

“In the meantime, witnesses at the scene of the bombing had given FBI agents a description of possible suspects. While interviewing people in Junction City, agents spoke to the manager of the Dreamland Motel who recognized the composite sketch of the suspect the FBI called Unsub #1. The man had registered at the Dreamland from April 14 to April 18 under the name of Tim McVeigh, had driven a yellow Mercury, and provided an address on North Van Dyke Road in Decker, Michigan.

“On April 21, Carl E. Lebron, a former co-worker of McVeigh’s, recognized the composite sketch of Unsub #1 on TV and called the FBI. He said that the man was named Timothy McVeigh, and that he was possessed of extreme right-wing views, was a military veteran, and was particularly agitated over the deaths of the Branch Davidians in Waco, Texas in April, 1993. The man told the FBI that McVeigh expressed extreme anger towards the Federal Government. The man gave the FBI the last known address he had for McVeigh: 1711 Stockton Hill Road, #206, Kingman, Arizona.

“Back in Perry, Oklahoma, McVeigh was still sitting in a cell at the Noble County Courthouse, waiting for his arraignment. After feeding McVeigh’s name into the National Crime Information Center, the FBI discovered their suspect sitting quietly in the Noble County jail on a traffic and weapons charge. Just as McVeigh was about to be set free, District Attorney John Maddox received a call from the FBI telling him to hold on to the prisoner, that he was a prime suspect in the bombing of the Federal Building in Oklahoma City.

“So, by good luck, diligent work, and an amazing series of coincidences, federal law enforcement authorities solved the most heinous crime in the history of the United States —all within 48 hours.”

Or did they?

By the second day, the FBI had removed all video cameras and video equipment, including tapes, from the surveillance cameras in the area. Like the Zapruder film that recorded the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, these tapes would show who got out of the Ryder truck (and how many), the explosions, and exactly the sequence of events showing the pattern of destruction of the building. Was there just one explosion? Or two? Or more?

The video tapes would tell.

But they never did. Not one tape was released to the media or the public. Why take the cameras? Why fill up even the holes in the walls where the cameras had been mounted and paint over them? And why did the agents who removed the cameras also pull out the wire in the walls? Who was trying to make it look like as if the cameras were never there?

(As of this writing, the video tapes have never been released. And after lawsuits demanding them, the first excuse is that they were evidence in an ongoing investigation. So, we asked, if the investigation was closed with the conviction of McVeigh and Nichols, and the execution of McVeigh, then how could it be "ongoing"?)

Eventually, two years later, the FBI said they could not find the tapes. After all, at this late date who cares? Then "we don't have any tapes."

I could see it forming at this stage (two years later)… The Black Hole.

Chapter 2

Day One—It Becomes Personal

The smoke had not even cleared from my altercation with the Chief over my trip to Washington D.C. and my testifying on behalf of the Second Amendment before Congress when it happened.

It was the morning of April 19th, 1995, and I had stopped at a barber shop on my way to work. I was a patrol pilot and Chief of Maintenance for the Tulsa Police Department's Helicopter Unit and was in my flight suit. As I sat in the barber chair the television interrupted the morning programming with a news flash.

There had been a huge natural gas explosion in Oklahoma City. The images on the TV screen showed downtown Oklahoma City with a huge black smoke cloud billowing up from somewhere downtown in a view from a camera that was probably in a tower or high building. Ambulances were rushing to the scene as were the Police and Fire Departments, and an Oklahoma City MD 500 helicopter flew overhead in a wide circle. The sight of the helicopter captured my attention as we flew the same type aircraft and I knew some of the OKCPD pilots and mechanics.

It was a bit after 9 a.m. Within about 30 minutes the story changed from one of a natural gas explosion to a car bomb, then by 10 p.m. it was thought to be a bomb in a pickup truck, then by noon it was determined (probably with the aid of video cameras on nearby buildings and witnesses) to be a Ryder moving truck that had to have been packed with explosives.

By the time I got to work everyone was watching live TV of the scene and descriptions of the event were unfolding. Then, just after 10 a.m. a panic ensued wherein everyone was told get get back, away from the building and the area where cars in the street and parking lots still burned and smoke still rose from the half-collapsed building. They were told that there were other bombs still inside!

Although many victims were still trapped inside the rubble on the various floors, the FBI and ATF would not let any rescue workers back to the building after it was declared that additional explosive devices were not found (though no actual search had taken place yet). However, several "agents" dressed in black, along with what appeared to be a military ambulance (some reports say two such trucks), were seen removing file drawers and boxes of records and putting them into the vehicles. Other witnesses said later they saw what appeared to be missiles being taken out of the building on stretchers.

When asked why rescuers could not go back to the building, an FBI "spokesman" said "It's unfortunate, but no one is allowed back until the files are secured."

The problem with that statement is that it was unlikely there were records in that building that were sensitive enough to compromise national security, or any other reason at that point. With the exception of the small ATF office located on one of the floors, the main areas had been offices of HUD, Social Security, Secret Service, a military recruiting office, and a day care center. What "files" were so important to save that it risked the lives of those who still survived, trapped in the building?

For the next two days my sergeant, Ron Moulton, and I speculated on the news. What had happened, how it had happened, why had it happened, and most important who did it?

The more information that came out, the more I began to suspect that this was more than just some cranks that had issues with one of the offices or personnel inside the building. Instead it began to develop in my mind as a possible terrorist attack.

Besides being a police officer and police helicopter pilot, I was also in the military. After my active duty from 1964 to 1968, including 11 months in Vietnam as a U.S. Marine infantryman, I continued my military involvement by joining the Army National Guard in Tulsa, an infantry battalion, and served in the Scout Platoon as a sergeant, then later staff sergeant. Then in 1975 I applied for Officer Candidate School and a year later graduated as a second lieutenant. I served as a rifle platoon leader, rifle company executive officer, detachment commander, TAC officer at OCS, and as a company commander (captain). By 1981 I had transferred to the Army Reserve where I served as a basic training company commander and then battalion staff officer as a major (S-2, S-3 Air, and S-4—Intelligence, air operations, and logistics and supply).

Then in 1986 I moved to a very unique position in the IRR as a GLO, a Ground Liaison Officer for an Air National Guard A-7 unit, working in the Intel Section. I served as an Intel and Liaison officer until I retired in 1999 as a lieutenant colonel. As a GLO my responsibilities including advising and assisting in base security, counter-terrorism, Intel analysis, battlefield and tactical intelligence. I also had the task of serving as flight crew briefing and debriefing officer for missions our pilots flew in support of ground troops, then reporting back to the ground commanders we supported with close air support and ground attack missions on the results of the missions.

In my counter-terrorism assignment I was trained and spent large amounts of time studying the various global terrorist organizations, their methods, abilities, strengths, weapons, supporters, chains of command, ideology, and history.

One of the things I learned is that there are only six types of terrorist targets: An airliner or other aircraft, a ship at sea, mass ground transportation, a public building, a private building and a large gathering of people (the “Black Sunday” scenario).

The Achille Lauro Italian cruise ship in the Mediterranean is one, the 1968 Munich Olympics was another, highjacked airliners and trains were more, and the Oklahoma City bombing fit the “public building” category. The 1993 World Trade Center Bombing was a private building.

Could this act of terror be one that was caused by a known terrorist organization?

As the day progressed, more information began to emerge. Hundreds of people were dead, hundreds more critically injured, half of the Murrah Federal Building was collapsed, people were still trapped inside, buildings in the surrounding areas were heavily damaged, and several witnesses of various things before and during the event came forward.

The news media were reporting constantly, and TV video showed just how bad the damage was, many victims that were bloody and needed help, and various organizations with the jacket identification of various agencies arriving to do whatever could be done.

But one thing stuck out to me. The damage that was being shown on TV did not add up to what was now described as an ammonium nitrate-fuel oil bomb even if it filled the entire back of a standard Ryder truck. There were too many cut columns with cut rebar visible, and according to witnesses later much of the building was blown outward, not inward. Also the building had originally been built to be bomb proof from outside explosives.

I later found out from OCPD officers that the biggest damage notable as a possible center of explosion was not the small crater where the Ryder truck was parked, but a much larger hole and collapse in the rear of the building in what would later be referred to as "The Cut." That could only mean explosive charges inside the building.

I felt at the time that by the time the FBI, ATF, OCPD Bomb Squad, and Oklahoma County Sheriff's Bomb Squad completed their investigations, and the video tapes from the surrounding buildings were reviewed, it would show exactly what had happened, which would lead to several things: who had the expertise to do it, who had the material, who had access, and maybe who had motive.

I was wrong. Within a few days instead of the above, the story was locked down to the single truck with one—possible two—occupants who fled the scene after parking in front of the building.

This really bothered me. I happened to know a bit about explosives and their effects. I had served on the Tulsa Police Department's first bomb squad, and I had been trained in the use of Composition C-4 plastic explosive, Comp B, and TNT when I was in the Marines. Later when I took the Special Forces Explosives and Demolitions course, then again at Fort Benning, Georgia when I went through "Engineer Week" during the Infantry Officer's Basic Course. There I learned even more about various explosives, shaped charges, cutting charges, and something called "brisance effect" which is the shattering effect of explosives on rock, concrete and other hard materials that shatter when blown up. I finally underwent further training at the Dade County, Florida, Sheriff's Department bomb school under Captain Tom Brodie who was an expert in all kinds of home-made and manufactured devices having dealt what many that were built by Mafia and Cuban groups over the years.

The damage in the video images just didn't make sense to me in relation to the explanations emanating from the press releases and talking heads.

But, I didn't have a dog in this fight. Yet.

When I reached the Helicopter Unit office at Tulsa North Airport, the phone was already ringing. We seldom received a call out for police work with a helicopter that early in the morning unless we had cars in a pursuit, or an armed robber on foot.

When I answered the phone the dispatcher asked if we could transport the department's bomb robot to Oklahoma City in one of our aircraft. Since our MD-500s were designed for speed and maneuverability and not for carrying much in the way of cargo, I had to advise the dispatcher to call over to Tulsa International Airport to the Army National Guard helicopter company based there. Their big Sikorsky UH-64 Blackhawks were big enough to haul the robot and several bomb techs if needed. I later heard that OKC PD let our guys know that they wouldn't be needed, nor the robot as the dust had pretty well settled on the event by that time.

Shortly after the bombing, Oklahoma Highway Patrol trooper Charlie Hanger had been assigned to help in Oklahoma City, but while enroute was told to disregard and stay in his area. A short time later he spotted a yellow Mercury speeding north on I-35. He slowed down to let the car pass, then, noting it was also missing its license tag, pulled the vehicle over.

Instead of walking up to the car, Trooper Hanger called for the driver, the lone occupant of the car, to step out. He then ordered the driver to walk toward him and stop between the vehicles. He asked for the man's driver's license, and when the driver reached for it Hanger could see the impression of a weapon under his jacket. The driver stated that he had a pistol and it was loaded.

"So is mine," said Hanger. He handcuffed, and then searched the subject. By then the trooper knew his name: Timothy McVeigh. Hanger recovered a loaded .45 caliber Glock semi-auto pistol, an extra magazine, and a knife. He then searched the car and found a copy of "The Turner Diaries," a small pamphlet-size book of fiction about a world in chaos where black gangs roamed the country attacking Whites, and Whites having to defend themselves. The fictional diary describes a racist's vision of a nightmare world, in which "The System"—African-American enforcers led by Jewish politicians—attempt to confiscate all guns in the United States. A secretive organization known as "The Order" rises up to take back the country for White Supremacists, eventually winning an apocalyptic insurgency and nuclear war;

The Turner Diaries was created in the 1970s by William Luther Pierce, leader of a neo-Nazi group called the National Alliance. The Turner Diaries helped inspire dozens of armed robberies and more than 200 murders in the decades since its publication.

When Hanger searched his own unit later, he found a business card for a military surplus store in Wisconsin. Written on the back of the card by McVeigh were the words, "Will need more TNT—$ a stick."

The tag that never was. It disappeared from the registry shortly after I began enquiries concerning it. I ran it the first week of May 1995, and it didn't expire until the following November.

Two weeks later, a license tag was found in the bar ditch a mile before the point where McVeigh was stopped, possibly thrown out a window. The tag, Arkansas PTA 811, showed an expiration date of November, 1995. When I ran it, it came back stolen in Fort Smith, Arkansas. Since it was possible that this tag was on McVeigh's car, but either had fallen off, or was discarded by McVeigh, I wanted to trace it to see if there was any connection. One witness had stated that the tag on the yellow Mercury that fled the scene was held on by only one bolt.

I ran the tag number through our dispatcher and received a "hit" on a stolen tag. I then called the owner and the man that answered told me the tag was taken from his daughter's car in their driveway a week before the bombing. I called back a week later to try and get more information and was told by the same man that he didn't know what I was talking about and hung up on me. I then ran the tag again to ascertain that I had copied all the information down correctly—and I received no hit. That number had disappeared off of the registry and the computer system. Yet, Jayna Davis, a reporter for Oklahoma City's KFOR-TV Channel 4, told me they had the tag at KFOR. She then told me that the FBI wanted to come by and pick it up. I told her to photograph it and make them sign for it. But as with so much other evidence, it disappeared in the Black Hole of the FBI.

Hanger transported McVeigh to the Noble county jail and when he was booked in for Carrying a Concealed Weapon, then a crime in Oklahoma, he gave an address in Michigan that was the address of the brother of his accomplice, Terry Nichols. McVeigh could have easily been bonded out the next day, but as luck would have it the judge he was to appear before was out on a family issue. That meant McVeigh would have to wait out the weekend in jail, but, by then a sketch had been released of John Doe #1, and it bore a striking resemblance to McVeigh. And McVeigh was stopped heading North away from Oklahoma City. He had lost or removed the license tag from his car, and he was armed. It all made enough sense for Hanger to notify the FBI. It was not long before McVeigh was taken into federal custody by FBI and ATF agents and escorted out of the jail. In the famous video clip of McVeigh being led out by several federal officers, one, Lowell Sprague, who can be seen to the right of McVeigh (McVeigh's left), wearing a mustache, was one of our eight Fugitive Warrants Squad officers in Tulsa when I served on the squad. He had left to join the ATF.

Within days McVeigh was transferred from the Oklahoma County Jail to the U.S. Federal Penitentiary in El Reno, Oklahoma, just west of Oklahoma City.

Meanwhile in Oklahoma City, witnesses had described several things that they had seen that might prove advantageous to investigators. Besides the two John Doe sketches (and more from other witnesses), an "attempt to locate" went out on police radios to look for a white car occupied by what was described as dark skinned, or Middle Eastern males that left the area and were thought to have a connection to the bombing. It later was quickly cancelled for reasons unknown to me or to anyone else.

Within an hour of the bombing several "Arabs" showed up at Will Rogers World Airport in Oklahoma City, and from security camera videos, appeared to be hovering around one Middle Eastern-appearing male in his late twenties who appeared very nervous. It was obvious that his group was guarding this person until he could board a flight.

Just after the bombing, some witnesses had described two Middle Eastern males, wearing blue jogging suits and standing near the front door of the Murrah Building, and after a UPS truck left, they held the parking place next to the curb for the yellow Ryder Truck. When it drove up, the two ran east and jumped into a brown GMC pickup truck with a plastic bug shield on the front over the hood. They left at a high rate of speed.

Other witnesses recalled seeing two males exit the Ryder truck, but only one was seen running across the street. Another witness saw the Yellow Mercury drive through the alley by the Journal Record newspaper building, located across the street North of the Murrah Building. This witness stated that the car almost ran him down as he stood outside the building taking a smoke break. He noted a dark skinned individual and a man resembling McVeigh. He said that the dark skinned individual had a look of hate on his face and scowled at him when they sped by. A few minutes later an explosion across the street collapsed the front of the Murrah Building.

At 2:29 p.m. an All Stations Oklahoma teletype was transmitted regarding suspects in the OKC bombing:

(Emphasis mine re: Middle Eastern males)

Within an hour of that transmission Airport Police at Will Rogers World Airport in OKC reported (and video taped) a group of “Middle Eastern males” near a departure gate. One seemed extremely nervous and the rest were hovering around him in a hostile and protective manner. But with no more information to go on the one traveler was allowed to continue his journey. American Airlines personnel suspected that these individuals might be involved in the bombing and reported it to their security office in Dallas, who in turn notified the Chicago Airport Police at Chicago O’Hare Airport. When the subject arrived, the Airport Police detained him for several hours but did not detain his luggage. He was identified as Abraham Ahmad, and he told them he was on his way to Jordan to work on his parents house who were both too sick to do it themselves.

When Ahmad was released he caught a flight to London Heathrow where he was to board a connecting flight to Athens. But the British police stopped him there and turned him around, sending him back to the U.S. and notifying U.S. authorities that he was a suspected terrorist. His luggage arrived in Athens where it was searched by Greek police and found to contain wire, electrical tape, and other “bomb making materials.”

Ahmad was released when he arrived in the U.S. and made his way back to Oklahoma City. He evidently felt confident that he was in the clear, so now he had no need to go to his “sick parents.”

Many witnesses described 2 to 3 explosions, with the first one creating a sizable rumble, followed by the huge one. Pat Baker, who worked at the Southwestern Bell building located northeast of the Murrah Building, said there were two or more explosions, and the last one so loud it effected her hearing. She suffers hearing loss to this day.

Seismographs that monitor earthquakes in the area showed three distinct “events” that shook the needles.

But we were to find in the ensuing weeks and months how evidence and witness statements would be ignored, denied, and manipulated, and how a cloud of political manipulation from the highest levels would change, then control, the investigation into an “official truth.”

But not to me. I had been a police officer too long, and a pit bull when it comes to an investigation. And I didn’t realize on Day Two, Thursday, April 20th, 1995, that the next day I would be one of the investigators—officially assigned.

CHAPTER 3

The Assignment—Why Me?

I had just returned from a routine patrol flight and was in the process of putting the helicopter back in the hanger until the night crew showed up when my pager went off.

I thought “Oh no. Not now!” It was Friday afternoon, April 21st, and I had just put in an hour and a half in the left seat boring holes in the sky. My partner, Sgt. Ron Moulton, had just left, and all I had to do was close up the hanger, fill out our log and fuel sheet, lock up the office and head home. I had day shift most of the time since I also was responsible for maintenance of our two helicopters, and my seniority didn’t hurt (I was the senior officer in the squad), so I normally had weekends off unless I had to fill in for a night shift pilot who was sick or on vacation.

During my previous 25 years in the department I had served as a patrol officer, TAC Squad (SWAT) officer, Bomb Tech, Police Community Relations media officer, Court Liaison Officer, Fugitive Warrants Squad officer, and finally a pilot in the Helicopter Unit, later to be renamed the Air Support Unit.

That afternoon had me winding up one more day behind the badge when a phone call would change my life forever.

I walked down to the office and settled behind my desk. I dialed the number on the pager and it was answered by Senior FBI agent Pete Rickel. He and I and the SAC, Marty Weber, knew each other from previous cases, and I had given Marty a copy of my book Kill Zone: A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza.

The conversation went something like “Craig, this is in relation to the Oklahoma City Bombing. We have this McVeigh guy in jail, but he’s not saying much, just stuff about him now being a POW, and he won’t talk until he gets a lawyer. We don’t know much about him at all, so we were wondering if you could give us some help?”

“Well, Pete, what kind of help could I provide?”

“You have contacts around the State in circles of folks that won’t talk to us but might talk to you. If you could put some feelers out and see if anyone knows McVeigh, or of him, or where he might have been here, we’d appreciate it.”

Having just returned from Washington D.C. after testifying before Congress against the far left “Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1995”, including certain provisions that included the so-called “Assault Weapons Ban” and “Large Capacity Magazine Ban”, which infuriated my Chief of police, Ron Palmer, I told Pete that the only way I could get involved was if they cleared it through the chief, and I was assigned to the case.

I hung up the phone and waited. I wasn’t sure the FBI would be able to get the Chief on the phone that late in the day, but within 20 minutes my phone rang and it was headquarters. The chief’s Amin Sergeant was on the line. A person who was not one of my favorite people since he was one of the main instigators of the attacks on me for my trip to Washington.

“Roberts, the FBI requests you to help them. The chief has authorized it, BUT whatever help you provide, it has to be when you are not doing department work. Got it?”

“Yeah, no help when I am doing department work.”

In my mind, I knew that if I got involved in this case, I would be more involved than simply trying to discover any of McVeigh’s travels or associates in Oklahoma. I’m what some of my cohorts describe as a “pit bull” that would not let a case go unless it was solved or I ran out of leads. Though of all my department assignments to various jobs and divisions over the previous 26 years, I had never been assigned to Traffic Division or the Detective Division. However, when I was with the TAC Squad many of our assignments were undercover or plain clothes, including stake outs, high crime area penetrations and our own investigations. And when I was in the Fugitive Warrants Squad for two years, we did a lot of plain clothes operations and investigated our own cases, including old warrant “cold cases.” I was also currently involved in investigative journalism and had just finished authoring Kill Zone and co-authoring JFK: The Dead Witnesses.

And to me, not working on the case when I was “doing department work” meant when I was flying, working on the helicopters, or doing the admin paperwork. I took that to mean I could work on this case whenever I had dead ground time. That would often give me 2-3 hours a day, and if I was following up on leads, more hours at home in the evenings and weekends.

So, the “assignment” was to find out what I could about McVeigh. But how was I going to do that? Fortunately the Internet, though in its infancy, did provide some advantages. Because I was finally divorced from typewriters and had graduated to the very early word processor software (Wordperfect 5.1 in DOS!), and had an internet account via a dial-up modem—all space-age stuff then. The Internet was a huge advantage in police work and I found it useful for not only email capability but doing research. I had my own PC in the office (that I bought out of my own pocket because headquarters didn’t think the Helicopter Unit needed a computer), so I was able to access certain parts of the Internet and Bulletin Board Services (private computers known as “BBS’s”) connected to the Internet full-time that allowed individuals and groups to post messages and hold ongoing conversations.

Also, fortunately, I had taken two years of typing in high school over thirty years before on the old manual typewriters. Then years later, on the department, I had access to IBM Selectric electric typewriters, and finally to word processors. So being able to communicate with a keyboard without “hunt-and-peck” constraints was a huge plus.

I began the following Monday by sending out messages and emails to various areas of the Internet, but I knew that I was not very effective at that point. I explained who I was, and that I was not a Fed, but a local cop here in Oklahoma, and that I was asked to help with the OKC bombing investigation, I wrote that if anyone had any information to share I would like to be contacted, especially if it had to do with McVeigh, and by then, Terry Nichols.

By Tuesday I had a few responses from people who wanted to help, but didn’t know how or what to do. But one response was from someone whose email handle was “Spiker.” I wondered if he was a former member of a Special Forces Vietnam “Spike Team”. When I queried that he gave me a vague response and said “that’s not important.”

He went on to say that he had a “pretty good” knowledge of the Internet and knew how to research various data bases. He said to keep in touch and that he would also be “checking around” on anything he could find out about the bombing. He never gave me his real name, or where he was located, or his background. But he proved to be a valuable asset over the next two years until one day his emails stopped and he never responded to my messages to after that.

In those days we had CompuServe and Genie. I had both and developed contacts on both networks. It was during the following two weeks that I was contacted by various members of local “militias” from various parts of the country, concerned “patriots” and assorted conspiracy theorists. Some had even read some of my books.

Some advised me to buy and listen to shortwave radio and gave me some frequencies of “Patriot” talk shows. Others wanted to know my mailing address and fax number. I responded with my mail suite address I used for my publishing business, knowing better than to give out my home address. I used my personal fax machine at home instead of the department-issued fax at work since that was the line my computer modem was connected to. I also gave my personal office number for the line that rang on my desk. I had voice mail on that line if I was out of the office or off work when a call came in, and I could call and check voice mail from home if needed,

In the second week after which I had put out feelers the following call came in:

“Air Support, Roberts,” I answered.

“Are you the one looking into the bombing case in Oklahoma City?” It was a male voice.

“Yes,” I answered. “What can I help you with?”

“It’s what I can help you with that counts. I won’t tell you who I am, but I’ll tell you that I’m a federal agent, and I don’t work for the FBI or ATF. I’m in Little Rock and my office has been involved in an investigation of the Clintons here before the election and before they went to Washington. We knew that if we were to save the records for future use we’d have to move them, basically put them somewhere safe. It was decided to move them to the Federal building in Oklahoma City for storage. I think that’s why that particular building was destroyed…to get rid of the records.”

“That is extremely interesting information. Can you tell me what was in those records, what the status of the investigation was?”

“All I can tell you is that there was enough in them to put a lot of people in jail. I can’t say more than that.” He hung up.

My phones were not recorded, and we did not have Caller ID then. I hoped that if this guy was legit, he’d call again.

I mulled over the conversation. He said he was not FBI or ATF. That basically left DEA and IRS since he said he was a Federal agent and the investigation was obviously criminal. But if some dastardly villain wanted to destroy or simply remove those records, then why didn’t they just send some “official government people” to the building and take them?

The only answer could be that anyone who wanted to find them didn't know where to look, and didn't want to alert anyone who might be involved in hiding them in the first place. If there was a basement in the Murrah Building, could they be there, hidden in stacks of boxes of old records? Would a retrieval team have to comb though boxes and boxes to find them? And wherever they might be stored, did it look like the secret warehouse in the closing scenes of Raiders of the Lost Ark?

My mind raced. I felt the call was legitimate. It might be of help, but it was only a clue, and possibly a motive. And the most important part: Why Oklahoma City? Why the Murrah Building?

By then, it had been put discussed in the media, the Department of Justice (Janet Reno) and the White House, that those involved (McVeigh, Nichols, and possibly an Arizona resident, a former Army buddy of McVeigh named Michael Fortier) hit the Murrah Building in retaliation for the FBI assault on Waco that resulted in the death of 74 men, women and children. The media was also launching a massive attack on "the militias," Right Wing talk radio shows, the NRA, and any conservative organization as being anti-government.

To me this was strange because when I was in Washington just two weeks before the bombing all of the politicians and government people I talked to did not have a clue that outside the beltway such organizations as "militias" existed. Now, it was the fault of the militias!

I had interviewed several members of various "militia units," mostly local folks who were not only angry with the direction the government was going under the Clintons and the Democrat-controlled Congress, but were especially concerned about their Right to bear arms to protect themselves and their communities at the local level. These were not people who would blow up a federal installation, they would instead be happy to guard it and protect it against any terrorist attempt. That said, I had the feeling that if it was the United Nations building in New York, that might be a different scenario. The militias hated the UN, globalism, opening our borders, and politicians who subverted the Constitution and their oaths of office. Many were ex-military and were drawn together to organized local defense forces in case "foreign troops" were brought into the U.S. for "peacekeeping."

It would be much later that I discovered that most of these organizations had been infiltrated by government CI's (Confidential Informants), and that some informants were actually working for more than one agency.

Whenever I got any leads that sounded plausible, I would type up a memo and hand carry it to the FBI office in Tulsa and turn it over to Pete Rickel. He was my contact point. I knew from past experience that dealing with federal agencies—especially the FBI—we seldom got any information back unless they were desperate for something local police had. We considered the FBI a "Black Hole". You put stuff in, and it disappeared. I also knew that the FBI was known by local police for taking credit for what local police did if they could. One example is a bank robbery that I and other officers responded to in which we made two apprehensions. Reports were sent to the FBI immediately, but when the newspaper article on the catch came out the next day it was "FBI Apprehends Two Downtown Bank Robbers.” At the very bottom of the article it mentioned “with the help of local police.”

They say that you need to toot your own horn because you know the tune better than anyone else. I’ve often wondered if that was taught at the FBI Academy.

I was given a mission, and being a Marine and a military man, the mission comes first. So, the hunt was on!

CHAPTER 4

Things Don’t Add Up

It was only a few minutes after the phone call from the “agent” in Little Rock that I remembered something that I saw occur on Day One, something that just did not make any sense to me. About an hour after the explosions, all of a sudden, right in the middle of rescue efforts for those trapped inside the building, people began yelling that there was another bomb in the building. Everyone had to get back, move away from the building as far as they could.

Bomb technicians began to search the building and shortly it was announced “they have found another device and are deactivating it now.” Over the next two days the report changed from barrels of Fulminate of Mercury to a dummy TOW missile that had been used as a recruiting aid in the U.S. Marine recruiting office located in the building. Even though other “devices” were found in the building and were disarmed, the FBI never officially admitted they existed. Doing so would show that others besides McVeigh and John Doe #2 were involved. That would not fit the “official version” of the event.

Excerpt from “The Winds” internet article on Oklahoma City:

“During extensive live coverage, several television news reporters gave an exhaustive running chronology of the disaster. One reporter said, “There were more bombs set to go off, according to Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms (ATF)”. The Justice Department is reporting that a second explosive device has been found in the A.P. Murrah Building in downtown Oklahoma City.” Another stated, “What we were told at the scene a few minutes ago was that in fact two different explosive devices were found in addition to the one that went off, a total of three bombs. You see the utter devastation that the one explosion caused, here’s what we’re starting to learn about the succession, or what someone obviously hoped would be a succession of explosions.

“The first bomb that was in the federal building did go off. It did the damage that you see right here. The second explosive was found and diffused, the third explosive was found and they are working on it right now as we speak. Both the second and third explosives are larger than the first.

“Through the good work of munitions experts and explosive sniffing dogs, further tragedy has almost certainly been averted here.”

“Oklahoma Governor Frank Keating, in a live telecast stated, “One device has been deactivated, apparently there is another device. Obviously, whatever did the damage to the Murrah Building was a tremendous…a very sophisticated explosive device.” Another reporter said, “They are saying that this is the work of a sophisticated group. This is a very sophisticated device and it had to have been done by an explosives expert.” Other reports revealed “the one and one-half-hour delay in the rescue work was due to the second and third bombs being discovered.” Firemen wept after having to abandon individuals whom they were endeavoring to pull from the rubble when the area had to be evacuated due to the discovery of additional explosive devices. One rescue worker said the woman he had been trying to extricate from the collapsed building had expired before he was able to return.

"Dr. Randall Heather, a terrorism expert, says, 'We should find out a lot when the bombs are taken apart. I think it was a great stroke of luck that we actually have diffused bombs. It is through the bomb material that we will be able to track down those who committed this atrocity.'"

These reports were made during the first few hours after the blast. Given a little time the story was carefully altered. Instead of a sophisticated explosive devise, it was a crude fertilizer bomb. Instead of a sophisticated group with experts in explosives, it was a single individual with nondescript skills, acting independently."

More than one blast

On top of this, there were many reports from individuals in the area and victims who reported more than one blast. And even more interesting is the fact that the seismograph service station for the Oklahoma Geological Survey located in Norman, Oklahoma, south of Oklahoma City recorded THREE "events" Seismometer graph shows three distinct events starting at 9:02 a.m.

Their report states "…recorded a Lg surface-wave "train" at 9:02 and 13 seconds shortly after the explosion at the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. The seismometer is located approximately 4 miles north of Norman and 16 miles from downtown Oklahoma City. A second Lg surface-wave was recorded at 9:02 ad 23 seconds a.m. The location and source of the second surface-wave recording is unknown. Detailed investigations at the building site may offer an explanation as to the cause of the second event."

One witness/victim interviewed stated that "I was upstairs in the ladies room when I felt a rumble and wondered if it was an earthquake, then there was a bigger, sharper blast and that's the one that blew the windows out."

Many other witnesses said that they thought there were two or three different shocks or events as well as the main explosion. One described a "chain of rumbling 'bangs' like smaller explosions, one after another." That could describe explosives on the columns inside the building detonated by "det" cord, which is how derelict buildings are brought down by professional demolition experts!

At the time of the blasts, a meeting was being held a block away at the Water Resources Board. A transcript from the meeting tape contained this excerpt:

"There are four elements that I have to receive information regarding…

BLAST

"Everybody, let's get out of there now!

BLAST

"Watch the electricity lines…out the back door…all the way to the right! Hurry!"

The audio tape of the minutes of the meeting clearly shows two blasts, not one.

Rushing to the Murrah Building were several Oklahoma City police officers and other first responders. OCPD Sgt Don Browning described damage inside the building that had nothing to do with the small crater out front in the street. He told me that "the major damage I saw was in what we later called 'the pit', which was a huge collapse of floors in the back of the building behind the 'cut', and it went down at least two floors into the sub-basement."

OCPD Sgt Terrance "Terry" Yeakey, a large Black officer who had just been nominated for "Officer of the Year" later told others that he had seen what appeared to be charges on some of the columns that did not go off. Yeakey later followed up this sighting with an investigation wherein he obtained what were described as computer generated graphs of radioactivity in the area of the Murrah Building, showing a day-by-day depiction of radiation levels, rising two days before 19 April, and peaking on 19 April, then lasting in a daily decreasing amount for several days afterwards. He had several copies of the computer disk he had obtained made and distributed them to "safe places." It has been speculated that these disks or files were what his killers were looking for when he was murdered ("suicided") a few weeks after the bombing. (More on that later)

Right in the middle of efforts of police officers, firefighters, doctors, nurses and EMT personnel trying to rescue trapped victims, everyone was called back and told to clear the building because "more bombs have been found!"

But as soon as the area around the building was cleared beyond a perimeter, witnesses describe a "military box type ambulance" pulling in and backing up to the building (some witnesses describe two trucks). Then "federal agents" dressed in black raid jackets with no lettering on the back began entering the rubble and bringing out file boxes.

If there were other devices in the building, why would those men be there before the building was declared safe? What was so important in those file boxes that they had to be retrieved right then?

When asked by the media what was happening when it was pointed out that rescue workers had been restrained while files were being brought out, the FBI spokesman, Gene Pogue, stated that it was "unfortunate," but otherwise refused to comment.

Then, hours later, after the rescue efforts resumed, they were again ordered to stop searching for survivors again while federal officials removed more boxes of documents. According to the New York Daily News of May 1, 1995, "You'd think they would have let their evidence and files sit at least until the last survivor was pulled out," one angry rescue worker told the News. "They had guys carrying out boxes while the rescue workers were forced to sit on their hands," said the worker, a member of the canine rescue squad who requested anonymity.

"The rescue worker and an Oklahoma City firefighter, who also asked that this name be withheld, offered similar accounts in separate interviews.

"The two said about 10-12 hours after the 9 a.m. blast, the federal officials began limiting the number of rescue workers allowed in the building to about a dozen, confining them largely to the lower right side of the battered structure."

Meanwhile, groups of 40-50 federal agents (all in unmarked raid jackets) spent much of the night searching for and carrying out dozens of boxes from the seventh and ninth floors. These floors are where the offices of the DEA and ATF were located. The first files that were retrieved earlier that day were in the lower areas or basement.

According to reports "the content of the files are unknown, but federal sources said they were looking into the possibility that alleged bomber Timothy McVeigh and his accomplices had targeted the nine-story building in an effort to destroy DEA or ATF investigation files."

As soon as I heard this I knew that this was a huge lie. McVeigh would not know about any files in either office that would be of interest to him. And why would he care about destroying them in the first place?

Weeks later rumors began to circulate that the building contained the files on the Waco raid, or the government "secret" files on the Gulf War disease, or similar files on Agent Orange, the defoliant sprayed in Vietnam that caused so many ailments and deaths of Vietnam veterans.

None of this was true. The night-time removal of files of active cases from the DEA and ATF might be plausible, but telling rescue workers to stop looking for surviving victims while they did their search for paper was not. Unless that "paper" happened to be what the "federal agent" described to me on the phone! IF they were the files on the investigations of the Ft. Smith DEA or IRS into the Mena drug smuggling, the Arkansas "Mafia," the "Dixie Mafia," and the Clinton connections to this and Iran/Contra, plus the money laundering of the drug money through the Rose Law Firm and the Bank of North Little Rock as described in Terry Reed's book Compromised: Clinton, Bush and the CIA, it would make sense that such files would be of paramount importance to the Clintons and their accomplices in Arkansas and Washington.

Oklahoma City Fire Chief Gary Marrs said “Since day one, the federal agents have been in there with us and have had free run of the building.” He didn’t explain why the search “seemed scaled back.”

Were the Mena files there? Is that why it was so important to let people die while agents retrieved such files? This could not have happened if they were just standard investigatory files on gun crimes or drug investigations…unless the drugs were the ones that went through Mena!

From Final Report: On the Bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building April 19, 1995—sequence of Day One events pages 164-169

More things that happened on Day One did not match events later reported by the media. By Day Three the media was reporting that McVeigh, alone, drove the Ryder truck to the Murrah Building, parked in front, escaped in the yellow Mercury, and then was apprehended by OHP trooper Charlie Hanger north of Oklahoma City as he sped away toward Kansas.

Only by reconstructing events according to eye witnesses do we find an entirely different scenario. By piecing together events as they unfolded chronologically with the bits and pieces witnessed by those who the FBI either refused to talk to, or ignored, or took their reports and filed them in the Black Hole, we can see what happened that morning.

One of the first things that surfaced was a sighting of McVeigh and one other male in the Ryder truck when it pulled into the parking lot at Johnny’s Tire Store at 401 NW 10th at 8:40 a.m.. Mike Moroz, an employee, walked out to the parking lot to see if they needed help. Inside he saw McVeigh behind the driver’s wheel and a dark skinned male passenger who wore a white baseball cap with blue or purple “flames”. McVeigh asked for directions to the Murrah Building, which is very suspect since he had personally cased the building several days before.

The next sighting in the same time frame was across the street from the Regency Tower apartment building, a block west of the Murrah Building. McVeigh was seen inside by Danny Wilkerson who sold McVeigh a pack of cigarettes and two sodas (McVeigh didn’t smoke). This was at 8:45 a.m., only five minutes after leaving the tire store. Meanwhile a second Ryder truck occupied by two male subjects was seen driving around the downtown area, and in Bricktown, a warehouse district southeast of downtown turned into a tourist area of restaurants and bars, in the same time frame.

McVeigh and the second man then drove around the block and parked once again across from the Regency Tower, where McVeigh parked the truck next to the curb and used a pay phone. The second occupant appeared to be dark complected and wore a baseball cap.

Leroy Brooks, who was at the post office, saw the Ryder truck and the yellow Mercury on the same street as Wilkerson, but described it as having moved up several spaces toward the Murrah Building. Both occupants got out of the truck and appeared to exchange a small object.

At this same time a UPS truck had pulled up to the front of the Murrah Building and was making a delivery. What were described as two “Middle Eastern males” in blue jogging suits were at the front door and a brown GMC pickup truck with a smoked glass bug shield was parked a few parking places farther down the street to the east. (author’s note: I later saw a blow up of a sheriff’s department surveillance shot of the UPS truck in front of the building taken a few minutes before 9 a.m., proving that the building was staked out in advance. Someone had foreknowledge of the threat!).

When Brooks returned to his car he noticed the Ryder truck had moved up and parked in front of the Murrah Building where the UPS truck had been. It is evident that McVeigh had to park across from the Regency Tower until a space became available in front of the Murrah Building. That happened when the UPS truck left. The spot appears to have been “saved” by the two men in jogging suits, who immediately left, ran down the street to the brown pickup truck, then drove off at a high rate of speed.

McVeigh and his cohort exited the truck, and his cohort walked to the rear of the truck for a minute. Then both hurried across the street to the north and then east, with one witness saying McVeigh “strutted like he was quickly marching.”

Path of the Ryder truck according to witnesses. First, it stopped in front of the post office at 5th and Harvey streets where McVeigh and John Doe 2 exited and had an animated conversation on the sidewalk while the UPS truck was parked in front of the Murrah Building. Then they drove the truck to the front of the building. The two Middle Eastern Males who wore blue jogging suits that had saved the parking spot after the UPS truck left, ran west to the brown GMC pickup truck and made their exit. McVeigh and JD 2 then crossed the street and left through the Journal Records building parking lot, almost running over an employee who got a good look at both occupants.

Path of Ryder truck. It stopped across from the post office, then moved to the front of the Murrah Building when the UPS truck left. McVeigh and John Doe #4 exited and crossed the street to the yellow Mercury Marquis and left through the Journal Record parking lot northbound.

Gary Lewis, a Journal-Records employee, had just stepped out into the alley between his building and the parking lot north of the Murrah Building, when he was almost run over by the yellow Mercury. Inside were McVeigh and a dark complected male in the passenger seat. He described the passenger as “Middle Eastern.” Lewis said the passenger had a look of “hate” on his face. As the car passed him he noted a white license plate dandling on the rear bumper by one bolt. What is interesting is that the license plate on the escape vehicle put out on our police teletype was a “brown Arizona tag.” But when Charlie Hanger stopped the car north of Oklahoma City the passenger was gone, and the license plate was missing.

A few minutes after the explosions, Kay Clark was crossing Broadway near the Murrah Building when she was almost hit by two men driving a brown pickup truck. She stated that they looked “Middle-Eastern,” and the driver’s expression was a “chilling look of fear or anger.”

Even after the explosion several witnesses said they saw “Middle Eastern men in the vicinity of the Murrah Building. Also, McVeigh was witnessed in several other locations at the same time. This is impossible ,but leads one to believe that “look-a-likes” were used to confuse the issue.

David Hoffman, in an email to me in August, 1995, summed up several points. He wrote “two trucks were involved. Maybe both came from Junction City—the one seen at Geary Lake on the 14th, and the one rented by McVeigh and two others on the 17th. Two trucks were seen in OKC on the 19th—one in Bricktown and one at the Post Office and then the Murrah Building at the same time. McVeigh and JD#2 were in the one that pulled up in front of the Murrah Building, and two others were in the one seen in Bricktown as a diversion to witnesses.”

Hoffman, myself, and several other members of what I would originally call Team Rebel (then later, as the team grew, “The Baker Street Irregulars” after the Sherlock Holmes stories), worked various aspects of at least two Ryder trucks, and possibly up to four!

The Journal Record building, located across a parking lot north of the Murrah Building, was also heavily damaged during the blast. One employee said that he saw a “tall Arab-looking man” standing at the intersection of NW 6th Street and Harvey, looking at the Murrah wreckage with a “big grin” on his face.

A woman named Germaine Johnston had left the Murrah Building and was on her way to the Kerr-McGee Building north of the Journal Records building to find her husband. She encountered two men in the alley between the two Southwestern Bell buildings, a block north of the Journal Records building. She said that one was tall and one shorter and darker. They were leaning against an older model, faded-yellow, four-door Mercury Marquis. She knew the make and model because her husband had owned one. The taller man asked her “What happened? How many people were killed?” Later, when she saw McVeigh on TV, she knew that he was the man she had seen in the alley. The shorter man, according to her description, was approximately 5’8” and 165 lbs.

Jack Cornett, a former Oklahoma City Councilman, was standing at Hudson and Kerr Avenues in downtown Oklahoma City waiting for family members at 9:45 when a man came up to him and said “maybe they got all the inspectors.”

Cornett did not know what he meant, but he decided to follow him and see where he went. The man headed west on Kerr, and when Cornett reached Walker street he happened upon a police officer named Gore. He asked for help regarding the man but Gore ignored the request. Cornett continued to follow the man and came up on another OCPD officer, who also ignored his request. Shortly after that he lost the individual, and saw a white four-door car race out of an alleyway and turn onto Kerr at a high rate of speed.

Cornett contacted FBI agent Joe Gray and relayed what he saw. No interest was shown. He then made an appointment wth the head of the Oklahoma City FBI office, Bob Ricks (who was a key FBI player at Waco). After Ricks retired he was appointed by Governor Frank Keating to the post of Commissioner of the Oklahoma Department of Public Safety with the responsibility for the Oklahoma Highway Patrol.

Cornett provided his information to Ricks. He was never contacted by the FBI again.

Cornett described the man as “about 30 years old, 5’ 6” to 5’ 7”, had dark features, which appeared to be Arabic…wore no hat or tie, had an open shirt and a brown leather jacket vest with blue trim. The man’s hair was dark and he may have had slight facial hair.” Police officers seldom get such detailed descriptions from witnesses and it is amazing that the FBI would not follow up on this lead.

The big question at that time, which still remains, is exactly how many John Does were there?

We’ll probably never know exactly who and how many got out of the Ryder truck with the explosives inside, or any other video taped activity that morning because the FBI confiscated all the surveillance video tapes in the area. They not only removed the cameras, they patched up the holes where the mounts were. Then within a day or two, and they even pulled out the wiring from the walls to remove all traces that video cameras even existed. These spots were then painted over. Why would they do this, and, exactly who ordered it and why?

To this day, no one has been able to gain access to these tapes. These “Zapruder Films” have been described as “still part of an ongoing investigation (17 years later, and after the FBI said the case was closed with McVeigh’s death?), or when sued with FOIAs, “we just can’t find them.”

At least on one occasion the excuse was “it’s a matter of national security.”

CHAPTER 5

Never Let a Tragedy Go to Waste

One of the main, if not the main issue, that State Rep. Charles Key (R-Oklahoma City) was concerned about was “did the government have foreknowledge of the possibility of the bombing, and if so, why didn’t they stop it?

Within a few days of the bombing Rep. Key was contacted by several concerned citizens and victims’ family members who felt that they were not receiving all the facts from the federal investigators, and that many of them who were victims or witnesses knew that the government and the media were not telling the whole truth and were leaving out many facts that did not fit the government scenario put forth by the mainstream media.

Rep. Key began to ask questions, then, not receiving honest or believable answers, formed a group to look into the bombing and try to ascertain the facts. What became the Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee, made up of volunteer citizens at no cost to the taxpayer, established a foundation for what would grow into a joint effort by many concerned individuals. Investigative journalists like David Hoffman of The Haight Ashbury Free Press (left wing publication) and William Jasper of The Free American magazine (right wing publication), law enforcement officers such as myself from Tulsa PD, NYPD retired detective Jimmy Rothstein, and Sgt. Don Browning of the Oklahoma City Police Department would all work together to battle for the truth and would coordinate our findings with Key’s committee. The original four members of the OBIC committee were Rep. Key; V.Z. Lawton, who was at his desk in the Murrah Building when the explosions occurred; Dale L. Phillips, a concerned Oklahoma City resident; and Lt. Col. George Wallace (USAF Ret), a Vietnam war fighter pilot who became very concerned when he felt the government, was being dishonest about the events surrounding the bombing.

Eventually several others joined in to help with the investigation, sharing their discoveries and enquiries with the Committee. This included Ken Blood who served as chairman to the petition drive to impanel the Oklahoma County Grand Jury, Brig. General Benton K. Partin (USAF Ret), who was an Air Force explosives expert, Lt. Colonel Roger Charles (USMC Ret), Pat Briley (former US Navy nuclear submarine officer), Jayna Davis (KFOR TV reporter), and many others.

In Charles Key’s own words: “I was serving in the Oklahoma Legislature as a State Representative at the time of the bombing. Almost immediately, survivors and relatives of victims of the bombing began contacting me to express concerns they had about the manner in which the federal government was conducting the investigation. Within two months of the bombing, several explosives experts had come forward to present evidence that the destruction to the building could not possibly have been caused by one ammonium nitrate fuel oil (ANFO) bomb.

Quoted from The Report: “On the very day of the bombing, survivors were interviewed by the media who stated that they had felt the building shaking, similar to experiencing an earthquake, just prior to the explosion. Some of them even stated that the shaking sensation allowed them enough time to seek shelter underneath their desks, which they credit with saving their lives. This certainly supports the evidence that more than one bomb caused the destruction to the Murrah Building.

“Within hours of the bombing, sightings of suspicious characters seen in downtown Oklahoma City early that morning were reported, and ‘all point bulletins’ were immediately circulated by law enforcement. Curiously, the APBs were withdrawn once Timothy McVeigh was apprehended slightly over an hour after the bombing.

“All of these facts came to my attention within days of the bombing. So many broken-hearted families affected directly by the bombing had unanswered questions and implored me, in my capacity as an elected official, to pursue further investigations into the case. This resulted in the formation of the Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee by private citizens, which was funded solely through the private sector.”

The OBIC, over the next year and beyond, accumulated enough evidence to prove the original contention that the Federal Government (under Bill Clinton, Janet Reno, and Louis Freeh) had prior knowledge of the bombing. They also determined that Timothy McVeigh did not act alone, and besides having help from Terry Nichols, they also determined that several “John Does” were involved.

For example, they found that the Department of Justice had received a phone call 24 minutes before the bombing saying that “The federal building in Oklahoma City has just been bombed!” No action by the DoJ was taken. The OBIC also had witnesses who said that Oklahoma Representative Ernest Istook mentioned advance knowledge. Oklahoma County Deputy Sheriff David Kochendorfer said that Istook told him at the scene that, “Yeah, we knew this was going to happen.” Another deputy, Don Hammonds, said Istook told him “yes, we knew this was gong to happen.” Istook later did a media briefing and denied any prior knowledge.

Other witnesses saw the Oklahoma County Sheriff’s bomb disposal truck with “Bomb Squad” on the doors and pulling a large “bomb bucket” trailer parked in the church lot across the street from the Federal Court House building, located just behind the Murrah Building on the south side earlier that morning. Bombing victim Jane Graham told reporters later that when she went to work earlier that morning she saw two ATF agents standing in front of the main entrance to the building wearing their ATF lettered raid jackets. She had never seen anyone from their office in those jackets before that day.

But no matter what was determined, the Committee could not get the various government entities, from the mayor and chief of police of Oklahoma City, to the FBI, to the U.S. Department of Justice, to listen to the Committee, take their findings, or do anything except deny, discredit, debunk and stonewall the Committee.

The Committee had crucial eyewitnesses who could have testified that they saw McVeigh in the company of others. Dozens of eyewitnesses, according to the Committee’s Final Report “were led to believe that they would be called to testify in the federal trials, but when they were not, they were dismayed and insulted to learn that not only was their testimony going to be ignored, but federal prosecutors were labeling them as ‘not credible.’”

By the end of the Committee’s investigation it became apparent that all the work that was done was being ignored by the Federal Government. In the words of the Bombing

Report: “Our committee is realistic enough to know that all legal avenues have been exhausted. By the time this Report is published, Timothy McVeigh will have been executed. For some, that will provide the closure they need. However, the scope of the “‘worst terrorist attack in American History’ demands answers to questions that remain….”

From The Final Report: “Over the past six years since the bombing, much of the evidence we have accumulated has been ignored or derided by the mainstream media. We are not the enemy. We are not anti-government. It is because we love our country that we demand and have the right to expect the best possible government…It is our belief that the bombing in Oklahoma City will not be the last terrorist attack on U.S. soil (author's note: this was written long before the World Trade Center attacks of 9/11). Since all of the perpetrators have not been caught, they are still free to continue their work. This will happen again.”

As to the key question of “foreknowledge,” several facts stand out. During my investigation it was determined that the Oklahoma County Sheriff’s bomb squad was on site that morning and had been witnessed searching the area, as were bomb dogs. The building had been staked out all night, but those involved in the stake-out went home around dawn when nothing had transpired, according to witnesses.

But something that I personally saw struck home on this subject. I saw, in court in Tulsa during one of the hearings, a blown-up poster-size photo of a UPS truck in front of the Murrah Building, and the time log on the photograph showed a time just before 9 a.m., April 19th! The photo had to have been taken from a stake-out car belonging to either OCPD or the Oklahoma County Sheriff’s Department! That means they had prior knowledge that something was going to transpire. Also, previous to seeing this poster-size photo of the UPS truck, I had received two separate emails that simply said “It wasn’t a Ryder Truck! It was a UPS Truck!” Those that sent these emails to me evidently saw the UPS truck in front of the building just before the Ryder truck arrived, or saw the photograph taken by the stake-out unit at the scene.

This melded with another informant who contacted me saying it was a UPS truck and not a Ryder truck that held the bomb. That would make sense if that is what they saw just before the Ryder truck pulled up. But the court refused to pay any attention to that display in the back of the courtroom, and ignored those individuals from Oklahoma City that brought it. Such inaction by the “official investigators” would be the case throughout the aftermath and the following so-called “investigation.” It was clear that the official government investigators, the courts, and the media were all being directed and manipulated to avoid any discovery of others that were involved. The question was why?

While victims, witnesses, and independent investigators were seeing bizarre twists in the investigation in the days following the bombing, it was becoming rapidly apparent that a huge coverup was in progress. At the same time, a political agenda was unfolding that had no actual relationship to the bombing. It was becoming obvious that high level politicians, including the then-resident of the White House, were not letting a “good tragedy go to waste”.

Clinton and his leftist cohorts in and outside government circles, saw an opportunity to piggyback on the event to get other things done that would not have passed muster with the American public, but now would, due to what is known as The Hegelian Dialectic.

Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel was a 19th century German philosopher who devised a particular dialectic, or, method of argument, for resolving disagreements—or accomplishing political agendas by making the general population want the changes that they would not previously accept. It was a matter of Thesis, Synthesis, and Antithesis. The Thesis is an event that captures the attention of the masses such as a terrorist attack, the Synthesis is a “solution” to the event that the people would never have considered but now will, such as loss of freedoms for more security, and giving the government (elitists) more power. Finally Antithesis, which in the case of examples such as the Reichstag Fire, the Oklahoma City Bombing—and later 9/11, achieves the final goal and in many cases turns a nation into a police state.

In the case of the Oklahoma City Bombing, the “Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act” in Congress was stalled. And the “Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994” (sometimes referred to as The Omnibus Crime Control Act) was a huge bill that had just passed and became Public Law 103-322. The printed copy was an inch thick and covered dozens of topics in the proposed laws. But the main area of interest is how much gun control was in the Act. Of special concern was Title XI—Firearms, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons. In section 110102 it stated “It shall be unlawful for a person to manufacture, transfer, or possess a semiautomatic assault weapon.” (This sunsetted ten years later, much to the consternation of liberals in government and media). Congress was clueless on what an “assault weapon” was except that in the hands of the citizenry it was a threat to a tyrannical government. In other words, liberal globalist politicians wanted to reduce the firepower of the American people and their ability to resist tyranny (which is exactly why the Second Amendment exists in the first place). So if the liberals could not totally ban all firearms, they could at least ban them incrementally until nothing was left, as what had happened in England, Canada and Australia.

The stalled Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, which had stalled in Congress, thanks to the Hegelian Dialectic effect was passed in response to the Oklahoma City bombing. It created 60 new death penalty offenses under Title 41: These included federal capital statutes for crimes related to acts of terrorism, murder of a federal law enforcement officer, civil rights-related murders, use of weapons of mass destruction resulting in death, carjackings resulting in death, and drive-by shootings resulting in death. In other words, the Federal Government, in passing this act and getting it signed into law, created its own jurisdiction in crimes that occurred in a State. These previously were not federal crimes. Up to that point such crimes had nothing to do with the federal government, nor interstate jurisdiction which was previously the only jurisdiction the federal government had.

Next, the suspicious records that were removed from the building within hours of the bombing (while victims were still trapped inside) could have possibly been the files referred to by my mysterious federal agent caller that involved drug smuggling through Mena, Arkansas while Bill Clinton was governor. If so, they may have included reports of probes into the money laundering that was also involved, where the money went, and the names of the players who were involved in the Arkansas end of Iran/Contra. The FBI admitted that the 50 agents involved in the file removal took files from the offices of the 9th floor offices of the ATF and DEA! The reference to the DEA would make sense because the DEA would have been one of the primary agencies that would have been investigating the Mena drug smuggling, with the IRS being the second. The Clinton administration would have been determined to see such records never see the light of day, especially since he was up for re-election.

After the 1996 elections, Clinton told a pool of reporters, according to The Secret Life of Bill Clinton, that he "owed his political revival to the Oklahoma bombing. He was in a reflective mood, looking back at the ups and downs of his turbulent presidency. As so often, his thoughts lingered on those first painful months after the Republicans captured both Houses of Congress for the first time in almost two generations. It had been a stinging rebuke for the White House. But then that bomb went off. It broke a spell in the country as people began searching for our common ground again."

Had the bombing been carried out by foreign radicals, the impact on the national psyche would have been far less. But this was an alleged homegrown conspiracy. Clinton used that to his advantage.

In April 1995 the Republican Congress was completing its one hundred-day march; the Contract with America was being rushed through the House; the Education Department was going to be abolished, the Commerce Department would follow, Housing and Urban Development would be next, and the Environmental Protection Agency was going to be eliminated—not to mention that the BATF was under fire and being considered for elimination.

Now, due to the bombing, those things fell by the wayside. Right Wing talk radio was being demonized as "extremist" and evil, and the militia movement was perceived to be an onslaught against the government. All of these were cast in the government-controlled "mainstream media" to be, in the mind of the public, as one vast Right Wing conspiratorial movement of extremism—and totally "anti-government." From that point on, the militias—which no one in Washington seemed to notice or even realize existed two weeks earlier when I testified before Congress against the so-called "assault weapon ban"—were now referred to as "The anti-government militias" in the media.

Clinton, seizing the public's attention, lambasted talk radio—especially Rush Limbaugh—for broadcasting "a relentless clamor of hatred and division." The Right, he said, "was sowing distrust of government institutions and creating a climate that fostered recourse to violence." The media, in turn, made the connection for the leftists in government. They insinuated Tim McVeigh was the military extremist extension of the Republican agenda and the Republican Party was as guilty as McVeigh, as were the radio talk show hosts and the various "militia" organizations. Some Republican politicians dared to mention that it was the FBI's killing of Randy Weaver's wife and son at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, and the deployment of tanks and APCs by the FBI against women and children in Waco that had most influenced American opinion of the current administration and their political appointees. But most "weak sister" Republicans were too intimidated to offer a defense or any resistance to the onslaught of propaganda. Sen. Phil Gramm said "I think we all need to be very careful that we keep politics out of this thing," but even that caused him to be harshly criticized for his "mean streak."

The fears of the average American and especially of the “Constitutional Militias” was being realized.

Blaming the Militias and the Right Wing

Within three days the national media began pointing fingers. With the blame-game coming out of the White House press room and the Department of Justice's public affairs office, along with the "help" of the liberal far-left Anti-Defamation League in Washington, and a "law office" in Birmingham, Alabama founded by an opportunist left wing lawyer named Morris Dees, it didn't take long before the major networks began helping with the propaganda misdirection that "it was the militias!"

After all, wasn't McVeigh a right wing nut? Wasn't he anti-government? And what about him being seen and photographed at Waco? And he goes to gun shows! And just look at him, he looks military! Obviously he was a deranged war veteran who became angry over the tragedy in Waco and wanted to do something about it. And he had been seen at militia meetings!

Never mind that he was thrown out of those meetings, in Florida, Michigan and Texas, and no so-called "militia" took credit for the bombing or helping McVeigh in any way. Forget objective journalism. The "modern day" media is inhabited not by honest journalists and reporters, but political spin doctors who do little more than advertise their agenda through what they try to convince us is "news."

It is well known in intelligence circles that most media around the world are little more than extensions of the regimes in those countries. Any dissenting opinions or actual news that counter media broadcasts are quickly condemned as lies, and fall victim to the Five "D's": Deny, Debunk, Discredit, Demonize, and Destroy.

In the case of some reporters who tried to investigate the case and expose its discrepancies and total falsehoods, the penalty was loss of their jobs—and in some cases death. KFOR reporter Jayna Davis, who was the initial investigative reporter who followed the Middle Eastern connection eventually lost her job. Her station was bought by the New York Times, and all stories on the OKC bombing were highly edited and directed away from actual facts. Ms. Davis had been relegated to what she describes as "cub reporter" assignments and she felt that it was the New York Times way of forcing her to quit. Any new information on the bombing never saw the light of day outside Oklahoma, and often not out of Oklahoma City.

In Jayna Davis's words "Scorching winds of change whipped through the Channel 4 newsroom in the summer of 1996. The jet stream blowing in from the east coast carried a stormy forecast for my professional future when the media giant, the New York Times Corporation, purchased KFOR-TV. The new ownership immediately spiked all stories on John Doe 2 and the Middle Eastern connection. My most loyal supporters, the news director and station manager, found employment in other television markets. I, too, moved on, tendering my resignation on the eve of Timothy McVeigh's federal trial in March 1997." She went on to write a best-selling book The Third Terrorist: The Middle East Connection to the Oklahoma City Bombing that exposed in great detail the Middle Eastern Connection and several of those involved.

Other reporters from various news outlets who went after the truth and asked too many embarrassing questions were also chastised and labeled “conspiracy theorists.” Facts developed by these individuals were immediately changed to “theories.” It was obvious that anyone who went against the government’s official line was “off the reservation” and not to be believed.

One has to keep in mind, however, that during that time period of American history, American citizens had become very concerned by the antics of the federal government under Bill Clinton and his left wing liberal team players in Washington. The public was horrified by the way the ATF and FBI conducted the Ruby Ridge, Idaho, tragedy which resulted in the death of reclusive Randy Weaver’s wife, Vicki, and son, Sammy. The story of what led up to the event began when the ATF attempted to recruit Randy Weaver via an undercover informant. They first had an “asset” go to Weaver and talk him into sawing off the barrels of two shotguns, making them illegal. When that happened the ATF threatened Weaver with prosecution unless he agreed to infiltrate the nearby compound of the Aryan Nations. When Weaver refused the ATF filed gun charges on him. Weaver failed to appear in court and a bench warrant was issued. When US Marshals clandestinely approached the Weaver cabin to arrest him, one of the agents shot Weaver’s dog. Nearby, Weaver’s son, Sammy, who had a rifle, saw that and thought he was under attack and shot back, then began running to the cabin to warn his father, He was shot by another marshal’s M-16. In what ensued, Weaver’s friend, Kevin Harris, fired a shot that struck and killed U.S. Marshal William Degan.

The situation immediately turned into a standoff, and eventually the Marshals were called back to be replaced by the FBI’s “Hostage Rescue Team” and their snipers. During what ensued, Weaver’s wife, Vicki, was shot and killed by Lon Horiuchi, an FBI sniper, when Horiuchi was attempting to shoot Kevin Harris as he ran toward the door of the cabin. Eventually, Weaver and his friend Kevin Harris were talked into surrendering. After being jailed and enduring court hearings, Weaver was sentenced to 18 months with credit for time served, and Harris was acquitted. The federal government eventually was proven in the courts of being in error for many reasons and the Weaver family was awarded $100,000 to Weaver and $1,000,000 each to his three daughters.

Following this, in 1993, the federal government again shocked the public with the siege at Waco, Texas, of the Branch Davidians religious sect. The leader of the sect, David Koresh (real name Vernon Wayne Howell) believed himself to be a prophet and that the world was in the End Times, as prophesied in the Book of Revelation in the Holy Bible. His followers were also convinced of this and the group took measures to protect themselves “when the forces of Satan finally came.” The Branch Davidian sect was an offshoot of the Seventh Day Adventists, whose majority of sermons concern Bible prophecy, the New World Order, and the Tribulation period described in The Book of Revelation.

When a UPS driver dropped a box while delivering it to the Waco compound, and it broke open, exposing what he thought were hand grenades—which later turned out to be legal empty grenade bodies—he notified federal law enforcement. The case was quickly taken up by the ATF, who planned and executed a raid on the compound on February 28th, 1993. The raid was possibly a much-needed media stunt as the ATF was on the chopping block in Washington for several reasons, one of which was being considered a “rogue out-of-control agency." It should also be noted that the media was invited along and brought their cameras. The plan was to remove all the weapons found inside the compound and lay them out for the TV crews to film, showing that the ATF disarmed a bunch of radical opponents of the government. It didn't work out as planned. The raid met fierce resistance and the ATF suffered casualties and had to withdraw. The situation was then turned over to the FBI who began a 51 day siege ending when the buildings caught fire during a high wind while being attacked with gas from an armored M88 tank retriever, and burned to the ground on April 19th 1993—the same day and month that the Murrah Building would be bombed.

Four ATF agents and six Branch Davidians were killed in the initial raid, and 76 people were killed in the final assault, including David Koresh. Eleven Davidians who managed to survive were arrested.

What the American people witnessed in both events was an overbearing federal government and its agencies using extreme force to attack American citizens. There were those who said "they got what they deserved." But most thinking people could see that in Weaver's eyes, he and his wife had bought land in the mountains of Idaho to be left alone and safe from the world's collapse. What he feared might happen to him and his family did happen. In David Koresh's mind and teachings that the attack on him and his followers was the fulfillment of prophecy, the government had not only over-reacted, but now was showing that it would not hesitate to use maximum force against the people. Oddly, the FBI, who is famous for profiling criminals, during the entire siege, never called upon any Christian religious scholars to try and figure out what the Branch Davidian mindset was all about. If they had, they would have realized that they were "proving" Koresh's warnings about the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse and the sounding of the trumpets in Revelation. If they had called in religious scholars, there may have been an entirely different ending to the disaster. As it was, the Davidians were determined to "fight evil" to the death. The ATF and FBI's arrival became a fulfillment of prophecy.

Though there had been people who had come together in like-minded groups to form militias since the beginning of this country, mostly for self-protection, the years throughout the Cold War and up to the 1990s saw such organizations grow in number and sophistication. The "Minutemen" of the Cold War were groups who feared invasion by the Soviet Union, or occupation of our country by UN troops, or even a government that had been subverted by Communism and subsequently fallen to control by Moscow. Eventually that organization faded away and is not related to the later Minutemen border militia of Arizona.

By the 1990s, mostly due to the gun seizing/gun control agenda of the Democrats in Congress and the Clinton administration, several militia organizations began to appear and train with weapons and military tactics. They feared the U.S. government and what it would and could do after witnessing the above events coupled with the overbearing federal agencies such as the Bureau of Land Management, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (who they suspected of building concentration camps for resisters), the Environmental Protection Agency (who they felt had no reason to have its own SWAT teams), the IRS, the FBI and ATF, and left-wing politicians in general.

When I was in Washington to testify before Congress (the House Sub-Committee on Crime) on April 5th, 1995, none of the politicians or bureaucrats I visited with over a three day period had any idea that there were such things as “militia units” out in “fly-over land” who not only distrusted the government, but feared the government. After Ruby Ridge and Waco, these units were growing in number and expanding in membership.

But within three days of the bombing, just 14 days after I had left D.C., all of a sudden the government and the media were blaming “the militia” as if there was one parent organization that stretched across the country and posed a real threat to the might of the U.S. Government. They were painted as anti-government zealots who were more akin to the KKK than a neighborhood watch program.

In actual fact, most militia meeting attendees were average people who were concerned with the direction this country was heading and were preparing to try and defend themselves, their families, their land, and their communities against any threat that might come. One had to remember that environmentalists had created laws that effected people’s rights to their own property. And many other aspects of daily life had become a deep concern for families. Such things as government control of our schools and textbooks, invasion of private business, such as bank accounts, and even the seizing of private property.

Then, after the Oklahoma City bombing, The Democrats’ “Anti-terrorism Bill,” which had been stagnant until then, all of a sudden shifted to the fast track to give the government even more power. Clinton, seeking to expand the government’s power after the Oklahoma City bombing, stated that “I don’t think we have to give up our liberties. [But] we do have to take more seriously threats to our liberties.”

He then put all federal buildings on high alert and immediately “urged” the formation of a counter-terrorism unit headed by the FBI. He ordered a presidential directive authorizing further steps to “combat terrorism.” The Oklahoma City bombing was the thesis, or catalyst, in the best Hegelian Dialectic, for what was to follow.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch drafted provisions calling for expanded FBI authority to track international and domestic terrorism; House judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde began writing legislation that included Clinton’s proposals, which when re-written, would combine several bills on a fast track to passage in both houses. They included:

Establishment of a Domestic Counter-terrorism Center headed by the FBI gave the FBI increased authority to search phone logs and hotel and motel registers, and greater access to credit card records; created a federal crime of “international terrorism committed within the United States punishable by death”; expanded federal wire tapping and surveillance powers; forbade fund-raising by organizations the president designated as “terrorist”; permitted evidence from secret sources to be used in deportation proceedings; permitted federal agents to seize and search library records; and allowed the Justice Department to investigate crimes based on political beliefs and associations of suspects.

Another bill that was proposed directly attacked the militias just 28 days after I testified in Washington. It was short titled: “The Domestic Insurgency Act of 1995” introduced by Rep. Jerold Nadler (D-NY). In it he proposed fining and imprisoning participants in a paramilitary organization for a period of ten years. The text of the Bill was as follows:

HR 1544 To prohibit the formation of private paramilitary organizations.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ”Domestic Insurgency Act of 1995”.

SEC. 2. PARAMILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) In General.—Chapter 115 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“Sec. 2392. Paramilitary organizations

“(a) Whoever knowingly participates in a paramilitary organization shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

“(b) As used in this section, the term ‘paramilitary organization’ means two or more individuals acting together, organized in a military or paramilitary structure, who knowingly—

“(1) possess firearms, explosives, incendiary devices, or other weapons or techniques capable of causing injury or death to individuals; or

“(2) provide or participate in training in the use of any such weapons or techniques; with the intention that such weapons or techniques be used unlawfully to oppose the authority of the United States or of any State or for any other unlawful purpose.”

(b) Clerical Amendment.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 115 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item: 2392. Paramilitary organizations.

Actions such as this only reinforced an “us against them” attitude with people who were already fearful of an overreaching and overbearing out-of-control federal government that simply ignored the restraints put upon it by the Constitution. To the militia members and many others it seemed that laws and constraints on the federal government and its agencies no longer existed, but those same laws could be used against anyone else. Some politicians went so far as to call anyone who disagreed with them or their antics “resisters,” “threats to the nation,” and “terrorists,” thereby designating and demonizing people and groups who could be prosecuted for simply meeting, possessing firearms, and training with them to be in violation of the law. Hunters dressed in camouflage shooting at a rifle range could fall victim to such a law.

Needless to say, due to the pressure and demonizing of negative media reporting, militia groups began to disintegrate. Some disbanded altogether, some went underground, some lost membership but stayed quietly intact, and some members elected to continue with a few friends to form “lone wolf” cells. The latter was what the government feared most and such cells would grow in number over the ensuing years when liberal socialist politicians such as Clinton, and later Barrack Obama, were at the helm. That said, they also counted George H.W. Bush as a threat when he, on several occasions, announced a

"New World Order."

What came to be known as "the Resistance Movement" gained momentum not in men in camouflaged fatigues running around the woods practicing military maneuvers, but instead on radio talk shows, articles by journalists, and authors writing about the evils that existed and grew within our own body politick. The Pen was replacing the Sword.

For all of this to have occurred, there had to be a catalyst. What one finds is that the FBI and other agencies had little information of the scope of any militia movement. That would not stop the media onslaught that would follow the bombing due to two specific organizations which were not government agencies: the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) which claimed to track "hate groups" and all of a sudden was an authority on militias, and the Anti-Defamation League (ADL), a radical Jewish organization with Marxist roots that allegedly tracks "hate groups" and anyone suspected of anti-Semitism. These two organizations, then run by Abe Foxman of the ADL and Morris Dees of the SPLC, worked hand-in-hand to "inform" the FBI and media about "militia hate groups" that they insinuated would try and overthrow the government. Neither had any expertise in this area, both had similar leftist agendas, and both feared such groups as well. It stood to reason that both would work together to influence government decisions and actions and the news coming out of the media. They considered militias to be their common enemy, and what better way to deal with them than to use the media and the powers of the government against them.

Another left-wing "journalist" who provided anti-militia material to the media and government agencies was one Chip Berlet, a self-proclaimed "expert" on the Right Wing—and conservatives in general. He represented the "Political Research Associates," an organization I had never heard of prior to the bombing. Wikipedia gives a bio that states: "John Foster "Chip" Berlet (born November 22, 1949) is an American investigative journalist, research analyst, photojournalist, scholar, and activist specializing in the study of extreme right-wing movements in the United States. He also studies the spread of conspiracy theories. Since the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing Berlet has often appeared in the media to discuss extremist news stories. He was a senior analyst at Political Research Associates (PRA), a non-profit group that tracks right-wing networks. Berlet, a paralegal, was vice president of the National Lawyers Guild."

The National Lawyers Guild is a left-wing "progressive" organization that was originally founded by the Communist Party in the 1930s as an alternative organization to the American Bar Association. Berlet, when quoted in the media, was espousing and reinforcing the claims of both the SPLC and the ADL.

A huge issue to honest journalists who did what they could to weed out the facts from the propaganda, was that the FBI and other agencies actually used "information" from these agenda-driven organizations. To those who were in, or who had been in the militias, it was more proof that the Devil himself was in charge of the powers in this country.

Such groups as the Michigan Militia, the Militia of Montana, the Oklahoma Militia, The Texas Light Infantry, the Arizona Militia, and others too numerous to list, withered under the onslaught of the press and fear of the new laws being enacted.

But they did not all go away. Instead of remaining a paramilitary organization, some became more survivalist (“preppers”), and others became involved in local politics and media. The adage of “the pen is mightier than the sword” became a catch phrase for new tactics of government resistance. Books and expose’s were written, calling the government to task for every injustice that was perceived. Others began using the court system to not only defend themselves, but to attack those who had attacked them.

In politics there is an unwritten rule similar to Newton’s Law. Newton said “for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction.” In politics, it is “for every action, there is an opposite reaction that can be more powerful than that the original action.” This holds true when people use the law against injustice—provided the court is just. Many political attacks have unintended consequences, and often such attacks produce collateral damage to those who least expect it. One example is the ability for an American citizen to sue a public official under United States Code:

42 USC S. 1983 states to wit:

“Civil Action Deprivation of Rights: Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer’s judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable. For the purposes of this section, any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia.”

This law scares the hell out of public servants and politicians, but is little known by the citizenry. Still, such laws are a method of using lawful means to address grievances and government overreach.

Fear of the government, the citizenry arming themselves, indications of the End Times prophesied in the Bible for those that were religious, and more and more expose’s of government crimes and coverups that surfaced influenced the mind-set of the time.

This division in trust went both ways. On Saturday, the 22nd of April, 1995, just four days after the bombing, a national teletype went out to all law enforcement agencies warning of reprisals from the militias. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms sent the following:

“Request national broadcast. Subj: Warning to all law enforcement personnel: ATF intelligence information suggests that the Oklahoma City Bombing may have heightened paranoia levels among various militia groups across the United States. Information suggests that this bombing may be seen as a staged terrorist attack by the federal government as part of an overall plan to declare martial law and suspend the Constitution. In addition, many groups will be extremely despondent over the arrest and investigation of militia members and may consider the situation desperate. Many of these members feel that an attack on them is imminent and have already gone into an alert status. These groups have been known to mobilize and arm themselves for the purpose of obstructing law enforcement action against other militia members. Due to this, all law enforcement personnel are warned to take extreme caution when contacting any known militia members or affiliates."

No conservative organization would be left out either. The Clinton/Reno/Freeh cabal painted anyone who was a conservative or considered themselves a "Constitutionalist" with a broad brush. Everyone who was not a left-wing supporter of the "Progressive" movement in this country was considered a threat to the Establishment. Even the National Rifle Association was under attack. In an article by Neal Knox in Shotgun News, he wrote, regarding the Antiterrorism bill "The House Judiciary Committee today approved—by 23-12—a version of Chairman Henry Hyde's anti-terrorism bill, which is generally better than, but still too similar, to the Senate-passed bill and the original proposal of the Clinton administration.

"Both bills include so many expanded powers for the Federal law enforcement agencies that many Liberal Democrats and Conservative Republicans are nervous about potential civil liberties abuses. President Clinton's original bill would have given him sole authority to declare what constituted a 'terrorist organization,' allowing the group to have been covertly infiltrated, wiretapped and investigated under other provisions of the bill. Even donating to a designated 'terrorist group' would be an offense."

Thankfully, parts of the Bill were not passed, but those parts had to do with outlawing certain types of ammunition that were proposed by then Representative Charles Schumer (D-NY) and in the Senate, Senator Diane Feinstein (D-CA)—both rabid Second Amendment opponents.

In a strange turn of events, I had various individuals with affiliation to self-described militia units contact me regarding the bombing. They all offered to help if they could, and promised if they heard or found out anything of value they'd pass it on to me. There was no way these people would even talk to the FBI, but they would talk to me. This was partly because many had read my book Kill Zone: A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza about the Kennedy assassination in which I exposed a huge government coverup and lists of lies told by those in power at the time. And, with the grapevine being what it was at the time, the word had gotten out that I was a "cop that could be trusted".

The more I looked into the militia movement, the more I was convinced that the majority would have guarded a federal building, not blown it up. That might not be the case for the UN building in New York, which many considered to be the globalist shadow government that was formed to destroy all nations and to form their New World Order of one global government over all. Nor would they protect the Council on Foreign Affairs (CFR) headquarters in New York City, which they knew was the very organization that created the UN in the first place and also controlled many areas of our government with an agenda to make the U.S. a nation-state of the NWO. But the more I looked at it, no militia group or member was involved in the OKC bombing. That meant that the media redirection that was overwhelming the airwaves was shielding someone or something else.

In fact, on Sunday, April 23rd, 1995, it became known that the Michigan Militia had informed the FBI and ATF that McVeigh was dangerous months before the bombing, and that the Michigan Militia meetings that McVeigh had attended were described in records that were made available to the FBI and ATF. The Michigan Militia members felt that McVeigh was essentially a dangerous lunatic, and informed the FBI and ATF of this belief long before the bombing. But this was never brought out by the press, nor followed up on by the FBI or ATF.

While the liberal politicians and bureaucrats in Washington were busy passing laws and rules as fast as their pens would move, the so-called “resistance” was morphing into something entirely different than armed paramilitary groups. Short Wave radio became a main conduit of information with more shows springing up by the week. Though gun and ammunition sales skyrocketed, so did hoarding large quantities of food, medical supplies and other necessities that many people felt compelled to do (and this was before the Y2K scare).

As the investigation progressed no evidence of any ties to the militias ever came to light. There was not one shred of evidence that any militia group or member was involved in the Oklahoma City bombing. But the seeds had been planted in the mind of the public. The militia leaders and their groups had been castigated and threatened and basically defanged. But all of this misdirection by the ADL, the SPLC, and PRA did nothing but waste time and effort of those trying to accomplish a legitimate investigation and get to the true facts. The whole militia gambit was nothing more than a rabbit trail that led nowhere as far as the bombing was concerned. But it it did succeed in getting the so-called anti-terrorism laws passed, increased the powers of the federal agencies, and misdirected the investigators to give the real villains time to disappear.

Elohim City and the White Separatists

”It is suspected that members of Elohim City are involved either directly or indirectly through conspiracy…”

FBI Memo written on 4/20/1995

”I don’t doubt Tim’s role in the conspiracy. But I think he clearly aggrandized his role, enlarged it, to cover for others who were involved.”

McVeigh’s defense attorney, Steven Jones

“I think you have too many coincidences here that raise questions about whether other people are involved. The close associations with Elohim City and the earlier plan [of Elohim City residents] to do the same Murrah Building all suggest the complicity of other people.”

Danny Coulson, FBI’s scene commander for the Oklahoma City investigation

”If I were still in the bureau, the investigation would be reopened.”

Dan Defenbaugh, retired FBI Chief of the Oklahoma City bombing investigation (2003)

By July of 1995 I was ready for a vacation. My wife and I decided to fly out to California to visit my father and step-mother in Laguna Beach where they had a home overlooking the ocean. My dad had retired in 1987 as president of B.J Hughes Oil Tool Manufacturing Company. He had begun working there in 1946 just after he was discharged from the Marine Corps. He, like so many other servicemen at the end of World War II, needed a job—any job.

Luckily, as he was canvassing possibilities he ran into a man who was a supervisor on the shipping dock of Byron Jackson Oil Tools in Los Angeles. A fellow Marine, he told my dad “if you don’t mind starting out on the shipping dock, I’ll hire you.”

My father stayed with Byron Jackson for over 40 years, worked all over the world, and when B.J. merged with Hughes Tool Company and became B.J. Hughes, he was by then International Managing Director of Operations. He has traveled all over the world, and by the time he retired he had filled up six passports, and was by then the president of BJ Hughes!

Anyone who knows about American corporations with international offices knows that many of them have people who do “odd jobs” for the CIA and FBI. My father was no different, and over a period of time had been debriefed by the CIA, the FBI and others that he never mentioned to me. Because of his extensive background rubbing shoulders with the intelligence branches of government he had made many “interesting contacts.” And when I was working on my book The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government his resources were invaluable. I would email him or call him and ask a question about various cases I was working on in the book and later would receive plain brown envelopes with no return address or faxes with no headers with bits and pieces of information or “where to look” on certain subjects.

I didn’t think he would be of any help with the OKC case, but wanted to bounce some ideas off him and maybe get some guidance.

A few days before we left Pete Rickel called me and asked “Do you know where Elohim City is?”

“No, never heard of it. What is it?”

“It’s in Oklahoma somewhere and we have a lead there may be some connection,” he explained.

“No, I’m clueless on that but I can check around,” I responded.

Little did I know at that point that the FBI and ATF both knew exactly where “Elohim City” was. For some reason, Rickel was fishing, but I didn’t know it at the time.

I spent some time on the internet and putting queries out but didn’t get any responses. I did find out that Elohim (pronounced E-low-heem) was a Hebrew word for God in the Old Testament, and used in the Christian Covenant churches. I did a memo on that and sent it off to Rickel, then left for California.

I couldn’t believe it! In the two weeks I was in California there was hardly a word in the news on the Oklahoma City investigation (which was still much in the news in Oklahoma). It was as if it never happened!

I spent quite a bit of time with my dad, which is a good thing because I knew that he was suffering from emphysema from smoking unfiltered cigarettes during WWII. Then, even after quitting in the 1960s, it came back to effect him in the late 1970s while he was living in the damp air of London. Unfortunately his hearth deteriorated over the next 20 years and he passed on in August 2001. The only good thing is that he never saw the carnage of 9-11.

But his advice was, basically, “where there’s smoke, there’s fire. And one thing to watch for is when the government is caught lying.” I already knew that, but it is always good to be reminded. When I told him what I could, with what we had discovered so far, he was amazed at the lengths the government and media were going to with so much disinformation. His advice: “Looks like smoke to me son, and maybe smoke and mirrors.”

When I returned to Oklahoma I found out from some of my “militia” sources who responded to my initial query that they had found out that Elohim City was a small community, more like a cluster, of houses with a meeting hall on the Oklahoma/Arkansas border, somewhere south of Stillwell, Oklahoma, in Adair County. This part of Oklahoma is known for being very remote, with rugged terrain, and inhabited by folks who don’t have or want much outside contact. Eventually research would show me that it was a Christian Identity community, founded by a Reverend Millar, who came from Canada. Most residents were family, but at the time they had been open to other people coming in who were accepted by Millar or one of his senior sons.

I had lived in Oklahoma since 1957, and except for my Marine Corps service and a year working in the Los Angeles area, later. I knew of, or had heard of, about every town and small town in the state, at least in the eastern half. But I’d never heard of Elohim City.

Over the ensuing weeks more came to light from both Rickel (who I had to prod to get anything) and an old partner who was with the ATF. The feds had not only known about this place when Rickel asked me if I knew where it was, but they had informants there. I was later to discover that each of the main players, Andreas Strassmeir, Carol Howe, and Dennis Mahon, were all confidential informants (CI's) for either the FBI, ATF or CIA! Strassmeir, or "Andy the German" in my, and others, opinion, worked for the CIA, and probably a covert military intelligence agency as well, and was on loan from the German government. Dennis Mahon, who I knew personally and who I considered to be a big blowhard and rabble rouser with no backbone to actually do anything, had to have been a CI for the FBI as he had been in the past and, probably still was protected. Howe, a Tulsa Debutante and runner up for Miss Teen Oklahoma, was a CI for the ATF! All of that being said it was obvious to me that all three intelligence-gathering organizations each had their assets inside Elohim City.

Whatever went on in Elohim City, the FBI and ATF and probably the CIA all knew. And we later discovered that Strassmeir was also reporting to the Southern Poverty Law Center, and most likely to an attorney named Kirk Lyons, who facilitated bringing Strassmeir into, and later moving him out of the country. Rev. Millar, the spiritual leader of Elohim City, later told investigators for McVeigh's defense team that "Andy was sent to us by Kirk Lyons, and I still believe Kirk is a fine patriot, but we're not so sure about Andy anymore."

The Elohim City Connection

According to the federal government, they had no idea whatsoever that the Alfred P. Murrah Building was going to be bombed on April 19, 1995. And, to convince the American public, Attorney General Janet Reno swore that there would be no stone left unturned in their investigation. So, 2000-plus federal agents were placed on the case. And according to them, 20,000 people would eventually be interviewed. In addition, the investigators checked 43,000 tips, journeyed from Arizona to Las Vegas, and from upstate Michigan to the Philippines in search of answers. In all, they would generate more than one billion documents and spend over one million investigative hours on this case. There would be enough piles of files and paperwork to keep anyone who probed into the investigation busy for years.

And what, ultimately, did the government conclude after this exhaustive investigation? Answer: that there was no evidence of anyone involved in the OKC bombing other than Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols.

However, the government, including the FBI, ATF, Department of Justice, and CIA, among others, lied about having no foreknowledge of the Alfred P. Murrah bombing on April 19, 1995. Specifically, events at the 400-acre compound called Elohim City held many of the keys to OKC, and elements within our federal government were certain that the horrific events of that day would take place. Regrettably, of the 2,000 federal agents, not one agent was dispatched to Elohim City. In fact, Associated Press writer Paul Query quoted an unnamed law enforcement official who had this to say on the subject: "Elohim City is not a current subject of interest."

Elohim City is not only ground zero for one of the gravest miscarriages of justice, but an investigation into its activities at that time would have revealed in painstaking detail how intimately and directly they were involved in the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah

Building.

Andreas Strassmeir, officer in the German Panzer Grenadiers, Intelligence Section, and sources say also the German anti-terrorist group GSG-9

Andreas Strassmeir: Many roads led to Elohim City

To understand the Elohim City/Andreas Strassmeir/Dennis Mahon connection, one must follow, in chronological order, the movements of a German national named Strassmeir, as well as a fascinating cast of characters surrounding him.

To begin, we need to introduce Strassmeir. Strassmeir was a German national who entered the United States for a lengthy stay in 1991, during which he eventually became the head of security at Elohim City. Strassmeir is the son of Gunter Strassmeir, who was the architect of German reunification and a top aide to German chancellor and Bilderberg luminary Helmut Kohl. In addition, Strassmeir's grandfather was a founding member of the Nazi party, which, immediately after WWII had direct ties to American intelligence via SS General Reinhard Gehlen. Gehlen was recruited at the end of the war by OSS Station Chief Allen Dulles to become head of West German Intelligence. Gehlen also was involved in creating the "Ratlines" network for escaping Nazis. The Strassmeir name is one of the most respected and influential in Germany. In all, the Strassmeir family was connected to the power elite in every sense of the word.

Strassmeir himself spent seven years in the German Army as a Bundeswehr officer, where he served as a lieutenant with the Panzer Grenadiers, in their elite intelligence unit. Strassmeir's area of expertise was none other than disinformation. This point is extremely important because, even though Strassmeir is portrayed as an ardent neo-Nazi, he spoke fluent Hebrew (Israel's state language), and the London Times reported that he had a Jewish girlfriend who served in the Israeli Army. Not exactly what we would expect from a notorious "Jew-hater!"

Though Strassmeir migrated to the United States in 1991, his first visit here was on April 7, 1989 when he flew to Washington, D.C. What makes his arrival peculiar is that, in the Immigration and Naturalization Services (INS) computers, Strassmeir was given a special status of AO. And even though determining what this status means has been difficult for many researchers, his AO reference was completely scrubbed from his computer files a few years later. AO is "Asylee applicant without work authorization." That means he was granted immigration status because he was "seeking asylum," which is interesting since there was no reason for Strassmeir to fear living in Germany. Also, at that time, and to this day, Nazism is illegal in Germany, as are all symbols, badges, flags, armbands, and signs. Anyone trying to organize a Nazi or neo-Nazi group or organization is also breaking the law. The German government is keen on discovering anyone preaching Nazism, showing Nazi symbols or propaganda, and especially importing into Germany any of the above.

It would make perfect sense to the U.S. government and its agencies to agree to assist the German government in discovering any links between American neo-Nazi groups and individuals and their German counterparts.

What better way than to infiltrate a trained German agent into the neo-Nazi underground of America?

To officially bring Strassmeir to America, an attorney named Kirk Lyons entered the picture. Lyons himself is an interesting character. He served as the lawyer for Aryan Nation head Louis Beam in the sedition trial of 1987, and managed to get Beam and 17 others cases dismissed; represented Randy Weaver in the Ruby Ridge debacle; and also represented the survivors of the Waco massacre. Lyons has had several connections to various neo-Nazi and offshoot Christian Identity organizations through the years, so it is no surprise that he would know and help Andreas Strassmeir—who represented himself as a true German embodiment of Nazism.

The late Michael Collins Piper, author of Final Judgment and a veteran reporter for the American Free Press, wrote in an unpublished article that, "For many years Kirk Lyons functioned in some way as a federal undercover agent and/or informant in a movement in which he put himself forward as a legal advocate and spokesman for its cause." Piper went on to conclude that he thought Lyons was Strassmeir's handler. Lyons even visited Strassmeir's parents at their plush Berlin residence in 1991.

In fact, Lyons was the person who orchestrated Strassmeir's relocation to America. He also obtained for him a driver's license by providing Strassmeir with an address in Knoxville, Tennessee, and he is quoted as saying, "I'm the reason that Andy was at Elohim City. I put him there. So if there was a plan, I guess I'm part of it." Not only did Lyons introduce Strassmeir to everyone at Elohim City, but on April 18, 1995, but according to Victor Thorn, author of The OKC Bombing—Elohim City Connection, one day before the OKC bombing, Lyons' law firm received a fifteen-minute phone call from a very important person in this scenario—Timothy McVeigh.

Lyons has had an extensive history in the Sons of Confederate Veterans (SCV), which also has many members who are Civil War Re-enactors.

Once Strassmeir arrived on our shores in 1991, he quickly gravitated toward, of all things, the Civil War reenactment crowd. The London Times reported that when Strassmeir first arrived in the United States, he was befriended by retired Army officers, CIA veterans, and Civil War reenactment history buffs. These men were part of a network that is very powerful in this country, and one that stretches into the Pentagon and other federal agencies.

According to Victor Thorn, one of these men was Lt. Col. Anthony Vincent Petruskie III, USAF Ret., who was a special agent for the Air Force Office of Special Investigation (OSI) from 1954-1975, and who also knew Strassmeir's father in Berlin. Petruskie was also a foreign intelligence officer in Vietnam, a member of the 1131st U.S. Air Force Special Activities Squadron, a Special Projects Officer in the Special Activities Branch of the counter-intelligence division in Washington, D.C., and was also reactivated during the Gulf War to fulfill a sensitive assignment.

Needless to say, Petruskie was connected to deep intelligence sources for decades, and allegedly interacted with a cabal of ex-military men and former and current CIA employees who were involved in gun running, mercenary actions, espionage, drug trafficking, blackmail, subversion, and money laundering. These were off-record, black budget operatives, and Vincent Petruskie allegedly made a career out of soliciting and deal-making with these shadowy figures.

So, when Andreas Strassmeir arrived in America and needed a place to stay, who opened his doors to him? None other than Vincent Petruskie of Petruskie Associates in Manassas, Virginia; a man who was making at the time $1.6 million/year by working out of his house. How did Strassmeir know Petruskie? In his own words, Strassmeir described his ally as "a former CIA guy my father had known." But Petruskie's friendship didn't end at mere lodging. In addition, he tried to get Strassmeir a job at the DEA, the Treasury Department, the INS, and also the Department of Justice.

However when McVeigh's attorneys later interviewed Petruskie in July of 1996, he denied any involvement other than being a friend of the Strassmeir family. The report from McVeigh's legal team said:

"On the date listed above, I met with Mr. Petruskie at his home. He explained that he had first met Andy Strassmeir when a group of approximately 4-5 Germans traveled to the US to attend a Civil War reenactment. Petruskie's son had previously attended a reenactment in Germany along with an instructor from Texas A&M college. The instructor later contacted Petruskie asking if he would assist the German group when they came to the US. Petruskie agreed and allowed them to stay at his home where they stayed for several days. Later, Strassmeir's mother in Germany called Petruskie asking if he would help Andreas out and "give him some direction" if he returned to the US. Petruskie agreed, and Andreas stayed with him briefly during this subsequent trip. Petruskie explained that Strassmeir was supposed to be coming to the US to attend school, but that he now understands that never occurred. While Strassmeir was staying there with Petruskie, he did little in the way of beginning his schooling and just sat around. With pressure from Petruskie and Strassmeir's parents, Strassmeir eventually moved to Houston, TX, where he was supposed to be getting a landscaping job and attending school. Petruskie says that was his last contact with him.

"Because Strassmeir was merely hanging out and goofing off for the following period in the US, Petruskie said he 'came up with a story to tell his father. The story was one that his father could not "check out."' because it alleged that he was doing undercover work for the U.S. government. This, Petruskie believes, was complete "BS." He commented that he didn't believe that any agency would seriously consider Strassmeir for an type of undercover work. Petruskie explained that Strassmeir's father is very strict and would not approve his goofing off here in the States. Petruskie added that Strassmeir was the only one of several siblings that had "done nothing." He also believes that Strassmeir has had to maintain this story or else his father will throw him out of their German home.

"Petruskie maintains that these two occasions were his only contact with Strassmeir, totaling several days. He says that he didn't know of Strassmeir being at Elohim City until much later. He was unaware of anyone that Strassmeir may have associated with here in the U.S. and did not recognize Mike Bresha's [sic] name.

"Also, he didn't believe that Strassmeir had the guts to point a gun at someone much less be involved in the Okbomb."

This is hard to believe considering Petruskie's past, and the fact that Strassmeir's father was the Chief of Staff to German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, and Petruskie and Andy Strassmeir were working out a deal to buy Boeing 747s from Lufthansa (which as a side note, would be a tremendous asset to drug or gun smugglers). During the investigation we had information that Strassmeir had a contact—"the Colonel"—at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. Could this contact actually be Petruskie?

While Strassmeir was at Elohim City, serving as chief of security, he loaned his station wagon to another Elohim City resident who subsequently was stopped by the Oklahoma Highway Patrol at a road block. The license plate was out of date and the driver had no driver's license. The car was impounded—then all hell broke loose. According to Mike Vanderboegh, who wrote in a newsletter titled The John Doe Times, and who researched the OKC bombing:

"In February 1992 Strassmeir's maroon station wagon was impounded by the Oklahoma Highway Patrol for a traffic violation. The police found in his briefcase a collection of documents, some of them in German. According to the tow-truck driver, Kenny Pence, Strassmeir soon brought heavy pressure to bear. 'Boy, we caught hell over that one,' he said. 'The phone calls came in from the State Department, the Governor's office, and someone called and said he had diplomatic immunity. He was just a weird cookie.'"

When Strassmeir's station wagon was impounded Peace said that immediately after this event he started getting a flurry of calls from an attorney (allegedly Kirk Lyons). Then from a "general or major" at Fort Bragg, North Carolina (possibly Petruskie), the Highway Patrol's district office, the State Department, and the Governor's office all telling him to immediately release the vehicle. They also said that Andreas Strassmeir had full diplomatic immunity even though his visa had expired. Nothing in the AO category granted such immunity.

Furthermore, the contents of Strassmeir's briefcase held a copy of The Terrorist's Handbook (including how to build ANFO bombs and detonators with delayed fuses), job applications for the INS & DEA, foreign bank statements which showed he was by no means an impoverished pauper, and suspected government classified documents in both English and German. But most bizarre were the classified papers detailing negotiations by Strassmeir on behalf of Petruskie and Associates to buy 747s from Germany's Lufthansa Airlines to begin a transport business out of Costa Rica! Considering that Petruskie was involved with a shadow-group of black-budget operatives at the height of the cocaine craze. For what does one think these airliners flying out of South America were going to be used?

After Strassmeir's early adventures with Vincent Petruskie, he aligned himself with a citizen's militia called the Texas Light Infantry Brigade. The only problem was the members of this group quickly became suspicious of Strassmeir's motives and loyalty, so they followed him late one night to a federal building. There, they saw Strassmeir approach an electric lock on the door, upon which he punched in the code on an electronic keypad. And just like that, Strassmeir gained access to the building. What makes this scenario relevant is that the federal building conveniently housed an office of the ATF. After witnessing this transgression, the TLIB gave Strassmeir his walking papers for being a suspected undercover agent.

At this point we must ask: who was Andreas Strassmeir? On July 14, 1996, The McCurtain Gazette reported that, according to a highly-placed source at the FBI's intelligence division, he was a paid ATF informant or asset sent to infiltrate Elohim City. This sentiment was echoed by Timothy McVeigh's lawyer, Stephen Jones, during a 1998 interview on KTOK radio in Oklahoma City. Jones said Strassmeir was a German national recruited by FBI director Louis Freeh to do deep undercover and intelligence operations for the FBI in the United States. He also said that he discussed Strassmeir's FBI connection to the German government with U.S. prosecutor Beth Wilkinson. There is also an FBI form 302 which has been unearthed stating that Strassmeir was a CIA asset on loan from the German government. That makes three different agencies that have been mentioned: the FBI, ATF, and CIA in relation for whom Strassmeir was working. Until our government is more forthcoming with information, we can't be certain of any more precise details other than that he was a shared asset on loan to the U.S. government.

After being outed by the Texas Light Infantry Brigade, Strassmeir, under the tutelage of attorney Kirk Lyons, migrated to Elohim City, a 400-acre compound in rural Oklahoma near Muldrow. This enclave became, according to Time magazine, the Who's Who of the radical right because it housed members of the Aryan Republican Army; the Covenant, Sword, and Arm of the Lord (CSAL); the National Alliance; the KKK; and Aryan Nation, as well as many other militia and/or neo-Nazi style groups.

The Elohim City crowd was also prone to violence, as was revealed by Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven N. Snyder of Fort Smith, Arkansas, who said that a plot was hatched as far back as 1983 to blow up the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The prime movers in this conspiracy were Richard Wayne Snell, James Ellison, and Kerry Noble, all of the CSAL, who wanted to use plastic explosives and rocket launchers to topple the building. The authorities took this plot seriously enough to raid Elohim City in 1985, where they arrested Covenant founder James Ellison.

Despite its notoriety, Kerry Noble, former Covenant member, said of Elohim City: “It has the potential, down the road, of being the most dangerous group in the country.” It was never again raided. The big question is why? Even an FBI report called Project Megiddo addressed the phenomenon surrounding Elohim City-style compounds when they said that right-wing Christian terrorists posed the gravest danger to our country, and would be the most likely to incite violence in the months and years ahead.

To understand the mind-boggling sense of immunity that was given to Elohim City, we need to look at Robert Millar, who founded this community in 1973. Despite his status as a spiritual leader of the militant right, senior FBI agent Peter Rickel (who asked me in July, 1995 if I had ever heard of or knew where Elohim City was) testified on June 31, 1997 that Millar was in regular contact with the agency in the years before the bombing. Millar actually confirmed these words on July 1, 1997 when he told the Tulsa World newspaper that he repeatedly shared information with the FBI, DEA, and other law enforcement agencies.

This is why The McCurtain Daily Gazette reported on July 1, 1997 that, Millar’s position as a mole for the FBI could explain why the compound has never been raided. Despite its use as a hideout for gun-runners, drug dealers, bank robbers and suspected members of the conspiracy that bombed the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, Elohim City has enjoyed a reputation as a place where fugitives can live without fear of arrest.

Of the Elohim City residents, it is mind boggling how many informants and outlaws were there. Robert Millar wasn’t the only individual at Elohim City who was speaking with the authorities. There were plenty of others, including:

James Ellison, former Covenant, Sword, and Arm of the Lord member who was married to Millar’s granddaughter and who testified against The Order.

Peter Langan, the son of a retired U.S. Marine intelligence officer and leader of the Aryan Republican Army. After being arrested for robbing a Georgia Pizza Hut, the U.S. Secret Service intervened and had him released!

Gary Hunt, paid informant of the ATF who was videotaped in the company of two other ATF agents at the Grand Continental Hotel in OKC a full-week before the bombing. He was also videotaped, along with a companion, on April 19, 1995 by an OKC television station right after the bombing. Both men were carrying transmitters and walking rapidly from the Alfred P. Murrah Building. Hunt was even videotaped as a pall bearer at the funeral of an ATF agent.

Dennis Mahon, former Grand Dragon of the Oklahoma KKK and high ranking member of Tom Metzger’s White Aryan Resistance (WAR), and friend of Louis Beam of the Aryan Nation in Idaho. He was evidently *also a paid informant to the Iraqi*s according to his own admission, and never arrested or bothered by the FBI.

Dennis Mahon sent me this photo when I was a regular guest on a talk radio show in Tulsa. Carol Howe, when she was dating Mahon on right.

Carol Howe on maneuvers with others at Elohim City. One of my CI’s gave me a video tape of the event showing her, Mahon, Strassmeir and others moving, shooting and practicing assault tactics. I loaned it to the FBI and it was never returned.

Andreas "the German" Strassmeir who, according to research, worked for the CIA, ATF, Military Intelligence, German Intelligence, and a shadowy group that McVeigh and Nichols belonged to that was, according to McVeigh, "a special operations unit that did illegal things." When Strassmeir arrived in Elohim City he talked Millar into letting him take over security. Then he took up all the deer rifles the residents had, sold them and replaced them with "assault rifles." One source at Elohim City later stated that "Every few months, 15 to 30 individuals from around the U.S. would show up for a few weeks of military style training. The recruits were primarily members of the Aryan Nation. One of them was Timothy McVeigh who was a regular visitor to the compound."

Peter Langan

Peter Langan, known as "Commander Pedro," who planned and executed 22 different bank robberies in seven states which netted over $250,000. This spree extended over two years, and explosives were used in many of the heists. Oddly, even though Langan was wanted in six states, there wasn't even one crime scene arrest or fatality at any of the robberies, and never did the robbers encounter any bank guards or law enforcement officials.

Peter Ward, FBI informant and McVeigh's roommate at the Dreamland Motel in Kansas when McVeigh rented the Ryder Truck. Ward was probably the second man seen with McVeigh in the office of the motel and at the Ryder truck rental agency.

Michael Brescia

Michael Brescia, one of those suspected of being an actual bomb-planter inside the Murrah Building, was arrested on January 30, 1997 in Philadelphia for his participation in a number of bank robberies. He moved to Elohim City in 1994 and was a roommate of Andreas Strassmeir. Brescia has also been identified as John Doe # 2 by Dennis Mahon, ATF informant Carol Howe, and Timothy McVeigh's girlfriend, Catina Lawson.

Richard Guthrie

Richard Guthrie, the son of CIA parents and a Navy veteran, he was also arrested for bank robbery, but not before frequently visiting Tim McVeigh in Arizona when McVeigh was living near Michael Fortier's place.

McVeigh's Army buddy Michael Fortier

Other shady characters of note were Michael Fortier, who Robert Millar admitted had lived at Elohim City shortly before the bombing, and Dennis Mahon, who got his start in The Order, which was founded by Robert Matthews, a self-proclaimed terrorist who burned to death during an intense gunfight with approximately 75 federal law enforcement agents who surrounded his house on Whidbey Island, near Freeland, Washington. Mahon then went on to become third in line in the White Aryan Resistance (WAR) and was described by Andreas Strassmeir as a good friend. Equally important, Mahon admitted to meeting Timothy McVeigh several times, and said that Michael Brescia "was up to his ass in the Oklahoma City bombing." Mahon was also personal friends with Tom Metzger, founder of WAR and the Skinhead movement and former Grand Wizard of the KKK in the 1970s.

In one of my memos written during the investigation I wrote:

1. Dennis W. Mahon and his twin brother Daniel Wallace Mahon, who are both involved in the KKK and WAR, now live at 1448 North College (Tulsa).
2. Daniel W. "Dano" Mahon is connected to a German national named Andreas STRASSMEIR (DOB 5-17-59 Berlin), who is an agent for the German national anti-terrorist police, GSG-9. Strassmeir lived for four years in this country after arriving on 5-9-91 without being documented by the INS, had no job during the entire period, and lived on a credit card provided by sources unknown.
3. STRASSMEIR, whose father is Gunther STRASSMEIR (Asst Secretary of State for Germany under Helmut Kohl, lived at Elohim City where he preached violence, and that the people there who were isolationist (and defensive when he arrived) resisted his influence until national events led them to form a "militia," which "Andy" Strassmeir recruited and trained. According to sources, Strassmeir is a German military intelligence officer who was recruited by U.S. intelligence personnel to infiltrate "the Klan" or patriot groups. This appears in line with a shared-assets sting operation.
4. While Strassmeir was at Elohim City, McVeigh made two telephone calls to the site, one the day before, and one the day after renting the Ryder truck in Kansas. It is probable that the recipient was Strassmeir.
5. Elohim City is geographically close to the area frequented by the Covenant, Sword and Arm of the Lord (CSA). A CSA leader named James Ellison turned state's evidence at a sedition trial in Fort Smith in 1984 and stated that he and a CSA leader named "Snell" (Richard Wayne Snell) planned to blow up the Murrah Building. Snell was executed for killing an Arkansas state trooper on April 19th, 1995, the same day the Murrah explosion occurred. Ellison is now back in Elohim City and married to the granddaughter of EC leader Millar.
6. Dennis Mahon told Kirk Lyons (CAUSE foundation lawyer who represents the KKK, White Aryan Resistance and etc.) that he would probably be indicted soon for the OKC bombing.
7. Ray Lampley and his followers were connected to Elohim City. Lampley subsequently was arrested for bomb making and threats made to blow up federal buildings, tax offices, and leftist organizational headquarters. Lampley allegedly made such statements at one of Mahon's WAR meetings. Mahon supposedly "informed" the FBI of Lampley's statements and recruiting efforts. It was probably the "recruiting" efforts that turned Mahon against Lampley, and subsequently influenced Mahon to inform on Lampley (if such an event occurred). (Author's note: Ray Lampley was an individual very much like Rev. Millar and had ties to Elohim City. He was later arrested when an informant, possibly Mahon, told the FBI that he had pipe bombs and was ready to act).

8. Possible Connections: If the members of the CSAL and the residents of Elohim City are connected, then it is possible that Strassmeir, posing as a neo-Nazi radical, enlisted the aid of the Mahon brothers and possibly Ellison in working with or providing McVeigh equipment or bomb materials and further motivation. it is known that the Tulsa Police Department staked out a Ryder truck in Tulsa right after the bombing at the Coppermill apartments, which was done on information provided by the FBI—after they admitted now believing their "source" that warned them previously about the Murrah Building prior to the explosion. (Author's note: This was probably the Ryder truck seen before the bombing at Lady Godiva's, and was driven by Mahon and one other person—most likely Strassmeir— in Bricktown on the morning of the bombing).

There are some official disinformation sources that say McVeigh had never even visited Elohim City. But we now know that McVeigh and Terry Nichols drove from Fayetteville, Arkansas, to Elohim City to meet with Andreas Strassmeir on October 12, 1993. Also in attendance were bank robbers Richard Guthrie and Peter "Commander Pedro" Langan.

We can also connect McVeigh to the Elohim City coterie through the following:

– A hotel receipt dated September 13, 1994
– A speeding ticket he received in 1993 a few miles from the compound
– Phone records – McVeigh called Strassmeir at Elohim City on April 5, 1995 a few minutes after reserving a Ryder truck
– Prisoner interviews
– His participation in military maneuvers directed by Strassmeir at Elohim City on September 12, 1994
– Informant reports: Carol Howe directly linked McVeigh (using the name Tim Tuttle) to Strassmeir, Dennis Mahon, and Peter Ward at Elohim City

With this information in mind, one can conclude that Timothy McVeigh was at Elohim City in the months and years before the Oklahoma City bombing.

On the other hand, to further link McVeigh to the Elohim City criminal element, FBI documents show that they strongly suspected McVeigh of participating in a December, 1994 Ohio bank robbery with some Aryan Nation members, including Michael Brescia. This seems to make sense, because McVeigh's sister testified later that he wanted her to launder some money for him in December, 1994. This would also at least partially explain how McVeigh, with no job and a sporadic work record, would have the money to travel around the country and buy cases of The Turner Diaries which he sold at rented gun show tables.

More proof of McVeigh’s Elohim City links comes from a highly documented April 8, 1995 event (a mere week-and-a-half prior to the OKC bombing) at which McVeigh, Strassmeir, and Michael Brescia were videotaped by security cameras at Lady Godiva’s strip joint in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Their visit was verified by the Fifth Estate, Canadas version of 60 Minutes. Of special note is McVeigh bragging to one of the dancers “I’m a very important man. You’ll remember me for the rest of your life.”

In the parking lot was a yellow Ryder truck!

The Tulsa Police Department had officer’s that, at the request of the local office of the FBI, had staked out a yellow Ryder truck at a Tulsa apartment complex that week. They later received information of the Godiva’s encounter. On the night in question there were four to five males at a table, including McVeigh, when one of the dancer’s, (stage name “Shawn Tea,” also known as Shawn Tea Ferrans), spoke to them.

A surveillance video tape in the dressing room in the club, a copy of which was provided to McCurtain County Gazette reporter J.D. Cash, showed that at approximately 11 p.m., one of the girls is heard in the tape telling other women in the room that one of her customers told her she would never forget him “come April 19th.” Cash went to the club and showed the dancer some pictures. “When we showed her some pictures, she identified McVeigh, [Michael] Brescia, and [Andreas] Strassmeir.”

The dancer was not identified, but if it was Shawn Tea, she was found dead in her apartment a few weeks after the bombing. Though it was ruled a suicide (there was a note and empty pill bottles) when I studied the crime scene photos I found what appeared to be a bloody hand print on one wall next to the patio doors! In my opinion she was murdered and the scene was made to look like she took her own life.

But to truly understand McVeigh’s role in the OKC bombing, we need to dig even deeper. David Paul Hammer, who spent 23 months with McVeigh on death row in Terre Haute, Indiana, says that McVeigh told him about meeting with three shadowy men with close ties to the U.S. military shortly after he “left” the Army in 1991. McVeigh also added that these men only went by code names, and that one of the meetings (with someone known only as “the Major”) took place at Camp McCall, which was on the grounds of Fort Bragg, North Carolina. Could this once again be Vincent Petruskie? Also, I received letters from an inmate in the Super Max federal prison in Colorado, who knew Nichols and who said that he swept out Nichols cell when Nichols was in the yard by himself each day for exercise. He said he read a partial letter Nichols was writing to someone and one sentence caught his eye. It said “Sarge is going to take care of us.” Again, a reference to someone military. Were the “Major” and “Sarge” part of a covert military ops team, as described by McVeigh?

At this meeting with the Major, McVeigh was told that he was passed over for a spot in the elite Army Special Forces so that he could be recruited into a black budget Department of Defense project where he would gather intelligence for the government on members of the radical right, including specifically the Aryans, KKK, and militias—like the groups that inhabited Elohim City. In effect, then, McVeigh, like Strassmeir, would become a pseudo-agent for the United States government.

I realize that such a scenario sounds fantastic, almost unbelievable, but in a letter that was read in 1995 before a grand jury, Timothy McVeigh's sister said that he thought McVeigh was going into a Special Forces covert tactical unit to fight against evil-doers. Author David Hoffman confirms this sentiment in his book The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror:

"McVeigh wrote his sister Jennifer while he was still in the Army telling her that he had been picked for a highly specialized Special Forces Covert Tactical Unit (CTU) that was involved in illegal activities. The letter was introduced to the Federal Grand Jury. According to former grand juror Hoppy Heidelberg, these illegal activities included protecting drug shipments, eliminating the competition, and population control."

The Associated Press also reported that the government had been closely monitoring those who came to show their support for the Branch Davidian's prior to the Waco siege. McVeigh, of course, was in attendance handing out anti-New World Order literature.

Could it be that Timothy McVeigh had been sheep-dipped in the exact same manner as Lee Harvey Oswald prior to the John F. Kennedy assassination? Those who've studied this subject know that former FBI agent Guy Bannister and CIA operative E. Howard Hunt made sure that Oswald was photographed handing out pro-Castro leaflets in New Orleans, and they even got him on a local television show to secure the connection, declaring "I'm a Marxist." Could McVeigh also have been reinvented as a racist revolutionary who would play a "Manchurian Candidate" role in some later black-ops project?

Before ruling out the possibility, lets return to another quote from David Hoffman's book:

"In an illuminating series of phone calls to Representative Charles Key, (head of the Oklahoma Bombing Investigative Committee) an anonymous source stated that McVeigh was present at several meetings with ATF and DEA agents in the days immediately preceding the bombing. The meetings took place in Oklahoma City at different locations. The ostensible purpose of these meetings was to provide McVeigh with further instructions, and to facilitate a payoff. David Hall of KPOC-TV uncovered information that McVeigh had met with local ATF agent Alex McCauley in a McDonalds the night before the bombing. The ATF agent was seen handing McVeigh an envelope."

Adding another element to the espionage angle is Terry Nichols' brother James Nichols, who in his book Freedom's End stated that McVeigh was met in prison by the notorious MK-ULTRA mind-bender Dr. Jolyon West, who not only pronounced Jack Ruby insane after killing Lee Harvey Oswald, but also handled Sirhan Sirhan following the Robert F. Kennedy assassination. Moreover, McVeigh also stated that he thought he'd been implanted with a computer microchip while serving in the Army, and many have declared that he was under the influence of mind-control drugs during his incarceration after the bombing. Dr. West worked for CIA "Dirty Tricks" Chief Dr. Sidney Gottlieb who headed the CIA's "Technical Services Division" in the 1960s and '70s. Gottlieb, who died in 1999, was head of the infamous MK/ULTRA mind control project that was designed to, among other things, program assassins and "super soldiers." He also pioneered mind control experiments using LSD.

A further insight into McVeigh's personality was provided by a woman named Lynda

Haner-Mele, who worked with McVeigh at Burns Security in early 1992.

“Tim wasn’t the type of person who could initiate action. He was very good if you said, Tim, watch this door — don’t let anyone through. The Tim I knew couldn’t have masterminded something like the OKC bombing. It would have had to have been someone who said, ‘Tim, this is what you do. You drive the truck’.”

All of this leads us once again back to Andreas Strassmeir, who admitted that he met Timothy McVeigh in the late spring of 1993 at a Tulsa gun show, and that he was in possession of McVeigh’s Desert Storm military uniforms. This is not someone who merely enjoyed a passing acquaintance with McVeigh. Furthermore, ATF infiltrator-informant Carol Howe has unequivocally stated that Andreas Strassmeir was the OKC prime instigator of the bombing, and McVeigh was merely his protégé. She also said that Strassmeir exerted extraordinary influence over McVeigh.

Anyone familiar with the deep secrets of the OKC bombing realizes that Carol Howe’s role as an informant, along with her subsequent testimony, are the incriminating smoking guns that completely shred the governments credibility. For starters, official sources denied that Howe was even employed by them. But now, years later, we know for a fact that Ms. Howe’s Confidential Informant number was: 53270-183 (or, for short, CI-183).

After being caught in this lie, the government said that Howe was dropped from their employ in June, 1995, after the OKC bombing. But an ATF report dated January 31, 1996 stated, “It is required that CI 53270-183 be retained as an active informant.” Plus, under cross-examination, Howe’s superior, Angela Finley (Angela Finley-Graham), admitted that Howe was an active informant until December 18, 1996.

We have further proof of Howe’s status as an informant via internal ATF documents, specifically Finley’s preliminary report, which had an ATF Investigation Report Number of 53270-94-0124-B, and was recorded on form #3270.2. This form was signed by not only Finley, but also David E. Roberts (Resident Agent in Charge of the Tulsa field office who I personally knew and worked with when he was a Tulsa police officer) and Agent Tommy Wittman, and was forwarded to Lester D. Martz, Special Agent in Charge of the Dallas Field Division of the ATF. In this report Howe’s work was described as sensitive and significant according to ATF official Robert Sanders.

Furthermore, on February 22, 1995, Ken Stafford, an Oklahoma Highway Patrol pilot who had flown photo missions over Elohim City, told Angela Finley that the FBI had an informant inside Elohim City in addition to Howe. In true spy-versus-spy fashion, though, the ATF and FBI did not know of the other's existence or identity. In my opinion the FBI informant was Dennis Mahon as I felt sure the CIA informant was Strassmeir.

What type of information did Howe feed to the ATF? To answer this question, we can start with ATF Special Agent Angela Finley's testimony on April 24, 1997:

Question: Ms. Howe told you about Mr. Strassmeir's threats to blow up federal buildings, didn't she?

Finley: In general, yes.

Question: That was before the OKC bombing?

Finley: Yes.

Question: Now, Ms. Howe actually took some of these people from Elohim City at your direction to Oklahoma City, didn't she?

Finley: She went with them. She probably didn't drive.

Question: This trip to OKC by Elohim City residents occurred before the bombings, actually by a few weeks, didn't it?

Finley: No, it would be months, in the fall of '94.

Question: Are you sure? So, it wasn't the third week of February?

Finley: Oh, I'm sorry, we did send her back.

Question: The very next day, you asked Ms. Howe to take you to Oklahoma City and show you the places they visited, didn't you?

Finley: I don't know if it was the next day, but yes, I took her to OKC and asked her about the places.

With this incriminating testimony in mind, lets cut to the chase. To begin with, in the months prior to the OKC bombing, Carol Howe submitted over 70 reports to Angela Finley, her BATF control officer. She was also polygraphed at least a dozen times to check her reliability, and each time she passed with flying colors. Also, ATF reports described Howe as a key witness, along with being stable and capable.

Why, then, wouldn't the ATF want Ms. Howe's testimony to be heard? It all boils down to foreknowledge and direct complicity. Howe told her superiors in no uncertain terms that Andreas Strassmeir and Dennis Mahon were the primary instigators of the OKC bombing. She also reported that Strassmeir and Mahon made three trips to OKC to case various locales, one in November 1994, the next in December 1994, and finally in February 1995—a few weeks before the bombing. Howe even accompanied them on one of these trips. Plus, these assertions were corroborated by Agent Finley under oath on April 24, 1997. Finley even accompanied Howe to OKC to see the exact areas cased by Strassmeir and Mahon.

The ATF knew that Strassmeir and other Aryan Republican Army members had discussed blowing up federal buildings in OKC. They knew that the Alfred P. Murrah Building was a target, just like it was in 1983 when other Elohim City residents plotted to destroy it. They knew that Timothy McVeigh and others had spoken of bombing the building because Carol Howe notified her superiors of this fact. Even Robert Millar, Elohim City founder, called for a preemptive strike against the government several months before April 19th.

During Carol Howe's trial, ATF Agent Finley testified that the FBI, as well as her agency, had the information in advance of the bombing of the Murrah Building. She also admitted that Howe warned them of bomb threats against federal buildings before April 19, 1995. In addition, during her own trial, Carol Howe was asked by her lawyer, Tulsa attorney Clark Brewster, if she thought she had provided sufficient information for the ATF to conduct an investigation that would have confirmed the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building would take place. Howe answered yes. She is also quoted as saying, "It is the indisputable truth that the government had detailed prior knowledge of the plot to bomb the building, but somehow failed to stop it."

Ms. Howe's words are confirmed by an event which took place on February 7, 1995 when Angela Finley and other ATF agents flew with Oklahoma State Highway Patrol pilot Ken Stafford over Elohim City to photograph and videotape the complex to gather intelligence for a possible raid to arrest Strassmeir and others. They were specifically targeting Strassmeir because Howe told ATF officials that he kept declaring "It's time to go to war, and it's time to start bombing federal buildings." For an investigator, the question about this statement would be "why would a German national want to become so involved in politics and violence in this country, unless he was working for someone else?"

This type of inflammatory rhetoric alarmed the authorities to such an extent that a raid was scheduled for February, 1995. But, in that same month, the invasion of Elohim

City was scrubbed after senior members of the ATF, FBI, and U.S. Attorney's office met!

The ramifications of this decision cannot be overemphasized, as former Oklahoma State Representative Charles Key stated to World Net Daily on May 22, 2001 "It's fair to speculate that the FBI got the ATF to call the raid off, or told them to, or someone with higher authority did." He also added, "If they had not called that raid off, it alone may have stopped the bombing of the Murrah Building."

How much the Elohim City crowd played in the actual event is questionable in lieu of other leads we followed, to be discussed later. However, the week before the bombing the Tulsa office of the ATF had enough to arrest Strassmeir and put out a BOLO (Be On the Look Out) for Strassmeir to the Oklahoma Highway Patrol:

"ANDREAS STRASSMEIR, W/M, 5/7/59, heavy German accent. Black hair/blue eyes. 1" scar on chin, wears cammo fatigues. Possible Tennessee driver's license. Came to USA in 5/91, passport was good until 8/91. He never left the country. INS says he does not have an extension of his VISA. Possibly in a blue Chevy, late model, tag BHX 346 (not in file), usually has someone driving him. Carries a .45 auto pistol at all times. He is an illegal alien. ATF wants to be notified if he is stopped and has a gun on him. They will file the charges. Contact: Agent Angela Finley, ATF."

It should also be noted that the Immigration and Naturalization Services (INS) cancelled the FBIs notice to detain Andreas Strassmeir, and that the State Department wouldn't assist in getting Germany's cooperation to question Strassmeir, after the bombing, when he had returned to Germany. Lastly, even though Carol Howe, who provided mountains of information to the ATF, urged them to raid the Elohim City arms bunker, and who was taken to the basement of the old PepsiCo Building in downtown Oklahoma City for debriefing only hours after the bombing, was prohibited from testifying at Timothy McVeigh's trial. The reason? Judge Richard Matsch said that her testimony might confuse the jurors.

During Terry Nichol's Trial in Oklahoma, the following transcript shows relationships between Howe, Mahon, Strassmeir and McVeigh at Elohim City. Carol Howe was being questioned by Nichols' defense attorney, Adam Turschwell. a well-known government-assigned defense lawyer:

Q. Now, are you familiar with what Timothy McVeigh looks like, Ms. Howe?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen photographs of Timothy McVeigh?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Did you ever see Timothy McVeigh at the Elohim City compound?

A. I believe I did.

Q. All right. When did you see him?

A. It was in July of 1994.

Q. Okay. And where did you see him?

A. He was at a section of the compound walking across a lawn near the church building.

Q. And was he accompanied by any other individuals who you know?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. And who were they?

A. A man named Peter Ward and a man named Andreas Strassmeir.

Q. About how far away were you when you believe you saw Timothy McVeigh?

A. Approximately 70 feet.

Q. At the time that you saw him, did you know his name was Timothy McVeigh?

A. No, sir.

Q. You subsequently came to learn his name was Timothy McVeigh?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, did you have occasion to—did Mr. Mahon— strike that. Did Mr. Mahon have an apartment in Tulsa, Oklahoma, during this time period?

A. A house, yes.

Q. A house. And did you have occasion to spend time there during the time period we're talking about, fall, 1994?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Mahon in your recollection—did he ever receive any phone calls while you were in the house with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall Mr. Mahon ever saying or mentioning the name

"Tim Tuttle"*?

MS. WILKINSON: Objection.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I do.

Q. Okay. Could you tell the jury—not any contents of the phone call that he related to you—but how you came to hear his name? That is, Tim Tuttle's name?

A. Mr. Mahon received a phone call. We were sitting in the living room. He went into the bedroom to answer the phone, and I heard his statements from where I was sitting.

Q. And what did you hear him say?

A. I heard him say, "Tim Tuttle, Tuttle, Tuttle, Tuttle, Tuttle," and laughed.

Q. And you subsequently had a conversation about that phone call that he had received?

A. Yes. When he came back.

U.S. Attorney Beth Wilkinson, it should be noted, was a federal prosecutor that had a tendency to support the McVeigh and Nichols version as the "lone gunmen" in the case, even though reliable witnesses provided information of more individuals involved. Her mission, it would appear was to limit the investigation to just McVeigh and Nichols, which would lead one to believe that others involved were being protected. If Mahon was working for the FBI, and Howe was working for the ATF, and Strassmeir was working for the CIA and the SPLC (and attorney Kurt Lyons), and a covert colonel at Fort Bragg, all at the same time, it would make sense to have Janet Reno's DoJ, and Deputy Assistant Attorney General Jamie Gorelick control the scope of the prosecution. Gorelick has a very sordid past, and was and still is a key supporter of Hillary and Bill Clinton.

In 2005, American Free Press investigative reporter Victor Thorn (real name: Scott Robert Makufka) wrote a 39 page expose' booklet titled The OKC bombing-Elohim City Connection. Sadly, Victor (who I knew personally) was "suicided" in August, 2016. AFP had this to say:

"Prolific author, American Free Press writer and seasoned Clinton researcher Victor Thorn was found at the top of a mountain near his home, the apparent victim of a gunshot wound. Family and some close friends contend Thorn took his own life on his birthday, August 1. Thorn would have been 54.

"At the peak of his writing career, the author of some 20 books and 30 chapbooks—books with 75 or fewer pages—Thorn had reported for this newspaper for over a decade, writing thousands of articles on myriad subjects from conspiracy to health-related topics. Best known for his investigative research on the Clinton's, Thorn wrote the Clinton trilogy—three definitive works that delved into the history of the powerful couple including their sordid scandals, Bill Clinton's sexual assaults of multiple women, and the drug running out of Mena, Arkansas while Clinton was governor of the state."

The problem with the media-reported "suicide" is that Victor Thorn had stated on many occasions that "I will never ever commit suicide! If anything happens to me, it was murder!" Conservative Post stated " …Thorn was just 54 at the time of his death and during [a recent} radio interview, he stated: "…if I'm ever found dead, it was murder. I would never kill myself."

The most pressing question at this point is: "why would those at the highest levels of government, all the way up to the Department of Justice, call off this raid?"

According to Robert Sanders, a top ATF official, Elohim City was under intense scrutiny by federal agencies at the top levels of management. The reports given to these individuals about the activities at Elohim City included: illegal explosives and firearms, illegal immigration, planned terrorism, a history of violence, and incendiary rhetoric. Worse, this information went to the FBI, ATF, Treasury, Department of Justice, National Security Council, and even to Bill Clinton's White House.

Plus, most everyone included in this sordid Elohim City saga were either operatives, spooks, or informants, including Andreas Strassmeir, Kirk Lyons, Vincent Petruskie, Robert Millar, James Ellison, Peter Langan, Timothy McVeigh, Carol Howe, Dennis Mahon, and others.

The foreknowledge of an April 19 bombing was so widespread that Richard Wayne Snell, a member of James Ellison's "Covenant, Sword, and Arm of the Lord" bragged about this catastrophe on the day of his execution, coincidentally on April 19, 1995.

Arkansas prison official Alan Ables said of Snell: “He repeatedly predicted that there would be a bombing or explosion on the day of his death. When his prophetic words about the OKC bombing came true, he knowingly chuckled and laughed before being put to death.” Snell’s body was later buried at Elohim City.

Similarly, Chevie Kehoe, another Aryan Republican Army (ARA) bank robber associated with the Elohim City crowd, showed-up at a Spokane motel about 45 minutes before the bombing to watch the event on CNN. The hotel manager told The Spokane Review that Kehoe had been talking about it for days. “Its about time,” he eventually proclaimed with manic excitement. Also, as a side-note, Elohim City founder Robert Millar admitted that Kehoe and his brother had lived at the compound.

Could it be that the entire OKC bombing was a covert government cover-up? Considering all those on the inside who were funneling data to the authorities, plus the totally hands-off immune status that these men enjoyed, what else can we conclude? Was a cabal within our federal government actually scapegoating those at Elohim City by enticing them into committing illegal acts, or a conspiracy to do so, all the while being egged-on by paid provocateurs?

The McCurtain Gazette reported in a July, 1996 article by the late J.D. Cash that the ominous words of a former government undercover agent who said “It is typical for agencies such as the CIA, FBI & BATF to place multiple moles inside a place like Elohim City and play one resource off the other, without either one knowing the others identity.”

Mike Vanderboegh, editor of The John Doe Times, echoed this sentiment on July 4, 1997: “Not even in Czarist Russia did the secret police send paid provocateurs to provoke the other paid provocateurs. Elohim City can thus be seen in its true light — not as an operation infiltrated and suborned by infiltrators — but rather as a wholly-owned subsidiary of the FBI/ATF.”

Which brings us back to Andreas Strassmeir. ATF Agent Angela Finley said in an ATF report on November 29, 1994: “His [Strassmeir’s] plans were to forcibly act to destroy the U.S. government with direct actions and operations such as assassinations, bombings, and mass shootings.” She also informed her superiors that Strassmeir was a huge weapons dealer, and his status as of December, 1994 was that of an illegal alien.

Dennis Mahon, had this to say of the situation: “If a person wanted to know about the bombing, then they should talk with Andy Strassmeir because he knows everything”.

Similarly, Media Bypass reported in September, 1996 that high-level FBI sources said, “ATF computer indices reflect substantial intelligence-gathering activities in which Strassmeir participated.” They continued, “either Andy is their snitch or he is under investigation and has been for a long time.”

Ultimately, we have to ask ourselves, who did Strassmeir work for? Quite telling is the fact that when Timothy McVeigh’s attorneys wanted Strassmeir’s files, they had to ask the CIA for them! Also, it is now known that FBI Director Louis Freeh was aware of Strassmeir and had been monitoring his activities, and that he was a “subject of interest” to the State Department’s Counter-terrorism Division of Diplomatic Protective Services.

More incredibly, even though Strassmeir and Mahon were the subjects of investigations in the days after the OKC bombing, they were subsequently dropped from any follow-ups. Why? Is this a case of one hand not knowing what the other was doing, or something more sinister? After all, if Strassmeir was arrested and started to sing, where would that lead? But the ATF office, who had been working the Elohim City caper, was told to stand down by higher ups in Washington.

British journalist Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, an investigative journalist in his own right (and author of The Secret Life of Bill Clinton, which does an in-depth investigation of the OKC bombing (case-named by the FBI as OKBOMB) described the scenario as such: "The plot was hatched at Elohim City in the fall of 1994 under the guidance of Dennis Mahon and Andreas Strassmeir, two men who were clearly enjoying the protection of the FBI [italics mine]. McVeigh was undoubtedly part of the movement, and the bombing was probably part of a sting operation that went disastrously wrong." The problem with this statement was that Evans-Pritchard was only seeing the first layer of the onion concerning a "sting operation gone wrong." There were several researchers who stopped at that presumption and, like "The Mafia Did It" scenario that some writers cling to concerning the Kennedy assassination, there are more layers underneath that required probing. That supposition ignores all the other evidence, leads and questions that had to be answered.

Still, despite the incriminating evidence pointing to Strassmeir's involvement in the OKC bombing, in May of 1995, an Oklahoma news service took film footage of Andreas Strassmeir still residing at Elohim City! Another clip shows him together with Michael Brescia, one of the Midwest Bank Robbery gang. They were still living there, even after Carol Howe, during her debriefing by the FBI on April 20, 1995, identified Strassmeir as one of the primary perpetrators.

Even a member of the mainstream media – retired US Marine officer Roger Charles – a former 20/20 producer, told Soldier of Fortune magazine in July, 2001 that there was compelling evidence that Strassmeir had access to prior knowledge regarding the bombing. He also noted that in subsequent interviews, Strassmeir said that:

(a) Two yellow trucks were connected to the bombing, not just one;

(b) Federal authorities put tracking devices on the trucks as they approached OKC that day.

The biggest question now is: where did Strassmeir get his information, and why wasn't he immediately arrested as a suspect? Instead, Strassmeir remained in this country until January, 1996. According to Victor Thorn, "Strassmeir was whisked out of the country. And guess who facilitated this departure. First in line was the infamous attorney Kirk Lyons, while the actual dirty work was performed by Germany's elite counter-terrorism group, the GSG-9."

As for the number of Ryder trucks involved, one was rented in Kansas by McVeigh and a John Doe, another was seen at Lady Godiva's in the parking lot in Tulsa when McVeigh, Strassmeir, and two other unidentified males were inside drinking and flirting with the dancers, and one was seen by witnesses on the day of the bombing driving around downtown Oklahoma City and Bricktown (the old warehouse district turned upscale restaurants and tourist attractions) around the same time McVeigh and John Doe 2 were parked across the street from the post office northwest of the Murrah Building, waiting for a parking place at the bomb site. Some witnesses describe a male driver of the decoy truck in Bricktown as resembling Dennis Mahon!

Panzer Grenadier Lieutenant Andreas Karl Strassmeir in his own words:

After Andreas Strassmeir fled the country in early 1996, he began speaking out in various interviews. Here are a few of his more revealing quotes. One has to ask "was Strassmeir a simple neo-Nazi klutz, or was he elaborating as someone with deep knowledge from inside the intelligence world?"

Quote 1: "Its obvious that it [OKC] was a government op that went wrong, isn't it? The ATF had something going with McVeigh. They were watching him. Of course they were."

Quote 2: "McVeigh knew he was delivering a bomb, but he had no idea what was in the truck. He just wanted to shake things up a little; ya know, make a gesture." Again, we need to ask: where was Strassmeir getting his information?

Quote 3: When asked by British journalist Ambrose Evans-Pritchard if an informant could ever speak out about Oklahoma City, Strassmeir replied, "How can he? What happens if it [the bombing] was a sting operation from the very beginning?" He continued, "What happens if it comes out that the plant was a provocateur? What then? Of course the informant can't come forward. He's scared stiff right now." When Pritchard was asked if he thought Strassmeir was referring to himself as the plant, he responded, "of course. There's no doubt that is exactly what he meant to convey. He was stating it as plainly as he could without admitting criminal culpability on his own part."

At this stage, we need to ask once again: were Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols lone-nut bombers who acted alone to plan, coordinate, orchestrate, execute, and cover-up the OKC bombing? An overwhelming amount of evidence proves that not only were others involved in this cataclysmic event, but various federal agencies had infiltrated and monitored many of the groups which gravitated to Elohim City. In fact, CNN reported in June, 1995 that two years before the bombing, McVeigh was already being surveilled by undercover agents at an Arizona gun show. Then, on June 3, 1995, The Washington Post stated that it was actually a McVeigh associate who tipped-off the FBI that he was involved in the bombing. This point is crucial, because it irrefutably contradicts the official story that McVeigh only became known to them after he was arrested by a vigilant Oklahoma Highway Patrol officer during a traffic stop following the bombing.

Considering that McVeigh (in building his "Legend") associated with known hate groups, and their involvement in the OKC bombing is undeniable, why would organizations such as the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) and Morris Dees' Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) do everything imaginable to deflect blame away from known Aryans, KKK'er's, and racists—but not the militias? In other words, why were they so vociferously supporting the lone-nut theory when there was an unabashedly militant neo-Nazi enclave at Elohim City? One would think groups such as the ADL and SPLC would want to nail them to the wall all at once?

The ADL's behavior can only be explained when we realize that the ADL is an arm of the B'Nai Brith – which has secret files on over 10,000 American citizens and over 600 different organizations, and regularly shares data with the Mossad, the FBI and the CIA. It became apparent that the SPLC and ADL were hiding something. And what, pray tell, could they want to keep from public scrutiny? Quite simply, the ADL, and possibly the SPLC, was directly involved in tailing or monitoring Timothy McVeigh in the weeks and years preceding the bombing.

One of the best-known authorities on this subject was the late Michael Collins Piper, author of Final Judgment and The New Jerusalem. In an interview with Tom Valentine of Radio Free America, Piper stated very directly, “Although a lot of people like to talk about government foreknowledge of the OKC bombing plot, the fact is that much of that government knowledge actually came to the FBI and BATF, and probably even the CIA, from ADL informants active in the right wing.”

A perfect example of how intricately the ADL had become entwined with McVeigh came about through the most unlikely of scenarios. On April 21, 1995, two days after the OKC bombing, The Washington Post ran a story about McVeigh in which they claimed that he had placed a series of ads in The Spotlight, a populist newspaper that Piper wrote for. The source for this tip was none other than the ADL, and the article said that the ad was placed by McVeigh using the alias “T.Tuttle.” In addition, it also named the dates upon which these ads ran, what he was selling (they mistakenly said rocket launchers when in fact they were flare guns), and that he had also placed calls on a Spotlight phone card under the name “Darryl Bridges.”

This article ran only two days after the bombing. After Piper read this reference to the publication for which he was employed, he and others began a painstaking process to see if these assertions were true. It should be noted that The Spotlight wasn’t computerized in those days, so the employees had to engage in a laborious, time-consuming search to even find these ads in question, let alone verify them. They simply couldn’t punch a few keys and have it instantly pop-up on their computer screens. Thus, they had to dig through file cabinet after file cabinet to locate these “T.Tuttle” ads.

Mysteriously, though, the ADL had no difficulty in forwarding this information to The Washington Post. How could this be, especially when McVeigh didn’t even use his real name? The odds of stumbling upon such a find seems astronomical. Or, could it be attributed to the ADL’s highly sophisticated data bases with all its intelligence apparatus? Or, could it be that this information was already at their fingertips because they had been trailing McVeigh for quite some time—or even placing the article themselves?

This is reminiscent of the FBI in 1963 being able to track the infamous Carcano carbine allegedly used by Lee Harvey Oswald to him: 1. from the importer, 2. to the sporting goods store it was ordered from, and 3. to an “Alex Hidell” at a post office box in Dallas, then 4. connect it to Oswald in two days! On a weekend! Without use of computers!

The peculiarities get even more bizarre. For starters, the dates upon which the ADL told The Washington Post that “T. Tuttle’s” ads ran in The Spotlight were wrong! Allegedly “McVeigh” had originally contracted for the first of four ads to run the week beginning August 9, 1993. But due to some type of production problem at the newspaper, the first ad didn’t actually run until the following week August 16, 1993.

Something was awry. How could the ADL have known so much about these specific ads when McVeigh was using an alias, and The Spotlight records weren’t even computerized? Plus, this was only two days after the bombing, so if one figures in contact time, writing time, pre-production set-up time, printing time, and distribution time, the data had to have come to the ADL immediately. This seems impossible unless they had someone very close to McVeigh—or the ADL ordered the ads!

Michael Collins Piper even went so far as to say of this high-level connection that the ADL knew that "McVeigh" had advertised in The Spotlight. The ADL had to have had a guy in McVeigh's inner circle, close to McVeigh. That might just have been Strassmeir or Mahon, which means one of them could have reported this to their handlers, the FBI, or the CIA. More than likely it was Strassmeir since Strassmeir, we later determined, had also been informing to the Southern Poverty Law Center, who in turn worked hand-in-hand with the ADL.

The real clincher, though, resulted from a very peculiar reaction by The Washington Post and the ADL. Upon realizing that the information they had run in their morning edition about the dates of McVeigh's ads was off by a week, and that such a disclosure would undeniably blow their cover, the Post completely scrubbed all references to The Spotlight ad and T.Tuttle in their afternoon edition. Worse, they even erased all references to this advertisement in their microfiche records! (Note that the Washington Post has been a CIA asset since at least the 1950s). One only needs to research Operation Mockingbird, the CIA's infiltration and control of all media outlets, for further—and shocking—information.

Despite the preponderance of evidence, Joseph Hartzler, the chief prosecutor at Timothy McVeigh's trial, said, "At no time did the FBI consider Andreas Strassmeir a subject of the OKC bombing investigation".

Mr. Hartzler had to have known this statement was untrue. On April 27, 1995, FBI Special Agent Hudspeth made a background check on Andreas Strassmeir through German police intelligence. This report was eventually returned to the State Department's Counter-terrorism Division, Office of Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott. It must be understood that many good FBI agents who were trying to do a good investigation were not included in the compartmentalized cell of the FBI that was running the informants or participating in the coverup of the facts of the bombing. Hence a background check on Strassmeir by an FBI agent.

Incredibly, in light of all the direct evidence linking Strassmeir to the OKC bombing, the FBI didn't interview him until April 30, 1996, over a year after the bombing, and this wasn't even done in person, but via telephone after he had returned to Germany. Such a blatant miscarriage of justice is even more damning when we consider that Strassmeir remained in the United States for eight months after the bombing, and didn't depart for Germany until January, 1996.

During these crucial eight months when Strassmeir remained in the U.S., our government had time to review over 70 reports filed by informant Carol Howe, along with 38 audio cassette tapes and two videotapes. The source of these figures was ATF official Robert Sanders. And what was contained in Ms. Howe's recordings and reports? The information pertained to the identity of the Elohim City residents, those who visited the compound, their organizational structure, family trees, telephone numbers, license plate numbers, explosives, guns, and even their tattoos.

Yet Elohim City was never raided once, even though the ATF and FBI knew that Dennis Mahon had been setting-off 500-pound ANFO bombs in the months before April 19, 1995. Why didn’t our government even question Mahon about his role in the OKC bombing?

In addition, one released FBI document, which was obtained by Timothy McVeigh’s attorney, stated “There was evidence withheld by the government that another person could well have been the mastermind behind the bombing.” That could have easily been referring to Andreas Strassmeir, or someone even higher up than him. Or, it may have been McVeigh’s “Covert Action Team” commander. (We would not have the identity of McVeigh’s handler until 2016).

We also know that other relevant information was covered-up after the bombing, because on May 10, 2001, the Department of Justice turned over 4,000 previously undisclosed FBI investigative documents. Furthermore, Chairman Dan Burton’s House Government Reform Committee uncovered the whereabouts of numerous confiscated videotapes and photographs that most certainly would have refuted the official version of events. These very same videos have also been cited by the Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee, yet the Department of Justice absolutely refuses to release them, even under the Freedom of Information Act.

Though the FBI, ATF, and CIA were undeniably complicit in the OKC cover-up, the ultimate responsibility leads directly to the doorsteps of Janet Reno, former President Bill Clinton, and Ms. Jamie Gorelick. Millar’s family members at Elohim City were not the ultimate driving force behind the Oklahoma City bombing disaster on April 19, 1995. Findings showed they were simply a cut-out used to cover for much more sinister forces that controlled the players on stage at Elohim City.

Lee Harvey McVeigh: The comparison of Timothy McVeigh and Lee Harvey Oswald

> "So I'm the patsy."
> Lee Harvey Oswald, Nov 23rd, 1963

Was it an off-the-shelf blueprint, or a coincidental pattern?

It was as if I'd seen it before. It was like history repeating itself, but this time I was there to witness what I'd only read about in the Kennedy assassination. It was the crime of the century, and I was one of the investigators. But as I worked the case I could see that too many things were falling into place that eerily reminded me of what, prior to April 19th, 1995, was considered "the Crime of the Century," the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

I had a distinct advantage over the other investigators. I had spent four years immersed in an investigation into the Kennedy assassination, resulting in my book Kill Zone: A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza. In researching the facts surrounding the Kennedy murder, and the Warren Commission's assertion that a lone nut with a gun named Lee Harvey Oswald was responsible, I had delved into Oswald and the mysteries surrounding him prior to November 22, 1963. Now, as one of the assigned investigators of the Oklahoma City bombing, I began to witness a series of events transpire that so closely matched the events in Dallas that it was chilling. I could almost tell what would happen next on a day-by-day basis. Beside the entire "investigation" turning into a massive and blatant coverup before my eyes, I noticed that the two "lone nuts," McVeigh and Oswald, seemed to have a lot in common. So much so, that one could draw the conclusion that OKBOMB was an off-the-shelf operation that was taken from a blue print first drawn up in Dallas 32 years before—or maybe even earlier at a building in Germany called the Reichstag.

Let's examine the "coincidences."

At 9:02 a.m. Oklahoma time on 19 April, 1995, a huge explosion rocked the downtown area of Oklahoma City. Within minutes, during the evacuation of what remained of the building, the searching for casualties, the arrival of police, fire, and rescue personnel, and the mass confusion, two more "devices" were found inside the building. Bomb squad personnel had to deactivate at least one of the devices and remove them from the area for safety. Within the hour the media stated that they were "ATF training devices, not actual bombs." If this were so, why were they placed in strategic locations inside the building, on floors away from the ATF offices?

In Dealey Plaza, a scenario quickly developed wherein a lone shooter, from the 6th floor of the Texas Schoolbook Depository, allegedly fired three shots which amazingly created over a half dozen wounds (including one missed shot) and then escaped the scene undetected. Later investigation showed that only two empty 6.5mm shell casings were found on the 6th Floor and turned in, along with a rifle and one live round. Yet these documents were altered during the Warren Commission hearings to reflect that three empty cartridges were found to fit the FBI version of the number of shots fired, and the Oklahoma City: Two seismic events transpired according to the University of Oklahoma Seismic Center. The tape, which actually shows three near-equal events, is quickly debunked by the government as being “the initial explosion, followed by the building collapsing” (ignoring the first event entirely). Yet, when the entire remaining building was demolished by controlled demolition, the event recorded on tape was barely noticeable. Still, the investigators insist that only one bomb was used: the Ryder truck bomb allegedly delivered by McVeigh.

Within twenty-four hours the Ryder truck grows from a small van to the larger box-truck that contained an ever growing amount of ammonium-nitrate explosives required to create the damage done to the building. Yet, according to sources outside the government, very little indication of nitrate deposits at the scene are found—indicating a different type of explosive. Even witnesses and victims described the smell of “sulphur,” and not ammonia. If Ammonium Nitrate was used, Ammonia gas would have been present, and in itself would have been a serious choking agent, and often fatal. Also an Ammonium Nitrate fertilizer bomb, using racing fuel as a catalyst, would have left a “mild, fruity, but disagreeable order,” but not the smell of sulphur which is the smell left after the ignition of black powder.

In Dallas, following the ambush of JFK, damage control seemed to begin immediately with the focus of attention being directed away from the Grassy Knoll to the Book Depository building—and a lone shooter on the sixth floor. In OKC, the first two leads indicate that two “Middle-Eastern males” were seen hanging around the scene and were probably involved, while an all points bulletin was broadcast by OKC Police Department to search for a brown pickup truck with a smoked-plastic bug shield. Within a few hours, the FBI cancelled both leads—and told the police that they had not issued an “attempt to locate” on the pickup truck. But the OCPD had the original release from the FBI asking for the APB, and it had been duly noted in their radio logs.

McVeigh is picked up for speeding, in a car with no license tag, for doing 85 mph in a 70 mph zone, by the Oklahoma Highway Patrol. Oswald was picked up, for allegedly shooting Dallas officer J.D. Tippit, after entering the Texas Theater without buying a ticket. In each case, the FBI was notified within a short period of time that a “suspect” was in custody. In Oswald’s case, items “linking” him to the Kennedy assassination were “found” in various locations: photos of him with the same Mannlicher-Carcano carbine found on the 6th floor, etc. For McVeigh, copies of “subversive material,” such as a small-press radical book titled “The Turner Diaries” is found in his car. Also, the alleged Ryder truck axle that was found was used as a means of tracking who rented the truck because we are told it had the vehicles VIN number on it. This later proved false as no VIN number was on the axle, and it is impossible to track a vehicle with a part number on the part unless a serial number is present.

For Oswald, the Carcano was traced to him by the FBI, who, before the advent of computers and data bases, managed to track the weapon from its entrance into the U.S., to an importer, to Klein’s Sporting Goods, to a sale to “A.J. Hidell,” to Lee Harvey Oswald. All in two days. Over a weekend!

For McVeigh, the rear axle of the Ryder truck was discovered, wherein an ID number was allegedly discovered, which was supposedly traced from the manufacturer, to Ryder, to a truck rental in Kansas—all within hours. Interviews with the rental agent produced two sketches: McVeigh and John Doe #2. The media did not report that a third person was present, who waited outside in a car, and who appeared to be dark complected. And John Doe #2, as a lead, evaporated when the FBI stated that there was a mistake, and that he was a soldier from Fort Riley who rented a truck the previous day, and was not involved with McVeigh. But media outside of Oklahoma did not report that another John Doe #2 was discovered by KFOR TV in Oklahoma City, and that he matched the suspect sketch; was seen by six eye witnesses in a bar with McVeigh and Nichols only days before the bombing; drove a brown Chevrolet pickup with smoked plastic bug screen; and was an Iraqi officer who had fought against us in the Gulf War! It also was not reported that over 5,000 Iraqi POWs had been brought into this country for "humanitarian reasons," and a large segment of them ended up being settled in Oklahoma City.

In Oswald's case, it is interesting to note that he had connections to the White Russian community of Dallas-Fort Worth, and that these people had been settled here by the OSS when Allen Dulles brought the SS Galizien Division of anti-Stalin White Russians out of Europe at the end of World War II, to Greece, then Canada, then finally to New York City and Dallas/Fort Worth. The teenage children of the Galiziens were later utilized as CIA assets for infiltration into Russia—they spoke Russian and had relatives inside who might provide support after infiltration. (This makes one wonder about the "Oswald" who, during his time in the Marine Corps in Japan, "taught himself" Russian within a few short weeks).

The investigation of the Kennedy assassination rapidly focused on the "lone nut" scenario. Witnesses who did not support this rapidly-building case against Oswald as the lone participant were intimidated, debunked or misquoted in reports. Most who saw something other than a man in the 6th floor window were not subpoenaed to testify before the Warren Commission. In McVeigh's case, anyone who brought forward information that there had to be more than one bomb, that there were higher powers involved in the bombing, or that more than just McVeigh and Nichols involved, was quickly debunked, discredited or ignored. For the OKC bombing, anyone who heard or felt more than one explosion or saw more than one person get out of the Ryder truck was discredited or not permitted to testify before the Grand Jury. In fact, no one was permitted to testify in person before the jurors. All questions that were asked by the jurors in one room, were asked of the Prosecutor, who then went out into another room to ask the witnesses, before returning with the answer! (At least an answer that, to me, would have created suspicion because of the fact that I did not hear the witness directly). Such actions infuriated Jurist Hoppy Heidelberg who eventually was dismissed from the Grand Jury because he objected to the way it in which it was being run. Heidelberg later said that, "It was our right as jurors to not only hear the witnesses but to question them directly in person. But that did not happen. How could we tell what the witness really said if they didn't say it under oath in front of us?"

Within twenty-four hours of the bombing the mainstream media, en total, slanted the dagger of suspicion to "far right radicals," such as the burgeoning militia movement. In particular, the Michigan Militia was targeted as being "tied" to McVeigh. In actual fact, though two members of the Michigan Militia stated that they thought they saw McVeigh at one of their open-to-the-public meetings, McVeigh himself said he never attended. Still, even if he was seen at a meeting, it could easily have been part of a setup to develop manufactured connections to a group already under scrutiny by certain bureaucrats.

Lee Harvey Oswald handing out “Fair Play for Cuba” pamphlets in New Orleans to build his “legend.”

For Oswald, a radical background or legend (this time Left Wing) was built in the press long before Dallas. He was filmed handing out “Fair Play for Cuba” pamphlets on a New Orleans street corner, and was interviewed on television wherein he declared himself a “Marxist” for public consumption. The media has maintained ever since that Oswald was a Marxist by his own admission, and killed Kennedy for radical political reasons. For McVeigh’s “legend”—the term used in the intelligence community when one play-acts a bogus background for influencing the public perception—it was handing out The Turner Diaries to fellow employees at Calspan Incorporated in Buffalo, New York.

McVeigh selling bumper stickers and handing out Turner Diaries at Waco

The media’s attack on the militia—who had absolutely nothing to gain and everything to lose in the aftermath of the bombing—resulted in new “anti-terrorism” laws being ram-rodded through Congress in the wake of media-generated public emotion. These laws had been laying stagnant for months, having been written following the New York City Twin Towers bombing of 1993, but delayed due to their conflict with Constitutional rights.

Interestingly, one major result of the Kennedy assassination was the “Firearms Control Act of 1968,” the first major legislation regarding governmental control of citizens firearms since the 1930s where private ownership of automatic weapons had to be licensed by the federal government—another restriction on Constitutional rights. One result of the bombing in Oklahoma City was passage of the stagnated “Crime Control Act of 1995” which contained several anti-Second Amendment provisions, included “large capacity magazine ban” and attempts to limit or prohibit so-called “assault rifles.”

Then there are the “Wild Goose Chases” of the national investigation. During the Kennedy investigation, hundreds of FBI agents were sent hither and yon to interview, question, and report on even the most obscure leads and conduct interviews with “witnesses” who had not witnessed anything. The agents, all trying to do as sterling a job as possible, then sent their reports to FBI headquarters for screening and absorption. Few agents ever saw the “big picture,” could compare notes, or even knew just why they were following up on a given “lead.” The same happened with the OKC bombing investigation. Hundreds of agents have followed up on even the most obscure leads, but, like their predecessors who investigated the Kennedy assassination, they are left out of the grand scheme of things and are only privy to certain pieces of the puzzle. It is also interesting to note that the main question was not being asked or answered concerning the motivation behind any crime: Who Benefits?

FBI agents who attempted to follow the money and the powers behind the murder of JFK were quickly redirected by Washington to other activities. The agents who smelled a large rodent with the Oklahoma City bombing found themselves subject to the same circumstances. It appeared once to again be a system of directed investigation, ignoring or debunking anything that does not fit the mold of a predetermined outcome (“A Patsy Gets The Blame”) and disassociation with the idea that higher powers are involved. After all, what agent wants to be re-assigned to Coldville, North Dakota?

Also, ever since the days of J. Edgar Hoover, the FBI agents’ two main missions were to “Protect the FBI no matter what,” and “Don’t embarrass the Bureau.” Following that was the instruction to do what you are told and to never question why. All of these and more held true during the FBI’s OKBOMB investigation.

The television coverage of the transfer of McVeigh from jail to the holding facility at Tinker Air Force Base, outside of Oklahoma City, was quite reminiscent of Oswald’s transfer attempt from the Dallas PD jail to the county jail. The only difference was that there was no Jack Ruby to intervene. However, it should be noted that McVeigh was dressed in bright orange, and wore no bullet proof vest! It makes one wonder if an opportunity was not being presented by design. I’m sure the scenario of Jack Ruby shooting Oswald in the parking garage of the Dallas Police Department was in the mind of the agents who had to move McVeigh out of the Perry County jail. There had to have been layers of security since McVeigh wore no ballistics vest, like Nichols when he was moved from jail to jail.

I wrote in September 1995: “Until the investigation begins to follow leads concerning “Who Benefits?” it is unlikely the Oklahoma City bombing case will ever progress to a full, believable, conclusion. If the case against McVeigh and Nichols, whom the government maintains acted by themselves, was so iron clad, then why did the government prosecutors have to ask for a ninety day extension on their investigation before attempting to present McVeigh for indictment before a Federal Grand Jury? The FBI and Department of Justice still maintain the case is “ongoing” and that there are “others unknown,” but in actual fact no one is working the case, and any new evidence that is presented is either refused or shunned. This also holds true in the JFK case, as the small group of dedicated JFK assassination researchers have discovered over and over when new material comes to light. No U.S. Attorney will touch it, or wants to even know of it. It muddies the water, and is bothersome. After all, Oswald acted alone, didn’t he?”

In Oklahoma City, there’s one more element to consider: the video tape. In 1963, Abraham Zapruder’s film recorded the events that transpired in Dealey Plaza. It was seized by the FBI, obtained by Life magazine (who employed former OSS and CIA personnel such as senior editor Charles D. Jackson), and not released until much later. When it was released it had been altered. In Oklahoma City, the media reported that the camera on an automatic teller machine (or the Southwestern Bell building security camera, or a camera on the Regency Tower apartment building a block west) recorded McVeigh parking the Ryder truck, then walking away from it to get into a vehicle to speed away. The federal authorities seized the tapes for evidence.

Why have we not seen those tapes? If they were being kept secret until trial, then they should have been released after being exhibited in a court room. No tapes were produced, even though they were asked for by the defense.

Shortly after Oswald's arrest in Dallas he exclaimed: "So I'm the patsy!" One can only wonder if McVeigh and Nichols felt the same.

CHAPTER 9

Square Pegs for Round Holes: Facts, Lies, and Damage Control

"The problem with pounding a square peg into a round hole is not that hammering is hard work, but that it's that you are destroying the peg"

Phil Collins

As the investigation progressed it became more apparent by the day that the facts of the case were being distorted or completely left out by the media—and worse, much of the investigation that was being conducted by the federal agencies was going nowhere. It was amazing to see how what we had found and what eye witnesses saw, was being twisted, spun, or ignored.

Additionally, I was again seeing a repeat of what had happened in Dallas in November and December 1963: FBI agents were being directed by Washington, and by none other than FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover himself, in collusion with then president Lyndon B. Johnson to create masses of paperwork, but nothing that exposed anything other than Lee Harvey Oswald being the lone assassin. Thousands upon thousands of 302 reports were being generated, but it would later be next to impossible to weed through them all to obtain any actual facts of the case that did anything but reinforce the official version. This would later be backed up by the bogus Warren Commission. I could see the same pattern taking shape in the OKC investigation.

By the third week of the investigation the local offices of the FBI were virtually side-lined from the case as the main investigators. The main thrust of the case was being handed to "specialists" from Washington and New York. When this happened the local offices were ordered to hand over everything they had accomplished to the OKC command post of the "Anti-terrorist Team." From that point forward any attempt to shed light on anything other than the "official script" was futile. Still, I and the others in the "Irregulars" continued to march.

One morning when I was hand-carrying some memos to the Tulsa FBI office I asked my contact, Pete Rickel, a question: "Pete, am I wrong or am I seeing a repeat of Dealey Plaza 1963 all over again?"

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"After the Kennedy assassination the Dallas PD and Texas DPS were basically shoved aside or told by the FBI and Secret Service what they could investigate and from what to stay away. Then, the local agents and others brought in were sent hither and non to interview insignificant people simply to make it appear like it was a massive investigation and to generate paperwork. Is that what is happening here?"

Pete looked at me and I could detect a look of seriousness and concern when he answered "pretty much." That's all he said and would not elaborate further.

"Well, I'll keep on marching and continue to give you reports of what turns up."

He nodded, but said nothing,

Clinton, Freeh and Reno controlled all aspects of the OKC bombing investigation. FBI agents were prohibited from doing any probes into any area that was not assigned to them. I know that there were many leads at the time, and I also knew that McVeigh, Nichols, and to an extent Michael Fortier were not the only ones involved. The Tulsa office of the ATF felt very strongly that Strassmeir and Dennis Mahon were involved, and possibly several more that were in or connected to Elohim City. There were FBI agents who knew that McVeigh and another dark complected man were together when they rented the Ryder truck in Kansas, while another man sat outside in a car (probably the yellow Mercury). FBI agents who descended on Kingman, Arizona and raided Fortier's house knew of McVeigh staying nearby and that he and Mahon exploded home-made explosives in the desert. I was told later that some FBI agents even knew about some of the "Middle Eastern" players and connections but were prohibited from probing that aspect. If they had not been stopped, the investigation would have progressed to the Philippines at an early stage, but due to constraints from Washington it didn't get beyond a few cursory probes by a few agents sent to the Philippines to basically "cover that base."

It soon became apparent that the "investigation" was turning more into damage control and misinformation than a true and proper handling of the case. The facts, anomalies, and lies outweighed the official version and press releases by the boxcar load. Still, almost all of what transpired or was later discovered was either ignored or glossed over by the media. The more inconsistencies and glaring facts that came to light, the more the media and government ignored them or attacked them as conspiracy theories. It was easy for one who knew what to look for to see the Four "D's" being employed: Deny, Debunk, Discredit, or Destroy. This was the attack mode of the media used against anyone who went public with facts or information relevant to the case that the media and the government didn't support. But as time would eventually show, the Four D's would become the Five D's: Debunk, Discredit, Defame, Destroy, and Demonize,—with Destroy including intimidation, threats, destruction of evidence and reports and even murder.

Nor could Representative Charles Key's Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee be dissuaded, or the handful of our little team of Baker Street Irregulars. But, in the media we were all under constant attack, with the OBIC taking the brunt of it. As an example, the Tulsa World newspaper, (well-known as a left-wing bird cage liner to Tulsans), constantly took anything the OBIC said or published as conspiracy theory by a bunch of wackos who refused to believe the Official Truth of the Government version. The editors delighted in their efforts to discredit, debunk and defame the Committee—and especially Charles Key. One political cartoon showed Key dressed up as the Mad Hatter complete with top hat and wild expression. It did not matter what we, or the OBIC, exposed or questioned. The World was hell-bent on demonizing us as a lot of far Right loonies. After a few letters to the Editor of the World (often referred to as the Tulsa Pravda), I became persona non grata. Nothing I sent them would see ink, even though when I served as Press Release Officer for the Tulsa Police Department on a two-year tour of duty, they relied on me for all crime information they needed for their articles. It became apparent that since I did not toe the official line I was relegated to be one that was "off the reservation." I actually had to agree with that. I simply would not stay on the government reservation when I could smell the smoke of truth in the distance.

On July 17th, 1995, I wrote a memo to Pete Rickel over at the local FBI office that mentioned just one major discrepancy in the government's version. In it I said "I had dinner with a gentleman from England two nights ago who mentioned something very interesting. He said that the IRA in London a few years back parked a huge truck loaded with 45,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate in front of a bank building in the City of London's financial district and exploded it. There was only superficial damage to the front of the building and the main damage was confined to broken windows." I received no response to this memo.

To continue with a list of facts:

1. The Ryder truck, even if filled with ANFO, could not have by itself caused the damage that occurred.
2. The crater was very small, maybe no more than 8-12 feet across, and not consistent with similar truck bombs and car bombs in other parts of the world.
3. The damage to the building indicates explosives that detonated inside the building, as well as columns and steel rebar cut by shaped charges or plastic explosives on the columns.
4. The building was demolished very shortly after the incident. The remains were trucked off and buried, and the ground fenced off and guarded by armed Wackenhut security guards. Why? (Wackenhut is known for its covert government contracts and black operations).
5. All evidence of other explosives in the building could not be evaluated by architects or engineers or explosives experts, and even those who did arrive early enough to see the damaged building could not enter or approach the wreckage and had to evaluate from 200 feet away!
6. The "crater" was covered over by a few sheets of plywood. Not exactly a crater like that seen at the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia.
7. Witnesses saw two "Arab" men wearing blue jogging suits standing outside the front door of the Murrah Building prior to the Ryder truck arriving. There was a UPS truck there (photographed by a surveillance car) a few minutes before 9 a.m, proving that "someone" had advance knowledge that something was going to happen even though that has been officially denied. The parking place was held by the two Middle Easterners until the Ryder truck arrived a minute or two later. The bombs went off at 9:02 to 9:03 a.m.
8. Witnesses heard and felt a rumble and some inside the building thought it was an earthquake, so they took cover under their desks. They then felt and heard a larger sharper explosion. The "rumble" would indicate a controlled detonation such as used to implode a building, and the larger explosion would be the Ryder truck exploding.
9. At least two significant seismograph events occurred and were recorded at the Geological Survey station in Norman, south of Oklahoma City at the time of the explosions. The graph actually shows three. Later, when the building remains were blown down with several large charges, the same seismic survey station showed a very small event on the tape that was barely noticeable.
10. Bill Clinton, himself, allowed some Middle Easterners "free passage" out of the country. People who should have been detained and questioned.

11. Witnesses saw what they said was an “Arab male” with McVeigh in the Ryder truck before its arrival in front of the Murrah Building. Mike Moroz at Johnnie’s Tire Store where McVeigh stopped to “ask directions,” even described the passenger, saying that he was wearing a white ball cap with blue or purple “flames.” He even described the tattoo on his arm (which matched the tattoos worn by members of Saddam Hussein’s Republican Guard).
12. All video tapes of the event were seized by the FBI and classified. The video cameras were then removed and the mounting holes in the walls puttied up and painted over. No one has seen the tapes outside of a very small number of high ranking FBI officials. The tapes now are “lost”. They would show who, and how many, got out of the truck. They would be the “Zapruder film” of the OKC bombing. But it has been recently discovered, and covered up, that an FBI agent had copies of some of the tapes and had offered to sell them to a Los Angeles television station for $800,000! We also know that Oklahoma City resident Charlie Rose, who worked for a tape duplication service in Oklahoma City, was employed by the FBI to make copies of the tapes that had been seized. He told the producers of A Noble Lie, a documentary on the bombing by Freemind Films, that he made over 400 copies of the tapes that were taken by the FBI and that the FBI had two agents in his studio at all times to make sure he didn’t keep any copies for himself. Yet, to this day, the FBI tells Jesse Trentadue that they can’t find any tapes.
13. Some government workers were paged not to go to work that day. Evidently it was up to each office whether to go to work or not if a threat warning had been disseminated.
14. The Oklahoma Country Sheriff’s bomb squad was at the Federal Courthouse early that day “conducting training.”
15. Witnesses said they saw men on roofs of nearby buildings all night, but they left around dawn. Could they have been on a stakeout then decided to go home in the morning? It has been said that McVeigh was supposed to have delivered the truck at three a.m. but ran late. If he had done that there would have been no one in the building.
16. Why were the files that were taken from the building on Day One more important than rescue efforts?
17. Both police and firefighters testified that they saw federal agents removing unexploded devices.
18. General Benton K. Partin, former head of Air Force weapons development program, who held multiple engineering degrees and had over 30 years experience, was barred access to the site after he pointed out that the asymmetrical damage could not have happened with a single explosion externally generated. Partin agrees with me that internal charges had to have been attached to the support columns to have done the damage indicated.
19. Jane Graham, who worked in the building, witnessed three men, two dressed in government GSA coveralls, attaching “putty and wires” to the columns of the parking garage two days before the event. She thought they were hooking up a temporary phone or computer line. The third man was wearing a black western outfit, black cowboy boots and black western hat. She described him, and later said, after looking at photos, that it was Andreas Strassmeir.

20. The passenger in the Ryder truck was described has having black, curly hair and was dark complected. He was later identified as a former Iraqi former Republican Guard named Husseini al Hussein, AKA al Husaini Hussain, who was taken as a POW during the Gulf War and brought to the U.S. with over 3500 other Iraqi POWs.
21. An Oklahoma City paramedic named Tiffany Bible testified in an affidavit that she had seen ATF agents in full gear that morning right after the bombs went off. She asked if they were injured and was told "no." She said they told her that the ATF agents were called and told not to come in that morning.
22. The local media and witnesses reported that two other devices were found, disarmed, and removed from the rubble. Oklahoma Governor Frank Keating, himself a former FBI Special Agent, State Attorney General, and later head of the Treasury Department which (at the time) included the BATF, also acknowledged that devices were found and would provide valuable information about who may have built them. After that he never mentioned this again.
23. Witnesses saw another Ryder truck with two white males in it in Bricktown just east of the downtown area of Oklahoma City, driving around "like they were trying to be noticed." It was felt, by their descriptions, that the driver was Dennis Mahon and the passenger was Andreas Strassmeir.
24. General Partin deduced that "the building appears to have been destroyed by the detonation of explosives carefully placed at four critical junctures on supporting columns within the building. Blast through air is very inefficient against heavily reinforced concrete beams and columns. There had to be contact explosives in the building. The total incompatibility with a single truck bomb lies in the fact that either some columns collapsed that should not have collapsed or some of the columns are still standing that should have collapsed and did not.
25. As part of a lawsuit filed by an Oklahoma journalist the DoJ revealed that there were 23 original videotapes in July 2001. The tapes showed footage of the area around the building from April 15th to April 19th, 1995 at 9:02 a.m. The tapes are still classified.
26. I was briefed on Day Two by a former member of the Jerusalem Institute for Western Defence, who stated that the bombing had all the earmarks of a Hezbollah or Hamas hit. He showed me a video tape of several other instances, including the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut, the American and French embassies, and other "truck bombings" that the Islamic Jihad and others had done. More telling, he said "when they want to get rid of something inside a building, they destroy the building."
27. McVeigh was arrested in the middle of nowhere, doing 85 mph in a car with no license tag. He surrendered without resistance even though he was armed and had just killed over a hundred people.
28. At least two Ryder trucks were rented in Kansas, one by McVeigh, and one by a "Middle Eastern male" (John Doe #2). This was not reported by the media.

29. The Ryder truck was identified after the bombing by a partial VIN number on an axle found a block away—by Governor Frank Keating! It was traced through Ryder in Florida to Junction City Kansas, checking to a GM truck. Then a GM employee told the news media that GM did not put VIN numbers on rear axles, so the truck then changed to Ford. Tracing the truck appeared similar to tracing the Carcano carbine found in the Texas Schoolbook Depository by serial number over a weekend before computerized records of gun importation and sales existed. After obtaining photos of the axle/differential, we could see the number was a part number, not a VIN.
30. Five eye witnesses placed McVeigh in a Ryder truck with John Doe #2 on the day of the bombing. John Doe #2 was described as a Middle Eastern male with black curly hair.
31. Eye witnesses saw two Middle Eastern males dressed in a blue jogging suits or jump suits near the front door of the Murrah Building prior to the arrival of the Ryder truck. They walked away quickly when the truck parked, then got into a brown GMC or Chevrolet pickup truck parked a few spaces down the block. They then saw McVeigh and John Doe #2 get out of the Ryder truck, cross the street to a parking lot (Journal Records Building) and get into a yellow Mercury Marquis. (Other witnesses later said the Mercury was parked in an alleyway).
32. Another eye witness was almost hit by the Mercury Marquis as it hastily left the parking lot, heading north. He got a good look at both McVeigh who was driving, and John Doe #2 in the passenger seat. He also saw a license tag on the car hanging loosely by one screw, dangling as the car sped off. He described it as a white tag, not a brown Arizona tag, which was reported by the media. Later, an Arkansas tag, which is white with red letters, was found beside the road a mile from McVeigh’s Marquis was stopped. The tag, Arkansas PTA-811, had been stolen in Fort Smith, Arkansas, not far from Elohim City a few days earlier.
33. Some witnesses verified that two “bombs” were found inside the building. One had to be defused and was seen being removed from the scene. It had ten minutes to go when the timer jammed.
34. No ties to any “militias” were ever proven, though the government and major media made a huge issue of “Right Wing Extremists and Militias” being the culprits behind McVeigh. McVeigh himself stated that he was not a member of a militia, and had never even attended a militia meeting—which was a lie as he had been “asked to leave” a meeting in Florida, and later in Michigan due to his vocal anti-government rhetoric.
35. A two million dollar reward was posted by the FBI for information regarding anyone involved in the bombing, including identity of John Doe #2, but no leads offered were followed up and the reward was eventually cancelled.
36. 3500 (and more later) POWs from the Iraqi Army were brought to the U.S. under George H.W. Bush and later Bill Clinton, which were settled all over the country in government-provided housing. They formed 10-12 man cells and quickly became suspected of organizing terrorists events. Just prior to the Oklahoma City bombing, HAMAS held a huge rally in Oklahoma City. The Muslim population in Oklahoma City is significant and includes members of the Palestine Liberation Organization,

HAMAS, Islamic Jihad and other terrorist groups.

37. A report from a former DOE nuclear site monitoring technician stated that the site indicated a subnuclear blast—not ammonium nitrate. If this is so, then the possibility of a SADM (Sub-Atomic Demolition Munition, or “back pack nuke”) may have played a part. They are in the military inventory and used by Special Forces and SEALs to take out enemy bridges, buildings and road junctures. Could McVeigh have had access to such munitions, or work for someone who did? In my opinion a SADM would have caused much more damage unless it was very small and designed to work in a contained area.

38. If McVeigh wanted to “strike back” for the government attack on Waco, then why pick Oklahoma City? Why not Waco, or New Orleans where the ATF office that initiated the Waco raid was located?

39. Jayna Davis, a TV reporter for KFOR TV in Oklahoma City, traced down a group of Iraqis living in Oklahoma City, former soldiers for Saddam Hussein in the Gulf War. They managed to enter the U.S. under our State Department granting special entrance permission without going through the proper immigration channels or procedures. One of these men was seen with McVeigh two days before the bombing. He matched the description of the individual spotted in the Ryder truck with McVeigh on the morning of the 19th. Further investigation by TV reporters showed that the alibi that this person had for the day of the bombing was fabricated and totally untrue. They also determined he worked, along with several other Iraqis and Middle Easterners, for a man who renovated HUD houses, and was himself linked to the PLO. This “boss” had his daughter fabricated time cards for those involved to show they were at work that morning when they were not.

40. When Hussein al Husseini, AKA al Hussaini Hussain, was interviewed on TV in Oklahoma City, he allegedly could not speak English and had to have an interpreter. His “interpreter” was a Jordanian, Abraham Ahmad, who had left Oklahoma City in haste from the Will Rogers Airport the morning of the bombing, was detained in Chicago and let go. Upon arriving at Heathrow Airport in London, he was immediately turned around and flown back to the U.S. by British law enforcement as they identified him as a probable suspect in the OKC bombing!

41. Federal officials, within a month of the bombing “identified” John Doe #2 as one Army private Todd Bunting, who they said rented a Ryder truck the day after McVeigh at the Kansas body shop, and that the people in Junction City who rented the truck to him were mistaken about any John Doe #2 being with McVeigh when he rented his truck. They never changed their story about the three men who rented the first truck, and one of them was not Bunting. But the Bunting story stuck with the media and John Doe #2, and the search of him, faded away.

42. A leg that did not belong to any of the bombing victims was found in the rubble. It was clad in a military style boot and olive drab trouser leg, and was identified by the medical examiner at first as “probably belonging to a light skinned man under thirty with dark hair.” That later changed to a female. No one ever claimed the leg, and it did not belong to any of the bodies that were recovered.

43. People on the scene of the bombing reported no ANFO residue at the scene. If this is true, what was used? C4? Or possibly PETN or PDTN explosives? Some victims described the smell in the air afterwards as smelling like sulphur, which smells like rotten eggs. That is not the odor of exploded ANFO, or Ammonium Nitrate mixed with Nitro-Methane, or "racing fuel."

44. One eye witness who arrived early to work that morning recounts seeing the bomb squad as she hurried into the building shortly after eight o'clock. An attorney who worked in the area also attested to seeing the bomb squad in the same area.
45. The Oklahoma City Fire Department also appeared to have advance warning of a terrorist attack. Glenn Wilburn had heard several reports concerning FBI tip-offs to the fire department before the blasts and decided to check them out. When he asked Assistant Chief Charles Gaines about the matter, he was met wth denial. He then went down the hall to Chief Dispatcher Harvey Weathers 'office and asked the same question. "Harvey said yes, they had received a message from the FBI on the Friday before the bombing that they should be on alert." Wilburn then told Weathers, "Well, you're going to be surprised to learn that Chief Gaines memory is failing. He says it never happened." According to Wilburn, Weathers responded, "Well, you asked me and I'm not going to lie for anybody. A lot of people don't want to get involved in this." According to Wilburn, two other dispatchers corroborated Weathers' story. All members of the Oklahoma City police and fire departments were quickly ordered not to speak to anyone concerning events surrounding the bombing unless it had first been cleared through official channels.
46. Federal Judge Wayne Alley, whose office was in the Federal Court House behind the Murrah Building, later stated that he "felt lucky that he didn't go to his office on Wednesday." He said the bombing came just a few weeks after security officials had warned him to take extra precautions. He was told that "information has been disseminated that indicates concerns on the part of people who ought to know that we ought to be a little bit more careful," he said. He was told to "be on the lookout for people in the courthouse who shouldn't be there." He said he was not given an explanation for the concern.
47. Another hint of prior knowledge came from the U.S. Marshal Service. On March 22nd, just three weeks before the bombing, the Newark, New Jersey Star-Ledger reported that "U.S. law enforcement authorities have obtained information that Islamic terrorists may be planning suicide attacks against federal courthouses and government installations in the United States. The attacks, it is feared, would be designed to attract worldwide press attention through the murder of innocent victims." The memo, issued by U.S. Marshals Service Director Eduardo Gonzalez, warned that attacks may be designed to "target as many victims as possible and draw as much media coverage as possible" to the fundamentalist cause.

These are just a few of the long list of anomalies, contradictions, key points and outright lies that surround the tragic attack on innocent civilians in Oklahoma City on April 19th, 1995. But no matter what the federal government and media said, twisted, ignored or tried to cover up, the truth cannot be buried for long. And for me and a few other stalwarts, we were just getting started….

As for the men seen by Jane Graham putting "putty on the columns," speculation from some was that they, or possibly someone else, later gained access to the building from one of the utility tunnels that run beneath the streets in almost every major city. Oklahoma City is no exception. Map of tunnels under downtown Oklahoma City. Murrah Building is at top. Federal Courthouse is below the Murrah Building, located just to the South.

The Baker Street Irregulars

“When you have eliminated all which is impossible, then whatever remains, however improbable, must be the truth.”

Sherlock Holmes quote
The Blanched Soldier

Within three weeks of the bombing I could see that the federal government’s “investigation” was no investigation at all, but instead had turned into a political football for the current administration. The actual leads that were developed were either debunked or ignored by the “experts” in the FBI who had arrived from back east and taken over the investigation from the local offices.

It was not long, after a few trips to Oklahoma City that I crossed paths with a handful of concerned Oklahoma City citizens and law enforcement officers who were not buying-off on the official storyline, and for good reasons. Besides the damage to the building compared to the alleged amount of ANFO in the Ryder truck, the eye witnesses knew that what they saw did not match what was being put out by the federal investigators or the controlled media.

During my trips to Oklahoma City I met people who were more involved in actually getting to the bottom of the case than most, if not all, of the FBI investigators who only paid lip service to many of the leads developed and witness statements. Among those were:

David Hoffman, editor of the Haight Ashbury Free Press in San Francisco. He had travelled to Oklahoma because he felt there was something to look into because what he was getting from his sources was that the national media was not forthright in their reporting. And there was something else, much larger, in the actual story. He also had connections to factions of Israeli Intelligence and, I suspect, the Mossad;

William Jasper, investigative journalist for The Free American magazine, which is the publication of the Right Wing John Birch Society, the total opposite of Hoffman, which made for an interesting combination;

George Wallace, an Oklahoma City resident and a retired U.S. Air Force lieutenant colonel and fighter pilot who flew missions during the Vietnam war, and was an avid “John Bircher.” He graciously provided his home as an ad hoc headquarters for a number of investigators;

Rep. Charles Key, who formed the Oklahom Bombing Investigation Committee, or OBIC, assembled his own crew, and shared information with those of us who were working the case from our various perspectives;

Hoppy Heidelberg, an Oklahoma City resident who served on the Grand Jury until being excused for basically asking questions, and demanding answers. these ran afoul of Oklahoma County District Attorney Bob Macy. Macy was more interested in keeping the “investigation” contained to McVeigh and Nichols than crossing the official line to get to the truth.

William Northrop, an Israeli intelligence contact of David Hoffman's, who was sent to Oklahoma City two days before the bombing because the Israeli's "felt" that something big was going to happen. (I never personally met Northrop, but Hoffman kept me apprised of his findings in the weeks following the event. (I later found that Northrop had a very questionable past).

Pat Briley, an Oklahoma City resident and former nuclear submarine officer who was a real fearless bull dog in tracing leads to their bitter ends, then writing about his findings. Pat took me on two "tours" of the scenes of various events that occurred before, during, and after the bombing.

Jayna Davis, Oklahoma City TV station KFOR investigative reporter who first developed the Middle Eastern connection leads. She interviewed several witnesses who saw the two dark-complected men in blue jogging suits in front of the building. These were the men that held the parking place for the Ryder truck when the UPS truck left. They then left the area in a brown GMC or Chevrolet pickup truck with atinted bug shield on the front.

Roger Charles, a retired US Marine Corps lieutenant colonel who had worked as a reporter for a major network until his stories did not agree with the official line;

John David "J.D." Cash, who along with Roger Charles, pursued the Midwest Bank Robber and neo-Nazi leads. Cash was an investigative reporter for the McCurtain Daily Gazette, a small rural newspaper located in southeast Oklahoma. I would find out more on Cash when much of what he "exposed" and what he ignored and debunked raised red flags to me.

Jimmy Rothstein, a retired New York City police detective. Rothstein and a friend, Jimmy Vasilos, came to Oklahoma City at the bequest of one Alex Magnuss, a wealthy Chicago building owner who wanted to "get to the truth" of the bombing. Magnuss later helped Hoffman financially when Hoffman ran out of funds.

Don Browning, an Oklahoma City Police Department sergeant who was one of the first officers to search the building on Day One and refused to ignore what he saw, and refused to not talk about what other officers had told him.

There were others that came and went, but the above named individuals are those who stayed with the case for months, and in come cases, years.

As we began to share information, follow leads, and coordinate our own investigations, I had to walk a tightrope between keeping the "Team" on one side, and the FBI office that I also had to report to on the other. But as time went on it was easy to see that there would be no progress to get to the truth and the actual perpetrators on the FBI end, which was day-by-day being more controlled from Washington.

Our ad hoc team, which could be described as "Team Rebel," grew, and over time, to me, as an old Sherlock Holmes fan, it would be more of a modern day version of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "Baker Street Irregulars." To me, the name fit.

Discovery Outside the Political Bounds

The first thing that we knew we had to do as we organized was to ignore the federal "official lie." There were just too many discrepancies and anomalies to look into. First was the myth of “no John Doe #2.” We knew, verified by witnesses, that there was another man in the Ryder truck with McVeigh. He was seen when they stopped at Johnnie’s Tire Store to ask directions, then by people in the post office a block west of the Murrah Building when McVeigh stopped, got out and had an animated conversation on the sidewalk with a “dark complected man.” Witnesses then saw two men got out of the Ryder truck at the Murrah Building, and the passenger walked to the rear of the truck—possibly to initiate the bomb sequence, then walk away with McVeigh. He was then seen seconds later leaving the parking area of the Journal Record building as a passenger in McVeigh’s Mercury, almost hitting a bystander. At the truck rental in Junction City, Kansas, witnesses saw McVeigh with another man when the truck was rented, and meanwhile another man was sitting outside waiting in a car. The official line of John Doe #2 being chased down and turning out to be Pvt. Todd Bunting, who rented a truck the day after McVeigh, did not hold water. The people that rented the truck to McVeigh were sure of the two men who did rent the truck, and neither was Bunting, even though the FBI tried to convince them otherwise.

Then there was the ever-changing cause of the explosion(s), first being a car bomb, then a bomb in a pickup truck, which grew to a larger Ryder truck. No matter what anyone else saw inside the building, or the damage to the back of the cut, or how many floors downward the damage existed, the official explanation resided in only the Ryder truck being the culprit.

As the days turned into weeks more questions arose due to our various areas of interest. Why were explosives experts ignored or debunked when they concluded what it actually would have taken to bring down the building? Was there a Middle Eastern connection as alluded to by the Israeli intelligence information which we were provided and that Jayna Davis uncovered? Were there two or more explosions, and if so what caused them? Why was the APB on the brown pickup truck not followed up on, then later cancelled altogether and denied to exist by the FBI? Why wasn’t Jayna’s John Doe #2, the Iraqi Republican Guard officer, who eye witnesses picked out, not followed up on by the FBI?

There were so many more questions, none of which were satisfactorily answered by the government. In the words of Winston Churchill in describing Russia, our case was becoming “…a riddle, wrapped in a mystery, inside an enigma.”

No matter what we or others came up with, we were continuously being attacked or ignored by the media, while I was basically “humored” by the FBI in my efforts. All of my memos, turned in to attempt to knock the FBI investigation off high-center and get someone to check out the leads we developed, seemed to all go into the infamous “Black Hole.” Known throughout law enforcement, the Black Hole is where the FBI or other government agencies, send memos, reports, and leads that they do not want, but are afraid not take, end up. We never knew where if any of our efforts were taken seriously, but we did know that “you give it to them, you get nothing back.”

I wasn’t concerned, knowing that would might be the case as after 25 years as a police officer. I was accustomed to it and expected it. But I always did hope that maybe there would be an agent, somewhere, that did take interest in my efforts and do some follow-up work. Unfortunately, as the case progressed, it became more and more apparent that would not happen.

There were so many leads to follow, and so few of us with so few resources, that to follow all of them to a satisfactory conclusion was not possible. The more we found out, the more needed exploring.

Imagine a building with one entry door. You go inside and you discover that the interior is a maze of hallways. You pick a hallway and follow it, and along the sides are more doors. You open a door and the room is empty, or maybe it does have a clue or a bit of evidence. Then you go further down another hallway and open another door and inside is…another hallway of doors! Inside the some of the rooms are clues, others contain bogus diversions, and still others are empty.

That is what it is like to investigate major crimes that have been covered up by "official investigations" bent on establishing one outcome to the exclusion of any other evidence or group of facts. Others might compare it to peeling the layers off an onion. The more you peel, the more you find out, but there are still other layers to peel. And with so many leads and so many different areas to investigate, the investigation would almost become disjointed at times. This investigation was and is one of the most difficult in which to "connect the dots."

As time went on over the ensuing weeks and months each of us gravitated toward following our various leads: Davis on the Middle Eastern Connection, Cash and Charles on the Bank Robbers and neo-Nazis, Rothstein and Vasilos on the bigger picture regarding military and CIA and possibly even Mafia connections, Briley on various discrepancies and hot leads, Wallace and Jasper on every weakness they could find in the official story, and Hoffman and I on a myriad of leads from foreign connections to rogue agents to crooked politicians.

But no matter where each of us was on the map, we shared info and over time gathered so many facts of the case that it began to form a picture.

In the military intelligence world of Battlefield Intelligence, the gathering of intel is a process of finding pieces of a puzzle, putting them all up on the wall to see what fits, filling in the blanks with more pieces as you find them, then in the end, see what the whole picture looks like.

When Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of Wellington, was asked after he retired from the British Army "how would you sum up your military career," he responded "All the business of war, and indeed all the business of life, is to endeavor to find out what you don't know by what you do; that's what I called "guessing what was at the other side of the hill." He is also noted as saying "I've spent my entire military career wondering what the fellow on the other side of the hill is up to."

As we followed our various leads, our investigation diverged into chasing down information and more leads on the various players: the Iraqis and the Middle Eastern connection, the Philippines/Nichols connection, Drug Cartel connection, CIA rogues, military covert operations described by McVeigh and Nichols and alluded to by Strassmeir, the Mid-West bank robbers, Elohim City, and any other lead that any of the above linked to or exposed. And for me personally, I was drawn more and more to the files in the building and their possible connection to Mena and the Clintons.

One can only imagine how difficult such a task would be with our limited resources and various skill sets, some of which were amateur and some professional, but still all working together for a common goal.

The key questions to be answered were first, what really happened? Next, who was behind it? Then "why Oklahoma City," followed by why it was important to the FBI and Washington to mislead the public, spin the news, fail to follow-up on our leads, and in general muddy the waters and mess up the investigation.

But above all, as I reminded the various team members that the three main questions we had to answer, as with all crime scenes, concern three things: Means, Motive and Opportunity.

Who had the means to pull it off? Behind this is the logistics of money, equipment, and capability. Then, who had the motive? This would address the alleged motive of McVeigh's "revenge for Waco"—which had nothing to do with Oklahoma City but was a good red herring for the general public, and finally, who had the opportunity? This last question was answered as soon as McVeigh was arrested and did not deny participation in the bombing. But who else had the opportunity, especially in regards to the mysterious characters seen in the basement of the building placing "putty" on the columns.

But could McVeigh, even if helped by Nichols, plan, build a truck bomb big enough to do the damage, and then expect to get away with it? And just where did they get the resources—the money? Who paid for it? It wasn't Nichols as he had no job, and it wasn't McVeigh as he had no job either. The government's excuse for this was that they'd stolen some guns from a gun dealer in Arkansas, and took his gold and silver as well. But "this dog doesn't bark" as they say in the South. Selling a few stolen guns would not provide enough funding by themselves due to the amount of money it would really have taken to accomplish all that had to be done. These things included Nichols' trips to the Philippines and McVeigh's travels around the country, plus their living expenses.

There were so many leads to follow and so many questions to answer that it seemed like "Mission Impossible."

But as the fictional FBI agent, Fox Mulder, in The X-Files said: "The truth is out there." And we were determined to find it.

CHAPTER 11

The Middle Eastern Connection

Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet,

Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's great Judgment Seat;

Rudyard Kipling
Ballad of East and West

At the end of the first Gulf War thousands of Iraqi soldiers surrendered in and near Kuwait. Those that did not were either killed in the ensuing attack into Kuwait and Iraq by American and allied forces, or managed to make it out of the country and back to Baghdad. Of the various Iraqi units that were either obliterated or forced to retreat were armored columns, trucks, light vehicles, artillery (with most abandoned in their positions), mechanized infantry in their armored personnel carriers, and troops of soldiers from the conscripts to the elite forces of Saddam Hussein. One of these groups, and his most capable, were the Republican Guards Division. The Republican Guards originally were the palace guards and personal security for Saddam Hussein, but grew over the years to become a large elite army unit.

Right after Operation Desert Storm ended thousands of Iraqi POWs were smuggled into the U.S. by the State Department. Information was leaked and some publications exposed the influx of enemy soldiers. The American Legion magazine stated that over 3500 former Iraqi soldiers who had been captured or had surrendered had been brought in and settled all around the U.S. We later determined that this was not a one-time deal, and eventually thousands were allowed entry—in excess of 35,000!

What we discovered during our investigation was that they had been settled, at taxpayer expense, in 6-12 man groups in houses provided to them by the government. Many of these areas where they were initially settled included New York City, Chicago, Denver, Oklahoma City, Dallas-Fort Worth, and other cities and towns across the country. Having those who fought against us now living among us was not only problematic, it was dangerous. None of them had been "vetted" as to their loyalty or backgrounds, and the State Department, under President George H.W. Bush, knew it. And when Bill Clinton entered the White House the influx continued and grew. It was as if someone wanted to create a domestic foreign terrorism problem on purpose.

The week following the bombing I was briefed in Tulsa by an Israeli intelligence operative who was visiting a local religious organization. One of my contacts arranged the meeting and said that I would find the information this man had very useful. During the meeting he stated that what he saw in the media of the damage to the Murrah Building was typical of a HAMAS, Hizbollah, or Islamic Jihad bombing. He showed me photographs of buildings in the Middle East that had suffered very similar damage, then explained how much the jihadis used truck and car bombs to do their work. He reminded me of the Beirut Marine barracks bombing that destroyed the building, and showed me photos of other government and private buildings that were either rubble, or missing much of the building nearest the initiating explosive device.

At the conclusion, he advised me to keep my mind open to a possible “Arab terrorist” connection, and to look for a motive that would involve jihadists in the Oklahoma City bombing. Then he said something else. He said “You need to find out what was in that building. The terrorists, if they cannot access something in a building, they destroy the building and its contents.”

This raised some red flags for me when I considered the Day One event of “feds” stopping rescue efforts to retrieve files. But if McVeigh was the culprit, and nothing else indicated any others involved, other than John Doe #2, then the idea of “Arabs” being involved was at the time, to me, remote. Still, as a military officer trained in Intel, it was a piece of the puzzle, if not a clue, to remember and put up on the wall with other pieces that would eventually show up over time to form a more complete picture.

As more and more information was developed and witnesses gave their stories of what they saw before, during, and after the bombing, more pieces of the puzzle emerged. Some very credible witnesses stated that they saw two Middle Eastern men in blue jogging suits (some said blue coveralls) standing in front of the Murrah Building, acting nervous before the bombing. These two were who saved the parking space for the Ryder truck when the UPS truck pulled away. Others saw a “swarthy man” with McVeigh, talking on the sidewalk beside the truck across from the post office a block west of the building just minutes before the bombing, evidently parked by the curb waiting for the UPS truck to leave. Others saw the two “dark complected men” in the blue jogging suits run east and get into a brown GMC or Chevrolet pickup truck with tinted windows and a smoked plastic bug shield on the front, then leave the scene at a high rate of speed. And before McVeigh arrived at the Murrah Building he was seen by Mike Moroz, an employee of Johnnie’s Tire Store, along with a dark skinned individual with a blue and white baseball cap with blue flames on the side, and an “S”-shaped tattoo that looked like a snake (one of the symbols of the Republican Guards division). Though it is considered a sin in Islam to “deface” a body with a tattoo, it was common practice among many Iraqi soldiers, and those in elite units, to get a tattoo that would identify their body in case of death.

Lastly, one witness outside of the Journal Record building, across the street north of the Murrah Building, saw a dark skinned man with McVeigh in the yellow Mercury who had a “look of hate on his face.” He described “almost being run over” as the vehicle left through the alley next to the Journal Records building at a high rate of speed.

The Israeli intel agent’s information made me remember the 1993 World Trade Center bombing in New York City. Ramzi Yousef—real name believed to be Abdul Basit Mahmoud Abdul Karim—was, according to the FBI, the planner behind the attempt to bring down one of the Twin Towers with the hope it would strike and topple the other.

Another Islamic terrorist who appeared to be connected was Abdul Hakim Murad, Yousef’s roommate in the Philippines. On the day of the bombing, Murad claimed responsibility for this terrorist act from his jail cell in New York. He bragged to his prison guards, verbally and in writing, that the bombing of the Murrah Building was the work of the “Liberation Army.”

Then when leads from the investigation of Terry Nichols and his complicity in the bombing began to come in, more information regarding possible “Middle Eastern” involvement became apparent. Nichols, according to investigators and the FBI, made several trips to the Philippines in the 2-3 years leading up to the bombing. He was married to a Filipina, Marife Nichols, (pronounced “Mary Fay”) and had one son by her. As it turned out, as the Philippine investigation progressed, Nichols, Ramzi Yousef, and Murad were in Cebu City at the same time. (More on this in a separate chapter).

Ten days after the bombing I was contacted by Oklahoma City television station KFOR (Channel 4) investigative reporter Jayna Davis. Jayna wanted to meet with me and compare notes on what she and I had so far. She travelled to Tulsa and sat down in my home office for most of a day and we reviewed her and my notes. She also had a television video tape of a computerized reenactment of what happened the morning of the bombing that showed the positions of the Ryder truck, the brown pickup truck, McVeigh and the John Doe in the truck across from the post office, and the two “ME’s” in the blue jogging suits in front of the Murrah Building.

As the day progressed she told me of what she had discovered using a private investigator and surveillance photos and video tapes of who she believed these Middle Eastern subjects actually were. On that day she had a few names but as time passed she would discover more names and for whom they all actually worked. But one name that she felt was John Doe #2, the passenger in the Ryder truck with McVeigh was one al Husseini Hussein, one of the Iraqi POWs that had been brought to this country after Desert Storm and who was then living in Oklahoma City.

Over the next few weeks I found out that there had been, and still was, a significant concern in military intelligence and federal law enforcement circles about the influx of these Iraqis—and others from other Middle Eastern countries who piggy-backed in with them. I also found out through various civilian and law enforcement sources that there was a house in Fort Worth that served as a communications center for what was thought to be a growing terrorist organization. I was told that it was what was called a “phone bounce,” a place that an Iraqi (or PLO or HAMAS etc.) operative could call, then the call would be “patched through” to another number (possibly another “bounce), then on to the number and person actually for whom the call was intended. It was in this way that information, intelligence and orders could be passed that would be hard to trace at that time and almost impossible to find on a phone bill.

It was not long before Jayna called and said that she now knew who al Husseini Hussein was, and who he worked for. He actually had several aliases, and over time I found that a great number of Islamics entering this country developed many aliases and several IDs. His actual name eventually proved to be as well as we could tell Hussain al Hussaini, but we weren’t sure about the actual spelling. He was a member of the Republican Guard who had been captured (did not surrender) near Basra, an Iraqi city located just north of Kuwait in the southeastern province of Iraq. This was the direction toward which the Republican Guard attempted to retreat before being cut off. Some information even gave him the rank of lieutenant, and if that was so he was a dyed in the wool Saddam supporter. When captured he told the American soldiers that he had escaped from a jail in Baghdad after being incarcerated for passing anti-Saddam posters and handbills. He said he had walked all the way from Baghdad across the desert, by himself, with no supplies, after escaping jail just to find Americans. This was quickly determined to be false, but he was still taken as a POW and later brought into the U.S.

Further investigation produced aliases such as Hussain Al hussaini, Al-Hussaini Hussain, Hashem al Hussain, and Hussain Hashem Jassem Alhussaini. To a police officer such as myself, the only reason to have aliases is to disguise your true identity, and that means one has a reason to avoid being identified through a false identity by law enforcement. To me only a terrorist living here would have so many aliases.

Jayna went on to tell me about one Samir Khalil, who was a Palestinian living in Oklahoma City who owned a property company that bought and restored HUD homes to resell or rent out. He had two companies: Samira Properties and Samira Investments. Khalil had hired several Iraqis to paint and refurbish various run-down HUD houses in the Oklahoma City area, and on the day of the bombing Hussain and several others were allegedly, according to Khalil, working on a house. But neighbors who were later interviewed stated that no one worked that morning on that house which was located across the street from them. Further investigation showed that the time cards for these workers had been falsified. David Hoffman sent me an email that said in part “Khalil asked his daughter, Heather, to falsify work sheet reports for al Hussaini to demonstrate his supposed employment on the morning of 4/19.”

Hoffman also stated in the same email “…al Hussaini may have driven the brown pickup that the witnesses saw speeding away from the bombing with the Middle Eastern driver. The truck was later found at the Woodscape Apartments after the bombing where it had been abandoned. The witness said a middle-Eastern man dropped it off. It had been painted yellow when eventually found and the VIN numbers had been removed. Khalil owns a body shop (Route 66 Auto Collision) that may have re-painted the truck yellow and dropped it off at Woodscape. This body shop is approx 2 miles directly west of the Woodscape Apartments. One of my contacts watched the body shop for five days and never saw anyone come in for an estimate.” We later determined that Hussein matched the “swarthy man” in the yellow Mercury that was seen leaving the scene, and identified another Iraqi that probably worked for Khalil as one of the two men leaving in the brown pickup.

David Hoffman then sent me a list of names of sixteen of Khalil’s employees, and of aliases for each. Khalil’s aliases alone included such names as Samir Sharif Khalil, Samir Kahlil, Samir Abdul-Ghani, Sam Samara, Omar Kalif, Omar Khalif, Omar Kahlif, Sam Kabbib and Samir Sharif Abdul Ghani.

Khalil, according to Hoffman and a 1990 Grand Jury pre-sentence report/brief is a Jordanian with Palestinian ties. He has relatives in Baghdad, Iraq; Amman, Jordan; Dharhan, Saudi Arabia; and even in Jerusalem, Israel; Palestine; and Oklahoma City. He came to the U.S. in 1968 and was naturalized in 1975. Upon further investigation we found that he had two felony convictions: Grand Larceny in 1973 and defrauding insurance companies in 1975-88. The Grand Jury “Response to Pre-sentence” states “Over the past fifteen years, Samir has acquired and managed well over one hundred properties for companies owned by he and his family. most were run down properties acquired at depressed prices in high crime areas. Under his management, the properties were refurbished and a good level of occupancy was achieved and maintained. According to the Prosecution Version, from 1995 through 1988, 140 insurance claims, allegedly totaling $450,000.00, were made with regard to these properties, 80% of which were for vandalism, wind and hail damage…some were substantial losses. Four were fire losses… Investigators believe that most of the claims were fraudulent in nature…[and] on one occasion a witness observed Khalil breaking windows at a property on which he later submitted a claim…Samir denies this allegation."

On the next page of the brief is the statement "An employee of Kahlil's (sic) told investigators he was instructed to set fire to four of his properties. Khalil subsequently submitted loss claims on three of these properties."

One employee of Khalil, Robert Kulick, was arrested on December 13th, 1987, by the Oklahoma City Police Department and charged with arson, in conjunction with a fire at 1137 N.E. 28th Street. Then on April 8th, 1988, FBI Special Agents Edward Herbert and Gary Dagan interviewed Kulick at his residence concerning his employment with Samir Khalil. In their written report the agents noted: "On this occasion, he claimed to have set fire to four vacant buildings at Samir's request. he allegedly said Samir had told him to set fire to the premises at which he was arrested because the insurance was about to expire."

Hoffman exposed more about Khalil as time went on. In one email he said "According to Israeli contacts, Khalil had been investigated for PLO fund raising activities by the FBI, but he plea bargained it down to one year in federal prison. He was pulling in various size checks from insurance companies for vandalism and related property damage. This is a classic PLO fund-raising technique."

So, if Khalil was buying run-down houses, painting them, fixing them up, then vandalizing them or burning them down to raise insurance money that he then forwarded to the Palestinian Liberation Organization, and the FBI knew it, why did he not get more than one year? The obvious answer would be that he eventually turned confidential informant for the FBI because nothing else would have allowed him to remain free or even in this country.

Finally, something else involving Khalil stuck out like the proverbial fly in the ointment: Khalil's ex-wife, Carole, to whom he was paying alimony, worked for the Department of Agriculture in the Murrah Building and was at her desk when the explosions occurred. She died there.

The more Jayna Davis, David Hoffman, myself, and others dug into the "Middle Eastern Connection," the more we discovered. Hoffman and I chased one lead with some help from his Israeli contacts regarding Khalil and the Middle Eastern phone bounce. One report that I received stated, "Israeli intelligence reports that they secured telephone records of Khalil's and Hussain's long distance calls. Both show several calls to a house in Mesquite, Texas, which is a Hamas relay (cut out). A call to Boston, for instance, would go to this house then be relayed so that the end number and/or originating number would not be reflected on the bill." Later in the same report, "Hussain has moved out of Oklahoma City and is now supposed to be living in the DFW area, or possibly Houston. This would match the fact that Khalil owns several properties in Texas, but mainly Dallas and Fort Worth." And most important regarding this phone number is the statement that "Another party who used this same number is Ramzi Yousef, the Twin Trade Towers bomber who planned to blow up 10 American 747s over the Pacific!"

Further investigation, provided by retired NYC detective Jimmy Rothstein, who researched county records in Tarrant County, Texas, showed two interesting properties in Texas that were flagged during the telephone network investigations: one in the South Ridge Addition in Fort Worth belonging to one Botros Said (a name we were not familiar with) and one in the Lakewood addition of Fort Worth belonging to Samir Khalil!

In a report that I forwarded to my FBI counterpart I wrote "Our investigation has revealed that there are at least seven "John Does" still at large that were involved at the first (bottom level) bombing operation. This information has been determined due to eye witness statements at the scene, both before and after the explosion. One of the John Does, who we suspect as being John Doe #2, and who rode with McVeigh in the Ryder truck (due to the eye witness statements at the scene both before and after the explosion) was an Iraqi national named Al Husseini Hussain [actual spelling of his name in the report]. Hussain is a former Iraqi soldier who was brought into this country as part of a covert "humanitarian" relocation project by the State Department and CIA along with 750 other Iraqi soldiers who had fought for Saddam Hussein during the Gulf war and who were captured or surrendered. Hussain's story is that he escaped from an Iraqi prison, made his way across the desert, and asked for asylum when picked up by American forces. This is the version the media later reported. Investigation, however, tells the following story: Hussain was a lieutenant in the Hammurabi Division of the Republican Guards. He assisted in blowing up the oil fields in Kuwait, then was trapped when he tried to escape back to Baghdad and was captured by the 4th Infantry Division on Highway 89, near Bhasra. He told the Americans that he was a conscript, and that he wanted asylum. He was then incarcerated in a POW camp and finally added to a shipment of Iraqis who were admitted to the U.S. and relocated in several specific areas—most of which happen to be co-located with 28 known Hamas cells. The most likely scenario is that he located and began attending a local mosque, where he was approached by Hamas or Hizbollah types and recruited."

The report went on to state that "Israeli intelligence reports that they secured telephone records of Khalil's and Hussain's long distance calls. Both show several calls to a house in Mesquite, Texas, which is a Hamas relay."

The more Jayna Davis pursued her leads and those provided by others, the more heat she stirred up. Besides her own television parent network, NBC, killing her stories at the national level, she and her OKC station, KFOR, was attacked by Hussain al Hussaini himself when he was exposed during the investigation as a "person of interest" in the bombing. A report in the Oklahoma Daily—the University of Oklahoma student newspaper— headlined, "Iraqi refugee sues local television station," with a subtitle "Lawsuit—A man claims KFOR-TV has ruined his reputation."

"An Iraqi refugee filed a lawsuit Thursday against KFOR-TV, Oklahoma's Channel 4. Al-Hussaini-Hussain is suing the television station for its reports implying he assisted in the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

"In a June 7 broadcast, KFOR linked Hussain's digitized likeness with that of John Doe No. 2. At the time, it was believed that John Doe No. 2 was connected to the bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh.

“Hussain’s attorneys claim he was indirectly identified, and his reputation was harmed by false statements.”

“‘Some people chase him, spit in his face and beat him up,’ said Samir Khalil, translating for Hussain, who only speaks Arabic. ‘He feels like his life was damaged forever.’”

“KFOR has limited its response to the lawsuit in a short statement. ‘We’re confident in our reports and confident KFOR will prevail in the case,’ Melissa Klinzing, the station’s news director, said. Klinzing would not comment further, saying the station’s staff and lawyers needed more time to study the lawsuit. Earlier this summer reporter Jayna Davis told the Oklahoma Gazette she stood behind her story ‘150 %.’“Brad Edwards, also named in the suit, contributed to KFOR’s report.“Hussain and Khalil, who was also Hussain’s employer, maintained that Hussain was working April 19, the morning of the bombing that killed 168 people and injured more than 500. His attorneys said the FBI has assured them that he was never a suspect.

“The lawsuit claims defamation, invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress.”

Hussaini al Hussain spoke English and had served as a translator for other Iraqis previous to the law suit. But all of a sudden he had to have an interpreter, and none other than Samir Khalil.

KFOR was not only under attack in the courts, but by other competitors as well. Joyce Reed, KWTV Channel 9 news director said her station was concerned when its competition aired the piece. “It was not what we would have considered to be a strong news story. It wasn’t ethical at all. If it caused innocent people to suffer and it misinformed the public, it is an incredible disservice,” she said, according to the Oklahoma Daily.

World Net Daily reported “Davis also was sued by the Iraqi she accused of being convicted bomber Timothy McVeigh’s partner. Although the Iraqi’s Aug. 24, 1995, defamation lawsuit was dismissed, he refiled the suit six months later…Some local media, including other TV stations, came to the man’s defense. One weekly newspaper said Davis embellished the story. However, U.S. District Judge Timothy Leonard vindicated Davis’ reporting on the Iraqi national by awarding KFOR a Summary Judgment motion and ruling that the plaintiff had presented no evidence to refute Channel 4’s stories about him.”

The investigation of the Middle Eastern Connection to the Oklahoma City bombing didn’t stop in Oklahoma City. Even though the Clinton administration, Department of Justice, and FBI went to great lengths to confine the outcome to McVeigh and Nichols and no Middle Eastern connection, U.S. Representative Dana Rohrabacker of California took interest in the case and began his own investigation, relying much on what Jayna Davis discovered. In his Chairman’s Report from the Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee of the House International Relations Committee titled “The Oklahoma City Bombing: Was There A Foreign Connection,” the report states:

“Another key piece of evidence that Jayna Davis used to build the case in her book for Middle Eastern involvement was the fact that Hussain Al Hussaini “was one of a group of Iraqis hired to do odd jobs for a Palestinian landlord, Samir Khalil, who owned properties throughout the area. Khalil hired the Iraqi newcomers, supposedly refugees from the first Gulf War, to maintain his rental properties. Khalil himself served time for insurance fraud in the early 1990s. Hussaini resembles John Doe Two and was identified by witnesses on the scene.”

“The connections by Davis in her book linking McVeigh to Murad, Yousef and the former Iraqi soldiers was made not only through Terry Nichols connection in the Philippines, but by the suspected John Doe 2, Hussain Al Hussaini, to Samir Khalil who according to “the discovery of a published list of un-indicted coconspirators from the first World Trade Center bombing that includes the name Samir Khalil.”

The Rohrabacker Committee’s report went on to say:

“Another possibility of Islamic terrorist involvement in the Oklahoma City bombing was pursued by Jayna Davis, a local Oklahoma City television reporter. Davis did extensive research in the immediate and long term aftermath of the crime and concluded that a small group of recent Iraqi Émigrés living in the Oklahoma City area helped McVeigh bomb the Murrah Building. She documented multiple witnesses who placed Timothy McVeigh with a foreign-looking person (and/or persons) in the days leading up to, as well as the day of, the Oklahoma City bombing. Her witnesses offer substantial support to the theory of a Middle Eastern connection and relate directly to the existence of John Doe Two. The FBI, much to the frustration of some of its own investigators, discarded the possibility of the existence of John Doe Two, two months into the investigation. There are a number of factors, including information provided by Davis, indicating the existence of John Doe Two and a possible Middle Eastern connection.

Note: at the outset of the subcommittee’s investigation, former Oklahoma governor Frank Keating personally requested that the investigation be called off. During his meeting with the subcommittee chairman, Governor Keating mentioned that then-President Bill Clinton had called him only hours after the bombing. According to Keating, President Clinton’s first comment to him after the bombing was “God, I hope there’s no Middle Eastern connection to this.” (author’s emphasis)

This mindset, described by Governor Keating, may or may not have influenced the original Oklahoma City bombing investigators. There were many reasons to believe that there might have been a foreign connection and that is not something that should have been shied away from.”

The report’s last page ended with this:

“Within minutes of the Oklahoma City bombing, local television reporter Jayna Davis was at the scene of the crime interviewing witnesses. In the weeks and months afterward, she continued to investigate the bombing and, in her television broadcasts, asked viewers with information to come forward. She was particularly focused on the FBI’s original sketch of John Doe Two. There are multiple witnesses in Oklahoma City who placed Timothy McVeigh with another person at the scene of the bombing. The description of this accomplice offered by the witnesses at the scene closely resembles the sketch made of McVeigh’s companion when he rented the Ryder truck. The hard fact remains that witnesses saw McVeigh with a man leading up to and on the day of the bombing. Authorities still contend that McVeigh was alone. The belief that the FBI dropped its search for John Doe Two prematurely appears justified.

“Davis has presented evidence that John Doe Two, who was with McVeigh in the Ryder truck on the day of the bombing, was a recent Iraqi immigrant who lived and worked in Oklahoma City. The Iraqi in question, Hussain Al Hussaini, was one of a group of Iraqis hired to do odd jobs for a Palestinian landlord, Samir Khalil, who owned properties throughout the area. Khalil hired the Iraqi newcomers, supposedly refugees from the first Gulf War, to maintain his rental properties. Khalil, an Oklahoma City businessman, himself served time for insurance fraud in the early 1990s. Hussaini resembles John Doe Two and was identified by witnesses on the scene. Adding to the suspicion, Hussain Al Hussaini was less than forthcoming about his whereabouts the morning of the bombing. His alibi, brought out in civil court depositions, is contradictory and unconvincing. One more disturbing revelation of this investigation is that Hussain Al Hussaini was never interviewed by federal law enforcement.

“More alarming is the discovery of a published list of un-indicted coconspirators from the first World Trade Center bombing that includes the name Samir Khalil. This subcommittee asked the Department of Justice to determine if the man’s name on the un-indicted coconspirators World Trade Center bombing list is the same man in Oklahoma City. A letter responding to this request stated that such a task would be too “burdensome.” This unwillingness on the part of the Justice Department to look into a possible solid link between the Oklahoma City bombing and the first World Trade Center attack is extremely disappointing, bordering on dereliction of duty.

“To this day, federal law enforcement cannot explain what, if anything was done to examine these possible links or scrutinize Khalil’s activity related to terrorism in his hometown. Justice officials should at least show some curiosity about the subcommittee’s request as to whether there is circumstantial evidence linking two major domestic terrorist attacks. As a result, our investigation into this matter is incomplete.”

It was obvious that Janet Reno’s Justice Department, under orders from Clinton, was not interested in pursuing or exposing anything to do with a Middle Eastern connection.

The more we got into the Iraqi “Middle Eastern Connection” the more we found out about those involved in groups that ranged from Iraqis to Palestinians to Egyptians and other Middle Eastern nationalities. It was like the building with all the hallways and doors that led to nowhere, or somewhere.

One report I received from a retired Army Criminal Investigator, Gene Wheaton, provided the following regarding what he obtained from his CIs (Confidential Informants):

“A 56-year old Palestinian, Khalil was born Samir Abdul-Ghani Sharif Khalil and emigrated to the U.S. from Kuwait in 1968. He received his M.A. from Oklahoma City University in 1995, his PhD. in psychology from O.U. in 1979, and went on to teach at public schools and at nearby Tinker Air Force base. He also did a brief stint in the Oklahoma Department of Human Services. Khalil claims to have relatives in Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Iraq, who provided the money for his education and real estate investments. Khalil quit teaching in 1982 and devoted himself full-time to his real estate business. By 1995 he had acquired over 500 properties, mostly through HUD, the federal agency besieged with corruption in the late ‘70s and early ‘80s.

“C.I. #3 said ‘in the 70s this son-of-a-bitch did not have a dime to his name. He couldn’t survive. He used to ask me for money. Where did he get 500 properties?’

“C.I. #3 who worked as an FBI informant, believes Khalil is a money launderer.

‘Khalil should be a millionaire with that much property, but he lives in a dilapidated shack on 32nd Street,’ the C.I. said. C.I. #3 believes Khalil is just an ‘errand boy’ or ‘cut-out’ and someone else actually owns the properties.”

“CI #5 says the money to fund his real estate empire came from the PLO, which instructs him on how to live for appearance sake.

“C.I. #5 also said that Khalil travels to Israel at least once a year and avoids any contact with the PLO, but communicates through a ‘cut-out’ member of his family.”

When I asked Wheaton how reliable his C.I.s were, he said “very reliable.” He then said he believed Khalil was a bag man taking money he made from insurance scams and on rent houses and giving it to the PLO when he “visited Israel.” When I asked him why he didn’t just wire transfer it he said “that would be too easy to trace.”

Within a week of digging into the Middle Eastern connection, I had indications that my phones were tapped, as was my fax machine. I had some equipment that tested the lines and gave a warning if they were interfered with by phone taps or someone listening in somewhere on the line.

I knew a friend who was a lot more savvy with computers and the internet than I. Other than research, emails, and writing, my computer expertise was limited. I contacted her, the wife of a good friend, a retired Marine Corps major and fellow Vietnam vet, and she said that she could see where my emails were going and where they were coming from. She had software that traced the “pings” and “bounces” and “redirections” to trace the path of communications. As it turned out my outgoing emails were redirected from Tulsa and CompuServe to Langley, Virginia, then somewhere in South Dakota before going on to their destination. To me that meant CIA. But why would the CIA be interested in the information that I was already providing to the FBI, unless they felt that I was not providing all the information that I was sharing, or more importantly, getting. That would make sense. Especially if the CIA was worried that any connections we established to the OKC bombing might involve the CIA! I would eventually find that the CIA was very interested in my progress, and not for legitimate reasons. I knew that the CIA would be more than interested in what I discovered about the Mena operations, Iran/Contra, and even more in what I would eventually find out about McVeigh and Nichols.

Also, I knew if the FBI tapped my phones and fax, it would be done locally.

I took my “snitch box” to work at the police department and scanned my office. It lit up when it got to the air conditioning vent above my desk. I then hooked it up to my phone line and dialed another line in the building and it indicated that this phone, the one with my personal desk number, was also tapped. I began to wonder if my police car was bugged too, so I checked it out in the parking lot but got no indication. However, I did not have any gear to show whether or not a GPS tracking device was hidden in the car somewhere. I didn’t really care because the car was only driven between the office, headquarters, and home. I also felt that our own department’s SID—Special Investigations Division—might be involved as they would have access to my office. In support of that theory was a visit from the lieutenant from the SID who stopped in one day to ask some very basic questions about what I knew about militias. A week or so later an officer who worked for the SID came to my office and asked me to help him do some research on the Internet since at that time even his office was not online outside of the department's computer network. His name was Randy, and after spending several meetings with me at work and later at home, he became a believer himself and proved to be an asset when I needed information about any of the Tulsa connections that SID had discovered. (It was Randy who showed me the photos of the Shawn Tea "suicide" crime scene).

On one of my days off I was working in my home office, which at the time was an upstairs office of our two-story house. There was a park across the street, and between the street and the grass was a small parking lot. On that particular winter morning I saw a plain white unmarked van parked there facing my house. Inside were two men. Steam was coming from the exhaust pipe so I knew the engine was running, probably to keep the heater going.

I checked every few minutes for about 45 minutes and the van didn't move. I decided to check it out. I went out our back door, over the back fence, then around the block until I was in the north end of the park. The van was still there.

I approached from the rear, walked up to the passenger side and tapped on the window.

The man inside just about jumped out of his skin. He looked at me with an "oh crap!" look. I motioned for him to roll down his window, but he didn't comply. He said something to his friend, then looked back at me like they were trying to decide what to do.

I said "You guys don't have to stay out here. Why don't you shut the engine off and come in. I've got coffee on, so no reason to freeze your butts off."

The window rolled down part way and the passenger said "I don't know what you're talking about. We're just taking a break."

From what I could see in the van I could not observe any tools, and both were dressed casually and not in work clothes. Also, both were in good physical shape, clean cut, and of military age. All were indicators of either law enforcement, military, or spooks.

I couldn't resist. I had worked too many stakeouts myself, and did a much better job than these two clowns, so I ruled out "law enforcement." "Look, I know who you are and what you're doing here. If you want to know anything about me, just ask."

The passenger said something to his partner and they started to back up to leave. I said as they began to move "Listen. If you are going to do stakeouts, you need to shut off your engine. You might get cold, but at least you won't give yourselves away."

He gave me a dirty look, and as they pulled out I waved bye-bye and stood there until they were out of sight. I never saw them again, nor any other car doing a stakeout on my house. I always wondered what was in the back of the van, and berated myself for not looking for obvious antennas.

It was time to deal with my phone tap. For this I decided to use the "give 'em more than they want" tactic. As it happened I had two phone lines to my house. One for the house and one for my office. Being a good Christian I thought it my duty to give the third party that wanted to hear what I said on my phone something they needed. Bible preaching.

Sometimes when I was home, but mostly if I left to run errands or go to work, I would use my office line to call my home line, then pick up the home line. With both receivers off the hook I would start a tape recorder on my office line that contained one or more hours of sermons or Bible lessons. I'll never know if it did anyone's soul any good or not, but I'm sure it used a lot of tape and caused someone to listen to it all.

Then came the fax machine. In the mid-1990s most faxes were called "thermo-faxes" because they used a 90 foot roll of fax paper. When you received a fax the machine would print the pages and cut them at the end of a standard sheet when, and only when, it detected a page break from single sheets being used to send a fax. But if they didn't detect that break, the receiving machine would continue to pump out a long line of paper until it ran out. All 90 feet.

I was pretty sure I knew who was intercepting the faxes and I had their office fax number. I decided that that night at midnight I'd send a fax. A long one.

Precisely at midnight I hit the "send" button and watched as a new roll of fax paper, all blank, was sent. I didn't think anyone would be in the office at the other end so I figured that first thing the next morning someone would come into their office and see a pile of blank fax paper on the floor. Back then you had an option of programming your machine with your name or business name and fax number that would appear at the top of each page as a convenience to a receiving party. I never figured out how to do that—I never liked to read manuals, so disregarded a lot of unnecessary functions. So, with no caller ID (even though I was sure they would know exactly who did it) all they had was paper. I figured they'd think their fax machine was broken and would have to call tech support or have it replaced.

I waited three days and did it again. I would love to have had their office bugged to hear the reaction the next morning!

The next step in my plan was to print out a long banner with a message. The printer I had was a dot-matrix printer. For the younger folks this type of printer that was common then used a type of typewriter ribbon and printed on paper using a print head that had small pins that struck the ribbon to the paper forming letters, numbers and characters. I just happened to have a software program that would print huge letters sideways on the paper making a banner.

I typed "If you quit tapping my fax machine I'll stop sending you nice banners." I put it in the fax and sent it at 1 a.m. the next morning since I figured they might have had someone in the office at midnight to stop their machine from wasting paper.

The next day my equipment showed my fax line and phone line, which were both the same number, clear.

As I left for work early that morning I saw a white telephone company truck a few doors down. I stopped my police car and went into the backyard where I saw a man working on a telephone junction box where the phone pairs of the phones up and down the street were located. I walked up behind him and said "having problems?"

It surprised him, and when he turned around and saw me standing there in my police flight suit complete with badge and shoulder holster, he said "uh, yeah, but it's fixed now."

He was obviously staring at my name tag and recognized who I was. I said “then I guess my phone lines will be clear from now on?”

“Yeah, I fixed the static.”

“I don’t know about static,” I said, “but tell your boss that if any of you guys want to know about anything I’m doing, just ask.”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about” he responded, standing up.

“Look. That truck out there is the FBI phone tapping truck. It looks like a Southwestern Bell truck, but it stays parked in the parking lot at our police radio shop. Everyone knows what it is and who owns it. And another thing, you need to talk to those two clowns who tried to surveil my house last week. They need more training.”

He got a blank look on his face and before he could catch himself he said “that wasn’t us!”

I could tell by his reaction he was telling the truth. So, it if wasn’t the FBI, then who was it? The answer to that, to me, was our friends at Langley where my emails were being redirected. And since the CIA was allegedly prohibited from spying on American citizens (which they violate all the time) I felt that their interest would be because we were looking into international connections to the bombing—-or, then another thought hit me—Mena!

Or both.

I was not the only one who was being watched, or worse. David Hoffman, working from his apartment in Oklahoma City, suffered several incidents of vandalism and threats that were obvious attempts to scare him off of the story and the investigation. He assumed his phone was bugged and would often complain of not having enough volume to be able to hear a conversation well, and of static at times. I tried to reassure him by telling him that “Dave, you get the most flack when you’re over the target!” I never had any problems with receiving or sending faxes to him, but I’m sure, as he was, that his emails were also being read, as were mine, and in my opinion, everyone we emailed or received emails from.

On advice from my techie friend who served as my computer consultant I obtained a program called PGP, or Pretty Good Privacy. With PGP you could write an email, then, using the program, encode it with 64 bit military encryption before sending it. Only someone who had the key at the other end could decode it. Pretty cool!

But since, as Sherlock would say to Watson, “The game is afoot,” I had no reason to hide anything in my emails, or any communication for that matter, but since someone was playing a one-sided game, I’d have to get off the bench.

To fire my shot down range and see who stuck their heads up, I began writing nonsense emails that were gobbledegook. Even decrypted they would still look like code. Messages such as “The lilacs are on the piano,” and “Backstreets run North,” or in some cases “Page 334 para 4 line 16 word 8,” which would actually further be shortened to “334,4,16,8.” Only the receiver who had the other end of the “code book” could decrypt the message.

I knew this last one would be a real challenge as I knew that even if NSA could decrypt the PGP message, they have to figure out the ancient "book code" message—and they could not do that without a copy of the book being used by the sender and the receiver.

This method is as old as books themselves, but was used extensively in Europe on the 1800s and during the American Civil War by spies on both sides. The way it worked was that you and I have a copy of the exact same book. I need to write a sentence that you can read, so I pick the words out of the book first by finding the word I need, then writing down the page number, then paragraph, then line down from the top, then word to the right. You can then find that page, then the paragraph and line in that paragraph, then read to the right to find the word. It's labor intensive, but fool proof.

Even John Wilkes Booth used the book code by using, according to legend, a first edition copy of Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island." And of major interest, the same code and book was found, along with messages, in the effects of Edwin Stanton, Lincoln's Secretary of War, and a Democrat who hated Lincoln. A few years back it was discovered that Booth worked as a spy for both sides, which allowed him to cross the borders between North and South forces with the cover of being a merchant that traded bales of Southern cotton for barrels of salted pork from the North. Both sides needed one or the other so they let him pass freely. Hence the name "Pork Barrel Politics."

Many researchers still question whether or not Booth was actually killed by Union Army soldier Thomas "Boston" Corbett, or if that was simply a ruse to let the real Booth get away by killing a look-alike decoy. And there are many now who question if Timothy McVeigh was actually executed, or simply chemically knocked out to appear dead so that he would be spirited away to live life under an assumed name. There is some evidence to lead to this conclusion.

Other PGP messages that I sent to Hoffman and others who were in on the game were often just random letters and gobbledegook that, in themselves, would have to be "decrypted" such as "HDLL YUU 132kj fVMnn 489 56ffh." Good luck with that one! I wonder if NSA is still trying to crack the codes? In the end it was all great fun, but all the listeners had to do was ask and I'd have given them all the info I had if I felt they were as legitimately trying to solve the case as I was.

Hussein, Khalil, and Yousef were not the only Islamic or Middle Eastern names that surfaced during our probe. Names such as (last names only due to privacy issues): Ahazd (with three AKAs), Al Saidi (with two AKAs), Almoswai (with one AKA), Al Mosully (with one AKA), Al Hesawi, Al Sadoon (with one AKA), Osman (with four AKAs), Al Homsi, Alamiri (with one AKA), Rousan, Ahaad, Jabar, Hussain, Al Siidi, Haider, and Bassam. All worked for Khalil.

My file notes from sources including surveillance photos and videos, mention that Osman was the paymaster for Khalil and was "the boss of the workers" and responsible for paying them. Haider was the muscle man and enforcer. A big brawny man with the build of a pro wrestler, he was obviously Republican Guard, as in our opinion were all the rest on the list. How many were actually involved in the bombing or support roles? We never discovered the answer to those questions as with any case of eye witnesses, very few could actually identify "foreigners" by looking at surveillance photos. Most simply stated “that could be him, but I’m not sure. It happened so fast.”

How many times have police officers and detectives heard this phrase from witnesses.

During the investigation into the Middle Eastern connection, I found out more about Abraham Ahmad, the Jordanian who fled the country the morning of the 19th from Will Rogers World Airport, only to be returned from England by Scotland yard.

The O’Hare airport security personnel and the FBI detained and questioned Ahmad for six hours when he arrived in Chicago. FBI agents eventually released Ahmad and bought him another plane ticket, this time to London. But upon his arrival at Heathrow, he was intercepted by Scotland Yard Special Branch where he was strip-searched and his luggage inspected. His luggage contained what were described as “bomb making tools and materials.” When confronted with the items—pliers, hammer, cables, silicone caulk, a telephone and electrical wire and tape—he said it was for “working on his house in Jordan.” The Special Branch officers put a handcuffed Ahmad on a plane and sent him back to the U.S., to Washington D.C. They also notified the FBI that Ahmad was a suspected terrorist. That, evidently didn’t mean much in the FBI’s opinion, as they allowed Ahmad to return from D.C. to Oklahoma City.

Ahmad, now having “been checked out and released,” all of a sudden didn’t need to fly to Jordan to check on sick relatives, as was his first story. Instead he returned to his house in Oklahoma City where the Tulsa World described in a puff piece article: “He said he returned home to find camera crews camped on his lawn and his ‘100% white neighbors’ bad-mouthing him to the media.’”

When Ahmad did talk to the media, he alleged he couldn’t speak English and had to have an interpreter. The interpreter who showed up and spoke English was none other than Hussain al Hussaini, who in the past had to have Samir Khalil interpret for him because he didn’t speak English.

The World went on to say in the article that was written a bit over a year after the bombing that “More than a year after being cleared, Ahmad said he ‘still feels the suspicion…It’s not easy to live in this neighborhood’” and that he planned on moving back to Jordan. He eventually sued the U.S. government for $1.9 million, but was offered only $10,000 to settle the suit by the Justice Department, which he refused. The article, printed August 15th, 1996, said that Ahmad would refile the suit when he was ready to leave the country.

In finding my file on Abraham (AKA Ibrahim) Ahmad (and others) during this writing I found an email from Hoffman that said that he had the names of the two Middle Eastern males who wore the blue jogging suits that were seen in front of the Murrah Building, then leaving in the brown pickup truck: “Omar and Ahmad/two ‘ME’ males running from the scene in blue jogging suits—I think ‘Ahmad’ is really Abraham Ahmad, who split for the airport, then Chicago, then London—with his blue jogging suit which he changed out of at the airport and put in his luggage before checking in.”

A blue jogging suit was found in his luggage at O’hare, but no mention of finding it in London. As for “Omar,” I don’t have that name on my lists of suspects and Hoffman did not elaborate in the email.

In an email dated 8/13/96 Hoffman wrote “If Ahmad had been cleared by U.S. authorities for the worst terrorist attack in U.S. history, why did British authorities refuse his entry into the country? Did they know something the U.S. did not or something the U.S. didn’t want to admit…What is even stranger is why the FBI allowed Ahmad to leave the country in the first place. In FBI agent Henry Gibbons’ affidavit, special mention was made of the items in Ahmad’s suitcase, and his coincidental April 19, 10:43 departure time, and Gibbons stated that he considered Ahmad’s testimony in front of the [Oklahoma] Grand Jury vital. Yet Ahmad was simply allowed to go on his way, and like so many other suspects and witnesses, was never called before the Grand Jury. Moreover, Ahmad was apologized to by no less than President Clinton himself! Why would President Clinton go to the trouble of apologizing to a likely suspect in a routine investigation? This is interesting coming from a president that failed to apologize to the Branch Davidians… obviously there is a political motive at work here.”

Re-reading David Hoffman’s email while writing this book reminded me of Clinton assuring the world on Day Five, a Sunday, “there is no Middle Eastern Connection.”

Nevertheless, that statement would not deter our investigation in that direction, and it would not be long before we began receiving intelligence from the Philippines regarding Terry Nichols’ trips there and with whom he met.

There were so many strange characters who surfaced during the initial stages of the investigation that it was hard to keep track of them all. One such person was named Cary Gagan. Gagan had a very shadowy background that ran the gamut from drug running to meeting with various Middle Easterners (he said “Iranians”), to being in contact with Soviets while being a DEA informant. But in 1983 Gagan was blacklisted by the DEA due to allegations that he provided false information to the benefit of certain drug dealers. Hoffman was able to find and interview Gagan over a period of time. What he discovered was what appeared to be a definite connection between the bombing and Middle Easterners.

In June of 1986, the Soviets contacted him and asked him to obtain and provide false identification for certain illegal Iranian (Middle Eastern) immigrants. But, when Gagan met with a counterfeiter, a man named Hamid who worked at Stapleton International Airport in Denver, the conversations were recorded and turned over to the FBI and the Denver Police Intelligence Bureau. Not long after that, Gagan wound up in jail on the charge of insurance fraud. However, the FBI was more interested in turning Gagan into an informant for the FBI, but Gagan, according to Hoffman, refused. Then in January of 1987, Gagan agreed to assist in the investigation of stolen technology being shipped overseas to front companies that then shipped the goods to Cuba, which was embargoed. The operation was code-named Operation “Aspen Leaf,” and in August, 1987, the sting operation netted four West Germans and one Austrian in charges of illegally exporting technology to Cuba, North Korea and Bulgaria.

Gagan alleges that in May of 1994, while working as an informant for the Justice Department with a letter of immunity, he was put in contact with two Arabs named Omar and Ahmad. While the deal began under the guise of drug trafficking, the Arabs, who had been paying him with counterfeit money, wanted him to take part in a plot to blow up a federal building in Denver. This is important in that we received information early on that the original target was supposed to be in Denver, but it was changed to Oklahoma City.

Gagan said that they would be using a mail truck packed with explosives. He said “I was going to be part of it because I could move through the building because I’m Anglo and I’m a U.S. citizen and you know, I wouldn’t draw attention in and out of the federal building every day.”

The truck, purchased from a government auction, would be painted to resemble a working mail truck. On January 14, 1995, Gagan picked up the truck at the Metro Bar & Grill near the airport, then drove it to the Marriott Hotel near Golden, Colorado. “Omar came with me,” relates Gagan. “He showed me where the truck was and said ‘just get in and drive down I-70, and here’s where you park it.”

Gagan did as he was told, and after parking the truck, he went into the bar and had a drink. When he came back out the truck was gone. He said that in the back of the truck were approximately thirty duffle bags of ammonium-nitrate marked “U.S. Mail,” and several boxes from Sandex Explosives in Las Vegas marked “High Explosives.” Gagan had to catch a bus home.

Most interesting was Gagan’s statement to the FBI that said “in the back of the truck was a Lely cement mixer.” Gagan recalls that the mixer was approximately four feet high, two feet across, and “shaped like a diamond.”

This may very well have been the device seen later at the Dreamland Motel where McVeigh and one of the John Doe’s were staying that was seen by a motel witness, David King, who said he recalled seeing a Ryder truck with a trailer attached to it in the parking lot on April 17th. Inside the trailer was an object secured by a canvas tarp. According to King, “It was squarish shape, and it came to a point on top, about three or four feet high.”

In May of 1995, I had a call from one of my sources who asked that I meet him in a restaurant in Tulsa and that he had “something of interest.”

When I arrived and sat down, he produced an 8x12 envelope and extracted some large color photos. “I took these over Camp Gruber last November during deer season. I thought it was something interesting going on but didn’t know exactly what it was. But after the Oklahoma City bombing and the description of the Ryder truck and a fertilizer bomb, it hit me that this might be relevant.”

He handed me the photos, and in them, taken from an airplane, was a strange looking fenced compound with four green military GP medium tents, some other vehicles, and a Ryder truck. Also easily seen was a dirt truck loading ramp and something looked like a mixing machine. On the ground were patches of some yellow substance—possibly a chemical compound that had spilled.

I later contacted one of my friends who was stationed at Camp Gruber, our local National Guard training base located east of Muskogee, Oklahoma, and he said that it was a secret project and that he didn’t know much about it, but that the base personnel were ordered to stay away from it.

There were other photos, some showing some small trailers that looked like monitoring stations parked around the perimeter of a large field, and a set of bleachers. It appeared that something was going to happen in the field and there would be spectators.

What that was, no one knew. Whether this had anything to do with the Oklahoma City bombing was anyone's guess. But it was definitely strange concerning the timing, the Ryder truck, the location, and the equipment shown in the photos.

Hoffman interviewed Gagan and sent me a fifteen page transcript of the interview, dated 3/8/97. Gagan answered questions about his drug running and moving explosives to and from various parts of Colorado, Arizona and Nevada—usually Las Vegas. He also referenced in several places in the interview meeting with Colombians regarding moving cocaine, and with "Iranians" and Arabs in moving explosives. When Hoffman asked if he had ever heard of Juan Garcia Abrego he said that he didn't remember that name, but he knew of several of the Colombians and at least three Arabs.

Gagan said at one point the Arabs asked him if he would agree to being involved in terrorism, and he asked "what does it pay?" The answer was a quarter of a million dollars. Gagan told Hoffman that that was the money that he was living on, and would not have to work for a long time. He said that the money as far as he could tell came out of the Cali cartel in Colombia.

Several things stood out about the interview with Gagan: the connections between the Iranians, Arabs and Colombians, and the drugs and explosives and the mention of terrorism. I knew that several anti-American factions in the Middle East had linked up with drug cartels to infiltrate the U.S., and that the cartels were also selling arms to the various terrorist groups. And it was by then common knowledge due to Iran/Contra arms dealing, that we, through Israel, had provided arms, HAWK missiles and airplane parts among other things to the Iranians to raise funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In the interview Gagan related that on April 10th, 1995, he received a note instructing him to meet a man in the law library of the U.S Court House in Denver. Gagan's contact was dressed in a blue Nike cap and jumpsuit. "I just gave the U.S. Marshals a bomb warning," said Gagan, "and they didn't call me back." I had to go somewhere to cover my ass. I came back, and I got a note saying 'we need to see you; come to the U.S. Law Library.' I thought it was the U.S. Marshals or FBI. I get there and say, 'Hey, you got the shit?' referring to the information about the planned bombing. He says 'Hey, we got everything taken care of. We need you to do this.'" The new contact wasn't one of Gagan's Arab counterparts or a Colombian. "He was government," recalled Gagan. "He was probably CIA."

The mystery figure asked Gagan to drive a trailer to Junction City, Kansas. In the back was the same Lely mixer that Gagan had driven to Golden, Colorado on January 14th at the behest of Omar. This mixer was now on its way to Junction City at the request of a government agent!

Gagan did as he was told. The date was then April 11th, three days before McVeigh checked into the Dreamland Motel in Junction City. It was also the same time that witnesses described seeing a Ryder trucked parked at Geary Lake where authorities allege the fertilizer bomb was mixed.

Gagan had given the FBI a lead after hearing about the two Middle Eastern males in blue jogging suits who ran from the front of the Murrah Building when McVeigh parked the Ryder truck, to escape in the brown GMC pickup truck. But three months later, when Gagan met with an FBI agent behind the Sahara hotel in Las Vegas, the agent told him "we're not interested in pursuing the lead." Gagan told Hoffman "These two Middle Eastern dudes that were seen running from the scene, that's the same description I had given, you know—Omar and Ahmad—to the FBI on September 14th!"

Could "Ahmad" be Abraham Ahmad who worked for Samir Khalil, and was seen catching a flight out of Oklahoma City on the morning of the bombing, only to be returned to the U.S. by the British authorities at Heathrow? And could "Omar" be another one of Khalil's Iraqi employees? Since the FBI would not follow up on Gagan's information we'll never know.

Gagan, with no protection from the government, suffered several threats on his life, and in one instance was beaten so badly he ended up in the hospital with multiple injuries. In 1997 he filed a law suit in Denver against the federal government. In his lawsuit, filed in January of that year, Gagan asserted that he told the FBI in September 1994 that he had information on a plot to blow up a federal building, but that the FBI ignored his information.

The Denver Rocky Mountain News reported on August 11, 1995 that McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones said his team was contacted by a former FBI informant and told of the facts that Gagan provided to the bureau, specifically that a Midwest federal building was going to be bombed in April 1995, that the conspirators were Arabs, Latin Americans and Americans and that he was recruited to carry a detonator in a truck by these people.

Gagan claimed that the FBI covered up the bombing because highly-placed government officials and others are linked to the drug operation for which he worked.

He claimed that the international drug operation was supervised by a "Jack DeVoe."

Jack DeVoe was someone whose name had come up in my various investigations into the drug trade. He owned an airplane charter service in Miami, Florida, that was implicated in drug smuggling. One of his pilots, in court testimony when DeVoe and others were arrested, said that "we flew over 250 loads of marijuana and cocaine into this country in one year, and never got caught!" This particular pilot said that they bribed police officials in South America and the Bahamas, but never had to in the U.S.. Asked how that was possible, he said "We never needed to. We never saw any."

Also, one of my contacts mentioned a "Jack DeVoe who was a Mossad agent." Coincidence?

I could understand this because when Bill Clinton was in office, U.S. drug enforcement aircraft (DEA and Coast Guard) were often grounded when large shipments aboard drug smuggling airplanes were inbound. I was once at the Air National Guard base in Gulfport, Mississippi, on military duty, and noticed several DEA turboprop airplanes on the ramp near our fighter jets. I walked down to their office and had a chat with the pilots, since I, too, was a law enforcement pilot in my civilian job. In the conversation I mentioned that I had not seen any of their airplanes take off since I had been there (about a week), and the reply shocked me. "We have to stand down when Washington tells us to."

I asked what would make Washington tell them when to fly and not fly, and the reply was "you'd have to ask them."

No wonder planes could come and go into and from Mena, and Florida, the Gulf Coast and across the Mexican border uninhibited. It was one more case of those at the top being highly involved in the drug smuggling and profiteering.

One thing is sure: from all that Hoffman and I could find out, Cary Gagan was a wealth of valuable information and a useful CI, but he was, on purpose or not, totally mishandled. He simply had too much information to be ignored, and from what Hoffman and I could determine, much of it matched what we either already knew, or would find out in the future.

CHAPTER 12

Terry Nichols and the Philippine Connection

"Although Philippine authorities advised American authorities of the alliance between the Abu Sayyaf, Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida, and the American neo-Nazis, the US appeared to ignore the warnings; until Sept. 11."

The Manila Times
February 15, 2002

In March of 1994 I wrote a letter to then U.S. Senator David Boren, one of our two senators from Oklahoma, complaining about the influx of Iraqi POWs and so-called refugees. I did this in response to a short article in VFW magazine in February of that year titled "Update on Iraqi POW Resettlement." The short article was a letter written by Representative Elton Gallegly of the U.S. House of Representatives in response to an earlier article titled "Enemy Ex-POWs in our Midst." The article read "I am still strongly pushing legislation to bar former Iraqi POWs from entering the United States. The State Department continues to insist that the U.S. has a moral obligation to accept Iraqi soldiers, in particularly deserters. This is an insult to every American veteran. I hope your readers will join me in working to stop this offensive practice at once.

"So far as I know, the promised review of our screening process—if it ever began—has not been completed. Despite passage of my amendment, the State Department is determined to get its way: It plans to admit at least 750 more former Iraqi soldiers during 1994. I strongly urge your readers to let Congress and the White House know their feelings on this issue. If Americans voice their outrage, maybe even the State Department will hear it."

After reading this, and having been one of the reservists who had prepared for deployment to Kuwait during Desert Shield (but orders were cancelled at the last minute because Desert Storm was initiated before I could receive my travel orders) I was incensed that the idiots in the State Department were bringing in enemy soldiers to this country, which would not only be costly to American taxpayers, but would pose a huge security risk if any were still loyal to Saddam Hussein.

I wrote Senator Boren, a liberal Democrat and avid Clinton supporter, a letter complaining about the State Department's actions, which were obviously supported by President George H.W. Bush to a certain extent, then by William Jefferson Clinton for many more ex-POWs in an ongoing influx two years after the Gulf war ended.

Boren's response to me read:

Dear Mr. Roberts,

"Thank you for taking the time to share your views with me. It was good to hear from you. I appreciate knowing your thoughts regarding the resettlement of Iraqi refugees in the United States. The war and postwar rebellions against Saddam Hussein created a flood of Iraqi refugees, including 39,000 Iraqis in camps in Saudi Arabia. The Bush Administration agreed to participate in a multinational resettlement program for these refugees recommended by the United Nations. In 1992, the United States accepted about 3,440 Iraqi refugees, of which about 300 were former Iraqi soldiers, anti-Saddam rebels, and their families. About 4,600 Iraqis will be accepted for 1993, of which about 650 will be former Iraqi soldiers, anti-Saddam rebels, and their families."

The letter, dated March 14, 1994, closed with the typical form letter salutations and signature block. But it was easy to see that I was not the only letter writer to complain about this horrible decision to allow un-vetted enemy soldiers into the country as what was written was clearly a form letter. You could tell because it said "About 600 Iraqis will be accepted for 1993…", and both my letter and his response were written long after that, in 1994.

Considering the fact that the dozen or so former Iraqi soldiers that worked for Samir Khalil in Oklahoma City were "refugees" brought in under this program, and that more cells existed around the country, one could only imagine how may cells would be out there out of about 50,000 Iraqis that were resettled in the U.S.! And that would just be the Iraqis. Other Muslim nations were also represented in the influx of Islamics to the United States, and very few of them cared about assimilating into our culture or communities, but instead formed enclaves of entire neighborhoods consisting of only Muslims, Muslim shops, schools and mosques. This was (and remains) a recipe for disaster.

Prior to the Oklahoma City bombing, one indicator of imported Islamic terrorism occurred in California. In December of 1994, just four months before the Oklahoma City bombing, an "Arab" businessman named Mohammed Jamal Khalifa was arrested in Santa Rita, California for falsifying a visa application. Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman Greg Gaghne said he was being held without bond in San Francisco pending deportation. But the following month Khalifa was convicted in absentia in Jordan of plotting terrorism and was sentenced to life imprisonment—if he was deported to Jordan.

At the same time authorities here discovered that Khalifa, a Saudi national, was being investigated in the Philippines for attempting to import Islamic terrorism to the mostly Catholic country.

Philippine Interior Secretary Rafael Alunan said Khalifa was believed to be a key figure in efforts to bring Middle Eastern-style Islamic extremism to the country's six million Muslims. He described Khalifa as an associate of six Muslim extremists, all "Arabs," who were arrested on April 1st in a Manila suburb in a raid on an apartment leased by al-Qaida operative Abdul Hakim Murad and World Trade Center bombing suspect Ramzi Yousef after a chemical fire drew first the fire department and then the Philippine National Police. The police found Yousef's lap top computer and managed to glean reams of information from it. Philippine intelligence discovered Yousef and others were involved in a plot to blow up United Airlines passenger jets over the Pacific between Los Angeles and Hong Kong in what was called Operation Bojinka. a large-scale, three-phase attack planned by Ramzi Yousef and Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, for January 1995. Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, known in the Intel world simply as "KSM", was one evil character, but more importantly he was the right hand man of one Usama bin Ladin, later referred to as Osama bin Ladin.

Philippine police also disclosed that the two conspirators were also planning to kill Pope John Paul II during his upcoming January visit to the Philippines. But police raided the apartment a week before the arrival of the Pope and arrested Murad. But they missed Yousef, who managed to get away and flee to Pakistan—where he was arrested in February and finally deported to the United States to stand trial for the 1993 World Trade Center bombing.

Khalifa was a key figure in efforts to recruit members for the Abu Sayyaf group, a Filipino extremist movement that plotted numerous terrorist attacks in the Philippines and abroad. In one attack alone, a raid on a southern Philippine town named Ipil, Abu Sayyaf guerrillas killed 53 people. Abu Sayyaf, whose name translates into "Father of the Swordsmith," eventually in later years adopted the black flag of ISIS and pledged allegiance to Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.

In an article in Japan's Kyodo News Service, it was reported that a highly classified report stated "Khalifa's network had links with extremists in Iraq, Jordan, Turkey, Russia, Malaysia, the United Arab Emirates, Romania, Lebanon, Syria, Pakistan, Albania, the Netherlands and Morocco."

There is no way one person at Khalifa's level could run such a network. It had to go much higher than that, but it was obvious that with this many countries infiltrated by Islamic terrorists, that even more had to be subject to the same—which would include beyond a doubt, the United States.

When one examines the list of countries, one can see that eight are Muslim countries, and the rest have significant Muslim immigrant populations. The United States, in 1994, also had several Muslim enclaves that were growing in various parts of the country, with Oklahoma City being high on the list.

One of our main areas of interest in investigating the Oklahoma City bombing was Terry Nichols. It was freely known that Nichols was a friend of McVeigh's, and that they served together in the Army, and that Nichols turned himself in after McVeigh was caught when McVeith's name was broadcast on television news. But who was he, and what part, if any, did he play in the bombing?

We discovered that Nichol was married to a Filipina, Marife, that he met in the Philippines during a trip there, and that her father was a Philippine police officer, but not much more was known until McVeigh's defense attorney, Stephen Jones, following leads, sent investigators to the Philippines to see what they could dig up on Nichols. This resulted in a treasure trove of information that led us to discover even more connections in both the Philippines and in the U.S.

Sometime in 2002, five years after I retired from the Tulsa Police Department and was deep into my second career as a writer, publisher and investigative journalist (and still deeply involved in the OKC investigation) I came into contact with a former Texas oil engineer named Robert "Bob" Bickel who was also investigating the bombing. At the time he was working for Oklahoma City attorney Mike Johnston, who also worked to get to the truth of the event, and was David Hoffman's attorney in the Revell case. Bickel had been an informant and undercover agent during the Iran/Contra affair, and had been a good friend of reporter Danny Casolaro who was murdered in a motel room before he could meet with a source just days before being able to complete his book on government corruption titled "The Octopus." Bob was very dedicated to finding out what actually happened in the OKC case and who was involved, and he was like a bloodhound.

After comparing notes and resources we fielded the idea of eventually writing a book on the subject that would expose what had really happened, who was involved, and the secrets behind the scene of one massive government coverup. By then I no longer lived in Tulsa, and if my phones were again tapped I didn't care. The bottom line is that if Bickel was ready to pursue a joint effort to write such a book, then so was I. Unfortunately, the book project did not materialize and Bickel went on to other projects. I have since lost track of him.

Over the ensuing weeks and months we maintained constant contact. Bob would fax me documents he came across and I would do the same.

At the same time an old friend and fellow Soldier of Fortune magazine article writer and staff writer for SOF, Tom Reisinger, began providing me with reams of information and documents concerning what SOF was finding out about the bombing through their contacts. SOF owner and editor Lt. Col. Robert K. "Bob" Brown had myriad contacts in the "spook world" and with special operations folks in various places. I had contacts they didn't have, and they had contacts I didn't have. As the Brits would say, "it was magic!"

As all this was happening more and more information came to light about Nichols. It seemed that he was not the quiet Kansas farmer that he appeared to be. Instead, if anything, he was more important than McVeigh. Probing into his background showed that he had made several trips to the Philippines, costing over $100,000 when all his costs were considered, and then adding in purchases he made such as gold and a large stash of cash. But he didn't have a job. No income. No employer of record. So how did he manage to do this?

Information developed that he had taken trips organized by a "travel agency" in Arizona that specialized in "sex trips" to the Philippines. This agency was run by one "Tom Shelton" who also used the name John Lepney which we felt was his real name.

But what was Nichols doing in the Philippines, and why did he go back so many times?

The answer came in the form of information developed by Philippine intelligence in a report dated November 26th, 1996. It was the transcript of a Philippine interview with a confidential informant conducted on November 24th of that year. Though somewhat hard to read, what follows is what was written (some typos and misspellings and punctuation corrected by me for clarity but translational context remains):

"Serafin Uy: is a wealthy businessman, who incurred in lumber & hardware business, he is uncle of Edwin Uy who has a criminal record of various kidnappings in Catabato.

"They were also able to establish businesses in many places in Mindanao to wit: the Artimco in Suragao del Sur, is owned and managed by Serafin and a certain Serafin Lim who is a company associate in this business venture. Later Serafin Lim was kidnapped and is missing as of this writing. The link of Edwin Uy to the dreaded Abu-S Group was established through the help of Jacaria (Jack) Sapil, who is a business associate of John Lepney, an American citizen and a friend & business partner of Terry Nichols, an American citizen who is incurred both with Lepney in smuggling from Taiwan to Davao “John Lepney’s association with Terry Nichols had been able to widen their organization to a jointly held business of dealing with Pedophiles and white slavery by transporting women from the Philippines to Taiwan & some other parts of the world to include Australia. A certain Mark Nicholson or Anthony Dutroux, who is a close associate of Terry Nichols also is connected to the illegal activities here in the Philippines. Later in 1991 on December 17, we were able to meet with Abdul Hakim Murad, Wali Khan, and a certain Abdul Basit, which I later knew to be Ahmed Youssef (author’s note: This would be Abdul Basit Mahmoud Abdul Karim, or Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, the World Trade Center bomber). Through a certain Zacaria [Moussaoui] in Davao City Terry Nichols was introduced together with John Lepney and we talked about organizational alliance by helping the Arabs to procure FA (firearms) from Cebu and Manila, and explosive chemicals. After that meeting three Arabs were escorted by (E. Angeles) to Basilan Province to see ASG Leader (Abdurajik Abubakar Janjalani). After our meeting with ASG leader we go to Zambo City to meet a certain Bob, a US citizen and talked about Granite tilling used to making steel in Zamboanga del Sur.

City.

“In Davao City, KM 11, Sasa, we were able to meet with a certain Willy, a Maguindanaoan, with Abdul Hakim Murad, Wali Khan & (blacked out) to meet Terry groups. That time I was already elected as Operations Officer of ASG so my presence is much needed, and they talked and promised to support the ASG—in connection with bombing activities, which they knew Terry Nichols will be responsible for procuring bomb chemical through Jimmy Chlong of Quezon City, Manila.

“Where Terry assured us it that to make it symbolical it must be together with the USA, Pakistan & some other places for our organization’s objectives. That was also the time when they handed me a Philippine file of terrorist activities, time and month & it will be done also through out the world through Murad & Khan. In the U States it will be Terry, who will also help the group to find strategic targets with impact, for the organization also to protect their objectives.

“Fe Villacorta, who her husband name is Zeidler—a German national—is a friend of Business partners Mark Nicholson and Anthony Dotroux, a German national also. The involvement of Zeidler and Villacorta is through Dotroux…in these activities Tom Shelton, which I only met once, has mentioned his involvement in this operation. Dotroux & Zeidler is financially aided by a certain Timothy, who were introduced by Terry Nichols as his close associate in the United States.”

The document went on to describe the affiliation with a mysterious organization called The Solar Temple of Light being the umbrella organization. Neither I, nor Bickel or Reisinger knew of such an organization’s existence and we never were able to track it down. The transcript mentioned that it was an occult organization and “is bound with the spirit of secrecy” and at one “ceremony of inductions” described by Edwin Angeles of Abu Sayyaf: “John Lepney, Terry Nichols, Omar Ibri Mahmoud, Ashidoto Oshigawah of Japan representing AUM, Jimmy Lee KUI of the Moonies in Taiwan, Ahmed Youssef, Wali Khan and myself, who represented the Judullah of the Philippines were initiated. This was on March 20, 1989 in Davao City. Five days later I was sent to the Middle East for further study about Fundamentalism & Extremism, and infiltration.” There was much speculation regarding this so-called “Temple.” Questions surfaced regarding whether or not it was associated with Aquino’s “Temple of Set,” or Anton LeVey’s “Temple of Satan.” Some people wondered if such an organization would consider the lives lost at the Murrah Building were also considered a sacrifice! Research will show that April 19th, besides being the anniversary of Waco, and of the FBI assault on the Covenant, Sword and Arm of the Lord in Arkansas, it is the beginning of the week of sacrifice for Satanists. Whether any of this has to do with this “ Solar Temple of Light” is unknown.

Further investigation brought up another name: Mohammed Khalifa, the same Khalifa that was arrested in California in December of 1994. According to news reports in the Philippines Janjalani “was provided some funding by a Saudi Islamist, Mohammed Jamal Khalifa, who came to the Philippines in 1987 or 1988 and was head of the Philippine branch of the International Islamic Relief Organization foundation. A defector from Abu Sayyaf told Filipino authorities, ‘The IIRO was behind the construction of Mosques, school buildings and other livelihood projects’ but only ‘in areas penetrated, highly influenced and controlled by the Abu Sayyaf.’” According to the defector “Only 10 to 30% of the foreign funding goes to the legitimate relief and livelihood projects and the rest go to terrorist operations”

On reading and de-cyphering this I made hand written notes in the margin of my file document. The key players of interest to the case are Ramzi Yousef, Mohammed Wali Khan, AKA Mohammed Wali Khan Ahman Shaw, Abdul Hakim Murad, and of most significance Khalid Sheik Mohammed! I also noted one of the aliases was Zacaria Mousawi (correct spelling is Zacarias Moussaoui—Moussaoui, who was a French citizen, born in France to immigrant parents, was the 20th co-conspirator to the 9/11 attacks on the World Trade Center, but he had been arrested by the FBI before he could board an aircraft and remains in federal custody).

This would not be the only intel that would come out of the Philippines. There was yet another transcript of an interview with Edwin Angeles’ widow after he was assassinated. Edwin Angeles was second-in-command of the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG), but was also a confidential informant for the Philippine government. We believe he is the “CI” who gave the above information.

Due to the efforts of Attorney Mike Johnston, who represented the Oklahoma City bombing victims, and Bob Bickel who was working at the time with Johnston as his Senior Investigator and Legal Analyst, more information was obtained by a contact they developed in the Philippines, Manila Times correspondent Dorian Zumel Sicat. Some of the information was given to Insight magazine’s reporter Kenneth Timmerman.

In a 2002 article in the now defunct “Insight On The News” magazine written by Kenneth R. Timmerman we find this excerpt:

INSIGHT has learned that the widow of Philippine-government intelligence agent Edwin Angeles has provided audiotaped testimony to an investigator working for the American victims’ families that directly ties Iraqi intelligence agents to Terry Nichols, the man sentenced in 1998 to life in prison for his role in bombing the Alfred P. Murrah Building seven years ago.

Elmina Abdul is the 27-year-old widow of Angeles, one of the cofounders of the Abu

Sayyaf group, a Muslim terrorist organization in the Philippines whose members trained in Osama bin Laden's camps in Afghanistan. Her astonishing story, revealed in this exclusive story for the first time, could blow the lid off what a growing number of people believe is a U.S. government cover-up of vital evidence in the Oklahoma City bombing case. It also exposes an alleged plot by former Philippine president Fidel Ramos to manipulate Abu Sayyaf as a means of enhancing his personal political power.

With the knowledge that she was dying of liver disease, Elmina agreed to meet with Dorian Zumel Sicat, a Manila Times correspondent serving as an investigative liaison in the Philippines and the Pacific Rim for Oklahoma City lawyer Mike Johnston, who represents the victims' families. "I want to tell the truth of what I know of my late husband," she said in a taped audio statement.

Angeles was "what they call a 'deep-penetration agent'" who was working for "some very powerful men in the DND," the Philippine national defense-intelligence agency, Elmina said. Angeles was arrested in 1995 after he had negotiated a deal to turn himself in to the Philippine authorities. By that point, the Abu Sayyaf he had helped create in 1991 with bin Laden protege Abdurajjak Abu Bakr Janjalani had carried out a series of terrorist attacks. These included a failed assault on a U.S. Information Agency library in Manila in January 1991 that was part of a worldwide terrorist campaign against U.S. interests orchestrated by Iraq during the Persian Gulf War.

"Does the name 'Ramzi Yousef' mean something to you, Mr. Sicat?" Elmina asked. Angeles had extensive meetings with Yousef and two Americans, including one whom he called "Terry" or "The Farmer," she said.

Angeles ultimately was cleared of terrorism charges at trial when documents proving he was working as a government agent were produced. He was released from prison in 1996, but not before he provided astonishing details during a videotaped interrogation by Philippine police authorities of his activities with Abu Sayyaf, including the secret meetings with Iraqi intelligence agent Yousef, Nichols and the second American identified in the document as John Lepney.

The earliest meetings took place at a Del Monte canning plant in Davao City in late 1992 and early 1993 — just prior to the first World Trade Center bombing. Later meetings with Nichols, Yousef and the second American — whose name has never been revealed until now — took place at Angeles' house in late 1994, according to a report on that interrogation which has been obtained by investigators working for attorney Johnston, who has been joined by Judicial Watch in representing families of those murdered in the Oklahoma City bombing.

Angeles also revealed the meetings to Elmina, who became his third wife in 1997, "because he knew that he would soon be killed," she said in her audiotaped statement with Sicat, which was witnessed by a Philippine-government official. "He wanted me to know everything so that if anything happened to him I could tell others." Also present at those meetings was a half-brother of Yousef, who was using the pseudonym Ahmad Hassim, she said.

Edwin Angeles widow's interview presented in exact wording and format that we received from the Philippines:

The following interview with ELMINA ABDUL, widow of EDWIN ANGELES, one of the cofounders of the ABU SAYYAF GROUP (ASG), and deep cover agent for the Defense Intelligence Group (DIG) of the Department of National Defense (DND), of the Republic of the Philippines, was taken on March 10, 2002, in the presence of CHRISTOPHER M. PUNO, Information Officer of the Province of Basilan, at BASCOM Hospital, in the general ward.

TRANSLATED TRANSCRIPT OF INTERVIEW WITH ELMINA ABDUL, WIDOW TO EDWIN ANGELES TAKEN AT BASILAN COMMUNITY HOSPITAL GENERAL WARD, ISABELA CITY, PROVINCE OF BASILAN, REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES, BY DORIAN ZUMEL SICAT (DZS), A NEWS CORRESPONDENT FOR MANILA TIMES, OMEGA NEWS SERVICE (USA)

(After introduction to ELMINA ABDUL by Provincial Information Officer Christopher Puno)

NOTE: I interviewed ELMINA in Tagalog, she answered me in Chavacano and Cebuano, two of the local dialects spoken in Basilan. She did not speak in the indigenous dialect because she knew that I do not speak or understand that dialect.

DZS: Good morning Ms. Angeles

DZS: How are you feeling this morning?

EA: Not very well.

DZS: Do you feel like talking with me?

EA: Yes, but not so long. I am tired.

DZS: I will try to be as short as possible. Did Chris tell you what I am here to talk to you about?

EA: Yes. And I am the one who asked him to look for you after I was told that you are interested in the truth about my husband.

DZS: Good. Okay. You are not Edwin’s first wife, is that true?

EA: Yes. I am his third wife. For Muslim men, they can have even four wives, if each of the other ones approve.

DZS: How, when and where did you meet Edwin?

EA: We met when he was in the Provincial Jail here in Isabela, in 1995. I was then working for the government radio station, dxOS (Philippine Information Agency)/PIA.

DZS: That was after his capture?

EA: Yes.

DZS: When did you marry him?

EA: In 1997.

DZS: I am going to ask you some very sensitive questions now. Is that all right with you?

EA: Yes. I want to tell the truth of what I know of my late husband.

DZS: Did you know that he was one of those who founded the ASG, along with the late Abdurajak Abubakar Janjalani, in 1991?

EA: Yes. I know also why he was one of them.

DZS: Can you tell me why?

EA: Yes, I want to tell you why. I want now to tell the truth about my husband. I will die soon. I want you to know the truth. Will you write the truth, Mr. Sicat?

DZS: Yes. I will. I promise.

EA: You are not afraid?

DZS: More than you know, Mrs. Angeles.

EA: Good. Maybe you will stay alive and safe because of your fear. I will tell you that Edwin was ordered to do that.

DZS: Can you explain please.

EA: He was what they call a deep penetration agent or DPA.

DZS: Can you explain please?

EA: As I told you, he was given orders.

DZS: By whom?

EA: Some very powerful men in the DND.

DZS: Did he tell you why?

EA: No. Only that he was ordered to help to organize the ASG and to report all developments.

DZS: Did he tell you who it was?

EA: Not by names. But he told me only at the highest levels.

DZS: Did he ever tell you about his activities in the ASG before he met you?

EA: He told me everything. I do not believe that he would hide anything from me when we were talking alone.

DZS: Please do not be offended, but how do you know that?

EA: Not only because I was his wife, but because he knew that he would soon be killed. He wanted me to know everything so that if anything happened to him I could tell others.

DZS: Can I ask you about some things that happened back in the mid-90s? 1993, 1994?

EA: Yes. I will try to answer what you ask.

DZS: Did he ever talk to you about meetings with Arabs or Americans?

EA: Yes, once he had met with some Arabs and Americans in 1994, in Davao (City), or General Santos (City).

DZS: Did he tell you who they were?

EA: Does the name Ramsey Yousef mean something to you Mr. Sicat?

DZS: Ahmad Hassim. Does that mean something to you?

EA: He had met with them. And an American who he called Terry or the Farmer, and another American whom he did not name.

DZS: Was the American he named as Terry, Terry Nichols?

EA: He did not mention the surname. Only Terry.

DZS: Did he tell you why and how many times they had met?

EA: They met almost every day for one week. They met in an empty bodega (warehouse). They talked about bombings. They mentioned bombing government buildings in San Francisco, Saint Louis and in Oklahoma. The Americans wanted instructions how to make and to explode bombs. He (Edwin) told me that Janjalani was very interested in paying them much money to explode the buildings. The money was coming from Yousef and the other Arab.

DZS: Did he tell you when the bombs would explode; when they exploded?

EA: He told me that the Americans exploded one bomb in Oklahoma in 1995, after he was arrested and after we first met.

DZS: Did he ever tell you who was supplying the money for the bombing of the building, I mean who Yousef was working with or for?

EA: Mr. Sicat, you are the mediaman. Do you not know that Yousef was representing Iraq and Saddam Hussein? Do you not know that?

DZS: Did Edwin tell you that?

EA: Not only Edwin, but others that were close to us, before he was killed. One time, a soldier (Philippine Army) and Edwin were talking secretly. I was there because Edwin demanded. The soldier ordered Edwin never to tell anybody about the Iraqis.

DZS: Did you ever see that soldier before or after that time?

EA: Only two times before. He was the one who would talk to him for information.

DZS: Mrs. Angeles, do you know who killed your husband, Edwin?

EA: The ones who used him and then betrayed him, Mr. Sicat. (She grows visibly weaker). I want to rest now.

DZS: I understand. I'll let you rest now. Thank you so much, Mrs. Angeles. You have told me so much. I will try to see you tomorrow if you are up to it.

NOTE: I was not able to speak with ELMINA again. She became too weak and incoherent the following day. A few days later, the doctors had diagnosed that she was terminal. She needed to be transferred to Davao City to the Regional Hospital (government) for treatment. A few days later, while I was in Davao, arranging for her admission to the Regional Hospital, Chris told me that she could no longer be moved. She would die in transit. Since Muslims require burial within 24 hours of death, I understood the reasoning. The following day, Chris contacted me to say that ELMINA ABDUL, widow to EDWIN ANGELES (killed by unknown assailants in 1998), died in the pre-dawn hours Saturday March 30. She was the last one to talk with her husband before he was killed. I was the last and only reporter to talk with her about her husband before she died.

Elmina Abdul Angeles Statement

In late July 2003 I received an extensive interview transcript from Tom Reisinger that was from an interview that was conducted in the Philippines on November 27th, 1996 in the office of the provincial Warden of Basilan with Edwin Angeles (Informant #3) while he was still alive (and had been serving as a confidential informant for Philippine Intelligence and Philippine National Police (PNP). The interview was conducted by private investigators employed by McVeigh attorney Stephen Jones, the PNP, and agents of the National Bureau of Intelligence (NBI). The document is 22 pages long, but as I waded through it several important statements stuck out.

To save the reader the tedious task of reading a typical interview transcript of “ah’s” and “uh’s” and standard lead questions, I will only provide the questions and answers here that are relevant to this case:

INTERVIEW CONDUCTED NOVEMBER 24, 1996 WITH EDWIN ANGELES, SECOND IN COMMAND OF ABU SAYYAF AT BASILAN, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

(Beginning on page 9 regarding the meeting that Nichols had attended with Abu Sayyaf)

Interviewer: Did Terry Nichols plan a specific target or did he name a specific target during those…during the meeting you had with him?

#3: Yes.

Interviewer: What was…his specific target?

#3: The Israeli Embassy in Manila, one, and …World Trade Center bombing, that was accomplished, the federal building, the…Murrah Federal Building, the Murrah Federal Building, and…the…some flag carriers of the American and Philippines.

Interviewer: How about Ramzi Youssef? Did he have a specific target?

#3: Yes, he was the one…he was the person whom Terry Nichols ordered to do so.

Interviewer: So, we are made to understand that it was Terry Nichols who was directing Ramzi Youssef?

#3: Yeah.

Interviewer: So Terry Nichols was the handler, as you…we may call it, of…Ramzi Youssef at that time?

#3: Yes.

Interviewer: So we can attribute that Terry Nichols was the mastermind of the World Trade bombing?

#3: Yes, including the…the so-called…American plane. I wasn't able to remember if that happened in 1989 [blank], he did mention that as an example to us.

The conversation then changed to the Abu Sayyaf planned attack on Pope John Paul II, then to what BOJINKA stood for:

Interviewer (regarding the raid on Ramzi Youssef's apartment): In those items that you mentioned that were seized by the police, was the name of Terry Nichols listed in that?

#3: No, ah…a codename.

Interviewer: What was the code name?

#3: BOJINKA.

Interviewer: What is the name BOJINKA?

#3: Ah…J is for John, N is for Nichols, K is for Kala, and A is of Abdul Basit. B is as… BOJINKA operation. Meaning BOJINKA operation and then JNKA, BOJINKA.

(Author's note: Again we see the reference to the mysterious "Kala" cult or organization that Nichols was credited with founding—and in some references McVeigh was a co-founder, and more than likely the "John" referred to was John Lepney).

The next several pages go into various meetings and who attended them, which in itself is a wealth of information for not only the Philippine law enforcement and intelligence personnel, but our own FBI and CIA. But did the FBI or CIA receive this information?

We find an answer on page 18 of the transcript:

Interviewer: In the raid of the PNP in Manila, during the visit of John Paul II, you said that there were items seized. Were you with the raiding team at that time?

#3: No.

Interviewer: How did you know there were items seized?

#3: …I was already with the Special Investigation Group in February 1995.

Interviewer: Who raided he place? What particular…unit in the PNP?

#3: Special Branch of…Technical Special Branch of the Intelligence Command and the Western Police District.

Interviewer: The Western Police District? So…the Western Police District and the Technical Branch of the Intelligence Command of the PNP were brought together during the raid and they were the ones who conducted the raid?

#3: …a certain Major Angeles and a Major Albert Farro.

Interviewer: Were there investigators from the Western Police who also investigated the case after the raid?

#3: Yes, even the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a certain Dick [blank].

Interviewer: After the raid?

#3: Yeah. In 1995 I met Dick [blank] from the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He's investigating the case.

Interviewer: So, the Federal Bureau of Investigation agent, did he become party to or did he become privy to the evidence confiscated?

#3: Yes.

Interviewer: He saw all the evidence?

#3: Yes.

Interviewer: Did he take notes of the evidence?

#3: Yes.

Interviewer: Can you name a few of the items of evidence confiscated?

#3: Yes, like material used for ah…explosives, diskettes for ah…computer…computer disks and reading materials.

Interviewer: How many diskettes, computer diskettes did the raiding team seize?

#3: I wasn't able to count but there were many.

The interview transcript continued for three more pages, but most of it was shutting down the interview session. The three things that really caught my attention were the reference that Nichols was the handler and not the handled regarding Abu Sayyaf and Ramzi Youssef, including the reference to the World Trade Center bombing of 1993 and some reference to an "American airplane" that was bombed. The second was another reference to the Kali (Temple of Light) that would bear more investigating, and finally that the FBI had much if not all of this information before the Oklahoma City bombing. And to add to that when I was involved with working with them in Oklahoma no one was interested in any Middle Eastern connection, and how determined Clinton, Reno, Freeh, Keating, and the mainstream media insisted that there was no Middle Eastern connection. It was a case of "don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up." Or, it was a simple basic cover-up of the Nichols/Philippine/Abu Sayyaf/Osama bin Ladin connections altogether.

In June of 2003 I received another piece of the puzzle regarding the Muslim connections in the Philippines. Tom Reisinger faxed me three separate messages. The first was a photo of Tom Shelton, AKA John Lepney, and the caption below the photo was the notation "This photograph was taken of Tom Shelton, (AKA John Lepney, AKA Agusto "Guz" Berino), with one of the Shelton Tour Guides, Daisy Legaspi. Shelton was identified by the interviewee who was shown this photo as John Lepney who had attended meetings in 1992/93 with the interviewee and others in which terrorist activities were discussed and planned. Shelton was identified in interviews with daisy Legaspi as Agusto "Guz" Berino."

Below that was a physical on Shelton/Lepney/Berino, and notations about Paradise

Shelton Tours, Shelton's tour business in Scottsdale, Arizona. It described the type of operation as "Sex Tour Operation 1986 through 1996—The operations were advertised through videotapes and solicitations through print ads."

The information, in the form of a law enforcement "Information and Location Inquiry," went on to describe the operations of Shelton, who he was associated with in the Philippines and in Asia, and stated "Shelton is closely associated with several known organized crime personalities and was also involved in trafficking in other commodities… Shelton is implicated in having the ability to move throughout the Asia Pacific region with a great deal of ease due to his association with various organized crime individuals or groups. It has been determined that Shelton was known to associate with known terrorists from the late 80s through the early 90s."

In the next fax from Reisinger were a list of names of "persons of interest," and some locations in the Philippines that needed to be checked out. But one notation caught my eye: "John Lepney (AKA Tom Shelton, a partner in Shelton Paradise Tours with Nichols when Nichols came to the P.I.) This guy's bad news, so watch your 6!"

While building my Philippine Connection case file three things stuck out: Nichols was more than a farmer in Kansas, the Abu Sayyaf was involved, and they were tied to Osama bin Laden in Pakistan, so we had definite Muslim/Islamic connections to the Oklahoma City bombing from overseas, and a third American had entered the picture that I had not heard of. The question then was, why would some organized crime sex trafficker be involved with terrorists? His only motive must have been money. But what else struck me in the information Tom sent was that Shelton and Nichols were partners in the Tour business!

And we thought Nichols didn't have a job.

Digging through my case files further I came across another fax from Reisinger. In it was this: "Through Nichols and/or Lepney, Angeles asserts that he met with Abdul Basit (aka "Ramzi Ahmed Yousef/Youssef"), Jack Sapii (a Filipino from Tibunco), Mark Dutroux, (a German or Belgian), Mark Abji (an Iraqi or Iranian), Abdul Hakim Murad, and Mustafa Jamal Khalifa, bin Ladin's brother-in-law who was said to be establishing front companies for Osama bin Laden, and last, Wali Khan."

Osama bin Ladin's brother-in-law? This was a huge find! How could it be that his name had not come up in all the years since the Oklahoma City bombing and 9/11? Surely he would be in the news and on wanted lists all over the world!

But he was not the only one who should have been high profile but wasn't. I would find out in the first six months after the bombing how another character that had connections to the bombing was not showing up on our radar—had it not been for a contact that I developed in Texas.

To end this chapter, we now have established that Nichols traveled to the Philippines several times, all through a travel service he was in which he was a partner, and his partner was a huge person of interest on many fronts—and not only shady, but dangerous. What is remarkable is that we had discovered that Nichols had renounced his American citizenship in March of 1994 at the Marion Courthouse in Kansas, so how did he, or could he, have a passport? Unless someone becomes a citizen of another country, they would not be able to obtain a passport, or travel abroad or return to this country—unless they had some kind of "special privileges" recognized by our government and U.S. Custom's and Border Patrol.

We know that Nichols, referred to as "the farmer" was tied into a Muslim terrorist organization, which in turn was directly connected to Osama bin Ladin (through his brother-in-law and Sheik Khalid Mohammed, his right hand man). We know that Nichols received bomb training from Ramzi Yousef, and was possibly financed by both his dealings in the sex trade and by al Qaida.

And there was more. He was not the only American that slipped in and out of the Philippines. According to the Manila Times, the U.S. government released a list of 25 international terror suspects believed to have been in the Philippines. The names were Christopher Hamel (American), Michael Colleto (American), Michael Abbot (American), Mark Anthony Finnigin (American), Clifford Mogg (American), Andreas Strassmeir (German), Sharon Toval (Israeli), Michael Harare (Israeli—and rogue Mossad agent), Don Wassall (American), Ronney Lee Atkins (American), Mahylon Andrews (American), Ron Tyler (American), Kadar Kareem (undetermined), Zacarias Moussaoui (French), Chris Chapula (American), Donovan St. Claire (American), Daniel Spiegelman (American), Craig Wesley Hasseltine (American), Juan Garcia Abrego (Mexican), John Bangerter (American), Hashem Alhussaini (Iraqi), Al Husseini Hussain (Iraqi), Mark Strum or Strumm (American).

Several of these names stuck out to me. There was Andreas Strassmeir on the list! Then I saw Michael Harare who, along with his partner Amiram Nir, both Mossad agents, were Manual Noriega's body guards and helped train his elite military guard during the time Noriega was skimming profits from cocaine shipments coming out of Colombia enroute to the U.S. by way of Honduras, Mexico and Mena, Arkansas! According to my sources, the Israeli cut was used to help fund nuclear research in Dimona, Israel. Nir was killed in a plane crash in Mexico, but Harrare disappeared.

And then I saw Mahylon Andrews. I had received enquiries about him from Reisinger and found that Andrews had used three bogus addresses in Tulsa that were nonexistent. And when the thought struck me that he might be tied in with Dennis Mahon, then that would tie him in with Strassmeir! But before I could corner Mahon, he disappeared and later turned up in Arizona where he was eventually convicted of a bombing there and received 40 years in federal custody.

Lastly, there was Juan Garcia Abrego. A man that my FBI contact had told me in 1996 didn't exist.

Columbian Drugs, Mexican Bag Men and Mena

“The Real Rulers in Washington are invisible and exercise power from behind the scenes”

Felix Frankfurter, US Supreme Court Justice

On April 18th, 1995, the day before the bombing, a hotel employee at the Radisson Hotel in Oklahoma City noticed two men dressed “like Arabs, who actually were not Arabs” check in. Then, at the same approximate time, two more men, who did seem to be Middle Eastern, checked in at the Plaza Inn and told the desk clerk they were Mexican. Then the next day, early, another man was seen leaving his room in an Arabic style robe. The first two at the Plaza Inn were witnessed leaving the night before the bombing, and it was reported that there was a Ryder truck in the parking lot witnessed by a security guard.

When I emailed Hoffman with this info, which I received from some of my contacts in Oklahoma City, he wrote back “This is weird. Arabs claiming not to be Arabs, and non-Arabs claiming to be Arabs. It almost sounds like the two groups are trying to set each other up”.

It was a bit much for me too. And there were so many leads and tips that kept coming in that I had to put this one on the back burner by putting the print-out in a new file named “The Mexican Connection.” All two pages of it.

Then, in May, I received a call from one of my state law enforcement contacts in Texas. It had to do with what he had heard through his sources that there was a Mexican connection to the Oklahoma City bombing and that it had to do with cocaine smuggling, money laundering, and the CIA’s Iran/Contra operation. I made notes of everything he told me. The information brought in international connections that stretched all the way to Colombia by way of Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, and Panama.

Once I had the information, I wrote an Intel Memo for both my files and my FBI contact. It would be the first of two memos, with the second being even more detailed. What really got my attention was the reference to the files in the Murrah Building!

My memo, dated May 9th, 1995, with the subject line “Possible lead in the OKC bombing” read:

(Source #1 is my Texas contact—whose identity I never revealed, not even to the FBI. Source #2 is his informant)

1. Source (#1) reported that he “had heard” what he believed to be good information regarding a new angle on the OKC bombing. The original contact/source (#1) is in Texas and it appeared to #1 that his source (#2) was knowledgeable—and frightened—concerning the information he was relaying. Motivation for relaying the information appeared to be “citizen concern” and not reward money as no mention was made of reward, recognition, or other motivation.
2. Source #2 told #1 that he had information that an Arbigo GARCIA, reputed to be a

"Chief in the Mexican Crime Cartel," had both foreknowledge of the OKC bombing, and was involved. Proper spelling of "Arbigo" is not verified. Source #2 told #1 that "everyone in the underground and criminal network in Mexico knows Garcia. Nothing big goes down without him knowing about it, authorizing it, or being involved in some manner.

3. Source #2 related that the Federal building in OKC was destroyed to "get rid of sensitive records." Source #2 stated that during the Whitewater investigation in Arkansas, the investigative records were considered at risk to destruction or theft. Therefore they were moved to Oklahoma City to get them out of Little Rock.
4. Source #2 alluded to the records being buried since they could not be compromised or destroyed by other means.

Speculation concerning the above:

According to published sources, the Columbian cocaine cartels moved drugs into the U.S. during the 1980s by the following route:

1. Shipments were transported from Medellin by small transport aircraft to a Panamanian Air Force base where Manual Noriega's personnel "skimmed" a percentage for personal profit. The remainder was then flown to an American-owned ranch in Honduras, then on to Illopango air base (El Salvadoran Air Force) in El Salvador, where the shipment was divided and put on Southern Air Transport cargo planes and flown via three routes into the U.S., one entering the U.S. in a corridor in Arizona, then carried on to an unknown location in Southern California. From there it was divided again for Los Angeles and San Francisco. The second route flew at low level up the Mexican coastline and arrived in the U.S. at Mena, Arkansas. A third distribution took place at Illopango and was transported to Oaxaca, Mexico, then to a town near Guadalajara where it entered Mexican cartel hands. The Mexican cartel then shipped it in crates marked "Machine Tools" across the Texas border, with some shipments eventually being discovered by Customs, but most getting through due to Customs agents being paid off by this Arbigo Garcia.
2. The cocaine that arrived at Mena was offloaded into smaller aircraft for redistribution to other points, with the profits being taken to Little Rock for laundering. The money was used as payoffs for activities that provided non-serial numbered M-16 rifles, built by Iver-Johnson in Little Rock. These were subsequently delivered to the Contras in Nicaragua by way of Guatemala and Honduras.
3. According to recent publications, subsequent investigations by the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock, the FBI, DEA and IRS produced investigative documents concerning high ranking politicians, corporate executives, lawyers and certain law enforcement officers (state level) involved in the profits, manufacture of arms, money laundering and drug distribution.
4. These documents eventually tied in with the Whitewater affair and subjects involved in same.
5. #2 stated that "Arbigo" sent two "bag men" to OKC to help finance the bombing to > get rid of the documents in the building since reports other than the Whitewater material were part of what was stored there and that would expose those involved in the cocaine smuggling network in both Mexico and Arkansas.

I finished the last page of the memo with seven questions that needed to be answered by the FBI. One of them was to see if they could find out anything about this "Arbigo Garcia," and I specifically said to try different spellings.

A week after submitting this report I went over to the FBI office in Tulsa and asked my contact "did you ever come up with anything on the Mexican drug lord memo I gave you?"

His answer, and I'll never forget it, was "No, it's all hokum. No such guy exists in any of our records or investigations."

I had to find out more from Texas. My jungle sense told me there was something there, especially when the sources mentioned the records!

I called my Texas law enforcement friend and asked if there was anyone in Texas that I might be able to talk to more about this possible connection between cartel money and the OKC bombing. He thought for a moment then said "I have just the guy. How would you like to talk to Sheriff David Williams, the sheriff of Tarrant County?"

Not knowing much about the counties in Texas other than Dallas County and Bexar County (Houston, where my father lived at one time) I assumed Tarrant County must be on the Mexican border. I mentioned to my friend that it would be more than a day's drive from Tulsa to the border, maybe more. Texas is a big state!

"Why would you need to go to the border?" he asked. "Tarrant County is Fort Worth."

The Dallas-Fort Worth area was only 5 hours away.

"When can I meet with him?" I asked.

"How about next week?"

"That'll work," I responded. I felt like I was on a good trail so the trip would be worth it.

"I'll set it up. Also, I have the actual name of the Mexican drug lord. It's Juan Garcia Abrego, and he's mixed up with the Sinaloa Cartel in Mexico and is a conduit for the Medellin Cartel in Columbia. Some say he even works with the Cali cartel, but not much info on that since the Medellin and Cali's are competitors."

I quickly wrote a memo to the FBI that gave them the actual spelling of Abrego's name. I figured that the spelling error was the reason that they did not get a hit on him with my first report. I would eventually find out that there was more to it than that.

When I travelled to Fort Worth for the meeting with Sheriff Williams I was impressed at what a wonderful person he was. He was a good Christian "straight shooter" and a very concerned law enforcement officer. He not only met with me, but brought in his Undersheriff and Chief Criminal Deputy to go over the Mexican information.

Sheriff Williams bio was very telling: “David E. Williams was born and raised in Norman, Oklahoma. His first contact with law enforcement was in the military. He began his civilian law enforcement career in Oklahoma as a patrolman. Williams came to Texas to work as Security Director with the Kenneth Copeland Ministries. His career continued at the Haltom City Police Department where he served as a patrolman, crime prevention officer, and DARE officer.”

In the meeting I found out that there was a definite interest in Abrego by both Sheriff Williams and his Chief Deputy. His chief deputy’s brother had been killed by one of Abrego’s hit men and if there was any way to get to Abrego they were game.

I explained the sketchy information I had so far, and about the “Mexican bag men” who were reported to have come to Oklahoma City to help finance McVeigh and the bombing. Their response was that nothing would be beyond what Abrego could and would do. But their question was why would they bother to dress as Arabs? Would it be to shift suspicion away from Mexicans? Neither of us had the answer to those questions.

I would keep in contact with Sheriff Williams in the ensuing months, and returned to Fort Worth two more times while he was in office. Now I had more information about Abrego to work with—and about cocaine smuggling.

Again, after returning home, I wrote a more extensive report and hand carried it to the FBI office. I handed it to Pete and said “now you might be able to come up with more info on this guy.” I even named other people, including a Texas National Guard Colonel who was in Joint Task Force 6 which was responsible for assisting in guarding the border—and who was on the take. I also listed others in various positions in Texas who were involved in taking payoffs for the cocaine smuggling.

I waited a week, and again after no answer, called him. “Nope,” he said, “nothing on him that I can find.”

In January of 1996 I and my sergeant, Ron Moulton, flew out to Phoenix to pick up a new helicopter from McDonnell Douglas in Mesa. We spent a week there doing acceptance test flights, tracking rotor blades, and having new avionics equipment installed. On one particular flight, while flying with the doors off, we encountered a huge dust storm followed by rain while returning to base from a flight over the mountains northeast of Phoenix. By the time we made it to the field, mostly on instruments, we were soaked with sweat and dust, and our flight suits were caked with splotches of mud. We couldn’t wait to get to the motel to get a shower and get cleaned up.

I turned the TV on just as I was taking my flight suit off. The news was on, and right there in front of me were two FBI agents in raid jackets at the Houston airport walking on each side of, and holding the arms of, one Juan Garcia Abrego, who had just been extradited from Mexico!

We flew home over that weekend and landed in Tulsa on Sunday, January 21st. On Monday morning I started to work, but had to stop at the post office to mail some bill payments. As I was putting stamps on envelopes at a table I looked up, and on the wall were wanted posters. One, right in front of me, was of Juan Garcia Abrego—and he was on the FBI’s Ten Most Wanted Lists! In fact, as I read the poster, it listed his crimes as “Conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute cocaine; money laundering; possession with intent to distribute; conspiracy to import cocaine; continuing criminal enterprise; and filing false 8300s.” Filing false 8300s were IRS forms required to be filed if a person received cash payments over $10,000.00.

At the bottom of the poster was a “Caution” section. It read “Juan Garcia-Abrego, known leader of an international drug-smuggling enterprise, is responsible for the importation of multi-ton quantities of Colombian cocaine as well as marijuana into the United States from Mexico. (Abrego) is known to be in possession of weapons, utilized body guards for his protection, and has ordered the murders of his rivals in the drug business. Consider armed and dangerous.”

The Wanted Poster I received from the Post Office.

Then I saw the small print below. It said “A federal warrant was issued on September 24th, 1993, in the Southern District of Texas, Houston, Texas charging Juan Garcia-Abrego with (the above charges). September 24th, 1993! And, he had been added to the Ten Most Wanted List in March of 1995, a month before the bombing!

The picture in my mind of the newscast in Phoenix was bad enough. But when I saw this poster, and especially the date, I was past angry. I was furious. I hate being lied to, and to be lied to by federal agents whom I’m trying to help added fuel to the fire. It is especially maddening to know that to lie to a federal agent is a felony, but for a federal agent to lie—even to other law enforcement officer—is no crime.

I asked the postmaster if I could have the poster as the subject had been arrested, and he agreed to let me take it. I immediately went home and pulled my thin file with the memos I had given to Pete to check out, and which he had told me that this character wasn’t in their system and references to him were “hokum.”

I then drove directly to the FBI office in Tulsa and asked to see Pete. He was always very friendly and cordial when we met—as are all FBI agents who are taught that honey catches more flies than vinegar—and we sat down in the conference room. I opened my file and pulled out the first memo on Abrego with the misspelled name “Arbigo.”

“Pete, do you remember this memo?” I asked as I slid it across the table.

He looked at it and said “Yeah, I checked it out and didn’t find anything.”

I then shoved the second memo across the table, the one with the correct spelling and more information—three pages of it. “And do you remember this memo on the correct spelling of the guy?”

He looked at it and again said, “Sure. There was nothing on him in our system.”

Having done more than my share of police interrogations I knew how to work an “interview” type meeting. I wanted to make sure that Pete would understand what would happen when this meeting ended.

“Then can you tell me why this very individual that I asked you to check out had a wanted poster from the FBI on every post office wall in the country? After all, he’s on the Ten Most Wanted list, and you told me he wasn’t in the system.” I opened the poster and handed it across the table.

Pete didn’t even pick it up. He just stared at it for a moment then said “what can I say?”

I wanted to say “you can say you lied to me and I want to know why?” But instead I said nothing. I also wanted to ask why he, or his Bureau, was afraid to let a local cop know about Abrego and follow a lead that was extremely important. But I didn’t ask that, and right then I thought I understood why. There would be only two reasons: following the Mexican connection would lead away from the government story of McVeigh and Nichols being the only ones involved, and following the Abrego-Garcia trail would lead to cocaine smuggling, and that would lead to Mena—and Bill and Hillary Clinton!

My reaction as I gathered my memos and folded up my file was “Pete, from this moment on I won’t be ‘helping out’ with the investigation as far as your office is concerned. Your boss asked me if I could help out right after the bombing since I had contacts that you guys didn’t have, and I agreed. But you can’t have a team effort if there is no team. And working together cannot be a one-way street.”

I left the FBI office and never went back. But I didn’t drop the investigation. Instead I became even more determined since I could see where it was going.

It was known as “The Enterprise.”

I continued to investigate, with the help of some very interesting contacts in the right places. Abrego and the drug smuggling network, to me, had to tie in with the records in the Murrah Building. I didn’t feel any Whitewater records would have been important enough to attack the building, but ties to cocaine smuggling and money laundering of millions in drug profits would. By the following January I had built an extensive file and library of international drug smuggling and who was involved. A case file that went back to World War II!

During World War II, the OSS (Office of Strategic Services) sent an OSS team to Southeast Asia, specifically to the Golden Triangle of Burma, Laos and Indochina (now Vietnam) to train guerrilla fighters from the local population and Chinese Nationalist Kuomintang soldiers of the KMT army of General Chiang Kai-shek to fight the Japanese.

To provide support and funding for this, the team utilized the only cash crop in the area: Opium. The team itself would have members whose names would appear again and again over the next forty years in clandestine circles, especially those involving drug smuggling and assassinations. Here is an excerpt from my book The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government:

"This OSS team, which operated in Kunming in China—the very center of KMT drug trafficking during World War II—consisted of E. Howard Hunt, Paul Helliwell, Lucien Conein and Mitch WerBell. According to the Wall Street Journal, OSS payments at this base often consisted of five-pound bundles of opium. Lucien Conein, otherwise known as "Black Luigi" went on to be the CIA's liaison with the Corsican Mafia of Saigon and had intimate knowledge of drugs being shipped to Europe by the Corsicans."

Of note in this lineup is E. Howard Hunt, a career CIA operative involved in the anti-Castro efforts of the Agency in the 60's, and was also involved in the Watergate hotel bugging of the Democratic Party headquarters during the Nixon era. He later surfaced as one of the "tramps" in Dealey Plaza on the day of the Kennedy assassination.

Lucien Conein, AKA "Black Luigi" had contacts with the Corsican Mafia during and after World War II and was responsible for the opium that was sent to France during and after the war, and then to the United States in what later became known as the French Connection case.

Mitch WerBell later became a mercenary, then a covert government contractor, an arms dealer, and was the inventor of the Sionics Sound Suppressor used by our troops during the Vietnam war and after.

Paul Helliwell In 1943, with the rank of Colonel, became head of the Secret Intelligence Branch of the OSS in Europe. William Casey eventually replaced him in 1945. Helliwell then became chief of the Far East Division of the War Department's Strategic Service Unit. In 1947, Helliwell joined the CIA. Later Helliwell worked as a lawyer in Miami and served as legal counsel to a Panamanian holding company that controlled a Bahamian gambling casino connected with Mafia Don Meyer Lansky.

When the war ended in 1945 there was no longer a need for the OSS. However, then-president Harry Truman was convinced that with the threat of Soviet Russia becoming stronger each month, he needed an intelligence service to replace and expand the OSS.

In 1946, with the encouragement of former senior OSS officers such as Allen Dulles and other former OSS members. Many suggestions were put forth for the creation of a national intelligence system. The competing plans came to a deadlock. Truman called in Admiral Sidney Souers in December 1946 for his input, and the Central Intelligence Group (CIG) was created. Truman then selected Souers to serve as the first Director of Central Intelligence (DCI) of the CIG. Souers helped create the DCI's authorities and organized CIG. He also authorized CIG's acquisition of the OSS's operational and analytic elements, which meant that the covert actions element would continue to exist as well as the intelligence gathering.

In 1947 several changes occurred in the national defense structure. One change was removing the Air Corps from the U.S. Army and creating a separate branch, the U.S. Air Force. The next was to change the name of the CIG to Central Intelligence Agency, which elevated it from Group size and stature to full-blown Agency status.

As this was happening the French had come back to Indochina, their former colony which consisted of Cambodia, Laos, Tonkin, Annam, and Cochinchina. This was much to the chagrin of the Cochinese, Cambodians, Annamese, and Tonkins. The two things the French wanted to control besides natural resources such as oil and minerals were opium and rubber.

The French occupation lasted until 1953 when the French military forces were defeated at Dien Bien Phu. Shortly thereafter Vietnam was divided into North and South Vietnam, with Ho Chi Minh’s communists controlling the northern section.

That was when the opium production once again became available, and certain old “Southeast Asia” hands in the CIA saw a means of financing black operations without having to go to Congress or announcing what they were doing to anyone outside those with a “need to know.”

In the ensuing years after the division of Indochina into separate countries the CIA once again began drug smuggling operations out of the Golden Triangle. This continued through the Vietnam War years and beyond, and to this day opium enters the U.S. from the same region, and also from Afghanistan among other countries where opium poppies are cultivated.

Opium was not the only “easy money” for financing covert operations. Cocaine use had been around for over a century, and in fact was a legal across-the-counter “medicine,” as was Heroin (named for it’s “heroic” properties in pain relief). In the Western hemisphere, cocaine was much easier to get and just as easy to process. Both were huge cash crops, but with cocaine from South America, and with the popularity of cocaine spiraling upwards during the late 1960s and 70s, and the difference between the cost of production and the profit margin of sales in the U.S., it was a perfect solution for clandestine government financing.

Two main cocaine cartels emerged: the Cali Cartel and the Medellin cartel. The Cali Cartel was first according to Wikipedia: “The Cali Cartel was a drug cartel based in southern Colombia around the city of Cali and the Valle del Cauca Department. Its founders were the Rodríguez Orejuela brothers, Gilberto and Miguel, and José Santacruz Londoño, also known as “Chepe”. They broke away from Pablo Escobar and his Medellin associates in the late 1980s.”

From that point onward the Cali Cartel and the Medellin Cartel became competitors, and both were used by the CIA in what was to become the financial end of the Iran/Contra operation.

The cocaine network developed into a vast spider web of associates, lines of transport and lines of communication that included government officials in all countries involved being bribed—or killed—from senior politicians right down to border guards and airport security.

To refresh the reader’s mind concerning the line of transport, we can start in Colombia, then follow the air transport to Panama, where Manual Noriega served as the first political stop, and where he skimmed drugs from the shipment before they were then flown to a Central American country such as Honduras, Guatemala or El Salvador. From Central America the shipments were either flown directly into the U.S., or smuggled across the border by land routes from Mexico. One of the main transshipment points was through the Texas border, then on to Dallas/Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, New Orleans, and other cities.

The air route, which flew cocaine north and then flew arms south to arm the Contras, entered from various locations, but many flew through Arizona to California, and through Texas and Louisiana to end up at Mena, Arkansas.

On January 20th, 1996, two months before I was to retire from the police department, I wrote a memo for record which I also disseminated to members of the Baker Street Irregulars, and to my "security stash" of files and reports that was located out of state, and that would be released to various outlets in case of my death. It concerned Juan Garcia Abrego AKA Garcia Abrigo. it was titled:

Arrest of Above and Possible OKC Bombing Connections

"Shortly after the Murrah bombing information was received (May 8, 1995) from sources in Texas that a subject named 'Arbigo Garcia' or 'Garcia Arbego' (spelling unknown at that time) was involved in the bombing as a 'cash provider' for the event. The source said that 'Arbego' sent two Mexican nationals to Oklahoma City with a satchel full of cash to finance the bombing. 'Arbego' was allegedly a Mexican mafia chieftain involved in the cocaine and heroin trafficking through Mexico from Guadalajara to Texas. And he allegedly was the ground transportation link during the Iran/Contra/Mena affair.

"This information was forwarded to both the FBI and the DEA, both of which were asked to check their files and/or computers, using various spellings, to see if they had heard of such an individual. Neither replied back that they had any knowledge and no further action was taken.

"On May 9th, 1995, the above information was followed up with a memo containing all the information received from the source, who was relaying it from a former Texas law enforcement officer who had investigated 'Arbego' and several high ranking Texas government officials, and who subsequently testified against them. These officials included a Texas National Guard colonel, and two relatives, all of whom had extensive special ops training.

"Later information arrived, with source now using proper spelling, that (quoting) 'Abrego's contact in Texas was a former colonel. There are three brothers in this particular family. all three had special ops training, were involved in Project Phoenix, one or more involved with the Company. One or more were on a Wet Team. One is or was a professor at Rice University. Two are, or were, fugitives. These three men are the link to Abrego and Texas. Very bad. Abrego was probably set up to silence him like they silenced Noriega. He was part of the same drug importation ring during Iran/Contra and after. Clinton's boys and committee followers have got to get rid of the main contacts to the Mena mess and anyone so associated.

"On Tuesday, January 17th, Juan Garcia Abrego, 51, was extradited from Mexico to Houston to face federal charges of smuggling billions of dollars worth of cocaine into the U.S.. He now faces a 20 count indictment and will be arraigned on February 2nd. He was arrested Sunday, January 15th, in Monterrey, Mexico.

"Abrego was involved in the Iran/Contra drug smuggling operation that had termination points in Los Angeles (Marina Del Rey), Mena, Arkansas, and other cities in the midwest (via the Abrego land route) such as Houston, Dallas, Oklahoma City, etc.

"Abrego, who took over much of the Mexico-to-USA cocaine trafficking after the arrest of Miguel Angel Felix-Gallardo in 1989, is a member of the Colombian Cali Cartel, which shipped in 30% of cocaine used in the U.S., which is estimated at $20 billion a year, and expended $50 million in bribes to U.S. and Mexican officials.

"Abrego, who is related to the governor of Tahulipas Province, worked directly under Amado Carrillo-Fuentes, Mexico's top drug lord. Abrego's territory will probably fall to his second-in-command, Oscar Malherbe De Leon. De Leon, like his predecessor is expected to work with Carrillo-Fuentes, who is based in Juarez, Chihuahua. With a possible power vacuum being formed with the extraction of Abrego, the other main cocaine trafficking gang under the Tijuana-based Arello-Felix organization may attempt to take the lead roll in the new U.S. importation dealings. Should this happen, it is expected that border 'drug wars' will erupt, possibly spilling over to the U.S. side. The area effected will be the Southwest border from Matamoros to Tijuana.

"Abrego was at the top of the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List since March of 1995, a month before the Murrah bombing and almost two months previous to the original enquiry which received no response from the FBI.

"It has been alleged that the records in the Murrah Building that were salvaged for reasons of 'national security' on Day One may have tied Abrego in with the Mena drug smuggling along with other players (see 9May95 Intel Memo note 3).

"It should be noted that former CIA Chief of Station Theodore Shackley, (who with his assistant Thomas Clines) set up the Laotian opium smuggling operation in Laos during the war in Southeast Asia, now lives in Bogota, Columbia, and is rumored in intelligence circles to have set up or helped organize both the Cali Cartel and the Medellin Cartels for the purpose of smuggling cocaine and marijuana into the U.S. to support certain compartmentalized CIA covert operations with a source for black funding. The route of smuggling cocaine and marijuana by the 'Enterprise' as it was called at the time, was from Bogota, to Panama (where Manual Noriega and Mossad agents Michael Harrare and Amiram Nir took their respective cuts, to Illopango Air Base in El Salvador where it was divided into three routings. These routings took the drugs via Southern Air Transport to the Los Angeles area, to Mena, and to Guadalajara, where they were taken by truck in crates stenciled 'machine tools" to Matamoros, Mexico, then across the border to Brownsville, Texas. Abrego handled this latter route."

The memo included the last caveat at the end "See Compromised: Clinton, Bush and the CIA by Terry Reed and John Cummings." Reed was a CIA contracted instructor pilot who trained Contra pilots at Mena and other Arkansas airports. He later turned informant against many high ranking Arkansas businessmen and politicians including Bill Clinton. The book goes into minute detail and provides supporting documents to his claims, many of which matched my own investigation among others.

Another book that came out that was of extreme interest is titled The Clinton Chronicles by Citizens for Honest Government. In that book I found reproduced a most interesting DEA Form 6 report that mentioned the Tulsa Police Department, and a detective I knew well.

The DEA report specifically named Don Tyson, owner of Tyson Foods in Springdale, Arkansas, and stated that Tyson smuggled cocaine into Arkansa inside race horses! This sounded a bit silly to me, but I had another DEA report that stated that Tyson had requested from the FAA special permission to fly into Arkansas without stopping at the border and dealing with Customs. That didn't make sense until I put two-and-two together. The excuse could have been that since he was bringing in expensive race horses from South America that it would be too hard on the horses to make an "unnecessary stop." That's the only excuse I could think of for Tyson to be able to bypass border security.

It was about this time that I received a flow chart in the mail in a plain brown envelope with no return address. The stamps were cancelled "Little Rock," and I couldn't help but wonder if it was from the "federal agent" who first gave me the information of the files being sent to the Murrah Building. The flow chart looked like s spider web of lines connecting various names and entities in several directions. Of most interest was the top name in a diamond-shaped box: "Gov. Bill Clinton."

Close to that was Bill's brother's name, "Roger Clinton." Then to one side "Tyson Foods." Below, following the various boxes and circles were such names as:

Dan Lasater (Little Rock businessman and millionaire)

Arkansas Development Finance Authority (front from Whitewater and money laundering)

Worthen Bank (who gave a $2 million line of credit to the Clinton campaign)

Rose Law Firm (Webb Hubbell's law firm where Hillary and Vince Foster worked)

Webb Hubbell

Buddy Young (Clinton's chief of security)

Jim and Susan McDougal (Whitewater Development Corporation)

Stephens Inc. (Jackson Stephens' company that allegedly used PROMIS software to launder money through various savings and loans and banks)

Park On Meter (parking meter manufacture and secret defense contractor that built non-serial number M-16 receivers for the Contras that was owned by Seth Ward, Web Hubbell's father-in-law)

Jackson Stephens (Worthan Bank chairman and major Clinton backer, and Jimmy Carter's roommate at Annapolis when they were at the Naval Academy)

BCCI (The Bank of Credit and Commerce International, an international bank founded in 1972 by Agha Hasan Abedi, a Pakistani financier that laundered millions in drug money.

Abdullah Taha Bankhsh (BCCI investor with $10 million in Worthen Bank)

BCCI figures and investors: Mochtar Riady, Aga Hassan Abede, Bert Lance (and his National Bank of Georgia), Gaith Pharoan.

Madison Guaranty (later closed by federal regulators)

Felix Rodriguez, AKA "Maximo Gomez" (CIA, key link to Contras, drug smuggling and Vice President George H.W. Bush)

Larry Nichols (Contra veteran and ex-Clinton aide)

Mena, Arkansas (base for Contra and drug operations)

Barry Seal (CIA pilot who dropped duffel bags full of cash on the Triple S Ranch near Hot Springs, Arkansas that contained an estimated $9 million that was picked up and laundered by Hillary Clinton, Webb Hubbell and Vince Foste at the Rose Law Firm and ADFA—the Arkansas Development Finance Authority)

The last reference to Mena could be expanded to Rich Mountain Aviation which was a company that modified airplanes to fly long distances by adding extra fuel tanks and removing unneeded weight. My friend and former CID Investigator Gene Wheaton provided a lot of information (since he was one of the whistleblowers on Iran/Contra) about Mena and Rich Mountain Aviation. He had even managed to access the place and take telephoto pictures of some of the operation. Some of the photos were of surplus C-123 transport airplanes on the ramp along with C-130s. Wheaton was on the trail of the C-130s that had been acquired from the U.S. Forrest Service, Davis Monthan Air Force Base (airplane storage and graveyard in the Arizona desert), and some foreign countries who had surplussed the planes. (On a side note, when I attended a weekend Army Intelligence class in Waco, Texas, which was located on the Waco airport, there was a camouflage-painted C-123 on the ramp outside the Intel building. I wondered why such a plane would be there, but later deduced that it was somehow tied in with CIA operations that also had access to the Intel school).

One C-130 Wheaton was following was N4469P, originally a Royal Australian Air Force C-130, but was then registered to “Airline Marketing Consultants, Inc.” of Miami, Florida (the same city where the Southern Air Transport airplanes were registered). I looked up the N Number this year and the FAA registration file says “Lockheed C-130A, Serial Number 3215: Destroyed.”

There is no explanation beyond that on whether it was scrapped or crashed somewhere. But the notation of “destroyed” was dated 1998, a convenient year for getting rid of evidence from the Iran/Contra days.

Wheaton’s photos showed several things, and one showed a mechanic changing the N Number on the fuselage of a small twin engine aircraft. We could not make out by the photo what it was being changed to, whether a U.S. N number or a foreign registration number. Nevertheless it was obviously “changing identity” as far as visual recognition, but if the plane was found later crashed or abandoned it wouldn’t take much for an investigator to discover the last registered identity by the number on the data plate and even the serial numbers on some of the equipment or engines if log books could be found.

In one of my files I found a document that mentions Wheaton. One paragraph stuck out: “One trail of blood drops in Oklahoma leads to Bill Clinton, and the principals of CIA’s Mena drug scandal. Gene Wheaton offers that Agency official Cord Meyer recruited Clinton when he was a Rhodes student in the UK. The dimpled spy and current resident of the White House has since been dragged into the mud at the Mena airport. Mena is among the largest aircraft refitting facilities in the country, situated just across the Oklahoma border, and doubtless figured in the interagency probe of regional drug operations., Clinton failed to investigate allegations of cocaine running in Mena, and since the Iran/Contra operation was exposed, has become a cut-out, possibly to distance certain Republicans from the scandal." Certain Republicans would include members of the National Security Council, CIA and the then-vice president, George H.W. Bush. If Ronald Reagan knew of the operation, no one knows. He was entering the stages of Alzheimer's at that point and Bush was basically running the operations without Reagan's knowledge.

The document went on to say "The federal agents in Oklahoma City were not the only ones investigating drug movements in the southwest. Wheaton recently investigated the theft of 32 military aircraft and was drawn to familiar territory. 'The same people,' he said, 'who flew in massive cocaine shipments to Mena under Reagan in the '80s were running things now. And it's a continuation of Iran/Contra. Everybody thinks Iran/Contra quit with Ollie North and Secord being exposed. But it's actually got bigger because the media stopped looking at it.'"

But how did Abrego manage to get his shipments across the border by the truck load? An article by Beatriz Johnston Hernandez dated February 12th, 1996 explains that Abrego's network bribed U.S. border agents with large sums of cash.

"Transcript's of the 1993 trials in Brownsville and Houston of four of Abrego's underlings reveal how INS drivers would transport undocumented agents caught in Houston south to the INS detention centers close to the border. On their way back north, the agents would load the empty buses with Abrego's marijuana and cocaine worth millions of dollars.

"Testifying at a 1991 trial in Corpus Christi of accused Abrego hitman Miguel Botello and again in the 1993 money laundering trial of Maria Lourdes Reategui and Antonio Giraldi in Brownsville, Rivas explained how the gang was able to transport between 1000 and 1400 kilos of cocaine each week past U.S. Customs checkpoints."

But in 1993 one delivery went wrong:

"Graciel Contreras and Juan Bananas were in the truck…the one agent at the checkpoint had been paid off, and Juan Bananas was the one who knew him, so he was the one to give the signal so the truck with the coke could pass. But something went wrong and the shipment was confiscated."

Houston FBI agents knew that INS agents were involved in the drug trade since early 1991, but only two INS agents were arrested. One was tried and sentenced (10 years without parole). One other failed to appear in federal court to stand trial on charges of drug conspiracy, money laundering and bribery.

Abrego's corruption of officials went way beyond INS. Customs officials were very nervous during the one trial because they knew it might identify others that were much higher in the chain of command.

The bottom line is that with enough drug money, Abrego and others like him could "arrange" border crossings with large shipments of drugs.

The so-called "War on Drugs" was, and still is, a joke.

Some of my hand-written notes in the Mena file taken during phone conversations with various informants mention that in 1985 alone $40 million a month went into Mena and was laundered through banks in Little Rock, and through ADFA. Besides that, $109 million was laundered through Dan Lasater's "Company," meaning his bond business, and even more drug money was laundered by Clinton associate Bert Lance of the National Bank of Georgia. Lance was also connected to BCCI, a criminal enterprise bank set up to launder drug profits.

Ambrose Evans-Pritchard did a great deal of investigative journalism during the 1980s and 90s. In an article in The London Telegraph he wrote concerning a DEA report he uncovered that "…a key Arkansas figure and backer of Clinton "smuggles cocaine from Colombia, South America, inside race horses to Hot Springs."

"Basil Abbott, a convicted drug pilot, says that he flew a Cessna 210 full of cocaine into Marianna, (a small town in eastern Arkansas, not to be confused with Mena which is in western Arkansas near the Oklahoma border) in the spring of 1982. The aircraft was welcomed by an Arkansas State Trooper in a marked police car. 'Arkansas was a very good place to load and unload' he said.

"IRS agent William Duncan and an Arkansas State Police investigator took their evidence concerning drug trafficking in Mena to US Attorney Asa Hutchinson. They asked for 20 witnesses to be subpoenaed before the grand jury. Hutchinson chose only three. According to reporter Mara Leveritt, "The three appeared before the grand jury, but afterwards, two of them also expressed surprise at how their questioning was handled. One, a secretary at Rich Mountain Aviation, had given Duncan sworn statements about money laundering at the company, transcripts of which Duncan had provided to Hutchinson. But when the woman left the jury room, she complained that Hutchinson had asked her nothing about the crime or the sworn statements she'd given to Duncan. As Duncan later testified, 'She basically said that she was allowed to give her name, address, position, and not much else.' The other angry witness was a banker who had, in Duncan's words, 'provided a significant amount of evidence relating to the money-laundering operation.' According to Duncan, he, too, emerged from the jury room complaining 'that he was not allowed to provide the evidence that he wanted to provide to the grand jury.'

"According to I.R.S. criminal investigator Duncan, secretaries at the Mena Airport told him that when Seal flew into Mena, there would be stacks of cash to be taken to the bank and laundered. One secretary told him that she was ordered to obtain numerous cashier's checks, each in an amount just under $10,000, at various banks in Mena and surrounding communities, to avoid filing the federal Currency Transaction Reports required for all bank transactions that exceed that limit. Bank tellers testified before a federal grand jury that in November 1982, a Mena airport employee carried a suitcase containing more than $70,000 into one bank. 'The bank officer went down the teller lines handing out the stacks of $1,000 bills and got the cashier's checks.' Law-enforcement sources confirmed that hundreds of thousands of dollars were laundered from 1981 to 1983 just in a few small banks near Mena, and that millions more from Seal's operation were laundered elsewhere in Arkansas and the nation."

The second week of May, 1995, I received a one-page Memorandum for Record from a trusted source I'll refer to as "The Colonel." It was dated May the 8th, which was only 19 days after the bombing. I had asked him to put out feelers on the possible content of the files that were taken from the Murrah Building. Here is his response:

“Today, 8 May, 1995, I received an update from D.F. in San Antonio. The following information is confirmed as ‘hard’ (received from his cartel CIs). The records containing information about the WHITEWATER fiasco and the MENA drug operations were moved from the Little Rock location to the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City for safe keeping. Also, within hours after the bombing, Oklahoma City fire fighters reported, that from their positions looking down from several floors up, where they were working to hunt for survivors, they saw two army ambulances back up to the building and carry several stretchers into, then out of the building with what looked to be bodies on them. But, from closer inspection, it was not bodies but long cases. Leaks from the BATF confirmed that Stinger missiles were being stored in the basement of the Murrah Building by the BATF for safe keeping, unknown to many federal authorities. There was also an unexploded canister of fulminate of Mercury found at the explosion site. This substance is very volatile with an ignition rate of some 35,000 fps. It is used to ignite many types of military explosives and is not part of a terrorist’s inventory

“It is very hard to get hold of unless you know a manufacturer personally or you are authorized by a government contract, i.e., a security clearance.”

The document went on to question why so many personnel were used to retrieve documents when people were still trapped in the building, and the building itself was not safe to enter or explore except for rescue efforts. The Colonel says in closing “The name Arbigo (sp) Garcia comes into play in this operation with his possible expertise and connections. He is a number one cartel man in Mexico. His front is in the drug trade, but his real involvement is in arms deals. According to my Mexican sources nothing is done or is pulled off in the area of North American drug terrorism without his knowledge. His connections in the U.S. Government go very high.”

Of course, Manual Noriega’s connections to the CIA and U.S., government went very high as well. But he, too, ended up in prison and like Abrego, has not been heard from since.

The pieces of the puzzle that we were putting on the wall were beginning to form a picture. The revelations that were appearing were very significant and the seriousness, and the danger, of the investigation was becoming more apparent each week.

The questions that we began to ask went beyond McVeigh and Nichols, beyond the Middle Eastern connection, and beyond the Elohim City diversion. We had to ask the question “If the records were about the Mena drug smuggling (and even Whitewater), was the Clinton administration so concerned that their discovery would reach to the highest levels of our government on both sides of the aisle that the Murrah Building had to be destroyed? That didn’t make a lot of sense since all they had to do was to send a team of trusted federal agents (or “mercenary” agents) to the building to search for and retrieve the records. That is, unless, however, bringing down the building would serve more than one purpose, such as shutting down the militias, attacking the right wing and radio talk shows, and passing the stalled Omnibus Crime Bill. THEN it might make sense.

And more, would discovery of such records lead to exposing what was beginning to look like an international conspiracy involving billions of dollars of drug profits that fell into the pockets of politicians and political leaders of countries all over the world? For such ivory tower villains, to ensure their safety destroying a building in the middle of Oklahoma would be a small matter.

As Lewis Carrol wrote in “Through A Looking Glass” “It gets curiouser and curiouser…”

CHAPTER 14

Midwest Bank Robbers—Connection or Diversion?

“It is a capital mistake to theorize before one has data. Insensibly one begins to twist facts to suit theories, instead of theories to suit facts.”

Sherlock Holmes (Sir Arthur Conan Doyle)
A Scandal in Bohemia

The first time I met J.D. Cash was at a meeting in Oklahoma City with Representative Key’s Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee. There were about a dozen people there who were doing their part in trying to get to the truth about the bombing and who, and how many, were behind it, and also if the government had foreknowledge that could have saved lives or stopped the bombing.

Cash, a thin grizzled man who obviously was a heavy smoker which effected his voice and the number or wrinkles in his face, was across the table from where I sat. I had heard his name through David Hoffman but until then had not met him. To my right, two chairs down, wearing a black leather jacket, was a retired Marine Corps lieutenant colonel named Roger Charles. Roger had worked as an investigative journalist for Sixty Minutes until the network shut down all reports that went outside of the official McVeigh/Nichols line. He and I were the only Marines on “the team,” and in my mind I felt he would be a good asset because we both shared the same esprit d’corps.

We all took turns sharing what we had developed so far. When it came to J.D. Cash, he was introduced as an investigative reporter for the McCurtain Daily Gazette, or as Cash sometimes referred to it as the McCurtain County Gazette. The Gazette was a small town rural farm newspaper located in Idabel, Oklahoma, which is in the far southeast corner of the state just a few miles from both Texas and Arkansas. Not exactly a newspaper that would pay a reporter to spend a full time assignment on one story for such a small circulation newspaper. Idabel, population just over 7000, was a town I had heard of but never visited. All I knew in my previous 44 years in Oklahoma was it was that “down there somewhere near Louisiana or Texas,” and that it was in a part of the state famous for organized crime including the infamous Dixie Mafia, marijuana growing, and a place where a lot of desperadoes hid out from before statehood up to the present time.

When Cash began his “briefing” it was all about the Midwest Bank Robbers who he and Roger Charles were following in their investigation. Cash was positive that was the direction the entire investigation should take and was determined to make the case that the gang was tied in with McVeigh, militias, and white supremacists.

This raised red flags to me as I personally knew that no one in any Oklahoma “militia” was involved in the case. In fact I had met a few militia leaders in my investigation who felt they were being set up “by the feds” to take the blame and that it all had to do with attacking the Right Wing using the militias as scape goats. In fact, I had traveled to Eufala, Oklahoma, to meet with Ross Hullett, leader of the Oklahoma Citizens Militia, a small group that was mainly concerned with the direction the country was headed under the Clinton administration. Hullett told me that he knew several militia leaders around the country in such states as Arizona, Michigan, Montana, Texas and Alabama. They all agreed that the bombing was being used as a witch hunt against what Washington politicians now feared was a citizen's uprising. He said "Look, if we had known that the bombing in Oklahoma City was going to take place, we'd have guarded the building, not blown it up!"

But did Cash have a line on "others unknown" in regards to the bank robbers who, like Nichols' Philippine/Muslim connections, may have provided funding?

It was becoming mind boggling. Money and training from the Philippines (all the way up to Osama bin Ladin), Money from the Mexican drug cartels, and now more money from bank robbers? Just how much money would be needed to finance one truck bomb?

It might take a lot. Not just for the materials, but for payoffs to anyone involved. If McVeigh and Nichols had gotten away, and if others were involved (and I was sure there were several), then how much would it cost to pay them all off—or to relocate them with false identities out of the country and provide for their future expenses? And was cash flowing into such places as Elohim City? Only time would tell, but there was something about the demeanor of J.D. Cash that to me just didn't add up. I put him on the "I gotta watch this guy" list.

Another person at the meeting was a lady named Cate McCauley who was a recent arrival from out of state who came to help in the investigation. Charles Key was impressed with her and made her the Executive Director of the Committee. But like Cash, my old Vietnam-acquired "jungle sense" and my police "street sense" both raised a red flag. There was something about her that I didn't trust either.

As it did turn out later, she was a mole. She was sent to Oklahoma City to "infiltrate" the investigation, then debunk and discredit everything we and the Key committee discovered. It was as if she tried to take over the entire investigation, and then, as time went on, to "prove" that McVeigh and Nichols were the only ones involved. It was journalistic sabotage pure and simple. She especially went after Jayna Davis (who was not part of the Committee and did not attend any of the meetings that I attended), and especially after Jayna's findings concerning Hussein al Husseini and the Middle Eastern/Iraqi connection were brought up. Cate refused to cross swords with me, however, probably because at the time I was a law enforcement officer assigned to assist the FBI, but she did everything else over the following months to refute all of our findings. She didn't help develop any leads, but instead tried to debunk and discredit the leads and evidence we had. When Key finally had enough of her, she "resigned" and upon leaving, which we discovered later, took computer copies of all the records and reports the Committee had developed.

She later stated to CNS News "It became apparent that [members of Key's committee] refused to look at certain evidence that didn't fit their theories," McCauley explained. "In March 1999, I resigned from Key's committee because they were going to publish falsehoods, which I flatly refused to take part in."

The only falsehood was Cate McCauley, who later turned up on McVeigh's appeal defense team. Quite a change from "McVeigh did it by himself" to helping with McVeigh's appeal.

After she left I had contact from some of my sources from whom I had requested info about her . One short phone call said simply “She’s a government plant. She reports to the FBI.”

The second time I met John David Cash III was when Tulsa attorney Larry Oliver called me and asked if I could meet with him regarding the Oklahoma City bombing. Oliver was representing some of the OKC victims and their relatives in a law suit against Timothy McVeigh and against the government.

I had known Oliver for years during my time on the Tulsa Police Department. My first wife was the Tulsa City Attorney’s secretary at City Hall, and I had met Larry during some of the various joint holiday parties held by the Tulsa City Legal Office, as well and various judges and lawyers around town. Larry was a good guy and what I would call a pretty basic Okie. He was Tulsa’s answer to Gerry Spence, a self-described “country lawyer” in Wyoming who had served as both a prosecuting attorney and a defense counsel. Spence was famous for not having ever lost a criminal prosecution or defense case—some of his cases included Randy Weaver, Karen Silkwood’s family, and even Philippine First Lady Imelda Marcos, who in federal court in New York had been accused of racketeering. Spence was also famous for his attire: buckskin jacket with leather fringes and cowboy boots. His office was decorated with game trophy heads and western art. Oliver’s office was the same, and he also wore the western clothing and a buckskin coat on many occasions.

Larry was also a life-long friend of former Tulsa County Sheriff Frank Thurman, who I knew well and who had told Oliver that I had a lot of knowledge about the bombing and was one of the investigators. This was also reinforced by former Tulsa Police lieutenant Bill “Tank” Thompson, who was now Undersheriff of Tulsa County and had been my lieutenant when I was on Tulsa P.D’s TAC squad, (Tactical Squad—our version of SWAT). Thompson had called me and asked if I could help Oliver with his Oklahoma City investigation in relation to a law suit.

When I arrived I could see how much Larry liked Western art. He had great old west paintings and bronze sculptures in his office, along with steer horns and leather western furniture.

I sat across from him at his desk and he explained that he had been retained to represent the Wilburn family in a lawsuit against Timothy McVeigh and against the government. The suit claimed that the government had foreknowledge of the event, and that if the government had warned others then, the Wilburn’s grandchildren, Chase, age 3, and Colton, age 2, who were in the day care center in the Murrah Building, would not have died in the bombing.

I was briefing Larry on what I knew so far, and that there was much more involved in the case than just McVeigh and Nichols. I explained that we had other witnesses of the events before and after Day One that he could talk to, when all of a sudden I saw J.D. Cash walk by just outside Oliver’s office. What was he doing in Tulsa?

By this time I had come to distrust Cash, and I had feelers out to see what his background was and why he was so interested in the case. I asked Oliver “what’s Cash doing here?”

“Oh him? He’s helping with the Wilburns’ case. He came up from the City to fill me in on what he’s found out so far. Do you know him?”

Instead of saying anything that might be overheard, I leaned forward, looked at Oliver, and gave him my best “don’t trust him” face. He looked at me, then past me to the door. Cash was standing there.

“J.D.,” Oliver said, “I think you might have met Craig Roberts before. He’s a Tulsa police officer that stopped by to fill me in on what he’s been finding out about the case.”

Cash did not look happy that I was there. He said “Yeah, we’ve met. Finding out anything new, Craig?”

“Oh, a little here, and a little there,” I said. Then, I just had to fire a shot down range with “You found out anything on the Middle Eastern connection yet?”

He got a sour look on his face, and I knew he wouldn’t want to get into that in front of Oliver. He said “No, I don’t think there’s anything there. I’m more interested in the connections to Brescia, Elohim City, Thomas, McCarthy and their crew.”

I knew right then that my suspicions about Cash had been right. Not only did he believe the case should focus on the bank robbers, but away from any other direction that might lead to more than what he wanted known by the public. All of his articles for the Gazette focused on the Midwest Bank Robbery gang (which the FBI had codenamed BOMBROB), and not on the other areas we were following as a group.

So we had J.D. trying to divert the investigation, and McCauley trying to derail it. I just didn’t know how much at the time.

Cash was not totally wrong in following the Midwest Bank Robbers, as they became known. There was some meat there, and as time went by we began to see more of a connection to the case. The main connection seemed to be in the various individuals involved, and a few possible contacts of some of the suspects with McVeigh and Strassmeir. There was also a gun show connection, and we knew that McVeigh and Strassmeir both frequented gun shows as did some of the robbers who we discovered claimed to be in what they called the Aryan Republican Army, or ARA. The robbers, according to FBI reports, funded their anti-government ARA operations with loot from the robberies. To me, these so-called operations were just an excuse to rob banks and an attempt to legitimize their crimes to a gullible portion of the public.

As more and more information came in, with a significant amount of credit to J.D. and Roger Charles, who was also determined to pursue the bank robber leads, the members of the gang were identified.

At the time the main members were Michael William Brescia, Mark William Thomas, Richard Lee Guthrie Jr., Peter Kevin Langan, Kevin McCarthy, and Scott Stedeford. Eventually we could tie in brothers Chevie and Cheyne Kehoe. There were even a few references to McVeigh being involved in some of the robberies, which over time netted more than $250,000.

Brescia and Guthrie at one time resided at Elohim City at the same time Strassmeir was “security director” there and Dennis Mahon had a travel trailer on the property.

During that time McVeigh visited Elohim City at least once, and was seen there by Carol Howe.

Michael William Brescia, born to a firefighter father and accountant mother in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was both a member of the ARA and a part-time student at Lasalle University. It would be much later when we would discover that he also was an informant for the FBI and that the FBI knew of many of the robberies, and who was involved, and even when they would happen in advance. However, as in many FBI cases, they allowed the robberies to continue until they could manage to "catch much bigger fish." One example of this was the Roger Wheeler murder case in Tulsa, in 1981, in which two Boston Irish-mob hitmen of "The Winter Hill Gang," Johnny Martorano and Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi murdered Tulsa businessman and president of Telex, Inc., Roger Wheeler as he was getting into his car at Tulsa's Southern Hills Country Club. Wheeler had been responsible for stopping the payoffs to the mob when he acquired World Jai Alai in Florida. Also killed in the same time frame in Florida was the Jai Ali Federation president John Callahan. Both killings were on order of the Winter Hill Gang boss, James Joseph "Whitey" Bulger, Jr.

Bulger was also an informant for the FBI, and for decades after the Wheeler murder when Tulsa detectives, spearheaded by Sgt. Mike Huff, were working the case, the FBI protected Bulger simply to keep him on the "inside" as an informant regarding mob activities in Boston. A movie about Bulger was made in 2016 titled "Black Mass." It depicted his activities, including the Wheeler murder. Johnny Depp does a very realistic job playing Bulger.

The Smith-Wilburn lawsuit that Larry Oliver filed was based on the assumption that Brescia was the John Doe #2, and was thought to have helped McVeigh orchestrate the bombing. The Daily Telegraph also ran an interview with a witness named Connie Smith who said "I kept telling them that the man in the (John Doe #2) sketch that came out after the bombing was that Mike guy, a nice-looking guy, dark-skinned. But the FBI made me feel guilty, then ignorant, as if I didn't know what I was saying. Then, later, I tried to call in with more information and they wouldn't even talk to me."

Brescia did bear a resemblance to one of the John Doe sketches, but so did Hussein al Husseini. I didn't want to rule him out, but it would take more than a resemblance to a sketch to make the case for me. Cash needed to tie him in with McVeigh to satisfy Oliver and the Smith's.

Richard Lee Guthrie Jr., one of the four main characters in the gang, and of the ARA, had participated in several of the robberies. According to Dennis Mahon, who knew Guthrie, Guthrie had given much of the money from the robberies to the Aryan Nation. Guthrie had also been a suspect in the multiple murder of an Arkansas family named Mueller, whose guns, cash and gold had been stolen. Eventually the actual murderers were found to be two brothers, Chevie and Cheyne Kehoe, two self-proclaimed white supremacists and friends of Terry Nichols, who had sold guns to Nichols. After Guthrie was arrested he admitted to being a member of the ARA and to having robbed banks. He also insisted that there was more to the story. But before he could relate it, which he said he was prepared to do, both to a grand jury and in a future book he was planning to write, he was found dead in his jail cell, hanging by a sheet.

In one report of the death of Guthrie he “was found dead of an apparent suicide Friday morning in a county jail in Kentucky, jolting a growing federal investigation into white supremacist violence. The death of 38-year-old Richard Lee Guthrie Jr. came little more than a week after his pledge—according to a sealed plea agreement in U.S. District Court—to provide authorities with information about organizations “whose goal was the overthrow of the U.S. government and to engage in domestic terrorism.”

The report went on to state: “Guthrie had confessed his involvement with the Mid-Western Bank Robbers, who taunted the FBI for nearly two years, wearing fanciful costumes, leaving pipe bombs at crime scenes and stealing more than $250,000. He pleaded guilty in April to three bank robberies in Ohio and last Wednesday to 16 more in seven states, as well as to weapons charges and credit card fraud.

“In his last known interview, a 10-minute phone call on Thursday, Guthrie said he was planning to write a book that goes ‘a lot more deeper’ than the robberies, about his life and the white supremacist movement. ‘It’ll all come out,’ he said.”

It appears that Guthrie was ready to spill his guts on more than just the robberies. He had been involved in the Aryan Nations movement and had been a frequent visitor to Hayden Lake, Idaho, headquarters of the Aryan Nation and a place also frequented by Dennis Mahon and his friend, White Aryan Resistance leader Tom Metzger.

The report went on to say: “Two other men, Kevin McCarthy and Scott Anthony Stedeford, also members of the ARA, are being held in connection with the robberies. Guthrie said he met Stedeford through Aryan Nation leader Mark Thomas.

McCarthy lived in a trailer on the property Thomas rented. According to another former follower of Thomas, McCarthy had also lived at Elohim City, an Oklahoma compound of believers in Christian Identity, a white supremacist religion.”

Richard Guthrie fell victim to the adage “Dead Men Tell No Tales.” On July 12th, 1996, Guthrie was found dead in his cell. He was in a solitary confinement cell and it was immediately declared suicide. But there was more to the story than that, and having studied the numerous “suicides” of those who fell astray of the Clintons—and the Janet Reno “Justice” Department, I had my doubts. According to his public defender, W. Kelly Johnson, Guthrie had recently been told he would soon be transferred from the Kenton County Detention Center in Covington, Kentucky, in preparation for testimony at a Columbus, Ohio, hearing for fellow ARA member, Peter Langan. And according to jailers’ logs, nothing was amiss in Guthrie’s cell, where he was kept in isolation and when he was checked at 5:22 a.m. Then, at 6:06 a.m. a guard discovered the body, hanging from a ceiling air vent. If one were to believe the “suicide” story, Guthrie, who was planning to “tell all” decided to kill himself, then accomplished that in 44 minutes.

Two notes, one addressed to his lawyer and one to a family member, were found. Guthrie’s younger brother, Nicholas, said that he thought the death was suspicious. “What bothers me is he was looking to the future,” he said.

Indeed, Richard Guthrie told The Los Angeles Times on the day before: “I got a lot to do in the next few weeks. I got a couple of grand juries to present to.” Guthrie’s death would stop any of his testimony, and any effort at a “tell-all” book.

Peter Kevin Langan Jr., one of Guthrie's cohorts, was an asset to the Secret Service in 1993 when he was released from jail in Georgia after agreeing to infiltrate the Aryan Nation. But sometime that year he disappeared and was not found until he and others were arrested in 1996. According to a January 1995 FBI memo, Langan, when being interviewed by FBI agents, admitted to the ARA having a "hit list." When asked who was on the list, he said "Bill Clinton, (FBI director) Louis Freeh, (Attorney General) Janet Reno, and Senator Howard Metzenbaum." He said that they had been tried in absentia, and had death sentences handed down against them. Langan, like Guthrie and others, had all visited or stayed at Elohim City one or more times.

I wondered why Metzenbaum was on the list. When I looked into Metzenbaum's career three things stuck out: He was a liberal anti-gun senator, he helped author and push through the anti-gun Brady Bill, and he was a Jew. Any one of those would put him on the hate list of the ARA, WAR and The Order among others.

Mark Thomas, head of the Aryan Nations Eastern Command, was instrumental in forming an additional cell known as "Unit 7." Unit 7 would be responsible for killing judges and others in courtrooms in what they called "a massacre" that would start the next revolution.

Thomas also stated in 1997, when he was arrested, that ARA member Kevin McCarthy assisted McVeigh in the bombing. He did not say how, but it was possible that it was either Brescia or McCarthy that was seen in the second Ryder truck with Dennis Mahon in Bricktown the day of the bombing—if that second John Doe was not Strassmeir.

Then, there is the statement of Tim McVeigh's sister, Jennifer, who told federal investigators that her brother told her that he was involved in robbing banks, and that she had laundered some of the cash for them. She also at one point said that her brother admitted to being part of a special operations unit that did illegal things for the government.

In my file on McVeigh, which was growing bigger all the time, I remembered the part where early on I had traced McVeigh, during his Army active duty service, from Fort Riley to Fort Bragg to attend Special Forces training. Then according to the Army, he went AWOL, or disappeared. No one seemed to know where he was. That is, no one except those for whom he worked for at Calspan, Inc. as a security guard which required a security clearance! (Also, McVeigh's received an honorable discharge from the Army in 1991, allegedly because he failed his Special Forces qualification tests, but was video-taped in 1993, in uniform, at Camp Grafton, North Dakota, almost two years after he was "discharged"!).

What is hard to understand is that the ARA was adamant, according to its members, about overthrowing the federal government. But the ARA was full of federal informants who knew everything that was going on. Still the gang continued to rob banks, and according to what little information we were able to glean, the FBI knew in advance of the robberies but still let them occur. Or maybe that was one part of the FBI, but not the part that was chasing bank robbers. Sort of like the FBI in Boston protecting the Winter Hill Gang while the Tulsa FBI was trying to help solve the Wheeler murder. That, in the intelligence world, is called "compartmentalization."

Besides the ARA bank robbers, there were other individuals who came to light later in the game. The others that surfaced involved robberies of two different Arkansas gun dealers, and the murder of one of them and his family.

The first was the robbery of a gun dealer named Roger Moore who lived in the Royal, Arkansas vicinity. Royal is located in south central Arkansas, west of Hot Springs. In that robbery, which occurred on November 5th, 1984, Moore was bound with duct tape while his house was searched and his guns, gold and silver coins were taken. Moore lived to tell about it, and he told authorities that he suspected a former house guest named Timothy McVeigh was involved. He had shown McVeigh his guns and bragged about saving gold and silver. Later, a federal grand jury would report that the robbery was indeed linked to McVeigh, Nichols and Michael Fortier, an Army buddy of both McVeigh and Nichols. Thirty three of the guns taken in the robbery were later recovered beneath the floor of Nichols home in Kansas.

The second was William Mueller. Mueller was a gun dealer who, along with his wife, Nancy, and her 8-year-old daughter, Sarah, lived in a cabin near the tiny community of Tilley, Arkansas, located in northwest Arkansas, just east of the Ozark National Forest. In other words, “in the middle of nowhere,” as people in this part of the country describe. It is heavily wooded and rural, and you would have to know exactly how to get there to find the Mueller cabin.

William Mueller had done very well at gun shows as he had a very large and expensive collection of guns. He also saved and hoarded cash, gold, and silver for the “End Times” of Bible prophecy. His unforeseen problem, however, was the company he kept. Somewhere along the way he had run into some of the ARA bank robbers, and also Timothy McVeigh (some reports say Mueller even knew Nichols but I’ve not seen evidence of that). However he met them, it seems logical it may have been at Elohim City. This had become a gathering place for like-minded radicals (many of whom were proving to be FBI or ATF informants, with even the SPLC having contact with Strassmeir while he was there). Or they could have met at gun shows, the largest in the nation being the Wanenmacher show, held by Tulsan Joe Wanenmacher, in Tulsa twice a year.

Because of his accumulation of guns and money, Mueller became a target for his “friends” who he thought could be trusted. But instead, his “friends” decided that Mueller would be an easy target for a robbery. On January 5th, 1996, the Mueller’s were preparing to attend a gun show in Springdale, or the huge Wanenmacher show in Tulsa, but never left their cabin. Neighbors became concerned and went to check on the family which they had not seen leave as expected. They noted that the Mueller’s animals were locked up and had not been fed.

Mueller had foretold this. In February 1995 Mueller, a Special Forces veteran and no pushover, reported that his home had been broken into and some $35,000 to $50,000 worth of silver bars, gun parts and ammunition had been taken. He later told friends that he thought he knew who the burglars were and that they would be back, and they would kill him. (The ammunition was later found in a room in a motel in Missouri that Terry Nichols had rented. It was traced by lot number, comparing it to the records that Mueller kept).

Meuller told a friend, George Eaton, a fellow “patriot” who lived in Union Town, Arkansas, across the border from Elohim City, that he thought he was the target of an assassination but was not home when the robbery occurred. He told Eaton this because he “had been having trouble with the ATF concerning the type of products the family was selling at gun shows.”

The “products” that the Mueller’s were selling at gun shows were more than just guns. Mueller was selling gun parts, ammunition, and anti-government video tapes, books and other literature, and passing out George Eaton’s “Patriot Report”—a home-generated anti-Clinton government and anti-UN newsletter.

Mueller told an Arkansas news reporter, Gene Wergis, that they had written a letter to their congressman detailing their feelings about the ATF’s harassment and told Wergis that the promoters of the gun shows ordered him to stop selling the literature and video tapes because the ATF had threatened the show promoters that it would “cause them problems.”

Mueller showed Wergis a spiral binder in which he kept his notes. He told Wergis that he was especially concerned about two men who had given him trouble at one show. He believed they were ATF agents. They were incensed at Mueller because of the literature he was selling, and the two names he had written down were…Andreas Strassmeir and Michael Brescia! This would be totally out of character for both Strassmeir and Brescia. They, or their “legend,” would be anti-government and to maintain this cover they would have bought literature from Mueller, not condemned it.

When neighbors called the authorities to check on the family, Mueller, his wife, and his daughter were not at their home. It was believed that they were killed there and their bodies moved to an unknown location, or that they were abducted and killed elsewhere. No one knew for sure. An investigation by neighbors reported that much of the Mueller’s property was missing.

On June 28, 1996, the bound and badly decomposed bodies of the Mueller’s were finally found by a fisherman in a swampy bayou in Pope County when he saw a leg floating on the water and called the county sheriff. One of the divers who helped recover the remains of the Mueller’s was Ron Stokes, one of my dive team divers when I ran the Mayes County, Oklahoma, Emergency Dive Recovery Team. He told me that “they were bound with duct tape and plastic bags were over their heads. It looked to me like they probably suffocated.”

One of my Arkansas sources sent me a copy of a letter written by George Eaton on his “Patriot News: A Christian Patriot Newsletter” letterhead to someone named “Bobby.” Bobby had evidently written George asking if he knew anything about the missing Mueller’s. Eaton’s typewritten letter said “I haven’t as much [information] as you have about the Muellers. I was never told by anyone on the mountain about their theory. The name you mention was the first time I’ve heard any names mentioned. Until I’m shown otherwise I still believe it was a professional hit squad. The theory about Strassmeir and Brescia is not possible. Brescia was in Penn[sylvania] at the time of their disappearance, and Strassmeir didn’t have a car and didn’t know where they lived. Strassmeir is a patriot the same as Bill. He had no motive to do him harm. The Mueller deaths is a complete mystery to me. Did they ever release the autopsies?”

Eaton later told a reporter from the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette “I don’t think there was any involvement with the Oklahoma City bombing or the other robbery, but it’s a big coincidence that there were two big robberies like that in Arkansas.” Eaton said Mueller told him that at the last militia-oriented church service they attended in December of 1995 that Mueller said “he might be robbed.”

Mueller’s white Jeep Cherokee and trailer in which they carried precious metals and guns was found abandoned on a country road 17 miles north of Dover, Arkansas, in February. Their bodies were recovered 27 miles away from that location.

The actual murderers on the second Mueller robbery were not the original suspects. It took months, but in 1997 two men were charged with the murders: Chevie Kehoe of Colville, Washington, and Danny Lee of Yukon, Oklahoma. They would have gotten away with it but Chevie’s little brother, Cheyne Kehoe, broke the case.

Both had ties to the ARA, and to Elohim City, and therefore had knowledge of the Mueller’s and their possessions.

Cheyne Kehoe, then 22, said he and his brother were touring the South with their families, going to gun shows, when Chevie Kehoe told him about killing gun dealer William Mueller and his family.

“He said that Danny and him had decided to do a hit on the Mueller’s due to the fact that, for one thing, he thought that they were government informants, and he knew that they had a large amount of gold and silver stored at their house.” Asked by prosecutors about Chevie Kehoe’s attitude about the killings, Cheyne replied at the plea-bargained trial, “It was a braggart-type attitude, a macho attitude.”

Cheyne Kehoe said he continued traveling with his brother out of fear that he would be killed if he tried to leave him. They eventually camped in Ohio and were returning from a gun show in Cincinnati when their vehicle was pulled over by police on Feb. 15, 1997.

The Kehoes on that date engaged in two shootouts. One with an Ohio state trooper and a Clinton County sheriff’s deputy, and with two Wilmington police officers in the second. The first one was taped by video camera mounted in an Ohio State Highway Patrol cruiser. The shootout was televised nationally.

Cheyne Kehoe later told law enforcement that he was unaware of the Muellers’ deaths when he left on the trip with his brother shortly after Thanksgiving 1996. The brothers and their families went to Arizona, where Chevie Kehoe sold a gun that he said had belonged to the Muellers,

The Kehoe brothers in custody (US Marshal’s Service)

A short while later, while preparing for another gun show in Galveston, Texas, Chevie Kehoe told his brother how he and Lee had dressed in police gear, broke into the Muellers’ cabin and surprised the family. This version is questionable because Mueller, a former Green Beret who was a survivalist and well-armed would have been ready for such an eventuality. But whatever really happened that fateful day, Cheyne Kehoe would be the undoing. After the Ohio shootout, the Kehoes fled separately and met up in Utah, where Cheyne, fearing for his own life, and after seeing the video tape of the shootout on “America’s Most Wanted” turned himself in to authorities and revealed where his brother could be found.

Chevie Kehoe went to prison, receiving three life sentences without the possibility of parole, and Daniel Lewis Lee received the death sentence. Cheyne received 24 years in prison, but that was reduced in 2000 to 11 years due to evidence problems in Cheyne’s original trial. With credit for time served, Cheyne was released in 2008. Cheyne, along with his father, were arrested in Arizona in 2013 for possession of “a hoard of weapons,” which is a felony for both of them, having been convicted felons. On June 24th, 2014, Cheyne was sentenced to 3-4 years in prison. Daniel Lewis Lee, as of this writing, is on death row in the federal penitentiary in Terre Haute, Indiana.

Though there were several indicators that the ARA was involved on the edges of the Oklahoma City bombing, and even that Michael Brescia may have been with Dennis Mahon in Oklahoma City that day, it was obvious that they were not the main players, or the reason the Murrah Building was bombed. Even though Carol Howe and Mahon had cased the building when they stayed at Elohim City, and even though Chevie Kehoe bragged about having a hand in helping McVeigh, the most that I could find that linked them directly to the bombing beside the above items was the 33 guns found at Nichols' house. these were identified as coming from the Roger Moore robbery. Selling those guns would have raised some cash when needed. But they were not sold prior to the bombing, which leads me to believe Nichols was hoarding them for his own gain at a later date if needed.

Knowing all of this, I came to the conclusion that a lot of time and effort was being directed toward the bank robbers instead of following the Middle Eastern and Mexican cartel leads. For some reason J.D. Cash was adamant about the bank robbers being the thrust of the investigation to the exclusion of other leads.

I found it surprising when I was told by Hoffman that Cash had moved in with Glenn Wilburn and his wife Kathy "to help them investigate the bombing." Glenn and Cathy were the grandparents of two of the children killed in the Day Car Center in the Murrah Building. They were convinced that the government had advance knowledge of the bombing, and Cash had promised to help them. When they hired Tulsa attorney Larry Oliver, on the recommendation of Cash, who had taken law school classes under Oliver at Tulsa University, Cash was more than happy to be Oliver's investigator.

The day I had my meeting with Oliver in his office, and Cash was there, I made it a point to pin Cash down in front of Oliver and ask him "Okay, J.D., but what about the Middle Eastern connection?"

He turned red, hem-hawed a bit, then nervously said "that's not going anywhere. I'm following hard leads and that's where the case is going."

If Cash thought the bank robber trail was "hard leads," and that the Middle Eastern connection was not, I knew that something else was going on. Cash said "I've got some phone calls to make," and left the hallway where he had been standing outside the office door. I turned to Larry and said "Where did he come from?"

"He's a friend of the Wilburns' and they hired me on his recommendation."

"Larry," I said, "don't trust him. I have a bad feeling about him. In fact, I've got some feelers out on him so let's see where that's going."

Who was J.D. Cash? That was the big question running through my mind. My gut told me that he was a plant because he refused to listen to, or look into, any of the leads other than those he was writing about in his articles in the McCurtain newspaper. To me, he was trying to direct the thrust of the investigation—at least in the minds of the public—away from our other efforts.

When you follow leads, you follow them until the trail ends. Sometimes they work out, sometimes they don't. But you follow them!

I called Dave Hoffman and voiced my concerns. Dave said “I know what you mean. It’s like J.D. wants us to drop looking in any direction other than his bank robber stuff. I personally don’t think the bank robber gang had a lot to do with the bombing, but I think there are enough ties to check it out and put it to bed one way or another.”

I agreed to use my resources to see what I could find out about Cash, and Dave said he’d do the same.

I retired from the Tulsa Police Department on the last day of March, 1996, with over 26 years, 7 months service. My active duty war-time military service add-on put me well over 30 years, and 30 years was the maximum we could draw in retirement pay. By retiring I knew I would have more time to devote to the investigation. As it was I was still receiving numerous leads and clues. I spent the following months running down leads, writing memos to others on the team (and myself for record), and traveling.

Unfortunately, in May of 1997, when I was doing some research for a talk radio show, I felt a stabbing pain in my right abdomen. It quit momentarily, then hit me again a few minutes later. This was on a Friday, and the pain came and went all day and all night, finally subsiding around 3:00 a.m.

I managed to make it through the weekend, but had grown very weak, and when I climbed the stairs to my office, I ran out of breath and had to rest on a landing. I decided to see my doctor on Monday. After I arrived at his office he had me go to the lab and do blood work. The results came back that my “C” count was high. I didn’t know what that meant, but the doctor told me to go immediately to St. Francis hospital in Tulsa, and they’d be waiting for me. The doc said “you need a transfusion!”

I still didn’t know exactly what was going on, but I had a good idea when they put me in a wheel chair at the ER and took me up to the Cancer floor. Within minutes I had an IV in my arm and a unit of blood hanging over me in bed. I didn’t realize it at the time but I was hemorrhaging internally.

By nightfall I was diagnosed with a Stage II tumor in the right side of my colon. They would operate Wednesday.

The operation went well. I lost the right side of my colon and my appendix (two-for-one!). It would be four months of trying to work on the case, take chemotherapy, and handle other writing projects, but the chemo was killing me, literally. In August of 1997 I was rushed to the hospital by ambulance after collapsing at home and not having the strength to get up. I flat-lined that night at the hospital due to internal bleeding because of a massive internal infection. The chemo had killed my immune system, allowing the infection to set in. The doctor later told me that I was “gone” for three minutes, but when they began to pronounce me dead, the monitor began to show a heart beat. When I got out of ICU a week later, and after 30 days of physical therapy at home and not undergoing any more chemo, I decided to stop chemotherapy and put my trust in God and natural healing. After a month of slowing growing stronger, I had to tell the oncologist in Tulsa that I would no longer take his chemo. When I told him that he looked at me—his face turning almost demonic—and said “if you stop my chemo you’ll be dead in six months and no one can stop it!”

I said something to the effect that I’d be around to water his grave, and walked out.

That was twenty years ago from this writing, and I'm cancer free. It just goes to show that my grandfather, a Primitive Baptist preacher in East Tennessee, was right when he told me just before I was going to ship out for the Western Pacific in 1965 with my Marine battalion that I'd be all right, one way or the other.

"If the Good Lord calls you home no one can stop it," he said. "And if He don't, no one can rush it." When he was not preaching, he was a man of few words.

It was during this time that David Hoffman and others from Oklahoma City called to tell me that Glenn Wilburn had died of pancreatic cancer on July 15th, three weeks before my near-fatal stay in the St. Francis ICU in August. I knew he had been battling the disease, but had hoped for the best for him and Kathy. I knew exactly what they were going through.

After I got out of the hospital and was confined to my home during physical therapy I found out that J.D. Cash was still living at the Wilburn house. Was he still trying to help Kathy Wilburn and Edye Smith, or was he up to something else? I just hoped that Cash was on the straight and narrow.

As some of our probes into Cash began to show "items of interest," we began to find out more and more about the small-town reporter. Hoffman called me one day and asked "Have you heard anything about Dennis Mahon visiting Cash at this cabin in Idabel?"

"No, I hadn't heard that. How did you find out about it?"

"Cash told me that Dennis Mahon had visited him allegedly for an interview. He said they sat around drinking whiskey, and that he, Cash, was trying to pry information out of Mahon about Elohim City, Strassmeir and McVeigh."

"Did he get anything?" I asked. I had tried to pin Mahon down in the past and he was always very elusive in his answers.

"I don't know. Cash wouldn't say. But I just can't help but wonder if he did find out anything we don't already know."

"Well," I said. "If he did, he won't tell us, but I'm sure we can read about it in his newspaper articles."

Dave and I and a few others started to wonder if Cash was really trying to work the case or was doing what he could to divert the investigation away from other areas. He was never part of our team, and none of us trusted him. We weren't too surprised when information began coming in.

We had asked various sources if anyone had anything on a John David Cash III. We wanted to know where he came from, what he did in the past, who he's worked for, and most important, why was he on this case?

I had information that Cash had once lived in Tulsa, and that he claimed to have been a banker. One good source of basic information can be found in the records of a County Courthouse.

I went to the Tulsa County courthouse and began pulling records on all I could find on John David Cash III. What I discovered was that he had been married to one Mary Jean Little on August 8, 1984, but the marriage ended in divorce in November 1990. Between those dates Little filed an emergency protective order against him on October 28, 1988, and a final protective order on November 3, 1988, but it was dismissed when Little failed to appear at the second protective order hearing.

When the divorce was filed, according to the petition, Cash worked for Metro Title Company in Tulsa, and owned or was invested in two condominiums in Tulsa, five houses in Tulsa, one house in Sapulpa (just west of Tulsa), one house in Broken Arrow (just southeast of Tulsa), three houses in Muskogee (50 miles southeast of Tulsa), and four lake lots in Eufala, a lake town about 75 miles south of Tulsa. The question was how did Cash manage to come up with the money to buy all of these properties? To me, there had to be money coming in from somewhere else at the time.

One paragraph stuck out in the divorce decree. Paragraph 7 said "Plaintiff (Little) further alleges that she fears the Defendant may attempt to return to the above described residence to harm, harass, embarrass or molest her and that she will thereby be caused to suffer physical and mental anguish and emotional distress by reasons thereof; and that the Court should enter an order commanding the Defendant immediately and forthwith to remain away from said residence during the pendency of this action; that the Defendant should be restrained and enjoined by order of this court from any manner, either by actions or words, interfering with the Plaintiff at any place she may be."

It was apparent that Mrs. Cash had been abused physically by J.D. to the extent that she had to file two protective orders and then have the above language in the divorce petition.

And now he was living with Kathy Wilburn.

I began to dig further. The next place to look was McCurtain County courthouse where Cash currently lived when he wasn't at the Wilburn residence. I'm sure he had to travel back and forth to Oklahoma City to retrieve his mail and pay his bills. The trip would be approximately 350 miles, a four hour drive from Oklahoma City.

In the McCurtain County Court House I found a General Warranty Deed dated August 22, 1991showing that Cash's father, John D. Cash, Jr., had bought property from Jesse and Ina Bunch. J.D. built a cabin on the property (or his father did—depending on the version told) and Cash used this cabin as his "official" residence, and was using a mail drop in Yukon, just west of Oklahoma City. I later discovered that Cash's father was deceased.

The property J.D.s father bought consisted of two acres of rural property, and the nearest town that had a post office, and to where Cash changed his mailing address, was Battiest, Oklahoma, an unincorporated community of about 250 persons. But when anyone asked where exactly Cash lived in McCurtain County, Cash said "Powder Ridge." The question to me is why J.D. would have such a remote place after having so many properties elsewhere, if indeed he still owned them.

I gave Hoffman what I had and he did some more checking. He faxed me this:

"Inquiry at the U.S. Post Office in Idabell disclosed that there is no known town in McCurtain County identifiable as Powder Ridge, Oklahoma. The postmaster at Battiest advised that there is no community or town named Powder Ridge. The Idabel postmaster said further that Cash used his (Idabel) post office for much of his mail because no one knew how to pronounce "Battiest."

Either Cash wanted to retain the family property and have a "safehouse" no one could find, or maybe he wanted to keep it as a good place to use to convince others he was a right wing separatist or survivalist. Either way, he picked a place that "you'd have to know how to get there to find it."

As David Hoffman and I, along with others on the Team worked on Cash, more and more came to light. We discovered that he had told people that he was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, the globalist group of high ranking businessmen and politicians headquartered in New York. I checked two decades of CFR rosters and found no "John D. Cash."

One of Hoffman's contacts was Leslie Jorgensen, a freelance writer in Colorado who was also following the Oklahoma City case. In one email from Jorgensen in January 1997 concerning Cash, she wrote that when she was interviewing Cash about his stories in the Gazette she said: "I should mention that Cash was reading The Silent Brotherhood (a book about the Aryan Nation, KKK, and militias) and was reading passages to me over the phone. He suggested I buy it. I had read it already. I thought it was odd that he was educating himself on The Order and seeing a blueprint that tied the white supremacist movement into the case. It fed my belief that this was a cliche conspiracy he was outlining."

On another occasion Cash told Jorgensen when she was working on an article for Newsweek that he was an attorney that worked for HUD in the mid-1980s, and also an AP reporter, and that he sold properties in Tulsa with Tulsa attorney Larry Oliver, who had handled some of Cash's real estate deals. He said he at one time had a private plane, and had a townhouse in Florida. He used the plane to ferry people to Mexico and the Bahamas.

When Jorgensen traveled to Oklahoma to interview Cash in person, she said, according to the fax Hoffman sent me, that Cash and Jorgensen got into some kind of disagreement and that Cash threatened her. "He was Livid," said Jorgensen in the fax. "He drove me to my hotel and talked about gouging a guy's eye out with a broken bottle and said 'I've been known to use a gun.' He constantly tried to ascertain my Jewish status…I thought he was going to push me out of the Jeep."

He then told Jorgensen, who mentioned Cash taking her to Elohim City, "I'm not taking some Kike to Elohim City. Jews are OK to talk to, but you don't want to mate with them." (Jorgensen's husband is Jewish). Cash had told Jorgensen about "draping his Jeep with Nazi flags." "He's anti-Semitic," said Jorgensen. "He's a big Nazi collector."

But was he really? Or was that a front to aid him into getting into the neo-Nazi and skinhead movements? Such an outward appearance would ingratiate him with likes of Mahon and the Aryan Nation, not to mention the White Aryan Resistance, Mahon's good friend Tom Metzger's organization. Jorgensen summed it up with "I think Cash is an alcoholic and has a schizophrenic mentality."

The same email I received from Hoffman cleared up how Larry Oliver got into the case. "Cash convinced Wilburn to hire his (Cash's) former law professor from Tulsa University, Larry Oliver, to represent the Wilburn's in their law suit against the government and McVeigh."

David ended the email with "Cash threatened Pat Briley (one of our Oklahoma City investigators) with a death threat, hung up on me when I asked about Gary Hunt (suspected CIA asset), and hung up on Gene Wheaton when Wheaton asked for his resume."

In another email dated May 22nd, 1997, Hoffman had asked one of his Israeli intelligence contacts about Cash and if they had anything on him. The contact got back to David and said "Cash worked for the FBI and CIA as a stringer in the early 1980s. He helped a doctor named Osher form a limited partnership for a clinic, which opened ancillary branches in Guatemala and Nicaragua at the behest of the Iran/Contra gang. The purpose was a cover for running drugs. The asset said Cash was a money launderer. His nickname was 'J.C. Cash Dollars.' He knew Barry Seal, Larry Nichols and others."

Hoffman went so far as sending a list of eleven pointed questions to Cash. He asked Cash if he owned an airplane, and did he fly to Mexico and the Bahamas? How did he get involved in the investigation,? What his opinion was of the Middle Eastern connection? And if he worked for the FBI.

Cash never responded. Maybe David should also have asked if Cash worked for the CIA.

These revelations were beginning to form a very disturbing picture. The pieces of the puzzle on the wall started to possibly make more sense. I could now see where Cash might fit into the whole Iran/Contra and drug cartel/money laundering scene, not to mention spending so much time in Eastern Oklahoma not far from Mena. Was Cash's investigation actually more than a diversion, and more like damage control? The whole Cash scenario to me became more suspicious as I found out more.

On February 25th, 1997 David faxed me a copy of a letter he had received from one of his Israeli contacts, Juval Aviv (who was one of the Pan Am 103 investigators after the plane blew up over Lockerbie, Scotland). Aviv ran an international investigative organization from his office on Madison Avenue, in New York City. Dated February 21st, the letter said:

INTERFOR, INC.

Dear David:

I am following with great interest the Oklahoma City bombing case and it seems that you are on target in your predictions since we began talking on this subject.

You are right that there is a lot of similarity between the Pan Am case and the Oklahoma case. One of the important links is the FBI lab. You asked me to look into J.D. Cash. First, I must say that I had never heard of him, but once I started checking around, the few people who had come across him suggested that he was bad news, and a "government asset." His job is to get friendly and close to investigative reporters to try and find out what they're working on so that the government can quickly counter the reports or stop them from being printed at all. Best wishes, Juval Aviv, CEO

Mr Aviv reinforced my opinion of Cash, and he also mentioned the FBI Lab. The FBI lab, during the Pan Am 103 investigation, was caught falsifying evidence and helping to build a case that diverted the investigation away from the actual perpetrators. A huge shakeup caused the lab's explosives expert at the time, Tom Thurman, to resign. We had little faith in the FBI lab coming to any proper conclusions on the evidence from the Oklahoma City case, especially when it came to the explosive residue.

J.D. Cash was subpoenaed to testify before the Grand Jury for which Charles Key and the Oklahoma City Bombing Committee had petitioned, and appeared on January 14th, 1998. The article in the Daily Oklahoman said that "A free-lance reporter who has written several articles about conspiracy theories in the Oklahoma City bombing spent more than six hours Wednesday testifying before an Oklahoma County grand jury…Cash, who has written stories for the McCurtain Daily Gazette and other publications, has said he wasn't asked to bring notes or tapes of his sources before the grand jury. Had the material been subpoenaed, Cash said, he would have sought to have the subpoena quashed."

Cash did not discuss what he had been asked or testified to. But the Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee said that "the testimony of these witnesses opens up new questions about who in the government knew there was a threat to the federal buildings before the Murrah Building bombing."

What we discovered about J.D. Cash was not good, and my old street sense had proven to be correct once again. Cash, in my and Hoffman's opinion, backed up by others, had a mission, and that mission was to derail the investigation and side track it to chasing rabbit trails away from the main perpetrators. To me, the question was why he would do that, and the answer was that whoever he was really working for had given him his mission.

But he didn't reckon on gunslingers like me and Hoffman, and to a certain extent Bill Jasper at The New American, and Leslie Jorgensen, and Pat Briley to be in the picture.

To me and to Hoffman, Cash was a plant and an asset of someone. The question was "who?"

I was reminded of what William Colby, former director of the CIA said:

"The Central Intelligence Agency owns everyone of any significance in the major media." -

CHAPTER 15

Death in Federal Custody—The Trentadue Case and OKBOMB

"There's a lot of things that happened in this case that are very, very troubling. There's a very strong possibility of a homicide."

Senator Don Nichols, December 1st, 1995

Very early in the morning of August 21st, 1995, prison guards at the U.S. Bureau of Prisons Federal Transfer Center in Oklahoma City reported finding one of the temporary inmates hanging in his cell, an apparent suicide—in a "suicide proof" cell.

The inmate was Kenneth Michael Trentadue, a 44-year-old prisoner who was being held for a parole violation after being arrested in California. Prisoners being held in the Federal Transfer Center (FTC), located on Will Rogers World Airport in Oklahoma City are only there for a few days before being flown to the Bureau of Prisons facility where they would serve their time. But Trentadue's next stop would not be a federal prison.

It was approximately 3:00 a.m. when, according the prison records, a guard passing Trentadue's cell said he saw Trentadue in the cell hanging by a bed sheet from the vent above the sink. The guard, according to the Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General Report, "immediately called on his radio for help, but the radio malfunctioned. The other SHU (Special Housing Unit) officer conducting the (head) count called on his radio that an inmate was hanging. A Third SHU officer immediately came to the cell."

According to the OIG report, "these officers did not enter the cell and bring Trentadue down. The first SHU officer said the said that when he reached the cell, he was about to open the cell door but he was told by another officer that the FTC lieutenant on duty had called and instructed them to wait for him before entering the cell. The lieutenant and the other officers did not remember this instruction. The Lieutenant said that when he was in the FTC's Control Room, monitoring operations throughout the FTC, he heard a radio transmission that an inmate was hanging in the SHU. He told Control Room staff to notify FTC executive staff and then went directly to Trentadue's cell. While on his way to the cell, the Lieutenant radioed to SHU staff to get a video camera. The lieutenant said that when he arrived at the cell, several correctional officers were standing outside the cell door. He said he then radioed for a FTC physician assistant to come to the cell. The lieutenant said that at that time he looked through the cell door window and observed Trentadue hanging, with his head slumped down, his hands at his side, with no movement at all. The lieutenant said he believed that Trentadue was dead and therefore decided to document the scene with the video camera before entering the cell."

No one attempted to cut Trentadue down and ascertain if he was actually dead, or attempted to do CPR or any life saving measure. According to the guards they instead decided to wait until a video camera could be found and used to record the scene.

According to the OIG report "A video camera was located and brought to Trentadue's cell. As a correctional officer began filming the scene, the Lieutenant introduced himself on camera and gave a brief description of the situation, stating that they had an inmate hanging in the cell. After this introduction, which we were told took anywhere from twenty seconds to two minutes, the officers unlocked the cell door.'

A physician's assistant, not a doctor, arrived, entered the cell, checked Trentadue's pulse and said he detected nothing. Then using a stethoscope, he declared Trentadue dead. Trentadue was then, according to the OIG report, cut down and placed on a gurney.

Trentadue's body was taken to the FTC infirmary where EMSA—the Emergency Management Services Authority (ambulance) was called. When the paramedics arrived at 3:32 a.m., one of the paramedics spoke with the PA, who said that Trentadue was dead and there was no reason for the paramedics to stay. The PA mentioned to the paramedics that Trentadue had hung himself and that he had lacerations on his neck. The paramedic asked if the PA had pronounced he victim dead, and the PA responded "yes." The paramedics, no longer needed to transport a victim to a hospital, left the FTC.

The Associate Warden arrived at the FTC at approximately 4:00 a.m., and upon arrival requested that EMSA return to the FTC. When the paramedics arrived the second time the Associate Warden asked them to examine Trentadue's body and pronounce him dead. The paramedic later stated that Trentadue's skin was gray and he was not breathing. He also said that Trentadue's head was bloody, with trauma to his forehead. The PA used a heart monitor to pronounce him dead according to the OIG report. The problem here is that only a doctor can pronounce someone dead. A paramedic can have a "professional opinion" that someone is clinically dead, and note the time. But a qualified physician has to pronounce death in Oklahoma.

EMSA did not take the body, so the FTC staff called the Medical Examiner's Office (MEO) in Oklahoma City, headed by Dr. Fred Jordan. An MEO investigator arrived at the scene and examined Trentadue's body in the infirmary. According to her opinion, " she had never seen a hanging accompanied by a cut neck and head trauma," and she became concerned about the cause of Trentadue's death. She did not elaborate in her report about the amount of head trauma she saw, or any other damage to the body at that time.

She asked questions about how the victim was found and then viewed the cell through the cell door window, but did not enter the cell. She then left the FTC with Trentadue's body to return to the Medical Examiner's office.

The Federal Transfer Center in Oklahoma City was constructed in 1989-1994. It is located on the West side of Will Rogers World Airport on land owned by the Oklahoma City Airport Trust Authority and leased to the Federal Government. It holds 1700 transient prisoners, with an influx and outflow of about 300 prisoners daily. It is constructed so passenger planes from "Con Air) can taxi up to a fully enclosed ramp to enter the facility, and board outbound airplanes the same way. The facility was almost new when the tragedy occurred one year after opening. But the guard staff consisted of some new personnel, and several "seasoned" guards transferred in from other prisons. From what Dr. Jordan, the Medical Examiner could see, it would appear that some of the "experienced"guards might have had a hand in what he discovered when he examined the body. An article from Western Journalism, an online news magazine, would describe what happened:

"Medical Examiner Fred B. Jordan who examined the battered body of Kenneth Trentadue, while his assistants filed in and out to vomit, being sickened by the condition of the body. There were two dozen wounds to the body, including three skull fractures, his throat cut ear to ear, a broken hyoid bone (indicating strangulation, not hanging), fingertip wounds on his biceps (that is, from being held down), bruising on the anal verge (from being repeatedly kicked with hard-soled shoes), and others."

Though not a qualified medical examiner, as a career police officer I had seen situations where such damage was exhibited on people, living and dead. This, to me, was an obvious beating. A simple hanging would not explain the damage done, even to the most inept observer. I would find, the more I looked into this case, that there would be more than just the physical damage to the body that would show that Trentadue had been murdered in federal custody.

For one thing, I found it very disturbing that when Acting Warden Marie Carter telephoned Trentadue's mother, whom he had listed as next-of-kin, she said that she was ordering Trentadue's body to be cremated "at no cost to the family." She did not ask his mother what her wishes were, but instead almost demanded that the body be cremated. But Trentadue's mother, and to the lasting chagrin of the federal government, his brother Jesse, insisted that the body instead be sent to them for disposition. This would prove to be the beginning of the exposure of a coverup of massive proportions involving government officials at the highest levels.

Jesse Trentadue was more than just a relative of the deceased. He was and is a very experienced attorney in Salt Lake City, Utah, and just as important, a Marine like me. And when we Marines get on a mission, we don't stop until the mission is completed.

When Jesse saw his brother's body and the damage that was done, he know immediately that Kenneth had been beaten, tortured and strangled to death in federal custody, and that the prison and its personnel were responsible. He also knew that he would investigate this case himself, and with the aid of others who would seek justice, get to the bottom of it. And he would try to answer the question of "why" his brother was targeted for torture, and ultimately, death.

As Jesse dug into the case, pursuing leads and filing FOIA law suits with the DoJ and FBI, one of the things that he felt he had discovered was that Kenneth's death may have connections to the Oklahoma City bombing case. The more he found out about the OKC bombing, and then the FBI's interest in the Midwest Bank Robbers, and the fact that his brother, who had done time for bank robbery in the past, looked like John Doe #2, or like Richard Lee Guthrie, one of the ARA robbers, the more he began to see a possible connection to the Oklahoma City bombing case. With that being the case, was there a tie-in to what the killers of Kenneth had in mind just four months after the Murrah Building was bombed?

The more Jesse and some of his colleagues and friends looked at it, the more it looked as if there might be a connection. What they needed to do was contact some of the people who were involved with the bombing investigation and compare notes. I was one of those contacted.

Jesse also contacted, or was contacted by, a former U.S. congressman from Utah, George Hansen, who ran an organization called U.S. Citizens Human Rights Commission, headquartered in Salt Lake City. Rep. Hansen became very involved in digging into the case, and eventually contacted me. I shared everything I had about which they asked about and the more they told me about the Trentadue case, the more I was sure it was a huge coverup of what was probably an interrogation that went wrong. And whatever happened that fateful night, it had to have happened in less than 30 minutes.

When I found out about the damage to the body, including bruises on the bottom of the feet and the condition of the cell before it was cleaned by prison trustees, it was obvious that Mr. Trentadue had a case. But, would he be able to get more action on his case than we had been able to get on the Murrah bombing case? Considering who was in office then, and the problems we faced with the lies and coverups of federal agencies in the bombing case, I doubted that anything would happen that would bring the perpetrators to justice. But we had to try.

Over the next 24 months Jesse Trentadue and George Hansen gathered more and more information in their investigations. Rep. Hansen knew Oklahoma County District Attorney Bob Macy from, as Hansen wrote in one letter, from their "Washington days." Hansen contacted Macy by phone and letters over a lengthy period attempting to get Macy to bring the Trentadue case to the Oklahoma grand jury that was impaneled at the time. There would be some action on this, but not enough to make a difference.

What is alarming is the information that Hansen provided to Macy in one letter dated July 23, 1997 of which Jesse faxed me a copy:

"In a deposition taken by Jesse Trentadue from Jordan, the Medical Examiner stated unequivocally that many of the injuries his brother sustained could not have been self-inflicted. In an amended autopsy report, Jordan outlined numerous injuries to Kenneth Trentadue's body, including three head wounds and a partially severed throat. Numerous abrasions, contusions and other signs of blunt trauma are observable on both sides of Kenneth Trentadue's body."

Kenneth Trentadue, by the appearance of his body, put up a huge fight in defense of himself. He was a very strong man and in good physical condition. It would take several men to hold him down for him to have sustained such a beating. And as the investigation by Jesse and George continued, the case grew in size and scope and made its way to Washington. Senator Orrin Hatch, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, chastised Attorney General Janet Reno about the Bureau of Prison's handling of the investigation into Trentadue's death, and stated that "it's apparent to me that not only are these facts suspicious, but it looks as though somebody in the Bureau of Prisons, or having relationships with the Bureau of Prisons, murdered the man."

Jesse Trentadue and Hansen, in due course also found out that as soon as Kenneth's body had been removed from the cell, trustees were ordered to clean the cell and make is "spotless." The reason, according to the Acting Warden, was that she told trustees that Kenneth Trentadue had HIV and they didn't want anyone getting infected. That was not true and there is no record of trustees or guards being tested afterwards for HIV. The actual fact is that, according to one of the trustees, the cell had blood on the floor, the ceiling, and the walls! When questioned about this, the excuse was that Kenneth had basically "gone mental" and tried to beat himself to death by banging his head against the walls, then slashing his throat and wrists with a toothpaste tube. Then, when all that failed, he tore up a bed sheet, secured it to an air conditioning vent, and hung himself.

One of Hansen's letters to Macy went into detail:

"The chief medical examiner for the State of Oklahoma—who along with the brother of inmate Kenneth Michael Trentadue, claim federal authorities have continually hampered their efforts to investigate the circumstances surrounding his death—alleged last week that he was threatened with physical violence by two guards at the federal correctional facility while conducting an investigation of the holding cell where inmate Kenneth Michael Trentadue died almost two years ago. He told the Oklahoma Eagle he was denied access to the holding cell where Trentadue was found for five months after the man's death which occurred August 21, 1995. When he finally gained access to the cell and was conducting tests, Jordan said a Federal Transfer Center guard walked by and said 'You can stick it up your fucking ass.' Moments later another prison guard walked by the cell and said 'You may find some evidence in there, but you'll never leave here with it.' Jordan said there was no doubt in his mind he was being threatened."

The tests that Dr. Jordan was conducting scared the prison officials because they thought that the cell would hold no evidence after being cleaned, and after that much time had passed. Instead, they found that there are chemical substances that can be used to show blood stains and blood spatter long after an event has occurred. Known as "Luminol" the chemical agent can be sprayed around a crime scene, and under black light, show the presence of blood stains. According to the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension, "The search for the presence of blood at a crime scene is normally done by close visual examination. The possibility exists, however, that blood may be present in amounts too little to see with the unaided eye, or that the blood at the scene had been "cleaned up" prior to arrival of the crime scene team. Scientists can take advantage of the Luminol reaction to locate potential blood evidence that would be undetectable through visual examination."

When Dr. Jordan sprayed Trentadue's cell, he said "it lighted up like a Christmas tree!"

In George Hansen's July 22nd letter to Macy, he went on to say "Informed sources close to the investigation have told us that inmate Steven Cole has signed sworn affidavits that when he entered Kenneth Trentadue's cell it resembled a 'blood bath.' Cole told federal investigators blood was splattered all over the walls and at one location in the cell, there was blood in such large amounts, he was forced to use a mop to clean it. In the affidavits, Cole also stated that the sheets on Kenneth Trentadue's bed were folded and undisturbed. He added that the bed had not been disturbed. He also pointed out there was no blood on the light fixture and air vent—the location the BOP officials said the inmate hanged himself—only thick dust."

When we analyze the statements of Cole, what comes to light is that no bed sheet or anything else was tied to the air vent as described by the prison guards. It would have been too much trouble to hold the dead body up to tie it to the vent, and it was obvious Trentadue didn't do that to himself, so that part of the story was made up and the only witnesses were those involved in the coverup. Further, in Hansen's letter: "Cole said he approached investigators with this revealing information because he believed he was being used to cover up Kenneth Trentadue's murder."

In a deposition taken by Jesse Trentadue from Dr. Jordan, the medical examiner stated unequivocally that many of the injuries his brother sustained could not have been self-inflicted. Asked if Trentadue's death resembled any other suicides he had investigated, Jordan stated "not any suicide I have ever witnessed."

Jesse Trentadue obtained the services of Oklahoma City attorney Scott Adams. Adams obtained sworn affidavits from nine inmates at the El Reno penitentiary and the Federal Transfer Center describing in detail being beaten and tortured by guards at those institutions. In fact, in 1993, six federal marshals from the El Reno penitentiary were indicted by a grand jury and pleaded guilty to charges they beat and kicked an inmate while he was in leg irons and handcuffed. one of the marshals received a one-year prison sentence for attempting to prevent another marshal involved in the beating from talking to the FBI.

Hansen's letter also exposed even more damning information:

"Jesse Trentadue said he was contacted by an inmate in a Pennsylvania prison who was, at the time, in the cell next to his brother's at the time of this death. The inmate, who said he read about Kenneth Trentadue's death, informed Jesse Trentadue that he observed eight guards wearing black uniforms and complete riot gear enter Kenneth's cell and heard the screams of an inmate pleading for mercy from an obvious assault. The inmate said he observed the guards dragging a bloodied inmate on the floor shortly after he heard what he described as a man being severely beaten."

It turned out there were witnesses, some that were not intimidated enough to keep their mouths shut. More from Western Journalism:

"An inmate at the time of Trentadue's murder, Alden Gillis Baker, would state that he heard Trentadue being beaten and tortured to death and named the perpetrators as prison guards Robert A. Garza and Wiley Creasey. He later asked for protection from the Government. That same Government found his claims of murder baseless, along with his call for protection. Conveniently, Baker would follow the same fate as Trentadue: he hung himself. This would be the second suspicious death. The third suspicious death was forensic audio-video expert Norman I. Pearle, who would state that the video recording of Trentadue's body and cell taken by Roger T. Groover (a guard at the prison) did not, as reported, "malfunction," but had been erased. Pearle would escape being hung and instead quietly die of a "heart attack." Conveniently, for the Government, the audio-video forensic expert next in line had a contrary opinion of the blank videotape.

"For almost three years, Medical Examiner Fred B. Jordan would fight an almost single-handed battle to find the truth, contacting the Bureau of Prisons, the FBI, and finally the Department of Justice, working his way up to Deputy Attorney General (later Acting Attorney General) Eric Holder."

This is the same Eric Holder who Barrack Obama appointed U.S. Attorney General, and who covered up Operation Fast and Furious, the ATF alleged sting operation that actually provided thousands of guns to Mexican drug gangs in Mexico!

Jordan was told Holder wasn't available.

“What was found out later was that Eric Holder was indeed available, but not to Jordan. Holder would become the “point man” in the cover-up. He would orchestrate what the media would be told and would stave off a congressional investigation. As Jessie Trentadue, Kenneth’s older brother, would state in a letter to Congress in December of 2008 while Holder was going through confirmation hearings as Obama’s choice as Attorney General, Holder was not only the DOJ ‘point man.’ He also had developed a ‘roll out plan,’ beginning with lying to the court in order to file gag orders to keep the case out of the media so that the DOJ had time to develop a strategy to quash both the grand jury and the Trentadue family’s wrongful death lawsuit proceedings.”

Jesse Trentadue and George Hansen would eventually discover some of the names of those involved in the “black uniformed SWAT team” that entered Kenneth’s cell. The prison staff knew all along who, by name, those officers were as there is always a roster of who has the reaction or riot team assignments and who was on duty that night.

Another official document or Declaration was obtained that was given by one Nick Arcabasso, a federal prisoner who was in “the Hole,” which is slang for the solitary confinement cells in the Special Housing Unit, that he was there 30 days as an orderly. He stated “I had several opportunities to witness the guards in the Special Housing Unit abusing inmates. It was common to see the Special housing Unit guards spit in inmates food, beat handcuffed prisoners, as well as destroy inmates personal property and mail.”

Arcabasso stated that one particular officer in the SHU, Rodney De Champlain, was missing for several days during the FBI investigation, and when they were gone De Champlain returned to duty. Arcabasso said “De Champlain told me (after he had heard I had conversations with a black inmate about Trentadue) that he was aware of my conversations, and if he ever heard his name come out of my mouth again, that I would be ‘a dead mother’…he told me that he could make things real hard for me…and that if I couldn’t keep my mouth shut ‘I will kill your sorry ass just like I killed Trentadue.’ For several days after that incident, whenever I would see De Champlain, he would look at me then drag his fingers across his throat in a cutting motion.”

In May of 1997, Arcabasso was brought back to Oklahoma City to testify before the Federal Grand Jury that was investigating the case. While there he noticed an inmate spending a lot of time speaking with the guards. The inmate asked Arcabasso if he was going to get time off for testifying about the Trentadue case, and Arcabasso said “no, it doesn’t work that way.” Arcabasso, probably fearing for his life, told the inmate, who he knew would tell the guards, “I’m planning to lie.”

On August 11, 1997, Mr. Hansen wrote a letter to Larry W. Andrews, Chief of Staff for the Oklahoma County District Attorney’s Office concerning the case and the Oklahoma City bombing, which more and more seemed to tie together in regards to why Kenneth Trentadue was beaten. It was the day that Rep. Charles Key’s Oklahoma County Grand Jury convened to investigate the bombing had re-convened after a recess. In the letter he mentioned General Ben Partin, USAF, Retired, who was an Air Force explosives expert that had requested to testify to the Grand Jury. He then mentioned my friend and former US Army CID investigator Gene Wheaton, and following that he mentioned me.

In the letter Mr. Hansen says “General Partin…is looking forward to providing early technically useful testimony to assist the Grand Jury in its deliberations. General Partin also provided Mr. Macy with the name of Gene Wheaton, long-time experienced criminal investigator with a strong Oklahoma background and inside knowledge of the bombing situation, as a potentially useful witness. I provided Mr. Macy with Wheaton's new phone number during our later conversation. An associate of Mr. Wheaton's, a recently retired long-time Master Officer on the Tulsa Police force who worked closely with the FBI through the initial stages of the Bombing Investigation, has a 30-page technical and professional report on the bombing he would like to present and discuss with the Grand Jury. His name is Craig Roberts and I believe he can be very useful. He's having a bout with cancer at the moment and undergoing chemotherapy, but feels that he can appear with no difficulty with some accommodation of schedule. I hope you share this letter with Mr. Morgan (First Assistant District Attorney) on these Grand Jury matters."

I was never called.

Even though the letter of that date went on to state that Jesse Trentadue and George Hansen had witnesses and testimony, and could identify twelve killers, nothing more came out of it. And worse, Dr. Jordan, in July of 1998, changed his mind and "ruled the manner of death of Kenneth Trentadue was a suicide." Someone had gotten to him, and some of our sources reported that it was "investigators" from the Oklahoma County District Attorney's office—Macy's boys.

But for Jesse Trentadue, such a change in Jordan's findings was ridiculous. In an article in the Tulsa World newspaper dated July 11th, 1998, Trentadue said "When I got him home, his head was split open. His knuckles are huge and black. There were still fingerprints under his biceps where he was probably held. His legs are beat up badly. Why would anyone looking at my brother conclude his death was a suicide?"

Then, several years later, Jesse Trentadue finally received some photos of his brother that were taken shortly after his death. The photos showed a caved in skull and ligature marks on his neck that matched the marks of Flex-cuffs! Flex-cuffs are nylon strips that form loops that are used as temporary handcuffs. Once applied they cannot be removed or slackened and have to be cut off with wire cutting pliers. In the mechanic's world, they are called "tie wraps," and "wire wraps." Only guards would have had them, and if they were secured around someone's neck, and the neck swelled, they could not be cut off even with wire cutters and the victim would die due to carotid artery blood being cut off and possibly by asphyxiation at the same time.

And what about motive? Kenneth was only facing a few months for a parole violation. He had a wife and new son waiting for him, and according to his brother and mother, he "was looking forward to the future."

Kenneth Michael Trentadue was tortured and murdered in August, 1995, while incarcerated at the Federal Transfer Center in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. He was strangled with plastic handcuffs or "Flex-cuffs." Kenneth Trentadue's family believes that he was murdered by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation or guards at the Federal Prisoner Transfer Center in Oklahoma City. Above is a partial close-up photograph of part of Kenneth Trentadue's neck. This photograph depicts the groove or furrow left on Kenneth's neck by a ligature and clearly shows "railroad track" marks of the cuffs. (Photo: Courtesy of Jesse Trentadue)

The way the case was handled by the FBI was not only inept, it was purposely mishandled. The Oklahoma City office of the FBI, which investigated the case, not only spent very little time on it—allegedly because they were so short-handed due to the bombing case—but mishandled the evidence and the chain of evidence. The agent who took Trentadue's bloody clothing left it in the trunk of his car until it was so contaminated that it was useless for lab tests to determine if all the blood was Trentadue's or also prison guard attackers. The prison operations lieutenant, Kenneth Freeman, took about 30 photos of Trentadue's body after he died, but the negatives could not be found. The videotape taken when Trentadue's body was found had been erased. The Acting Warden did all she could to destroy forensic evidence on the body by attempting to have the body cremated. The Justice Department, after an 11-month Janet Reno/Eric Holder investigation, found no evidence of foul play. Even Oklahoma Senator Don Nichols, who went through the Federal Transfer Center on December 1st, 1997, said that "There's a lot of things that happened in this case that are very, very troubling. There's a very strong possibility of a homicide."

December 9, 1999. Jesse Trentadue received a call from inmate Alden Gillis Baker, from USP Lompoc, California. Baker told Trentadue that he had occupied he same cell as Kenneth even though prison records did not support that. In fact such records disappeared. Baker was doing time in Lompoc and called Jesse. Jesse Trentadue wrote “Baker telephoned Jesse to ask for help because he was being threatened by guards at USP Lompoc. During that conversation, Baker told Jesse that he had called DOJ Attorney Peter Schlossman, one of the attorneys representing the government against my family’s civil law suit, to tell Schlossman about the threats he was receiving from BOP staff and to ask for help. Baker went on to say that upon hearing this, Schlossman asked Baker whether Baker was willing to say that his deposition testimony about having witnessed Kenneth Trentadue’s murder was a lie. In response to that question, Baker told Schlossman that his deposition testimony was the truth. Upon hearing this, Baker said Schlossman responded, “I have nothing further to say to you,” and hung up the telephone.

“August 3, 2000. Baker was found hanging by a bed sheet in his SHU Unit cell at Lompoc. The DOJ contends that Baker’s death was a suicide, but will not release any documents or evidence on the matter. That telephone call was recorded by the BOP and it still likely exists, but the DOJ will not turn over the recording to Trentadue’s family. Not only does Baker’s death mirror Trentadue’s, but it is exactly what another inmate, Nick Arcabasso, was told would happen to him if he told anyone about having heard guard Rodney DeChamplain say that “he killed Trentadue.” Arcabasso was told if he said anything about that admission, he would “just be found swinging from a bed sheet.”

Attorney Jesse Trentadue has continued to fight for the truth, filing suit after suit against the FBI and DoJ, including suits concerning the Oklahoma City bombing, which include demanding to see the video tapes of the Murrah Building scene taken by security cameras on April 19th, 1995 and removed by the FBI (including the cameras that took them). He has been denied every time, even after receiving court orders from a judge ordering the FBI to find and turn over the video tapes.

One rebuttal to providing information to Trentadue by the FBI was sixteen pages long and went into detail point-by-point why (and how) the FBI could get away from not honoring the FOIA’s and court orders due to everything from “it’s an ongoing investigation” (it’s not) to “privacy rights (probably not wanting to identify the BOP personnel involved even though as government employees they are not protected by privacy rights concerning their official duties and how they attended to them).

Jesse Trentadue, with the help of others, gleaned enough information to name some of the names involved in a law suit he filed on behalf of the Trentadue family on May 22, 1997 in federal court. The suit named the defendants: The United States of America (the governing body of those involved), U.S. Department of Justice (under which falls the Bureau of Prisons), Federal Bureau of Prisons, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Kathleen M. Hawk, Wallace H. Cheney, Charles Turnbo, Michael D. Hood, Robert Guzik, Thomas R. Kindt, Marie J. Carter (Acting Warden), Kenneth Freeman (prison guard), Stuart Lee (prison guard), Rodney De Champlain (prison guard), Bryan Donnelly (prison guard), Carlos Mier (PA on the night Kenneth was killed), and John Does 1-10 and Jane Does 1-4.

The disposition of the law suit is best explained by Jesse Trentadue:

“December 15, 2000. The jury returns a verdict against Stuart A. Lee for having violated Trentadue’s civil rights under the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The case against the United States for assault, battery, conspiracy, spoliation [destruction of evidence] and infliction of emotional distress was taken under advisement.

“January 12, 2001. The Court enters a Judgment against former BOP employee Stuart A. Lee for having violated Trentadue’s civil rights. A similar ruling is expected from the Court with respect to the assault, battery and conspiracy claims against the DOJ.

“May 1, 2001. The Court enters a judgment against the DOJ and in favor of Trentadue’s family in the amount of $1.1 million. The judgment was for the intentional infliction of emotional distress upon Trentadue’s family by the DOJ. Because of perjury and destruction of evidence, however, the Court was unable to find that Trentadue’s death was a homicide. But in that judgment, the District Court gave a scathing criticism about several DOJ employees who testified at trial:

“The testimony of PA Mier, Lt. Freeman and BOP Guard Robert Garza raise serious questions as to their truthfulness and reveal a lack of respect for the solemnity of sworn proceedings. From the time of Trentadue’s death up to and including the trial, these witnesses seemed unable to comprehend the importance of a truthful answer.

“The Court’s assessment of Mier, Freeman and Garza’s testimony was entirely accurate. Yet that same assessment could have been made with respect to the testimony of numerous other DOJ employees, such as Roger T. Groover. At trial, Groover admitted that although he had testified under oath before the federal Grand Jury, the Office of the Inspector General, and the BOP, that he saw and videotaped Trentadue hanging in Cell A-709, these statements were not true. Groover confessed that “he did not see Trentadue hanging” and that he “did not videotape Trentadue hanging.”

Perjury is a felony, but I have not found any disposition where Groover was held accountable by the federal government.

Altogether, the DOJ expended in excess of $5 million fighting the Trentadue family’s lawsuit.

But the truth of what actually happened that night remains untold. Kenneth Trentadue, probably because of mistaken identity, was beaten, tortured, and murdered. But a question I have is how any BOP personnel became involved in the first place. If Kenneth Trentadue was suspected to be one of the Midwest Bank Bobbers, or possibly a John Doe in regards to OKBOMB, it would have been an FBI team that would have been involved since the Oklahoma City and bank robber cases were in their sphere of investigations, not the BOP guards.

What does remain true is that none of those who were involved ever paid for their crimes and still remain at large.

While going though my files I noticed a mention by one of our Baker Street Irregulars investigators, Pat Briley concerning the Trentadue case. In one page of notes Briley wrote “Timothy McVeigh named Richard Lee Guthrie as John Doe 2. Guthrie was part of a bank robbery team. Kenneth Trentadue, Richard Lee Guthrie and Alden Gillis Baker all died in Federal Custody.”

Whether McVeigh ever named anyone as John Doe #2 is debatable. Guthrie may have been in the second Ryder truck with Dennis Mahon, but we don't have anything to substantiate that other than conjecture and sketchy witness descriptions.

But one thing remains true. Kenneth Trentadue would not be the last death due to circumstances pointing to federal agents.

Kenneth Trentadue's body showing massive damage. A closer inspection shows the ligature mark on the throat to match the locking grooves of "flex cuffs," which are carried by law enforcement officers as spare handcuffs and ankle cuffs. No bed sheet did this.

CHAPTER 16

The Strange Death of Sgt. Terrance Yeakey, OCPD

"We know that when the government lies, we have an onion to peel. First, we peel off the top layer (the first lie), then expose the second layer (the "okay, here's the truth" lie), then the next layer, and the next until we get to the truth. This is the formula I used on all the cases I've worked. I peeled onions."

Craig Roberts to Chris Emery
(Freemind Films), 2007

One of the first Oklahoma City police officers to enter the building on April 19th, shortly after the blasts, was Oklahoma City police sergeant Terrance "Terry" Yeakey. Sergeant Yeakey, an African-American officer with a large stature and sometimes known as a "gentle giant," would see things inside the building minutes after the blasts that would prove to be fatal to him. On May 8, 1996, only three days before Yeakey was to receive the Oklahoma City Police Department's Medal of Valor, he "committed suicide." The 30 year-old officer was found in a field near El Reno, west of Oklahoma City, by a Canadian County Deputy Sheriff. Yeakey's wrists were slashed in numerous places, as was his neck and throat. Apparently not satisfied with his initial attempt to take his own life, he got out of his car, which was parked on a country road nearby, crossed over a barbed wire fence, walked almost a mile-and-a-half over rough terrain, then pulled out his gun, and shot himself in the head. His body, according to the medical examiner's sketch, showed imprints on his wrist that appeared to be where handcuffs had been. And the bullet trajectory entered his skull from the top right side several inches above the ear, then traveled and a downward angle to exit his lower left cheek! No typical striations were around the entrance wound, no powder burns described by the ME, and it was an apparent small caliber due to the size of the entry and exit wounds. There were large circular indentions in the skin around the wound which, to me, would describe a silencer was used. It definitely was not a 9mm pistol like Yeakey was issued since the exit wound was small caliber and there was no "blow out" from the skull. Having seen my share of suicides and homicides and gunshot wounds, the above description matches that of an execution style murder. The explanation for the path of the bullet wound alone would indicate Yeakey was on his knees and his assassin stood above and to his right side, put the barrel/silencer to Yeakey's head on a downward angle, and pulled the trigger. One shot.

To justify Yeakey's death and motive for suicide in the mind of the public, and the media, his chain of command at the police department, claimed Sergeant Yeakey "was wracked with guilt" over his inability to help more people that fateful morning. They also claimed he led a "troubled family life," having been recently divorced from his wife, Tonia, and separated from his two daughters, aged two and four, whom according to the Daily Oklahoman, he was not permitted to see due to a restraining order.

Other accounts from some in the upper echelons of the OCPD suggested that Yeakey was reluctant to receive the Medal of Valor, which he was to be awarded, due to his "guilt" over being injured in the Murrah Building. "He didn't like it," said his supervisor Lt. Jo Ann Randall. "There are some people that like to be heroes and some that don't. He was not one that wanted that."

“He had a lot of guilt because he got hurt,” added fellow officer Jim Ramsey.

Apparently, there was much more behind Terrance Yeakey’s reluctance to be honored as a hero.

“He kept telling me it wasn’t what I thought it was,” said his ex-wife, Tonia Rivera-Yeakey, “that they were only choosing officers who were not even at the site, you know—who didn’t see anything—to take public rewards, recognition, that sort of stuff.

“They started pressuring them into taking [the rewards],” added Rivera. “There came a time about mid-year, when they were forcing him to go to these award ceremonies. As in, ‘Yes, you could not go, but we’ll make your life hell’”.

The story of the reluctant hero, she added, was nothing more than a “real thin veil of truth” which covered up a “mountain of deceit.”

His sister, Vicki Jones, agreed. “Terry hated that stuff. ‘I’m no hero,’ he would say. ‘Nobody that had anything to do with helping those people in that bombing are heroes. We just couldn’t do enough.”

Shortly after Terry’s death, a good friend of Yeakey, and herself a bombing survivor, Ramona McDonald shared a letter that Yeakey wrote her about his concerns and fears regarding what was happening to him on the police department, and because he kept trying to tell people that what happened to the building was not what everyone was being told. And concerning his statement to his sister, why would the Medal of Valor recipient make such a bizarre-sounding statement? In the letter he wrote Ramona McDonald, Yeakey tells the real reason for his reluctance to be honored as a hero:

“Dear Ramona,

“I hope that whatever you hear now and in the future will not change your opinions about myself or others with the Oklahoma City Police Department, although some of the things I am about to tell you about is very disturbing.

“I don’t know if you recall everything that happened that morning or not, so I am not sure if you know what I am referring to.

“The man that you and I were talking about in the pictures I have made the mistake of asking too many questions as to his role in the bombing, and was told to back off.

“I was told by several officers he was an ATF agent who was overseeing the bombing plot and at the time the photos were taken he was calling in his report of what had just went down!

“I think my days as a police officer are numbered because of the way my supervisors are acting and there is [sic] a lot of secrets floating around now about my mental state of mind. I think they are going to write me up because of my ex-wife and a VPO.

“ I told you about talking to Chaplain Poe, well the bastard wrote up in a report stating I should be relieved of my duties! I made the mistake of thinking that a person’s conversation with a chaplain was private, which by the way might have cost me my job as a police officer! A friend at headquarters told me that Poe sent out letters to everyone in the department! That BITCH (Jo Ann Randall) I told you about is up to something and I think it has something to do with Poe. If she gets her way, they will tar and feather me!

“I was told that Jack Poe has written up a report on every single officer that has been in to see him, including Gordon Martin and John Avery.

“Knowing what I know now, and understanding fully just what went down that morning, makes me ashamed to wear a badge from Oklahoma City’s Police Department. I took an oath to uphold the Law and to enforce the Law to the best of my ability. This is something I cannot honestly do and hold my head up proud any longer if I keep my silence as I am ordered to do.

“There are several others out there who was [sic] what we saw and even some who played a role in what happened that day.

[Two Pages Missing at this point, but they may have contained the part where the officers at the scene of the bombing that morning were “threatened by federal agents to keep their mouths shut about everything they had seen and heard there that morning,” and information of death threats to those who couldn’t. This was related to me by several OCPD officers who were on the scene that day.]

“My guess is the more time an officer has to think about the screw up the more he is going to question what happened… Can you imagine what would be coming down now if that had been our officers who had let this happen? Because it was the feds that did this and not the locals, is the reason it’s okay. You were right all along and I am truly sorry I doubted you and your motives about recording history. You should know that it is going to one-hell-of-a-fight.

“Everyone was behind you until you started asking questions as I did, as to how so many federal agents arrived at the scene at the same time.

“Luke Franey (a ATF agent who claimed he was in the building) was not in the building at the time of the blast, I know this for a fact, I saw him! I also saw full riot gear worn with rifles in hand, why? Don’t make the mistake as I did and ask the wrong people.

“I worry about you and your young family because of some of the statements that have been made towards me, a police officer! Whatever you do don’t confront McPhearson with the bomb squad about what I told you. His actions and defensiveness towards the bombing would make any normal person think he was defending himself as if he drove the damn truck up to the building himself. I am not worried for myself, but for you and your group. I would not be afraid to say at this time that you and your family could be harmed if you get any closer to the truth. At this time I think for your well being it is best for you to distance yourself and others from those of us who have stirred up too many questions about the altering and falsifying of the federal investigation’s reports.

“I truly believe there are other officers like me out there who would not settle for anything but the truth, it is just a matter of finding them. The only true problem as I see it is, who do we turn to then?

“It is vital that people like you, Edye Smith, and others keep asking questions and demanding answers for the actions of our Federal Government and law enforcement agencies that knew beforehand and participated in the cover-up. (Author’s emphasis)

"The sad truth of the matter is that they have so many police officers convinced that by covering up the truth about the operation gone wrong, that they are actually doing our citizens a favor. What I want to know is how many other operations have they had that blew up in their faces? Makes you stop and take another look at Waco.

"I would consider it to be an insult to my profession as a police officer and to the citizens of Oklahoma for ANY of the City, State or Federal agents that stood by and let this happen to be recognized as any thing other than their part in participation in letting this happen. For those who ran from the scene to change their attire to hide the fact that they were there, should be judged as cowards.

"If our history books and records are ever truly corrected about that day it will show this and maybe even some lame excuse as to why it happened, but I truly don't believe it will from what I now know to be the truth.

"Even if I tried to explain it to you the way it was explained to me, and the ridiculous reason for having our own police departments falsify reports to their fellow officers, to the citizens of the city and to our country, you would understand why I feel the way I do about all of this.

"I believe that a lot of the problems the officers are having right now are because some of them know what really happened and can't deal with it, and others like myself made the mistake of trusting the one person we were supposed to be able to turn to (the chaplain) only to be stabbed in the back."

Yeakey's letter finished with "I am sad to say that I believe my days as a police officer are numbered because of all of this."

Shortly after the bombing, Yeakey appeared at his ex-wife's residence. "About two weeks before his death, he'd come into my home at strange times," said Rivera, "two-thirty in the morning, four in the morning, unannounced—trying to give me life insurance policies.… He kept telling me we needed to get remarried immediately, or me and the girls would not be taken care of.

"I mean, why would a guy tell you to take a life insurance policy, knowing damn well it wouldn't pay for a suicide? He obviously knew he was in danger."

Yet Sergeant Terrance Yeakey was not the type of person to easily show his feelings. He didn't want to tell his family anything that might get them hurt.

"He told me enough to let me know that it was not what they were making it out to be," said Rivera, "and that he was disgusted and didn't want any part of it, but he never went into detail.… It scared me."

Within days of the bombing, according to a sympathetic government source who has spoken to Rivera, Yeakey began receiving death threats. He was at his ex-wife's apartment when the calls came. Afraid for his family, he got up and left.

"When he came to my apartment two weeks prior, trying to give me these insurance policies," said Rivera, "he sat on my living room couch and cried and told me how he had a fight with [his supervisors] Lt. Randall and Maj. Upchurch. He did not tell me what that entailed, but he was scared—he was crying so badly he was shaking.

"He wouldn't totally voice whatever it was," recalled Rivera. "It was like he'd be just about to tell me—he'd want to spill his guts—and then he stopped, and he just cried. And that's when he kept insisting that I take the insurance policy."

Although Yeakey was concerned for his family, the marriage was not without abuse. Rivera had filed a VPO (Victim's Protective Order) against him slightly over two years before. In a fit of temper, Yeakey had once threatened to take his life and those of his wife and children.

"I think it was said in the haste of, well, he's going to kill all of us kind of thing—cop under pressure," said Rivera.

But that was over a year and-a-half prior to Yeakey's death. Yeakey had spent considerable time with his wife and children since then, including taking them on family outings.

Nevertheless, the Oklahoma City Police Department (OCPD) attempted to use the incident to claim that Yeakey was suicidal. It was on the day of his death, around 1:30 p.m., that they called Rivera, trying to get her to file a VPO violation based on the two-year-old report. "They wanted me to come down and make some statements against him," Rivera said. This was before his body was found.

On the same afternoon, in-between messages on his answering machine from his sister, Vicki Jones and his supervisor Lt. Jo Ann Randall, Yeakey had a message from Tonia. "The message was like at 5:30 in the afternoon," recalled Rivera. "I sound like I'm whispering, and I'm apologizing for waking him up—at 5:30 in the afternoon—on Wednesday."

It seems the intent behind this cleverly-crafted deception was to convince the family and potential investigators that Rivera was an “evil person,” who was sleeping with him the night before, but “went down and filed a VPO the next day.”

“That tape was planted,” said Rivera. “I never called his house.”

It seemed some individuals in the OCPD were playing an elaborate game to sow confusion and mistrust, and create the appearance that Rivera was responsible for her ex-husband’s death.

“So it comes out in paper after paper how he’s having problems with his ex-wife, how he’s not allowed to see his children. “They’re trying to play up the story of the bitch-ass wife whose trying to get him fired.”

Yet Rivera claimed she never filed a VPO violation. “The OCPD wanted to file one,” said Rivera. “But I never signed it.” Rivera claimed she had gone to the police station, but simply out of concern for her ex-husband, who had been acting strangely.

“Nobody ever said, ‘Mrs. Yeakey, Terry’s missing. Do you know anyplace he might have gone to? They never told me that they weren’t able to locate him, that they were concerned, you know—nothing. I never knew he was missing.”

If Officer Yeakey’s death was anything more than a suicide, the OCPD didn’t go to any great lengths to find out. While his death occurred in El Reno—not far from the federal prison where McVeigh was being held—the OCPD took over the crime scene, squeezing the El Reno Police Department out of the picture. The OCPD’s Media Relations officer, Cpt. Ted Carlton, explained, “It was our police officer who was killed. It’s not uncommon [to take over the investigation] in the case of a smaller police agency.”

Although forensics are also standard procedure in the event of a violent or suspicious death, especially that of a police officer, Yeakey’s car was never dusted for prints. “And the next day, they gave us the damn car!” said Mrs. Jarrahi, Yeakey’s mother. “It was full of blood.”

When Yeakey’s Brother-in-Law, Glenn Jones, inspected the dead man’s car, he discovered a bloody knife stashed underneath the glove compartment. Yet according to the responding officer, Yeakey had apparently used a razor blade. Where did the knife come from? Since no forensic investigation was conducted, this remains unclear. And if it was Yeakey’s knife, and he was intent on committing suicide, why would he hide the knife in the first place.

To make strange matters even stranger, no autopsy was ever conducted. The ME’s office took photographs of the body, and did two sketches on a standard “body form” which is a simple drawing of a male body with front and rear views, and another sketch on a form showing a human skull. The person who sketched in the wounds did note the several places on the wrists and inner elbows and side of neck that were lacerated, and showed the bullet entrance and exit wounds on the skull. But no toxicology was reported to the public as having been performed, and no internal standard autopsy was conducted.

“There were common sense things that were wrong about the whole thing, that makes it so weird,” added Mrs. Jarrahi. “It just doesn’t seem right. Why would policemen and the authorities make such common mistakes that would leave questions? It’s just really weird.”

If Yeakey’s death was a suicide, he left no note. Although he was upset over his divorce, according to the family, he was not suicidal. It is also unlikely that he abused drugs, as he was an instructor at DARE, a program designed to keep children off drugs.

Former Canadian County Sheriff’s deputy Clint Boehler, who claims to have known Yeakey, doesn’t concur with this analysis. Boehler said that Yeakey showed up at his house in El Reno on the afternoon of his death, his car stopped at an angle in the middle of the road. When Boehler and his girlfriend, Kate Allen, a paramedic, ran outside, they found Yeakey virtually passed out.

“He couldn’t tell us his name initially,” said Allen. “He was ill, and he was very anxious. His heart rate was rapid; he was sweaty.… He told us he had been having concentration problems, he hadn’t slept. He had all the appearances, my first guess would be, of someone who was having emotional problems. And my second guess would be, of some kind of substance abuse problem. But that’s a pure guess.”

Or it could have been that he had been given drugs that day without his knowledge.

Boehler added that Yeakey said he hadn’t eaten, and was “throwing up, taking medication, and incoherent. He was taking medications for his back,” said Boehler. “He had four or five medications in the car.”

Boehler and Allen didn’t know that Yeakey had Sickle-Cell Anemia—a blood-sugar-related condition that caused seizures. It was these seizures, Rivera explained, that would occasionally cause her ex-husband to act “out-of-sorts,” or even to slip into unconsciousness.

In spite of his medical condition, Rivera insisted that Terrance Yeakey was a health fanatic. The prescriptions were for his condition, she said, but he used only the minimum amounts.

According to Canadian County Sheriff’s Deputy Mike Ramsey (no relation to OCPD Officer Jim Ramsey), who drove Yeakey home, Yeakey was not suicidal. “He didn’t give me any indications that he was out to do harm to himself,” said Ramsey. “He seemed more disoriented, tired.”

There are many things about Officer Yeakey’s death that remain a mystery. While Boehler described a man on drugs, the Medical Examiner claims they didn’t bother to conduct a drug test because it “costs too much.”

The ME’s field investigator, Jeffrey Legg, also reported that Yeakey “had been drinking heavily” the day before, based on statements made by OCPD Homicide Detectives Dicus and Mullinex. Yet Terrance Yeakey didn’t drink, and their own report concluded that there was no alcohol in the body at the time of death.

Canadian County Sheriffs discovered the abandoned car, filled with blood, about two and-a-half miles from the old El Reno reformatory. The OCPD was notified, and Police Chief Sam Gonazles flew out by helicopter. Using dogs, they followed a trail of blood, and found the body in a ditch, about a mile and-a-half from the car. (Legg reported the body was 1/2 mile south of the car, when in fact it was 1 1/2 miles north-east of the car.)

As if this weren't strange enough, Yeakey's diet-related condition would have made him too weak to walk the mile and-a-half from his car to where his body was found—especially after losing two to three pints of blood.

Nevertheless, the OCPD ruled it a suicide on the spot. Their investigation remained sealed. David Hoffman tried to get a copy, but was unable to obtain it, and not even the family was allowed to see it.

"There were so many things that were weird," said Mrs. Jarrahi. "My daughter kept going back to the Police Department. She said, 'Well what about this… we knew he had a camcorder, we knew he had a briefcase…'

"These are things we never got back. The kid always carried camera and film. [He] never went anywhere without his camera and briefcase. He had all his important papers in there.… We got the camera back. We never got the film back. We never got the briefcase. They said they never saw it."

In regards to Yeakey's videos, Detective Mullinex, who "investigated" the case for the OCPD, told Vicki Jones, Yeakey's sister, "I really don't think you'll want to see those; they contain pornography." Jones didn't believe him and didn't care. "I want those tapes!" she demanded.

The Homicide detective finally told her she'd get them back after they had "examined the evidence."

"One minute the guy would say he had them," said Jones, "the next minute he'd say 'we don't have anything.'"

According to Jones, Mullinex then said, "Now, we all loved Terry. I hope you understand that, but I'm not going to let you see any pictures. And I don't know anything about a briefcase, but if there's anything back there, I'll give you a call, and you can come back and get them."

"And I just sat there and looked at him, and said to myself, 'You're doing a great performance, but it's not working.' Then he got really uptight and said, 'Well, some of us hated Terry.' [Then] he kind of grabbed his face and said 'oh shit.'"

For his part, Mullinex had "no comment either way." He then told Hoffman when Dave interviewed him, "I don't remember what I said to the lady, but I certainly was not rude to her. This comes as a big shock to me, because he was a police officer and a friend of mine. It was a hard thing and hurt me to have to work it."

OCPD Cpt. Carlton likewise feigned shock at Jones' rebuffs, and said he would have to know who the officer was who made those statements. He then asked Hoffman to have the family contact the OCPD directly (as though they hadn't already done so numerous times), and he would meet with them and discuss the case, but that Cpt. Danny Cockran, Chief of the Homicide Squad, would have to make the decision about whether or not to let the family see the files.

Yet Carlton's statements fly in the face of the experiences of not only Yeakey's mother and sister, but those of his ex-wife. In a letter to Police Chief Sam Gonzales dated September 4, 1996, Rivera writes:

“Needless to say, I have many questions regarding the investigation. What type of weapon was used to inflict the gunshot wound to his head? Who located the body? How could the cause of death be determined with such confidence with the multitude of injuries to his body and how did he walk the distance indicated in People magazine with the great loss of blood from razor cuts not only to both wrists, but both his forearms as well as two razor cuts to his neck? Not only did he walk this distance, but he struggled with a barb wire fence to reach his chosen destination to die, then inflicted the gunshot wound to himself? I request that a copy of the investigative report of his death be made available to me.”

Gonzales didn’t respond.

Police officials eventually responded to Vicki Jones’ complaints by telling her she needed to see a psychiatrist. “They said, ‘We’re just trying to protect you.’”

Exactly what were they trying to protect her from? When Hoffman called Mrs. Jarrahi, the telltale signs of a tapped phone were clearly present. If Terrance Yeakey’s death was a simple suicide, why would law-enforcement agencies be tapping the family’s phones?

The OCPD soon began conducting surveillance on the dead man’s family.

“There was always an officer out there in front of our apartment,” said Jones. Anywhere we went, we had an officer or someone in a marked car following us around. It started right after I started going to the Police Department quite a bit.”

They also tailed Rivera. When she confronted the officers, they ignored her, hid their faces, or sped off. Cars were parked outside her children’s’ school. When she spoke to school officials about the surveillance one afternoon, she went to work and was startled to find the conversation on her office answering machine! Rivera had spoken to the school principal in person. How did the conversation wind up on her answering machine?

The harassment against Officer Yeakey’s family wasn’t limited to mere surveillance. After Rivera met with Charles Key, her car was broken into and her house was broken into twice.

She finally moved to Enid, a town near Oklahoma City, when the heat became too hot. “I lived in an apartment on the third floor with a security alarm in it,” said Rivera. “I’d come home and the alarm would be off. I’d notice things out of place. There’d be cabinets open that I’d have no reason to have opened.”

About two weeks after Terry’s death, Rivera went downstairs around 6:30 one morning to do some laundry, “and there was a man downstairs with huge headphones on, at 6:30 in the morning, right behind my apartment.…”

The individual, who was wearing a jogging suit—wasn’t jogging, and was not doing laundry. “He looked startled when I came around the corner,” said Rivera. “I came back down at 8:30 and the guy was still there.”

One day Rivera came home to find her front door open and off its hinges. When the frightened single mother walked into her bedroom, she found a balloon tied to her door. It read: “Get well soon. This will keep you busy until you do.”

It seems the OCPD and the FBI thought that Officer Yeakey had passed off some incriminating documents concerning the bombing cover-up to his ex-wife, and were intent on obtaining the documents.

The surveillance, break-ins, and thinly-veiled threats soon escalated into more serious incidents. Right before Yeakey's murder, the couple's Ford Explorer began getting mysterious flats. "And when I'd roll it into a shop," said Rivera, "they'd pull out like six or seven nails." This occurred between eight and ten times, she said.

Rivera explained that once during a quarrel, Terry had removed some fuses from her car to keep her from leaving. The police knew about the incident, said Rivera, who thought the subsequent events were created by the OCPD to sow mistrust and provide a convenient trail of evidence to prove that Yeakey led a troubled family life. Yet while Yeakey admitted to removing the fuses, he repeatedly and adamantly denied that he had damaged the car—a car that was registered in his name and carried his children to and from school.

On April 24, two weeks before he was found dead, the Explorer began acting strangely. When Rivera pulled it into the local Aamco Transmission Center, she found that it had been tampered with. "Somebody who knew what they were doing pulled hoses from your car," said Todd Taylor, the chief mechanic. "I'm sorry to tell you this ma'am, but this is not just something you can pull randomly." Taylor also said he thought Rivera's brakes had been tampered with.

About two weeks later the Ford's brakes went out suddenly while Rivera was traveling at 40 mph. "I went to brake," said Rivera, "and guess what? No brakes!" The SUV slammed into the back of a smaller car, damaging it badly. "The message is 'we can get to you if we want to,'" she concluded. Or, someone was trying to kill her.

Officer Jim Ramsey also began making his presence felt. "All of a sudden, when we moved to Oklahoma City [from El Reno]," said Jones, "there was Ramsey. When we joined a new church, Ramsey was there. Ramsey was everywhere. You turn the corner, there was Ramsey.… Everything we did, he was like the helpful old guy. This went on for two months."

"He was keeping tabs on everyone," added Rivera. "He was showing up in a lot of places… just casually, in fact, places where he knew that people knew me just as well as they knew Terry, and weren't buying into the 'it's Tonia's fault' routine.

"[Ramsey] tried to claim it was Terry's ex-wife and love for his children he couldn't see that made him commit suicide," she added. He would talk to her friends. "'How's she taking it? What does she think, blah, blah, blah.'"

Both Rivera and Jones felt the OCPD officer was sent to "baby-sit" them—to maintain an ever-present watchful eye. "When he showed up," Jones said, "I looked at him and said, that is not a friend of Terry's. He was never at the house. I never met him before."

Ramsey, who told People magazine that Yeakey was his "dear friend," also told the press that he was Terry's partner.

"That was a lie," declared Jones.

Rivera concurred. The ex-wife said that not only was Ramsey never Yeakey's partner, but that the two men didn't even get along. "Terry hated Jim Ramsey," said Rivera. "He put on a real good performance," she added. "He's hiding something, I believe. It burns me up."

For his performance, Ramsey was promoted to Detective, and made "Officer of the Year."

If Terrance Yeakey did have many friends in the Police Department, they were among the beat patrolmen, not the upper echelon. While Detective Mullinex said everybody "loved Terry," according to Rivera, the brass "hated his guts." "Him and [Maj.] Upchurch had a hate-hate relationship," she said.

For his part, Mullinex claims he was "totally unaware" of any problems Yeakey was having in regards to what he knew about the bombing. "It is my opinion as a fourteen-year homicide veteran that it was a suicide," said Mullinex. If we thought it was anything [other than a suicide] we would have pursued it to the ends of the earth. We're not hiding anything."

Really?

According to Rivera, three government sources, including a U.S. Attorney and a U.S. Marshal, hold a slightly different view. As relayed by Rivera, the events on the morning of Officer Yeakey's death transpired as follows:

At 9:00 a.m., Officer Yeakey was seen exiting his Oklahoma City apartment with nine boxes of videos and files. He then drove to the police station where he had a fight with his supervisors.

He was told to "drop it" or he'd "wind up dead."

Yeakey was also due for a meeting with the heads of some federal agencies that morning. He apparently decided to skip the meeting, instead, driving straight to a storage locker he maintained in Kingfisher.

What he didn't realize was that the FBI—or "someone"—had him under surveillance, and began following him. The six-year OCPD veteran and former Sheriff's Deputy easily made them and then eluded his tail. Once at his storage facility, he secured his files, tapes, and photographs.

That morning Yeakey told a friend, who he planned on meeting for lunch, that (paraphrasing) "the feds have been watching me, and I need to get to my storage locker and drop some stuff off after I shake whoever is following me, then I'll head back to town." Yeakey's intention, as described, did not match the later official story of his actions that day.

What was in the files? According to one of Rivera's sources, incriminating photos and videos of the bombed-out building. Perhaps more.

On the way back, whoever was then following him in a plain unmarked car caught up with him just outside of El Reno. "He had nothing on him," at that point, said Rivera, "just copies of copies."

While it is not known exactly what transpired next, Rivera's confidential source "described in intimate detail," the state of the dead man's car. The seats had been completely unbolted, the floor-boards ripped up, and the side panels removed, all in an apparent effort to find the incriminating documents or other items. Would Yeakey have done this to his own car?

There were also burn marks on the floor. Apparently, the killers had used Yeakey's car to destroy what little evidence they had discovered.

At approximately 6:00 p.m. that evening, Canadian County Deputy Sheriff Mike Ramsey was cruising the area near the El Reno reformatory when he noticed an abandoned vehicle on a rural road. "Immediately [the] hair stood up on the back of my neck," said the deputy. Ramsey came upon the empty car which he immediately recognized as Yeakey's. There was blood on both seats, and a razor blade lying on the dash. Yeakey was nowhere to be found.

The deputy immediately called for a homicide investigator, and taped off the scene. It wasn't until several hours later that police dogs finally located Yeakey's body in a ditch, a mile and-a-half away.

Ramsey's official Crime/Incident report notes (actual wording and spelling):

"On this date at 1810 hours while in route to a burglary call, I observed the above described vehicle parked on the west edge of Fort Reno Rd. approximately 100 yards north of Jones Rd, I advised the dispatcher of the tag number displayed on the vehicle and exited my unit to check the vehicle. I looked through the drivers door window and observed what appeared to be blood on the drivers seat and center console. I also observed the vehicle to be locked and the windows rolled up. I advised the dispatcher to send an investigator to my location and notify CPT. MCCOLUM and SHERIFF HAWKINS. I then secured the scene with barricade tape. At 1821 hours Investigator LT. RECTOR arrived and assumed control of the scene."

An Oklahoma Highway Patrol trooper. Jerry Rigg, arrived after Ramsey at 2350 hours (11:50 pm) and Lt. Rector noted in his report:

"OHP Trooper JERRY RIGG arrived a short time later followed by Sheriff LEWIS HAWKINS. We began looking along the roadside and found two razor blades approximately fifteen to twenty yards apart. Just across the small bridge north of where YEAKEY'S vehicle was parked and east into the ditch about six feet, I found a small white plastic razor blade dispenser which also had blood on it. A few feet east of the razor blade dispenser near the top of a round wooden fence post, was a large blood smear, where it appeared the subject may have tried to climb over the fence, or possibly may have leaned up against said post, At that point, we cleared the area to wait for personnel from the Oklahoma City Police Department to arrive. Sheriff HAWKINS had also requested our canine unit to be contacted and he also was enroute. I marked the above mentioned items of evidence with yellow flags. After the arrival of the various Oklahoma City Officers, the scene was turned over to them, and we remained on the scene to assist them as needed."

So far, reading these reports and their descriptions of the scene at this point, my "cop sense" told me that Yeakey, who could have killed himself anywhere and made it easier for his body to be found, was actually running from a threat. If he had pursuers, that would explain why there were blood stains in various places, and why he would attempt to get over a fence. He was fighting for his life as he attempted to escape across the field after he had been stopped on that road. After he was killed the killers then went back and tore his car apart searching for something. It is possible that whoever did this are the ones who found and took his briefcase and other materials.

OHP Trooper Legg’s report has some telling items that bring more questions to the case. The report is typed in all capital letters, so I have taken the liberty of using standard case for reading purposes:

“Dec. was an OCPD officer that worked in the D.A.R.E. program. He reportedly had been having serious domestic problem with his ex-wife. Both the dec. and ex-wife had VPO’s against each other. These domestic problems had been going on for about 2 years. Over the last several weeks the dec. has been in some trouble with the department and has claimed that he has been having flashbacks of the bombing. Reportedly the ex-wife filed a complaint against him violating the VPO order and the police dept. was getting ready to start an investigation into the charges.

“Dec was last seen on 05-07-96 between 2330 and 2400. The El Reno P.D. had picked him up and took him to his sister’s house that lives in El Reno because he had been drinking heav[ily]. The sister reports putting him to bed and waking up the next morning and finding him gone. The car of the dec. was found about 0700 on 5-8. They found the body about 1/2 mile south of where the car was found. P.D. found razor blades and a good amount of blood inside the car. Dec. had several cuts on his wrists, forearms, and neck. Dec. shot himself with a 9mm Smith and Wesson semi-auto in the head with an exit to the cheek. The OCPD has no suspicion concerning the death.”

When I read this report I saw several glowing errors, and had more than a few questions. First, Legg did not arrive until almost midnight, and by that time the scene had changed. Legg had to have gone by what he was told, which would have been by the OCPD personnel who arrived to take over the scene, including OCPD chief Sam Gonzales and FBI Senior Agent Bob Ricks (known to some as “Waco Bob” because of his media handling during the Waco tragedy). Legg reports that Terry and Tonia were having trouble, but she states otherwise as already noted. He says in the report that these domestic problems had been ongoing for about two years. Again, that is disputed by Tonia. He writes that Yeakey “has been in some trouble with the department and has claimed that he has been having flashbacks of the bombing. The only trouble I have been able to discover was the trouble he was having with his chain of command who kept telling him to back off and keep his mouth shout about what he saw at the bombing scene. He never said to anyone he was having flashbacks. If that were true, everyone who was there, and every law enforcement officer and emergency responder in the country would have flashbacks from every gruesome scene to which they had been.

Legg’s report stated that Tonia filed a complaint against Terry for violating the protective order and that the police department was “getting ready to start an investigation into the charges.” That is a blatant lie, according to Rivera, as she had not filed any such complaint, but the OCPD personnel she was dealing with attempted to talk her into filing one. The only way the trooper would have put this in his report is because OCPD personnel on the scene said this to him.

The report goes on to say that Yeakey had been taken to his sister's house in El Reno "because he had been drinking heavily" and that she put him to bed. Another lie in the story concocted by OCPD hierarchy. The M.E.s later toxicology report reported NO alcohol in the body, and according to friends and relatives Yeakey didn't drink. His sister, Vikki, said that he was in good shape that night and had not been drinking.

Finally, the kicker. I had been waiting to find out about the gun that was "found at the scene." The first reports said that there was no gun found. But this was corrected later and subsequent reports said that his service pistol was found at the scene, and was taken by the OCPD investigators and turned in as evidence. IF that is so, then the pistol found at the scene was a Glock 9mm semi-auto. Chris Emery, one of our Baker Street Irregulars and a producer for Free Mind Films (who later did the documentary on the bombing titled A Nobile Lie), obtained the graduation information from Yeakey's academy class and it mentions that the OCPD had just changed to the Glock 9mms and they are what was issued. I double checked with OCPD sergeant Don Browning, who was one of the first officers on the scene along with Yeakey on the morning of the bombing and he said they indeed carried the Glocks.

However, in Legg's report, it specifically states "Dec. shot himself with a 9mm SMITH AND WESSON! Already discussed is that the bullet wounds to Yeakey's skull were small caliber and not a 9mm. And if the shot was indeed at a downward angle, the bullet would have been found in the earth within feet of the body by a metal detector, but no such search is ever mentioned.

Further, the Yeakey family asked to have, or to see the gun that was turned in but that was denied. If it was a Smith & Wesson, then it was Yeakey's personal gun (and no one ever reported seeing any gun with Yeakey except his PD issue), then it should have been returned to the family along with any other personal property.

Also, Legg's report states that the body was found 1/2 mile from the car. That is erroneous too as the actual location was almost two miles to the northeast.

It is obvious to me that Legg wrote what he was told at the scene of where the car was found.

After obtaining the Medical Examiner's report, Yeakey's head wound is described as "Thru & thru gunshot to the head-hard contact entry (barrel imprint & soot). Multiple superficial incised wounds to the wrists and neck & antecubital fossa. Early decomposition (skin slip)."

A sound suppressor, or silencer, is notorious for leaving a dirty contact wound. The suppressor tends to accumulate a large amount of soot or burnt powder when a shot is fired as it is the last part of the firearm the bullet traces through when exiting the barrel. The contact wound in itself is a sure indicator that, because it was fired from a downward angle, could not have been fired by Yeakey. If he were to shoot himself, it would have been from one side to the other, or upwards under the chin, or front to back through the mouth. Friends who knew Yeakey well said that "Terry would never do anything to his head or face. He was not one who would commit suicide, and if he were, he'd shoot himself in the heart to preserve his face."

While it is true that a bullet can alter its trajectory once inside the skull, a pathologist in the San Francisco Medical Examiner’s office told Hoffman that a 9mm or other large caliber weapon—the type commonly used by police officers—usually tends to travel in a straight line.

But perhaps the most revealing evidence was that the wound did not have a “Stellate,” the tell-tale star shape caused by the dissipating gases from the gun’s muzzle. At the close range of a suicide weapon, such markings would clearly be present, unless of course, the shooter apparently used a silencer held against the skin.

While Dr. Larry Balding, Oklahoma City’s Chief Medical Examiner, quickly ruled the death a “suicide,” another Medical Examiner’s report would, according to Rivera, surface like an eerie, prescient message from the grave. This other report, quickly redacted and hidden from public view, showed a face that was bruised and swollen; blood on the body and clothes that was not the dead man’s blood type; and multiple deep lacerations filled with grass and dirt, as though the body had been dragged a distance.

Yet according to Rivera, Maj. Upchurch denied that Yeakey’s throat was slashed at all. Rivera was later told by a sympathetic police dispatcher that his throat was indeed slashed—deeply.

Dr. Larry Balding, who signed off on the Yeakey report, is adamant. “I can tell you unequivocally and without a doubt that there was no other ME report.”

Yet while attending a social function, Rivera claims her sister had a chance encounter with the mortician who worked on Yeakey’s body. She was discussing the strange inconsistencies of his death with someone at the party, when the mortician, not knowing the woman was Rivera’s sister, spoke up. “That sounds just like a police officer we worked on in Oklahoma City,” he said. When asked if that man happened to be Terrance Yeakey, the mortician “freaked.”

When pressed, he told the shocked relative that the dead man’s wrists contained rope burns and handcuff marks. A former FBI agent and police officer, the mortician said that Yeakey’s lacerations were already sewn up when the body arrived from the Medical Examiner’s office. Dr. Balding’s response to this was that the marks were merely “skin slippage,” resulting from the natural decomposition of the body. The funeral director also informed Rivera that the cuts that had been sewed up had contained dirt and grass in them, as if after being cut he was dragged over the ground. Or, maybe he was crawling after being cut trying to get away from his attackers.

Yet stranger still, the body was not supposed to go to this particular funeral home at all, but to one in Watonga. While the OCPD was supposed to pay the expenses of the funeral, no funds were ever allocated, according to Rivera. “Vicki had to pay off the burial to Russ Worm [Funeral Home]. So I wonder if we paid somebody off to do the job.”

Was that job to clean up Yeakey so that his manner of death wouldn’t appear suspicious?

This incident is similar to the murder of President Kennedy, whose body was taken to Bethesda Naval Hospital (by way of Walter Reed for a brief stop) instead of being examined by the Dallas Medical Examiner as is standard procedure. Once there, military pathologists and those controlling them were able to skew their findings to the satisfaction of the murderers. The chief pathologist burned his notes, and years later, when researchers went to examine Kennedy's brain, which was kept in a stainless steel lidded bucket, it was found missing from the National Archives. However, one of the Navy corpsmen who was at the autopsy at Bethesda insists that when Kennedy's body arrived there, the skull was empty. He swore "there was no brain! His skull cavity was empty!"

Apparently, Terrance Yeakey's murderers and those covering up his death had not counted on this particular mortician's story to Rivera.

Was Terrance Yeakey tortured? Was he murdered, then made to look like a suicide? Did he know something he wasn't supposed to know, or was he simply despondent over life's circumstances?

Said friend Kimberly Cruz, “I don’t believe he would have done something like that. He was always happy and joking a lot.”

Another friend, Karen Von Tungeln, said, “[Terry and I] talked about a friend in high school who had committed suicide, and how stupid and selfish he was for having done so. ‘I just can’t understand it man,’ said Terry. ‘It makes no sense to me.’”

Yeakey's "Report of Investigation by Medical Examiner (Left). Diagram showing cuts and ligature marks (Right). Report shows cause of death "gunshot wound to head."

If the officer was bent on taking his life, it would appear strange, since he had spent most of the previous month taking entrance exams for the FBI. Yeakey and best friend Barry McCrary were looking forward to becoming FBI agents. Perhaps if he had known the role that the FBI played in the bombing, perhaps even in his own death, he would have changed careers.

Terrance Yeakey was one of the first rescuers in the Murrah Building on April 19. Had he seen something he wasn't supposed to see? Had he heard something he wasn't supposed to hear?

One afternoon, while the family was at Police Headquarters, an officer who Rivera described as Yeakey's "only true friend," pulled them off to the side, and whispered "They killed him."

David Hoffman wrote to then-chief Sam Gonzales, who attended the scene of Yeakey's death on February 6th, 1997, asking for "all investigative case files on the death of Office Terrance Yeakey, which occurred in early May of 1996." Writing as a journalist on Haight Ashbury Free Press letterhead, he stated that "the case is not a juvenile matter, an internal affairs matter, or an ongoing investigation, so no legal reasons existed that the OCPD would not produce the records."

Gonzales' response in a letter dated February 14th, 1997, stated that Title 51, Oklahoma State Statutes, Section 1991, "mandates the release of official offense information by law enforcement agencies, but does not (highlighted) mandate the release of subsequent police investigative reports…For this reason, your request…is denied." Actually, there is no "Section 1991 in Title 51 of the Oklahoma State Statutes. The section dealing with disclosure of public records is 24A.8, "Law Enforcement Records—Disclosure." Police departments are mandated to provide the "original offense report(s), but not supplemental investigative reports (or any juvenile crime reports). In the Yeakey case, there should have been provided all original offense/investigation reports by the various investigators, whether one page or more. That didn't happen.

Gonzales (or a staff member) attached the initial form, a one page Crime Report by an officer Timothy Brown. The report is not the initial crime report, and there would have been initial "first page" crime reports by other officers at the scene. This report, which had been carefully cherry picked for lack of content, only read in the synopsis:

"On 5/08/96, 2025 hours [9:25 pm] I was advised by Capt. Armer V-2 to meet major Upchurch at the above listed location in reference to a signal 7. Upon arrival. 2120 Hours., a crime scene log was made. 2200 Hrs., Brown's wrecker arrived and moved the victim's vehicle to the city garage for homicide units. Impound sheet #210899."

What happened to the first OCPD officers to arrive reports? There had to be several that were releasable to the public, and for sure to representatives of the media. But Gonzales would not release anything other than the above. What was he hiding?

Hoffman also wrote the FBI asking for information on Yeakey, if they had any. The response in a letter dated February 19th, 1997, from Supervisory Agent Richard R. Baker on behalf of SAC Thomas M. Kuker was simply "We will be unable to respond to your inquiry due to current U.S. Department of Justice media policies and guidelines."

In other words, the Janet Reno/Eric Holder DoJ had issued instructions, not referring to any laws as such, to the FBI to have the discretion of what not to release in any case nationwide. It would take a FOIA lawsuit, which is seldom adequately responded to, to make the FBI give up any records.

After Gonzales retired in 1998, the police department got a new chief of police, M.T. Berry. I decided to follow up on Hoffman's request with this new chief, except what I would do instead is formally request that the investigation into Yeakey's death be re-opened. I wrote the letter on Consolidated Press International letterhead, which was the publishing company I started when I retired in 1996 from Tulsa PD. The letter, dated June 12, 1998, after detailing inconsistencies with what I and others discovered in the original investigation, asked that the case be looked into again. I didn't expect much, but I did want to see what the reply would be. There's an old saying in the military "fire a shot down range and see who looks up!"

I wrote in the letter "On April 21, 1995, I was requested to assist the FBI in investigating the bombing of the Murrah Building. This was due to my contacts in the intelligence community and other contacts established during my various investigative journalist endeavors. In the following 12 months I became very disenchanted with the manipulations of various so-called law enforcement agencies. I personally witnessed or was advised of situation wherein witnesses were intimidated, evidence was lost or destroyed—or ignored, certain suspects were protected and not arrested, and various coverups were initiated. One of the cases involves Terrance Yeakey's death.

"I am writing to officially request that you reopen the investigation in the death of Sgt. Terrance Yeakey. I am doing so as I am sure that you and I both know that it is a blatant case of homicide involving torture, intimidation, and finally death. It is a very weak attempt by the perpetrators to make it appear a suicide."

The letter went on to list ten facts about the case that proved it was not what was determined to be a suicide, and also asked if a gun was found at the scene when the body was first discovered, what kind of gun and what caliber it was?

The three page letter went on to reconstruct what probably did happen that day in my opinion:

"Yeakey had documents or information that someone wanted to remove from him. He was followed out of town, but he lost his followers until he dropped off the evidence at some undisclosed location. He was removed from his car, taken out into a field, and threatened and tortured (some of which occurred in the car before removal, leaving blood). He was handcuffed sometime during the event, a rope was put around his neck, and he was helpless to defend himself. He was then dragged further into the field, sometimes regaining his feet, sometimes being dragged—hence the mud and grass in the slash wounds). Eventually his captors either found out what they wanted to know (where the evidence was secreted) or decided that he had to be eliminated. It was then that he was executed by gunshot. It appears that he was on his knees and someone stood to his right side, placed a silenced small caliber handgun against his temple and shot at the downward angle. He was left at the scene."

Since I wrote that letter and description of the scenario, I've since began to think that Yeakey was stopped on the road while trying to get away from pursuers, attacked in his car before he could get out, or refused to get out, then dragged out of his car at which time he was chased into the field, to the fence, then beyond until they caught up with him. At that time they handcuffed him and forced him to his knees (not an easy task since he was 6'3" and weighed in at about 250 pounds). It was there he was slashed over and over and asked questions—if his captors didn't care about getting information from him and simply wanted to silence him, they would have shot him in his car and made THAT look like suicide. When they got what they wanted, or failed to get it, they shot him execution style through the head—but at the wrong angle probably because he moved his head away from the barrel of the gun and then they held his head to fire the shot. This is the only scenario that makes sense to me and matches the evidence.

If Yeakey did indeed have a gun with him, why didn't he use it to defend himself when he was stopped on the road or attacked in his car? We'll never know.

If there was a Smith & Wesson 9mm pistol at the scene, but no gun was found until after Chief Gonzales and FBI agent Ricks arrived, then it was probably what is known as a "throw down," a gun left at the scene as "evidence" when there was none previously.

The letter I got back from Chief Berry was almost insulting, accusing me of distorting the facts of a simple, but tragic, suicide of a police officer. No action be taken. It was terse and not very professional considering that it was from one law enforcement officer to another. In it he wrote:

"I received your letter dated June 12, 1998. After careful review of its contents, I found it to contain a number of allegations and unsupported claims. The citizens of Oklahoma City along with the employees of the Oklahoma City Police Department have suffered through one of the most devastating events in American history…I have reviewed the investigative records surrounding the death of Officer Terrance Yeakey. I, along with the on scene investigators believe that Sergeant Yeakey's death was nothing more than a tragic suicide of a police officer…If you have any eye witnesses or supporting evidence contrary to our findings, or information which support the allegations listed in your letter, please come forward with them. We will be more than willing to interview witnesses or examine any new evidence." It was signed M.T. Berry Chief of Police.

He knew that neither I, nor anyone else, could provide "eye witnesses." There was plenty of supporting evidence in the OCPD files—if it had not been destroyed. There was nothing else I could do at this time so I filed the letter—and posted it on my website.

Not one to let a sleeping dog lie, when Berry retired in October 2003, Oklahoma City got a new chief, William Citty.

In May of 2006, after getting re-settled in a new home, I had the desire to attempt one more time to re-open the Yeakey case under the new chief. In May of that year I wrote another letter detailing basically what was in the first letter to Berry, and ended it with "I know that your homicide investigators have many current cases to work. But this victim is one or your officers, and I know that in the Tulsa Police Department, we would not rest until we got to the bottom of the officer's death and put all questions to rest. This is my last request to the OCPD to look into this case, and I am doing so to ease my conscience of what I believe to be an unsolved homicide of a police officer and a subsequent cover-up. There are just too many discrepancies and unanswered questions in this case that need to be addressed honestly. Perhaps you might take more interest in this matter than your predecessor." I ended with "Thank you for taking the time to read this letter, and I wish you the best as Chief of a very fine police department."

I sent him autopsy drawings, showing the path of the bullet, and the ten questions/facts that I had previously sent Gonzales.

Citty's return letter to me was even more terse than Berry's. Citty wrote:

"Dear Mr Roberts,

"Please be advised I received your letter dated May 1, 2006. As your letter indicated this is not the first time you have written the Oklahoma City Police Department regarding your concerns about Sergeant Yeakey's death. As a result of your first letter dated June 12, 1998, Chief M.T. Berry requested a review of the investigation. On June 19, 1998, he wrote you a letter and advised the review had not changed the final disposition of Mr. Yeakey's death. Further, he requested you provide proof of your allegations or have the alleged eyewitnesses come forward. your current correspondence does not provide further proof of your allegations nor does it identify any potential witnesses. After receiving your most recent letter, I once again had Sergeant Yeakey's case reviewed by my staff. I find nothing in the investigator's case file or from the information you have provided that changes the finding of suicide. Again, if you have any proof of your allegations or additional witnesses, please provide me with the information." It was signed William Citty, Chief of Police.

Again, the top brass at OCPD was not only not interested in reopening the investigation, but was hostile in their reply.

Back when I was traveling to Oklahoma City to interview people and attend meetings, I had occasion to meet several OCPD officers. In one particular meeting, over breakfast at a Pancake House, where about ten officers and one chaplain (not Poe) attended, the conversation was about what really happened on April 19th and the following weeks and months. We also discussed the Yeakey death. What I was told by the officers was that everyone in the lower ranks felt it was a homicide, and it was a huge coverup at the highest levels.

I asked them why they didn't come forward with their accusations and mentioned that if it happened in Tulsa, I and others I know would be all over the case. The response was that everyone was told to keep their mouths shut on the bombing, and also on the Yeakey case.

That would not have stopped me or my department. In fact, it would have added fuel to the fire. I don't intimidate and I don't scare, and I know of few others on the Tulsa Police Department that would drop a case like this. It was hard for me to imagine what it would take to so intimidate the rank-and-file of the Oklahoma City Police Department.

Upon leaving the meeting I was approached by one of the officers in the parking lot who I won't identify. He said that he thought he might have what the killers were looking for besides documents, reports, and photos. He handed me a computer disk that Yeakey gave to him for safe keeping. He said “I can’t tell what’s on this disk because I don’t know how to open the files. But whatever is on it might have been the reason Terry was killed.”

Needless to say, I couldn’t wait to “crack the code.” After I returned home I put the disk in my computer and brought up the files. The extension was something I didn’t recognize, and for some reason none of the files would open. But, not to be discouraged, I did have another mode of attack. I had a life-long buddy with whom I went to high school with, a computer guru with Los Alamos National Laboratory who, if anyone could, would know how to open the files.

I called him on the phone and explained the situation. He took it as a challenge and asked that I copy the disk and send it to him as a precaution to having it getting lost.

About a week later he called me. “You say this is from someone that’s involved in the Oklahoma City bombing investigation?”

I affirmed it was.

“Well, that is most interesting. What you have are daily and hourly graphs from nuclear monitors that record any radioactivity in the area. They’re mostly used by FEMA and the EPA. The detectors let FEMA and EPA know if there is any radiation in the air. These graphs spike on April 18th, 19th and 20th.”

Radioactivity? How could that be? But I couldn’t help but wonder if there was some kind of mini-nuke or “back pack” nuke, a military SADM (Special Application Demolition Munition) used that would have been responsible for the large crater in the back of the “cut” in the building that no one could explain. The military had them for use by Special Forces to demolish bridges, road intersections and other structures in case of war.

As soon as I was told what the disk contained I made several copies and put them with trusted people all over the country in envelopes that said “in case of my death open and distribute—a full report is inside.”

If the scenario of a sting operation gone bad was true, there would be no reason for a mini-nuke, if indeed there was one—to be in the building. But if the scenario of the Mena Iran/Contra/Clinton/Bush records were in the Murrah Building, as I was told, that would open up a whole new scenario.

We may never find out what happened to Terry Yeakey on that fateful day. But one thing is for sure. It wasn’t a suicide.

According to the Oklahoma City Police Department Terry Yeakey was fired from the department the day before his “suicide.” I wonder if he even knew that.

Two of the graphs on Yeakey’s computer disk. Graph on the left shows little activity on April 6th, 1995. Graph on the right shows huge spike on April 19th, 1995. Time at bottom of graph is elapsed time of event. Was this computer disk what Yeakey’s killers were looking for?

CHAPTER 17

Federal Denial With Media Reinforcement

If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth. If you tell a lie big enough and keep repeating it, people wil eventually come to believe it.”—Joseph Goebbels, Nazi Propaganda Minister

”We are going to impose our agenda on the coverage by dealing with the issues and subjects we choose to deal with.” —Richard M. Cohan, Senior Producer of CBS News

There is an old saying in the news media: “Never let the truth stand in the way of a good story.” Another version, more in line with the law enforcement and judicial systems is “Never let the facts ruin a good investigation.” In the Oklahoma City bombing case, both statements have rung true.

From the very beginning the case changed from an “investigation” to one of damage control. Beginning with the Day One news releases stating that the explosion (singular) was a car bomb in a station wagon, then progressed to a pickup truck, then finally a Ryder truck as more and more explosive experts came forward to declare that the massive amount of damage could not have been accomplished with such a small amount of ammonium nitrate and diesel fuel in the smaller vehicles. Then, broadcasting all-points-bulletins (APBs), and attempt-to-locate bulletins (ATLs) to all law enforcement organizations, cancelling such bulletins shortly afterwards. Finally, having a John Doe #2 that was described on the scene as Middle Eastern, then quickly changing that on Day Three when AG Janet Reno and President Bill Clinton stated to the media (and the FBI agents) that “there is no Middle Eastern connection to the bombing.”

In the following days and weeks the government version, casting McVeigh and Nichols as the only villains (with the exception of Michael Fortier who played a small but ancillary role), was carried on by most of the media with few exceptions. The national main-stream networks were on board with the Clinton government press releases without question, and by June of 1995 almost all media reporting outside the state of Oklahoma regarding the bombing case ceased to exist.

Add to that the fact that none of the voices of people who lived here, witnessed the event, were victims of the bombing, or were investigating all the real leads would not only not be heard, but would be attacked—if not ignored completely.

All of us who, over time, discovered there was more to the story than what the public was being fed by the government and the media, suffered various parts of the “Five D’s”: Deny (or Denounce), Debunk, Discredit, Demonize and/or Destroy.

First, anything that turned up that was important to the case that should have been a major media story was denied to be of value or factual by the media and by federal law enforcement. Next, if those entities had to address the information at all, they did what they could to Deny anything that was not in the script. Next, Debunk it. Say that a particular lead was followed and proved irrelevant, or that such-and-such information was incompetent or immaterial. Make it not real. Give an alternate version or a different explanation. Do whatever it took to shove the information or the story aside or bury it.

Failing that, or along with it, Discredit the source. That is the major tool of the propaganda machine disguising itself as the "media." Seldom did any federal officials directly attack any one individual or group that contested the government version, but instead they had the media do it for them. The main thrust of this tactic was to discredit the individual or group (such as Key's OBIC and efforts to form a Grand Jury).

Almost from the very beginning the major Oklahoma newspapers and some of the television stations accepted the government version of the event without question and ignored any other information to the contrary. The only news that was reported as it changed was the question of what to do with the Murrah Building, McVeigh's and Nichols current locations and status, and most of all any attacks that could be mounted against those who asked questions or demanded answers.

As an example, there was one (of several) political cartoons in the Tulsa World that showed Rep. Charles Key in a negative light. One even depicted him as the Mad Hatter and those around him in various wacko outfits. It did not matter that the main issue with Key and the OBIC was to ascertain if the government had foreknowledge of the bombing or not—no matter what evidence for that scenario existed. The mission of the newspaper editors was to publicly discredit him and other members of the Committee, and debunk anyone's evidence that would reinforce Key's findings.

The next tactic that was employed early-on was to Divert the investigation, both in the government efforts and in the minds of the public. The main culprits in this were Morris Dees' Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC), a very left wing organization that makes its money not from practicing law, but by selling fear and hate via its newsletters and the "intelligence information" it provides the media and government agencies. They, and the Anti-Defamation League, were the first ones to blame the militias and the Right Wing. They were quickly followed by the so-called Political Research Institute, a left-wing propaganda group that fed anti-Right Wing rhetoric to the media. The main "journalist" involved was one Chip Berlet who describes his work as "Scholarly study of right-wing social and political movements and trends in the United States."

All three of these worked endlessly to divert the investigation by the FBI and DoJ to the Right Wing, from various militias to Right Wing talk radio hosts, and even organizations such as the NRA, Gun Owners of America, and Jews for the Preservation of Firearms.

What really stood out to me was the apparent connection between Morris Dees, who is anti-Christian, (but not Jewish—claims to be Unitarian), and Abraham Foxman, who was at that time head of the Anti-defamation League of the B'nai B'rith.

Dees made his fortune in selling fear. According to discoverthenetworks.org : "Dees is known to be the architect of one of SPLC's most effective—and most controversial—tactics: exaggerating the prevalence and capabilities of racist and extremist rightwing groups operating in the United States in order to frighten supporters into donating money to SPLC.

"Many critics charge that this fundraising revenue, instead of bankrolling SPLC's civil rights work, is funneled disproportionately into the coffers of SPLC officers like Dees. Several studies conducted in the 1990s indicated that Dees and other top SPLC figures earned significantly higher salaries than the leaders of most non-profit organizations.

"Because SPLC perennially disburses twice as much on fundraising as it does on legal services (while skimming off substantial amounts of revenue for its own endowment), Dees' income has provoked accusations of fraud. Stephen Bright, a director of the Southern Center for Human Rights, a leftwing Atlanta-based group that opposes the death penalty, put it bluntly in a 1996 letter to Dees, in which he denounced the latter as a "a fraud and a con man," and upbraided Dees because "you spend so much, accomplish so little, and promote yourself shamelessly."

"JoAnn Wypijewski, who writes for the far-left Nation magazine, says: "No one has been more assiduous in inflating the profile of [hate] groups than [SPLC's] millionaire huckster, Morris Dees, who in 1999 began a begging [fundraising] letter, 'Dear Friend, The danger presented by the Klan is greater now than at any time in the past ten years.'" To put Dees's claim in perspective, the Klan, by that time, consisted of no more than 3,000 people nationwide—a far cry from the 4 million members it had boasted in the 1920s. Nonetheless, Wypijewski notes, "Dees would have his donors believe" that cadres of "militia nuts" are "lurking around every corner."

The Clinton administration, including Janet Reno, as well as key personnel in the media knew Dees was a con man and a huckster, but he was a source of Discredit and Destroy information that could be credited to the SPLC, thereby giving him and his organization national attention, credibility, and most of all free advertising. It would be a huge revelation later in the investigation when we discovered links between Andreas Strassmeir and the SPLC.

In 2000, the SPLC coffers exceeded $120 million. Dees hate mongering has been very successful.

Abraham "Abe" Foxman, whose real name when he was born in Russia was Henry Stanislas Kurpi, was head of the Anti-Defamation League from 1987 to 2015. Shortly after the Oklahoma City bombing one of the organizations that quickly began diverting the national attention in the media to the Right Wing and militias was the ADL. Originally founded after the Leo Frank lynching case in 1915 by the Jewish B'nai B'rith organization, the ADL has opposed groups and individuals it considered to be anti-Semitic and/or racist, including: Nazis, the Ku Klux Klan, Henry Ford, Father Charles Coughlin (leader of the Christian Front), the Christian Identity movement, the German-American Bund, neo-Nazis, the American militia movement and white power "skinheads." The ADL publishes reports on a variety of countries, regarding alleged incidents of anti-Jewish attacks and propaganda. The functions of the ADL and SPLC quickly become apparent, and so is their means of financial support. Without being able to peddle misinformation or inflated information, neither could function.

Representative Charles Key's Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Commission, truthful and accurate media, legitimate law enforcement, and groups such as our Baker Street Irregulars didn't stand much of a chance against the money and influence these organizations could muster.

It has been said that a lie, repeated often enough, is accepted as the truth. That is actually a quote by Vladimir Lenin, later taken up by Nazi propaganda minister Josef Goebbels, who is quoted as saying:

"If you tell a lie big enough and keep repeating it, people will eventually come to believe it. The lie can be maintained only for such time as the State can shield the people from the political, economic and/or military consequences of the lie. It thus becomes vitally important for the State to use all of its powers to repress dissent, for the truth is the mortal enemy of the lie, and thus by extension, the truth is the greatest enemy of the State."

This is exactly what we were up against with both the national media, much of the local media, and the Clinton administration. They had the Big Lie(s), and we were like Agent Mulder in the fictional television series The X-Files: "The Truth is Out There…."

It was code-named Operation Mockingbird. It is the CIA operation in which the Agency has placed its own personnel, or those individuals considered "friendlies" to the Agency, into carefully selected positions in the news media. From newspapers to magazines, TV networks to book publishers, and even in advertising agencies, the CIA has the means to manipulate what is presented to the public. Even though the CIA is prohibited by law from operating inside the United States, that law is totally ignored. I know this because on two occasions I discovered that they even had agents in Tulsa. I stopped one when I was on patrol in downtown Tulsa and a car turned left onto a one-way street in the wrong direction. The driver obviously didn't know Tulsa very well. When I stopped the car, the driver was somewhat irate, but very anxious. As soon as I walked up to the car I saw him talking into a hand-held radio saying "I've lost him."

I knew all the FBI and ATF agents in Tulsa at that time and knew this was not an agent from any of our local offices. I also had the license plate come back to a leased car that could not be traced to anyone in particular.

When I asked for a driver's license the driver, who was alone in the car, he instead showed me his credentials and said "I'm in a hurry." The card in the leather case said "Central Intelligence Agency." I said "I thought you guys were not supposed to operate inside the country. His response was "I'm not here."

Naturally I got him turned around and let him go. I don't know who he and his team were following, or why, but as a military officer with a Top Secret security clearance, I knew better than to ask. I didn't have a "need to know."

The second occasion was when I tried to explain to Pete at the FBI office about the possible connections to Mena and drug smuggling to the case, his response was "do you want to talk to a CIA agent about this? I can give them a call."

Obviously that would be the last person I'd want to talk about drug smuggling to, so my answer was "not necessary."

Agents of Operation Mockingbird, (now under another code name), attempted to keep two of my books from being published or distributed. Kill Zone—A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza was the first. Then when I wrote The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government, my agent in New York City could not find a publisher who would take the book. I knew it was at that time the best book I'd ever written. I had already published, through Simon & Schuster, four books, but even they turned down the manuscript. My agent said that he'd tried ten different publishing houses, including two small ones in Washington D.C., and none of them "would touch it."

It was about two weeks later that I received a call from the editor at Pocket Books who I had dealt with in the past. He called on a Saturday, from his home, and said "You need to get that book in print! This is a book that the American people need to read!" I asked "If it's so good, why don't you take it?"

"I'd lose my job. The government has agents in every publishing house of any size, and every magazine and newspaper to make sure that certain things are never published."

"So you mean the CIA?" I asked.

"You said it, I didn't," he replied.

I knew of Mockingbird. It had been around since the 1950s, and I knew that if that was what was standing in the way of publishing Medusa, I'd go another route. I did it by forming my own publishing company, Consolidated Press International, which proved very successful after I retired from the police department. It was through CPI that I not only published seven of my own books, but three books for other authors.

Carl Bernstein, the investigative journalist from the Washington Post, who along with Bob Woodward, using their informant "Deep Throat," was partly responsible for bringing down the Nixon administration 1n 1974. Deep Throat came forward years later, shortly before his death, and admitted to being the informant. He was Mark Felt, who during the 70s, was second in command at the FBI! Bernstein describes the CIAs involvement in the media and Mockingbird:

"The use of journalists has been among the most productive means of intelligence-gathering employed by the CIA. Further investigation into the matter, CIA officials say, would inevitably reveal a series of embarrassing relationships in the 1950s and 1960s with some of the most powerful organizations and individuals in American journalism.

"Among the executives who lent their cooperation to the Agency were Williarn Paley of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Henry Luce of Time Inc., Arthur Hays Sulzberger of the New York Times, Barry Bingham Sr. of the LouisviIle Courier-Journal, and James Copley of the Copley News Service. Other organizations which cooperated with the CIA include the American Broadcasting Company, the National Broadcasting Company, the Associated Press, United Press International, Reuters, Hearst Newspapers, Scripps-Howard, Newsweek magazine, the Mutual Broadcasting System, the Miami Herald and the old Saturday Evening Post, and The New York Herald-Tribune.

"By far the most valuable of these associations, according to CIA officials, have been the New York Times, CBS and Time Inc."

William S. Paley of CBS worked hand-in-glove with the CIA during the anti-Castro and Bay of Pigs invasion operations. Henry Luce had Life Magazine when JFK was assassinated, and was the man responsible for buying the Zapruder film of the assassination "for news purposes," then having it altered by removing key frames before it could be viewed by the public.

After my books Kill Zone: A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza and The Medusa File: Crimes and coverups of the US Government were printed, they kept disappearing off the book stores computers from the “books in print” files, and if they did appear, the notation was “no longer in print” or “not yet in print.” I had to personally call R.R. Bowker, the Books-in-Print company that serviced the bookstores and on several occasions over a three month period explain that “yes, it is in print and it is available.” Operation Mockingbird, or its follow-on, wanted to make sure that neither book “saw the light of day.”

As this book is being written it has become apparent in an on-going basis how much the media has become nothing more than a propaganda organ for the socialist, globalists, and left wing in general. It did not seem so much so in 1995, but it did not take long for us to see that the media was on one side of the aisle in the bombing story, and truth was on the other.

“The business of the New York journalist is to destroy the truth, to lie outright, to pervert, to vilify, to fawn at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his race and his country for his daily bread.”

CEO, New York Times,
New York Press Club April 12, 1953

CHAPTER 18

*Sed quis custodiet ispsos custodies (*Who Watches the Watchers?)

"There is a principle which is a bar against all information, which is proof against all arguments and which cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance—that principle is contempt prior to investigation.

Herbert Spencer
English philosopher
1820-1903

Where do you go when the very people who are supposed to protect you refuse to acknowledge you, or the facts, or the evidence, or the real bad guys?

As our investigation continued we began to see more and more that no matter what we discovered, who we interviewed, what evidence we gathered, the people and the organizations that should have had the responsibility for listening to us, taking our reports, and doing their best to get to the truth, solve the case, and apprehend the actual perpetrators, refused to do so.

The ATF was pretty much out of the case once the FBI took over early on. The local Tulsa office of the FBI under Supervisory Agent Dave Roberts was ordered to turn over everything they had to the FBI, and to stop all investigative efforts in the case.

The FBI answered to not only the FBI Director, in this case Louis Freeh, but to the Attorney General, Janet Reno, then ultimately to the president, Bill Clinton. After the debacles at Ruby Ridge and Waco, the FBI was manacled and brought in with a choke chain. The conduct of the federal investigation and the findings in this case would be strictly controlled by the White House, then down the chain of command through DoJ, then FBI, and even the CIA and Department of Defense. Laterally, the media was controlled—and used—as well. This would therefore not only limit the information given to the public, but would hinder any outside investigations.

One can add to this what happens when the Five D's are used on innocent witnesses and victims. Sadly, not only did the federal investigators and prosecutors aid in the coverup of the bombing, but so did local government individuals and bodies from Governor Frank Keating, to the Oklahoma County District Attorney Bob Macy, then to the Medical Examiner's office and local media. David Hoffman sent me the following regarding how much of this was happening in Oklahoma City as we were fighting to get to the truth and expose the real villains.

Excerpted from the original disk that Hoffman sent me from his book manuscript The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror:

"Eight months after the bombing, Oklahoma State Representative Charles Key, dissatisfied with the 'official' investigation, attempted to form a state oversight committee. House Speaker Glen Johnson ridiculed Key's efforts, stating his satisfaction with the Justice Department's official fantasy tale. Anyone who subsequently attempted to challenge the government's official line was publicly discredited by Governor Frank Keating, sneered at by Oklahoma State Attorney General Drew Edmondson, and laughed at by the mainstream press.

“The local media provided a convenient platform for Governor Keating to dismiss critics of the government’s handling of the case, including Edye Smith, the mother of a child killed in the day care center of the Murrah Building, Hoppy Heidelberg, who was dismissed from his position on the Grand Jury impaneled to investigate the bombing, and Oklahoma State Representative Charles Key. In an attempt to discredit Heidelberg, Keating headed a carefully orchestrated chorus of media pundits, stating that Heidelberg was “off the reservation.”

“ Keating also joined Oklahoma City TV station KWTV in attacking KFOR’s coverage of the Middle Eastern connection, stating that they lacked integrity.

“He labeled Jim Levine, an attorney who represented several victims pro bono in an attempt to release money from the Governor and Mayor’s Victims Relief Funds, a “bottom-feeding” lawyer.

“ For his courageous efforts in uncovering the truth, Keating said Representative Key was ‘baying at the moon.’

Along with bombing victim Glenn Wilburn, Key attempted to impanel a County Grand Jury. Such a jury, operating outside the scope of the federal investigation, would not only have the power to investigate facts ignored by the federal grand jury, but have the power to level criminal obstruction of justice charges against anyone whom they believed might have impeded the investigation. Given the allegations of wrongdoing in the federal investigation, such charges could conceivably be leveled against everyone from the ATF to the Justice Department. The government knew that they had to effectively control and silence any honest agent who wished to step forward with facts and truthful information. The only way to do this would be to control or inhibit the Grand Jury. (In the Oklahoma County grand jury that Representative Key managed to impanel by petition, the government was able to do this by using DA Bob Macy, and not by informing the Grand Jury of their powers and rights. Not only that, it was conducted by keeping many witnesses outside the jury room. Jurors would ask a question, Macy would walk outside to “get the answer,” and then come back and deliver the answer. We discovered later that his answers were not often the same as those he was given by the witness, or the witnesses did not get the same questions that were asked by the jurors).

In one newspaper interview Key explained, “Indisputable proof exists now that the federal grand jury was purposely shielded from witnesses who saw Timothy McVeigh with other suspects, both prior to and immediately after the bombing. They may have a good motive for this, but thus far it escapes me—and, I might add, several members of the federal grand jury who witnessed this farce.”

Keating’s response, quoted in The Daily Oklahoman was: “I don’t think a legislative committee would contribute one whit of intelligence to this process.”

The Daily Oklahoman and the Tulsa World, the state’s two largest dailies, which should have led the pack in ferreting out the truth of this terrible tragedy, instead led the local media chorus with editorials such as one in the The Daily Oklahoman, titled, “Drop It, Mr. Key.”

The Daily Oklahoman had opposed Key's mission from the beginning: "State Rep. Charles Key's quest to prove that a government conspiracy played some role in the Murrah Building bombing is a weird and misguided exercise…Oklahoma County District Attorney Bob Macy is correct in appealing a court ruling that allows Key a free hand to seek a county grand jury probe of his 'conspiracy theories.'"

The Tulsa World chimed in with editorials such as "Making Tragedy Pay," which labeled Key as a "dedicated hustler" peddling "goofy theories to rightwing-crank audiences." They also accused the representative of profit-making from the sale of his bombing videos, which barely paid for themselves. The fact that Key had recently lost his insurance business due to his tireless efforts investigating the bombing, and was living on his $33,000-a-year salary to support a wife and three children, was not mentioned by the yellow journalists of the Tulsa World. The World also printed a constant stream of daily political cartoons by an artist named Simpson showing Key as the some wacko lunatic bent on corrupting the government's investigation.

The "truth seekers" of the local media weren't finished either. They eagerly focused on the efforts of Drew Edmondson, who accused Key of proposing a "wasteful witch hunt" and of engaging in "the worst kind of paranoid conspiracy pandering."

One article reported that state Attorney General Drew Edmondson had convinced the State District Attorney's Council to oppose Key's investigative funding bill.

"This is unprecedented, as far as I know, for the Attorney General to go to such lengths with the District Attorneys Council and to use such intemperate language," the soft-spoken Key told The New American, the conservative magazine printed by the John Birch Society.

In fact, local radio polls revealed that an overwhelming majority of Oklahomans supported Key's efforts. While the Tulsa World and the Daily Oklahoman went to extremes to label Key as a "conspiracy nut," they never bothered mentioning that fact.

Naturally, the CIA-connected Washington Post would have their say, comparing the "myth" of John Doe 2 to the Loch Ness Monster.

Lead prosecutor Joseph Hartzler added his voice to the ensemble, calling the leads "whacky theories."

Key's grand jury petition was quashed on November 6th, 1995 by District Judge Daniel Owens on the grounds that it would be "re-inventing the wheel."

Key appealed. As his attorney, Mark Sanford stated, "Legally [Owens] didn't have the authority to quash the petition. But because he's a judge he has the power, whether it's legal or not."

Beverly Palmer from Bob Macy's office argued at the appeals hearing in defense of Owens, claiming that the petition was "insufficient on its face," and the request was duplicitous of the federal grand jury's efforts.

Yet, as Appeals Judge Ronald Stubblefield pointed out, nowhere did Judge Owens state why the petition was insufficient. In fact, Stubblefield was highly skeptical that Owens had any facts to advise him properly in his decision. "I question whether Judge Owens has the discretion” said Stubblefield. “He’s just operating on what he knows about the bombing. Do you think it’s right to make a judgment based on what he reads in the newspaper?”

The same could be said of District Attorney Bob Macy. At the time Hoffman interviewed him, he was collecting information on the case by reading Morris Dees’ Gathering Storm, a book attacking the Militia movement. This was a year and-a-half after the bombing—a bombing that occurred right outside Macy’s window. He didn’t know about John Doe 2. He had no idea about the Middle Eastern connection. He didn’t know about Nichols trips to the Philippines, nor about the two Ryder trucks seen on the same day. He had conducted absolutely no investigation.

“I have not seen these things you are talking about right now,” Macy told Hoffman. “When I see the evidence… I haven’t been presented with the evidence.” Macy subsequently claimed that he wanted Hoffman to work with his so-called “task force” that was “investigating” the bombing, but then never called him back.

His attitude was adequately reflected by his Assistant DA, Beverly Palmer. Visibly nervous, Palmer grasped at straws during the appeals hearing, arguing that the grand jury shouldn’t be convened because of the need for “judicial economy,” and that it contravened “public policy concerns.”

“What policy concerns?” Judge Daniel Boudreau asked.

She didn’t have an answer.

In spite of the efforts of a group of good ole’ boy politicians to sabotage justice, Judge Stubblefield remained firm: “The people have the right to circulate a petition if the people find that things aren’t going the way they ought to be,” he said. “Is it not only the right, but the sanctified right of the grand jury in Oklahoma, to inquire whether a crime is committed? Don’t they have the right to investigate people who they think are involved? This is a highly protected right.”

The Appeals Court upheld Key’s right to petition for a County Grand Jury by a unanimous vote.

Just two months before the hearing Macy claimed that he intended to prosecute McVeigh and Nichols in a state trial on 161 counts of First Degree Murder. “I don’t like taking a second seat to the [federal] prosecution,” Macy stated. “The bombing killed 10 of my friends.”

In a May 24, 1995 letter to Senator Orrin Hatch, one of the original authors of the Anti-Terrorism Bill, Macy wrote:

“First, immediately following the trial or trials in Federal Court, I shall, working in conjunction with the United Sates Department of Justice and the federal law-enforcement agencies investigating the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building, prosecute the cowards responsible for murdering innocent people in the area surrounding the Federal Building. The State of Oklahoma has an overwhelming, compelling interest to seek and obtain the maximum penalty allowable by law for the senseless and cowardly killings. Not only is it in the interest of the State, it is my sworn duty to seek those sanctions, and I intend to fully carry out my responsibilities…Every day of delay represents a victory for these cowardly cold-blooded killers and another day of defeat and suffering for the victims and all other Americans who cry out for justice."

Macy also impressed his interest in getting at the truth: "I'm prepared to do whatever it takes to get to the truth," Macy said. "My sole intent is in learning the truth!"

Yet when asked if he intended to conduct an investigation independent of the Feds', he said, "Well, I don't want to be a party to anything that will interfere with the Feds' prosecution. I Don't want to open up a new can of worms."

After Macy lost the appeals hearing, he met with Wilburn and Key, explaining that he actually wished to cooperate with their investigation. Three days later, the two men discovered that Macy had decided to contest the Appeals Court's decision.

When a furious Key confronted Macy, all that the courageous, truth-seeking DA told him was, "They won't let me." When Key demanded to know who "they" were, Macy just lowered his eyes to the floor and repeated, "They won't let me."

Key later learned who "they" were from a source at ABC News. Macy had received a conference call from Janet Reno's deputy Jamie Gorelick, and the government's lead prosecutor, Joseph Hartzler, along with Governor Keating, Oklahoma City Fire Chief Gary Marrs, and Judge Daniel Owens.

When the grand jury was finally impaneled, federal prosecutors quickly attempted to block the testimony of federal employees!

Key also accused Chief Assistant DA Pat Morgan and others in Bob Macy's office of influencing and intimidating witnesses. "I am very upset about it," Key said. "Everyone should be outraged because of this."

Interestingly, during a debate with Representative Key, Keating stated, "Nobody could get away with a cover-up; it would not be tolerated by civilized Oklahoma City.… Nobody's afraid of the truth."

KFOR's Jayna Davis shed some light on the "truth-seeking" efforts of Bob Macy and the good ol' boy network of politicos from which he descends. Two years earlier, after an 8-year-old boy was raped, both Davis and the Public Defender demanded to know why Macy hadn't done anything. When Macy thought the camera was off, he whipped around and sternly admonished the reporter: "Lady, I don't know who you are or where you came from, but this isn't how we do business in Oklahoma!"

Representative Key eventually took the case to the Oklahoma Supreme Court. In his opposing brief, Macy again argued that it would be "a waste of the taxpayers' time and money to convene an Oklahoma County Grand Jury when one was already in session or when a Federal Grand Jury had already heard all available evidence."

All of the "available evidence"? They only saw the so-called "evidence" the government wanted them to see and hear.

The State Supreme Court did not agree with Macy. They unanimously upheld Key's right to impanel the grand jury, which was seated in June of 1997. Unfortunately the outcome was sealed and did nothing to forward the investigation or provide a final honest and proper resolution of the case.

Naturally, the Ministers of Truth at The Daily Oklahoman wasted little time, pumping out more bland editorial drivel to muddy the waters. The following quotes, from a piece titled "Conspiracy Theories," focuses on the fact that the County Grand Jury is only exacerbating the "agony" of some victims, who are apparently more concerned with some fairy tale notion of "closure" then in learning the truth:

"Whatever the cause, the delay adds to the agony of those bombing victims who believe the investigation is a waste of time.

"The Oklahoman shares that belief, but we are optimistic the probe may satisfy many who are suspicious about events before the bombing. Yet, we wonder if the more conspiratorial-minded will ever be satisfied.… Conflicting conspiracy theories and an olio of circumstantial evidence abound here. Jurors in Denver [at the McVeigh trial under federal judge Matsch] sorted through testimony and found McVeigh guilty. Frustrating as it may be to some, there is little more to this crime than meets the eye. The rest is the stuff of fiction."

The "stuff of fiction"? No matter the evidence, no matter the witness statements, The Oklahonan's attitude was "don't let the truth stand in the way of a good story" and "don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up."

By The Daily Oklahoman's account, the numerous credible witnesses who saw Timothy McVeigh with other suspects on the morning of the crime adds up to little more than "circumstantial evidence," while what prosecutors presented at trial—McVeigh's phone calls to chemical companies, his political views, and the emotional tales from bombing victims—are not.

Given the local media's connections to the political network via the Washington-connected Frank Keating, their position is hardly surprising. Famed Watergate journalist Carl Bernstein put some perspective on the matter when he revealed in a 1977 Rolling Stone article that over 400 U.S. journalists were employed by the CIA.

These ranged from freelancers who were paid for regular debriefings, to actual CIA officers who worked under deep cover. Nearly every major U.S. news organization has had spooks on the payroll, usually with the cooperation of top management.

The three most valuable assets the CIA could count on were William Paley's CBS, Arthur Sulzberger's New York Times and Henry Luce's Time/Life empire. All three bent over backwards promoting the picture of Oswald as a lone nut in the JFK assassination. (For more on this and the similar media manipulation reporting of cases, and of the JFK assassination by the media and the Warren Commission see my books Kill Zone—a Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza, and The Medusa File—Crimes and Coverups of the US Government").

The political network wasn't finished trying to stop the efforts of Representative Key. On May 7, 1997, Edmondson subpoenaed Key before a multi-county grand jury, alleging that he violated procedures in raising money for the bombing investigation. The Daily Oklahoman proudly proclaimed how it had played a critical role in bringing about the investigation of Key:

"The Attorney General's action is a result of an inquiry by The Oklahoman about Key’s seven-page solicitation letter on the Internet. The letter asks for money to ‘secure copies of the voluminous (federal) government documents and to pay independent investigators’ and other expenses for the county grand jury investigation…”.

Bill Graves, an attorney who represented Key at the grand jury inquest, stated: “The law is pretty clear that you are not required to register before you hit the ten thousand dollar threshold, and Charles [Key] had not hit that limit so was not required to register. Edmondson knows that. They’re just trying to slow Charles down or stop him through harassment.” It was obvious that the feds were terrified that someone might uncover the truth concerning the bombing, and more frightening to them, the lies.

“This is all about stopping us and making us shut up, said Key. “If I would just quit the grand jury deal, this would all go away.”

V.Z Lawton, a HUD employee who survived the bombing, said “You don’t have to be that bright or look that hard to see the fraud and hypocrisy in these charges. For over a year-and-a-half, they’ve been doing everything imaginable and employing the most absurd arguments to prevent Charles from impaneling a grand jury to investigate one of the worst crimes in our country’s history. Now, after he’s overcome all of their legal challenges in the courts and is close to getting a county grand jury investigation going, they drag him before a multi-county grand jury for what amounts to jaywalking, while the bombing and other genuine, serious crimes go un-investigated.”

Lawton also brought to the attention of bombing investigators a February 5th, fax transmission to federal employees on the official letterhead of State Attorney General Drew Edmondson (a Democrat like the Clintons). The letter sought signatures from survivors to go with letters that were to be sent to various news organizations. The cover sheet said it came from Richard M. Wintory, Chief Deputy Attorney General of the Criminal Division.

The letter, entitled, “A Plea to the Media from Oklahoma City: Don’t O.J. Us!!!” purports to be a spontaneous response from victims asking the media not to “manipulate” and “exploit” them “for no purpose other than to enhance their ratings on the air and in publications.”

This obvious propaganda counter-offensive was in response to ABC’s January, 1996 20/20, show about prior knowledge. It referred to the “so-called report” by ABC as “tabloid journalism” filled with “unsubstantiated and baseless claims that have been repeatedly debunked.” ABC’s 20/20 had aired a piece on possible government foreknowledge, which was surprising considering it was not following the government script.

“We are appalled at the lack of interest in the truth and the underhanded method utilized by 20/20” stated the letter, which claimed that ABC had wrongfully implied that certain victims agreed with the “paranoid delusion” of the “ridiculous theory of government conspiracy in this crime.” It added that “reporters are sometimes tempted to forget the truth.” Ultimately, it stated, “It is people that matter in this life, not money, nor possessions, nor a Pulitzer Prize.”

This classic PSYOP piece was signed, “Many Survivors and Family Members, Oklahoma City Bombing.”

Survivors Lawton and HUD employee Jane Graham were two who angrily denounced the letter for the sham that it was. “Since the communication was loaded with lies and half truths, I certainly could not sign it,” said Lawton, “and I felt like a state Attorney General could better spend his time supporting an effort to find the truth rather than this transparent effort at helping to hide it.”

“I am angry,” stated Graham in a typed response to the letter, “that the Attorney General’s office would play on the emotions of this office at HUD under the guise of keeping us posted on how they are proceeding and planning the case, causing further emotional turmoil in this office between employees.”

During a June 13, 1997 television interview, Edmondson was asked why those witnesses who saw McVeigh with other suspects were never called to testify at McVeigh’s trial. Edmondson replied that prosecutors usually don’t present witnesses whose testimony isn’t “credible” or conflicts with other witnesses.

Rodney Johnson, who saw McVeigh with another man in front of the Murrah Building moments before it exploded, called Edmondson’s statement “misguided.”

“I took those comments to be rather personal,” said Johnson.

Edmondson’s blatant attempt at coercing the victims to pander to the official government line is similar to a letter from a group of victims suggesting passage of the Anti-Terrorism Bill. The recipients were urged to call Edmondson if they were interested in participating.

Of course, while Edmondson accused ABC’s 20/20 of “manipulating” and “exploiting” the bombing victims, it was obvious that Edmondson himself spent a great deal of effort to manipulate or exploit anyone who might have facts other than those wanted by the government. Edmondson was and still is a career politician. As of this writing in May, 2017, he has announced his plans to run for governor.

Several months after the scandalous smear campaign against Representative Key, Governor Keating was accused by the Oklahoma Ethics Commission of 32 violations of using state-owned vehicles for political fund-raising, including the state’s $2.9 million airplane. Conveniently forgetting his own dishonest smear attacks against Representative Key, Keating sanctimoniously talked about how the allegations were “irresponsible, silly and completely unjustified.” No doubt the Ethics Commission was “off the reservation,” and “baying at the moon.”

In spite of his unsuccessful attempts to smear honest men like Representative Key, Keating and his political team wasted no time in discrediting Edye Smith, calling her allegations “hysterical.” Smith was the mother of two young boys, Chase and Colton, who perished in the bombing. Smith immediately gained the attention of concerned citizens all across America. Hundreds of thousands of letters and checks began pouring in, and relief agencies used Chase’s photo on a poster memorializing the disaster.

On May 23, the day the Murrah Building was demolished, Edye Smith, in a live interview on CNN, stated “There’s a lot of questions that have been left un-answered. We’re being told to keep our mouths shut, not to talk about it, don’t ask those questions!”

CNN’s Gary Truchmann asked Smith to describe the nature of the questions: “We, along with hundreds of thousands of other people want to know, where was the ATF the morning of April 19th? All of their employees survived. They were supposed to be the target of this explosion [according to the government version] and where were they? Did they have a warning sign? I mean, did they think it might be a bad day to go in the office?

"They had an option to not go to work that day," Smith continued, "and my kids didn't get that option, nobody else in the building got that option. And we're just asking questions, we're not making accusations. We just want to know why and they're telling us, 'Keep your mouths shut, don't talk about it."

Truchmann quickly ended the interview.

Kathy Wilburn, grandmother of Chase and Colton, was among the first to arrive at the scene of the bombing. She and Smith, both of whom worked at the nearby IRS office, had witnessed the carnage first-hand. When she watched the building come down when the government imploded it to "remove the scar and the memory" (and to hide evidence), an eerie silence came over her. She knew that whatever evidence remained in the building would now be lost forever.

Wilburn's husband Glenn had been a vocal opponent of the government's investigation, and their explanation of the bombing did not sit well with him. The grandfather felt the loss of the two boys keenly. Wilburn had taken it on his own to investigate the bombing, and the facts he was coming up with did not make him happy. They just didn't fit the government version.

On the afternoon the building was demolished, Wilburn received a call from U.S. Attorney Patrick Ryan. Ryan wanted to meet with him and speak with the family.

"They wanted to set our minds at ease in that there wasn't anything sinister going on," said Wilburn.

Two days later Smith and Wilburn were visited by an entourage of federal agents including Ryan, ATF Agents Chris Cuyler and Luke Franey, an IRS Criminal investigator, and a member of Louis Jolyon West's victim's assistance team. When I heard that Dr. "Jolly" West was there I knew that he would try to use his mind control experience on the Wilburns, and Edye Smith if he could.

"They all came in and sat down and said 'We want to answer your questions and make you feel good.' I said 'fine.' Then I looked them right in the eye and said, 'You guys had no indication that April 19th could be a dangerous day down there?' They both answered, 'no sir.'"

"Well, two hours later I turned on the TV, and CNN is interviewing ATF Director John Magaw. The interview starts out, "Mr. Magaw, based on the significance of April 19th, did you take any precautions?'"

"Clearly there was an interest all over the country to do that," replied Magaw. "And I was very concerned about that. We did some things here in headquarters and in all of our field offices throughout the country to try to be more observant.…"

"Well, if there was ever a point that I was hooked into this thing, and there was nothing that was gonna' stop me," recalls Wilburn, "that was it… because by God, somebody lied that morning."

Ryan's conciliatory meeting with the family did not last long. The federal prosecutor became nervous after Wilburn casually mentioned that he had talked to a family lawyer. Ryan quickly got up and left.

While Edye Smith was quoted as saying that she was "satisfied" the agents had explained their whereabouts, she later said, "I can't believe they sat there and lied to us."

The meeting did not go well for the feds that day. The intimidation then began since it was obvious that Smith and the Wilburns would be problems if they didn't cease their inquiries.

Unmarked cars soon began showing up at Glenn Wilburn's house. When Wilburn went out to confront them, they sped off.

Two months later, Edye Smith and Kathy Wilburn had their Workers' Compensation checks cut off. Out of 462 federal employees affected by the blast, they were the only two employees who were mysteriously "denied."

Moreover, out of thousands of checks sent to Smith through the Red Cross, none were ever received. All the letters had been opened and the checks removed, including some sent via the Governor's and Mayor's offices. "All the mail that the Red Cross delivered to my house, probably thousands of pieces of mail, every single piece was opened before I got it. And it all had my name on it," said Smith.

"We started noticing that the mail that came to the house had money in it," said Kathy Wilburn, "but the majority of the mail that came to us through the Red Cross… it was all opened and there was never a thin dime in any of it."

When Smith called the Red Cross to complain, she was told that her mail wasn't being opened, and that no money was being taken. When Kathy Wilburn confronted the head of the local Red Cross, she was told that their letters were being opened to check for "hate mail." Wilburn told her that the explanation was "ridiculous." It was not the Red Cross's job to open anyone's mail, and is in fact, illegal. But no action was taken against the Red Cross or its leadership.

"A mother sent me a little card that her little boy drew." said Smith, "She said 'my little boy saved this three dollars and wanted you to have it.' And the three dollars was gone."

Keating's answer to the missing funds was weak at best. According to him, interning college students were responsible for the thefts.

A little known bit of history on Keating is that he had worked as an FBI agent during COINTELPRO (the FBI's Counter Intelligence Program of the late-60s to mid 70s), when he personally infiltrated anti-government activist organizations like the Weathermen, the Black Panthers, and the SDS (Students For A Democratic Society), and stated he saw little difference between them and the militias.

Keating also served as Assistant Attorney General under Edwin Meese. Meese was Attorney General during the 1985 fire-bombing of MOVE headquarters. MOVE was a group of black housing activists living in a squatted building in Philadelphia. The satchel charge, dropped from a helicopter by Philadelphia police, resulted in the deaths of over eleven people, including five children, and destroyed several square blocks of the city.

Instead of launching a proper investigation into that matter, Meese's response was "consider it an eviction notice."

Keating served in the Bush administration as Assistant Treasury Secretary during the Iran-Contra investigations. Gene Wheaton, a former Army CID investigator who worked for the Christic Institute, and worked with me on the bombing case, observed that it was George H.W. Bush who personally selected Keating as Assistant Treasury Secretary in 1985, where he supervised INTERPOL, the Customs Service, The Secret Service, and the ATF.

As Wheaton wrote:

"The word in Tulsa is that Bush is his "political godfather;" that Keating got his job in the Treasury Department through Bush's good offices and that Bush "loves Keating." The connection appears to be an old-boy connection through the Southern Hills Country Club in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

"In his position, Keating could control both the investigative and prosecutorial side of any scandal that came his way," adds Portland Free Press publisher Ace Hayes. "In 1985 to 1988 guns, drugs, and illegal money were moving all over the globe. Was the ATF, who couldn't find it's butt with both hands, as really as incompetent as it appeared, or was Frank Keating there to make sure they did not?"

In fact, it was while Keating was serving as Assistant Treasury Secretary that IRS investigator Bill Duncan—who was investigating Iran-Contra drug-running activities at Mena—was instructed to perjure himself. As Duncan stated in a deposition before a joint Congressional/Arkansas Attorney General investigative committee:

Duncan: In late December of 1987, I was contacted by [the] Chief Counsel for the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime… who told me that they were looking into the reason why no one was indicted in connection with the Mena investigations. The Internal Revenue Service assigned to me disclosure litigation attorneys, which gave me instructions which would have caused me to withhold information from Congress during my testimony and to also perjure myself.

Committee: And how did you respond to the Treasury Department?

Duncan: Well, I exhibited to them that I was going to tell the truth in my testimony. And the perjury, subornation of perjury resulted in an—resulted because of an allegation that I had received, that Attorney General Edwin Meese received a several hundred thousand dollar bribe from Barry Seal directly. And they told me to tell the Subcommittee on Crime that I had no information about that.

(Note: Barry Seal was a drug running pilot who flew cocaine from Columbia, Panama, Nicaragua and Mexico into the US, often through Mena, Arkansas small airport while Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas—drugs that when sold helped finance the Contras in Nicaragua. Weapons including HAWK missiles for Iran—hence "Iran/Contra").

Arkansas State Police investigator Russell Welch, who provided the information to Duncan, was subsequently poisoned. Two months later, Keating was appointed as Associate Attorney General.

It seems that Frank Keating has served as a point-man, weaving a twisted trail through some of America's most notorious crimes, including Iran-Contra, BCCI, Iraqgate, the Savings & Loan crisis, and…Oklahoma City.

Keating has always been at the nexus bridging the agendas of men like George H.W. Bush, with their elitist agendas, and the subsequent covert-operations and sub-cultures which they spawned. In an article in the Portland Free Press entitled "Another Bush Boy," Wheaton wrote:

"The covert-operations 'lunatic fringe' in Washington, which took over key operations at the national security level, [and] still controls them, was Bush's 1981 agenda, and Keating is the next generation to carry it on."

It was only three months after Keating's inauguration as Governor that the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building occurred. Given his background and grooming, Keating was in a perfect position to direct "damage control." As Wheaton noted:

"Keating is in a perfect position to control the direction and scope of any state investigation which might not correspond to the official federal inquiry."

It appears Keating did just that. As Governor, Keating was in a position to halt the hurried demolition of the Murrah Building, ordered by federal authorities under the guise of "safety," but refused to do so. FBI SAC Bob Ricks, the Special Agent in Charge of the Oklahoma City FBI office, and the FBI PR man who spoon-fed a daily dose of "information" to the press during the Waco siege, was appointed Oklahoma Director of Public Safety by Keating after he retired from the FBI. Keating and Ricks were good friends from college.

The demolition was ordered under the pseudo-psychological premise of providing "closure" to the festering wound hanging over the city. The demolition also effectively prevented any independent forensic investigation of the bomb site.

Said one victim whose spouse was killed in the explosion, "I was upset right from the start when there was the big rush to destroy the crime scene, to take the building down. A lot of important evidence was destroyed that could have helped solve this."

The DoJ's decision to destroy crucial forensic evidence has an eerie parallel to the demolition of Mt. Carmel. The destruction of the Branch Davidian church compound prevented independent examiners from determining that the ATF had fired into the roofs of the building during the early part of the raid. Also, that snipers had deliberately shot people trying to escape, as seen in a FLIR recording from an aircraft circling overhead, a copy of which was later obtained by the NRA and other organizations. With the building gone, there was no way to determine the cause of the fires that were started inside the building after an FBI armored personnel carrier crashed into the gym and remained inside for several minutes. When the APC pulled out, the fires started in that area.

Destruction, and the hauling away and burying of the Murrah Buildings remains (which location was kept fenced and under armed Wackenhut guards) precluded any inspection or analysis by General Partin or attorney Stephen Jones defense team.

The destruction of the Murrah Building is also akin to the Secret Service’s hasty (or carefully planned) decision to illegally remove President Kennedy’s body from Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas. Once under control of military officials, including generals and admirals who were possibly involved in the assassination plot, Kennedy’s autopsy could proceed under carefully controlled parameters. While observing the autopsy, these military officials prevented a thorough examination of the body. Back in Dallas, Secret Service agents carefully washed Kennedy’s limousine to remove all traces of bullet and bone fragments, and had Governor Connolly’s clothes, bullet holes and all, cleaned and pressed. They later took the car to an undisclosed location to replace the windshield which had a bullet hole in it fired from the front!

Said Jannie Coverdale, who lost her grandsons Aaron and Elijah in the Murrah Building bombing, “Everyone I talk to has the same questions: What happened? What is going on? We don’t want this to be another John F. Kennedy deal, where 32 years later the real story is still unknown.”

CHAPTER 19

The Federal Bureau of Intimidation and the Witnesses

“There is no place on earth where you will be safe from the most powerful forces of justice.”

FBI director Louis Freeh.

In a motion filed by Stephen Jones, affidavits show that numerous witnesses were instructed by the FBI to “keep quiet” so that the facts of the case “wouldn’t get distorted.” This aura of secrecy quickly turned into obstruction of justice, as FBI agents routinely instructed witnesses not to talk to defense team investigators or journalists.

When defense investigator Marty Reed attempted to interview Oklahoma Highway Patrolman Charlie Hanger (the patrolman who arrested McVeigh), he was told by OHP chief legal counsel John Lindsey, “The FBI has requested that no one interview Trooper Charlie Hanger.”

Mitchell Whitmire, who knew McVeigh when they were both in the Army, was contacted by defense investigator Neil Hartley. Whitmire told Hartley he was instructed by the FBI not to talk to anyone about the case unless he obtained permission from the FBI.

When Hoffman tried to interview two members of the Sheriff’s Bomb Squad, they became visibly nervous. They claimed no other bombs were pulled out of the building, clearly contradicting news accounts showing additional bombs that were taken away and detonated.

FBI agents put up a protective perimeter around Eldon Elliott, from the Ryder Truck rental business where McVeigh rented the truck, preventing him from talking to journalists and defense investigators.

KFOR-TV, which took the lead in investigating the case, found it almost impossible to interview witnesses. “We get there and all of a sudden they’ve been told to shut up,” said Melissa Klinzing, KFOR’s former News Director.

A Tulsa fire captain told me he saw black-clad agents with no markings, carrying MP5 sub-machine guns, removing boxes from the Post Office ten days after the bombing and placing them in an unmarked white truck similar in size to the Ryder truck. He said that he had traveled to Oklahoma City to film the damage and relief efforts, and when he toured the area he was accompanied by an FBI agent. When they rounded a corner of the nearby post office, which had been used to store medical supplies, he was told to put the camera down and not film the activity in the back on the shipping dock. When he was subsequently interviewed by Hoffman, he denied seeing anything. Could those have been the files that had been removed from the building on Day One?

When he asked the FBI agent what they were taking out of the post office building and putting into the truck, the agent replied “unsent mail.”

Ann Doman, who was in the building at the time for a meeting of INCOG, the Indian Nations Council on Government, originally told a Tulsa police officer she had seen two Middle Eastern males loitering near the front of the Murrah Building just before the blast.

She later, after being contacted by FBI agents, denied saying that.

According to a conversation investigative journalist Jon Rappaport had with Daily Oklahoman reporter Ann Defrange, witness Peter Schaffer told Defrange he had seen the Murrah Building collapse in on itself, suggesting that cutting charges were used. When Rappaport questioned Schaffer, he denied seeing the building falling down at all. When Rappaport got back to Defrange, she remained adamant about what Schaffer told her. “She didn’t budge at all,” said Rappaport.

“The FBI must have gotten to him,” said Heidelberg, referring to Schaffer. “You know, the FBI has been able to get witnesses to shut up about important things they know. We’ve talked to some of these people. In certain instances the witnesses believe that concealing evidence is the right thing to do. They really believe it. The FBI has sold them a bill of goods about national security or something like that. In other cases the FBI has used straight-out intimidation on witnesses. They size up people. On one witness they’ll use something like national security. On another, they’ll go for intimidation.”

Heidelberg’s own brush with the government didn’t end with his dismissal from the grand jury. Several minutes after agreeing to do an interview with Jayna Davis, he received a call from U.S. Attorney Joseph Hartzler telling him that a reporter was on her way and that he was not to talk to her, or he would be arrested. Obviously, Heidelberg’s phone was tapped.

“They tried everything to shut me up,” said Heidelberg. “They have said they were going to throw me in jail. When that didn’t work, they got down on their hands and knees and begged. I mean… they have tried everything to keep me from talking to the press about this.”

On July 19, FBI agents Jon Hersley and William Teater appeared at Heidelberg’s home, just hours after Judge Russell called him and discovered that he had taken his grand jury notes home. Apparently Teater wasn’t too pleased with Heidelberg’s casual attitude. At one point, he pulled back his jacket, revealing his gun, which he had conspicuously stuck in his waist belt.

“They were trying to impress upon me the seriousness of… they were trying to give me the message that this is big time, that this is heavyweight,” said Heidelberg, “and I was supposed to be frightened… Guns mean business… I was supposed to behave and be a good boy and not give them any trouble. The implication was that they were gonna’ shoot me, but I knew better than that,” Heidelberg said.

Heidelberg didn’t feel he would serve any jail time for his actions. “They didn’t want me exonerated or indicted,” said Heidelberg. “They wanted me twisting in the wind.”

Note: Hoppy Eric Heidelberg died April 30th, 2012.

In February of 1997, ABC planned a follow-up to their 20/20 “Prior Knowledge” piece, which included an interview with ATF informant Carol Howe. Hours before the piece was to air on “World News Tonight,” it was killed. Carol Howe, a Tulsa Debutante, had domiciled with neo-Nazi Dennis Mahon at Elohim City at the time Andy “The German” Strassmeir was there and was there when McVeigh called Strassmeir on the telephone prior to the bombing. According to ABC producer Roger Charles (Lt. Col, USMC Ret.): “They were uncomfortable with it after a series of phone calls from high-level Justice Department and ATF people, saying that well, yes, the story is right, but you’re going to draw the wrong conclusions unless we can explain it.” According to an interview with ABC conducted by McVeigh’s defense team, the conversation went something like this:

Justice Dept: “We have to admit now Strassmeir has been investigated.”

ABC: “But you have denied over and over that he was ever the subject of an investigation.”

Justice Dept: “Well, we’re un-denying that now. He has been investigated, but we could not involve him specifically in the bombing of the building.… [Regarding Howe’s reports of others involved, we] “could not find anyone who bought fertilizer, could not find anyone who rented a truck, so therefore we could not charge them with anything. [Besides], we’re not sure the information was credible.”

ABC: “But did you or did you not send her [Howe] back out?”

Justice Dept: “Yes, she was sent back out.”

ABC: “Well, what in the hell does that mean?”

Justice Dept: “She did go back out, but she was unable to develop any evidence that these people had participated, [although] essentially your information is correct.”

ABC then said the Justice Department press spokesman attempted to downplay the credibility of Howe by stating that the government hears these types of statements all the time from “White Supremacist compounds.”

ABC: “Yeah, but there’s one difference here.”

Justice Dept: “What is that?”

ABC: “The damn building blew up, that’s what.”

Not only would Howe’s testimony have had unfortunate consequences for authorities, it would not have jibed with the FBI’s fantasy of the “lone nut” bomber. It seemed authorities were replaying the same scenario they had played out 28 years before. In the JFK investigation, the FBI focused on the “lone nut” scenario too. Witnesses who did not support the FBI’s case against Oswald as lone participant were intimidated, debunked or misquoted in reports. Most who saw shooters other than the one on the 6th floor of the Texas School Book Depository were never subpoenaed to testify. And many of the witnesses who were available and who told their version “committed suicide” or had tragic “accidents.” In my book JFK: The Dead Witnesses I go into these cases in detail.

In 1963, Julia Ann Mercer told the FBI and the Dallas Police that she saw a man carry a rifle case up to the Grassy Knoll just before the shooting. The FBI took her statement. Later, when she was interviewed by District Attorney Jim Garrison and shown the statements she had given the Bureau which now said she didn’t see anything of importance, she began shaking her head. “These all have been altered, she said. “They have me saying just the opposite of what I really told them.”

In the Oklahoma City case, witnesses whose statements didn’t fit the government’s official timeline and scenario were either ignored altogether, or intimidated into changing their stories.

Cheryl Wood, an employee at Love’s convenience store, who saw McVeigh and John Doe 2 on April 17, told FBI agents that security cameras had captured images of the two men. The FBI didn’t take the tapes and didn’t want to use Wood’s story. “They tried to convince Wood that she was crazy—that she hadn’t really seen them,” said a Newsweek reporter who interviewed her. “They rattled her real good.” When the store manager decided to take the video home himself, the FBI changed their minds, and confiscated the tape.

McVeigh and his friends also stopped at another convenience store about 45 minutes from Love’s. As a Newsweek reporter who interviewed the employees told me, the FBI didn’t use the statements of those witnesses either, because it didn’t fit the FBI’s “official” timeline.

Mike Moroz, the Johnny’s Tire Shop employee who gave McVeigh and John Doe 2 directions to the Murrah Building on the morning of the blast, and was able to describe both McVeigh and John Doe 2, was interviewed by the FBI several times. On the last interview they told him that he had seen McVeigh drive in a different direction than he had originally stated. The FBI then claimed to the press that Moroz had made a mistake and was confused.

Danny Wilkerson, the Regency Towers employee who sold McVeigh two soft drinks and a pack of cigarettes 10 minutes before the bombing, while the Ryder truck was parked across the street waiting for the UPS truck to vacate its parking place in front of the Murrah Building, claims FBI agents tried very hard to get him to change his story. Wilkerson saw McVeigh and another man in an older, shorter Ryder truck with a cab overhang. FBI agents showed Wilkerson a catalog of different Ryder models, trying to coerce him into stating that the truck he saw was bigger and newer than the one actually seen. Wilkerson refused to change his story.

Catina Lawson knew McVeigh when he was stationed in Kansas, and saw him at parties with Andreas Strassmeir and Michael Brescia. When Lawson saw the artist’s sketch of John Doe 2, she said, “That’s Mike [Brescia]. Lawson repeatedly called the FBI to tell them it was Brescia, but they didn’t want to listen, and stopped returning her calls. Brescia was an old army buddy of McVeigh’s, and besides being in the ARA and involved in bank robberies, he was also an undercover informant for the FBI!

“I kept telling them that the man in the [John Doe 2] sketch was Mike, a nice-looking guy, dark-skinned. But the FBI made me feel guilty, then ignorant, as if I didn’t know what I was saying. Then, later, I tried to call in with more information and they wouldn’t even talk to me.”

Debra Burdick had seen the yellow Mercury, the brown pick-up, and the blue Chevy Cavalier that was described in the “Attempt To Locate,” that was seen at 10th and Robinson on the morning of the blast. Burdick called the FBI and the OSBI, and “they blew me off. They said they didn’t have time to get over here.… they told me, ‘you didn’t see anything.’ And that’s when I thought I was going crazy.”

Jane Graham, along with three other women, had seen a trio of suspicious-looking men in the Murrah Building's underground garage the Friday before the bombing. The men were working with wire and a small, putty-colored block which she described to me. What she saw sounded to me to be C-4 plastic explosive. They were putting blocks of "putty" on concrete pillars in the garage, then stringing wire between them. She thought they were installing a temporary phone or computer cable. She later said that one looked like Andreas Strassmeir and one looked like one of the faces on a news report of people at the Waco event, a man named Gary Hunt. As far as I've been able to ascertain he has never been questioned by any law enforcement agency. Hunt was also involved in the Waco event in 1993. According to William Cooper, now deceased, author of Behold a Pale Horse, "Gary Hunt masquerades as an American Patriot, but was, in fact, an informant for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms."

Strassmeir was wearing a black western shirt and pants and black cowboy boots and a black cowboy hat, the other two were wearing GSA coveralls like those of the government maintenance personnel. The name of the third man is not known.

FBI Agent Joe Schwecke made two appointments to interview Graham, but kept neither of them. "He never showed up," said Graham. "I again called and set up another appointment for the following week and that was never kept."

When Schwecke finally spoke to her, he "only wanted to know if I could identify McVeigh or Nichols. Apparently the FBI was not interested in any time other than the Monday or Tuesday—the week of the bombing!" exclaimed Graham, "…and only if the responses pointed directly to McVeigh!"

The manager of the Great Western Inn in Junction City, Kansas, was certain a Middle Eastern man who had stayed in room 107 on April 17, two days before the bombing, was a dead ringer for John Doe 2. Yet the FBI tried to discredit him, saying that the inquiry there had been a waste of time. But the FBI confiscated the hotel's register with all the guests names.

Barbara Whittenberg at the Santa Fe Trail Diner told Bill Jasper of The New American Magazine that the FBI tried to get her to change her story.

Jeff Davis, who delivered Chinese food to a man in room 25 at the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, Kansas, was interviewed numerous times by the FBI. They appeared interested in trying to get Davis to say that McVeigh was the man he saw, and not another "John Doe."

During trial, prosecutor Larry Mackey attacked Davis' credibility, noting that two days after the bombing, he told FBI agents that the man was a white male, 28 or 29, about 6 feet tall, about 180 pounds with short, sandy hair, clean-cut with no mustache.

Yet Davis originally told the FBI, "The man to whom I delivered that bag of Chinese food is not Tim McVeigh." Still, Mackey tried to shake Davis' confidence in his memory, suggesting that Davis had told a bartender and an ABC sketch artist that he saw McVeigh. In fact, the person Davis saw had "unkempt" hair, a regional accent, possibly from Oklahoma, Kansas or Missouri, and an overbite. McVeigh possessed none of those characteristics.

"I was frustrated quite a bit because they just didn't seem to want to say 'Okay, there's somebody we may not have.' A lot of it seemed 'Damn! I just wish he'd say it was McVeigh so we could be done with it.'"

Davis told The Denver Post that the FBI never even bothered making a composite sketch of the man he saw. A TV network finally hired an artist to do one.

Daina Bradley, one of the Murrah Building bombing victims, had seen only one man —olive-skinned, dark-haired, wearing jeans, jacket, and baseball cap—get out of the passenger side of the Ryder truck in front of the Federal Building moments before it blew up. Yet when she testified for the defense during McVeigh's trial, she switched tracks, saying she saw two suspects.

What is interesting is that in numerous interviews with the media, prosecutors, and the defense team, Bradley adamantly maintained that she had seen only one suspect—John Doe 2. Just weeks before her testimony, Bradley again told U.S. Attorney Patrick Ryan and defense attorney Cheryl Ramsey that she was certain the man she saw wasn't Timothy McVeigh.

Yet shortly after the start of McVeigh's trial—after meeting with federal prosecutors —Bradley suddenly "changed her mind."

It seemed that FBI agents were conveniently waiting at the airport to intercept some of McVeigh's defense witnesses, who would then be "persuaded" to change their testimony.

Under cross-examination by Ryan, Bradley—who had maintained a rock-solid story of John Doe 2 since the day of the bombing—now claimed she saw a second man. Yet during trial she was nervous and faltering, her testimony wavering constantly. At one point, she covered her face with her hands and quietly said, "I want to talk to my lawyer."

Ryan eventually got Bradley to say she wasn't sure whether the second suspect was McVeigh, but that there was "nothing different" between McVeigh's features and those of the second man.

In addition, Bradley told the jury she thought the truck was parked against the flow of traffic on the one-way street—a ludicrous proposition but a convenient one for a government intent on convincing a jury that the suspect Bradley saw was not John Doe 2, but possibly McVeigh—get out of the driver's side. Seeing two men would mean that John Doe 2 was still out there since he couldn't have been Nichols, and obviously wasn't the government's excuse for John Doe 2, Todd Bunting.

Gary Lewis, the Journal Record pressman who was almost run over by McVeigh and another man in the yellow Mercury shortly before the blast, suddenly denied seeing them at all! Just before he was subpoenaed to testify before the county grand jury, Lewis told reporters, "What I seen wasn't a fact, it wasn't true."

Claiming the FBI had "cleared up his confusion" more than a year ago, Lewis said the FBI showed him a photograph of McVeigh's distinctive battered yellow Mercury, and convinced him it wasn't the same car he spotted on April 19. "It was real similar to it," Lewis said. "It was real close but it wasn't it."

Lewis then claimed his eyewitness account, which had already been published in striking detail, had been exaggerated by Representative Key and Glenn Wilburn. “I don’t care for [Wilburn] or Charles Key,” Lewis told The Daily Oklahoman. “They kind of pushed it along for reasons I don’t know why. That is about all I have got to say.”

This was quite a change from the nervous witness who checked the underside of his car every morning for bombs, afraid he was targeted for assassination by either the bombing suspects or the feds.

Dr. Paul Heath, the VA psychologist whose office was on the fifth floor of the Murrah Building, had spoken to McVeigh and two of his associates at his office several weeks before the blast, when they approached him looking for “jobs.” Heath was interviewed by the FBI no less than ten times. On the last visit, “He (the FBI agent) confronted me saying he did not want me telling the story any longer. He said it was a false story, that I had made it up, that it was a figment of my imagination, and that if I pursued it, he would publicly discredit me.

“I said to him, ‘that is the most despicable, uncalled for attitude that I’ve ever seen, and I don’t know why you said that to me, but I can tell you, you’re not going to change my reality with it.”

Lea Moore, a woman who was badly injured in the blast, was contacted by a reporter from the Los Angeles Times. While he was enroute to interview her, she received a mysterious phone call telling her not to talk to him. Moore, a diminutive woman in her fifties, was frightened. When the reporter showed up at her door fifteen minutes later, Moore didn’t answer.

Melba, an Albertson’s supermarket worker who made sandwiches for McVeigh and John Doe 2, was hostile and frightened when questioned by David Hoffman, who later told me “she’s too scared to talk.”

Connie Hood, who saw John Doe 2 at the Dreamland Motel shortly after midnight on April 16, then again the next morning, was interviewed numerous times by the FBI. They even went so far as to administer several polygraph tests. Hood told the agents exactly what she saw. On the last test, the FBI agent “turned around and got in her face,” recalled her friend David Keen. “He said, ‘You’ve never seen John Doe! He never existed!’” This is not the method used by any polygraph examiner. Polygraph, or “lie detector” questions are normally limited to answers to questions that would by answered either “yes” or “no.” What happened here is that some agent posed as an examiner to see if her story could or would be changed, and when that didn’t succeed, he resorted to an implied threat.

The experience of Hood and Keen is reminiscent of the interrogation of JFK witnesses in Dallas on November 22, 1963, when FBI agents pointedly told them they did not see any shooters on the Grassy Knoll.

“This big old dude (FBI agent) right out told me, ‘You did not see that!’” recalled Hood. “It got to the point where I was saying, ‘Excuse me, excuse me, there was someone in that room next to us. I know for a fact there was someone in that room next to us. I did not imagine someone coming out of that fricking room!’”

Hood is sure of what she saw, and is furious about the games the FBI played with her. “I’m angry,” said Hood. “It made my blood boil.”

The shoot down of TWA 800 had many identical scenarios. The experiences of these Oklahoma City witnesses parallels those of the witnesses on Long Island who saw a missile rise out of the water to shoot down TWA flight 800 on July 17, 1996, killing all 230 people on board. Over 154 witnesses on Long Island, who witnessed the attack, described what appeared to be a missile—a glowing object that impacted with the plane had risen from the surface of the ocean and went up until they saw an explosion high in the sky before burning wreckage fell.

These accounts were backed up by FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) radar records, which showed an unidentified object (a “blip” that was not “squawking” a transponder code) move rapidly towards, then merge with, the large jumbo-jet. I describe the event in detail in a chapter in my book The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government.

Yet like the seismic records, and the video surveillance footage which would have shown the Murrah Building being blown up, these radar tapes would be confiscated by the FBI.

Naturally, the government lied about the crash. The National Transportation Safety board (NTSB) claimed that the most probable cause was a “spark” in the center fuel tank due to “static electricity.” This is ridiculous even to the uninitiated. Said Michael Barr, director of aviation safety programs at USC, “Airplanes don’t blow up just like that. I’ve been following 747s since 1970 and I’ve never seen one blow up like that.”

But over 200 witnesses were interviewed, and almost all were either intimidated, their reports were changed, or they were told “that is not what happened.”

Nor were journalists investigating Oklahoma City immune from harassment. Jayna Davis, the courageous KFOR reporter who tracked down many in the “Middle Eastern Connection”, received a warning from the Bureau that she was getting “too close” to the truth, and should drop her investigation.

Really? Too close?

Journalists and investigators who have attempted to interview rescue workers, including firemen, police, and other city officials are denied interviews. Most workers say they’ve been told not to talk by their superiors or by the FBI. “…they’re afraid of losing their jobs or being subjected to abuse if they say something,” said Jane Graham.

Nurse Toni Garret was one of many people who had volunteered to help tag dead victims that terrible morning. Garret and her husband, Earl, had just taken a break when they noticed federal agents arriving to set up a command post. “They acted like it was just a drill, like it was no big deal, said Garret. “They were kind of joking around and all that kind of stuff.”

Approximately 20 minutes later, when the Garrets re-entered the makeshift triage center, they found many of the doctors and nurses gone, and a completely different atmosphere prevailed. “There was nobody helping anymore,” said Earl. “Before, there were people bringing in food and medical supplies—just everything. When we came back in, there was a cold, callous atmosphere. I found out later that the FBI had taken over.”

But what really upset Toni Garret was the fact that the FBI and the Medical Examiner were suppressing the body count, which they had claimed as only 22 dead. Garret, who had personally tagged over 120 dead bodies that day, was shocked. “I was being interviewed by a lady from TBN (Trinity Broadcasting Network). I told her that I was highly upset because the news media and the information they were being given was not accurate information. There were many more bodies than what they were saying on the news media and releasing at the time.”

“[The FBI] didn’t like that Toni was being interviewed by the media,” said Earl. “An agent came [up] to me and said, ‘Do you know her?’ pointing to Toni. I said, ‘Yes, she’s my wife.’ He said, “What is she?’ I said, ‘Well, she’s been down here all day trying to get people out of this building and help people.’ He turned around to his friends and said, ‘Well, we need to get her out of here.’ Toni then told me that the agents had told her that the FBI was taking over and all of us could get out. They told us to keep our mouths shut.”

Said Toni, “When they came over to me, one of the agents was very pompous and arrogant about asking me who I was, what I was doing there, if I was a civilian, where I worked, and what my name was. I didn’t feel like any of that pertained to what was going on that day or what had happened that day, and he wanted to know everything about me. “He said, ‘Well, we’re down here now, and we’re taking over the building. It would be advisable and recommendable that you keep your mouth shut.”

Norma Smith, who worked at the Federal Courthouse across from the Murrah Building saw, along with numerous others, the Sheriff’s bomb squad congregated in the parking lot at 7:30 that morning. Shortly after Smith’s story appeared in a local newspaper, her house was broken into—twice. Smith, frightened, took early retirement and moved out of the state.

The bomb squad, which was seen searching the area that morning before the bombing, incidentally, denied being there, even after being seen by several people.

New American magazine editor William Jasper learned from an OCPD officer that during a mandatory daily security briefing at the Murrah Building, he and other assembled police/rescue/recovery personnel were told “in no uncertain terms” by one of the lead federal officials that it was necessary for “security” reasons to provide the public with “misinformation” regarding certain aspects of the case, and that this “official line” was not to be contradicted by any of those in attendance.

“There’s a lot that’s being covered up, for some reason,” charged a federal employee who narrowly escaped death but who lost many friends in the terrorist attack.

A man who lost his father said, “…I’m angry because I know I’m being lied to.”

“Many of us are going to come forward and challenge what’s going on as soon as we get some more of the pieces figured out,” pledged a law enforcement officer.

This same police officer later told me he was called into the offices of OCPD Chief Sam Gonzales and U.S. Attorney Pat Ryan and told to “cease and desist.” Exactly what was told to Terry Yeakey and a score of other officers. The word on the department was out, and Terry Yeakey’s death, and the threats of supervisors, put a damper on any other OCPD officers—with a very few exceptions—telling what they saw or knew about the bombing.

CHAPTER 20

More Dead Witnesses—The Body Count Grows

In my book JFK: The Dead Witnesses, co-authored by John Armstrong, I list and give explanations of the deaths of dozens of people who either witnessed the assassination of JFK, or had information about the assassination. Some died of what was described as "natural causes," but many others had tragic "accidents," "committed suicide," or were murdered outright. Over the two investigations into the assassination many of those who were called to testify had "accidents" or committed suicide just before they were to testify. As the mafiosos say, "they knew too much." Oklahoma City was no different. For those who "saw too much" and refused to keep their mouths shut as ordered by their superiors or by the FBI, death awaited. Deaths that would be chalked up to suicides, accidents, natural causes, or in at least one case, being found dead inside the building.

Mike Loudenslager

Mike Loudenslager was a GSA employee who worked in the Murrah Building. On the day of the bombing he was seen saving several people. Forty-eight year-old Michael Loudenslager became increasingly aware that large amounts of ordnance and explosives were in the building and strongly urged several parents to take their children out of the building, thereby saving many lives. Mike had filed a grievance with the G.S.A., through the building's security director, because of the dangers posed by the explosives in the building. As a result, he lost his job. Then, after the operator of the day-care center, the security director's wife, notified the fire marshals after some remodeling had been done to the day care center as required, the fire marshals were denied access to do their inspection by federal agents and told to leave! Then the day-care operator lost her contract.

Loudenslager and the day-care center operator then told many of the parents to get their children out. And, because of their warnings, far fewer children were in the day-care center on Wednesday morning, April 19th, than otherwise would have been there.

Shortly after the bombing, Loudenslager was actively helping in the rescue and recovery effort. A large number of people at the bomb-site either saw or talked with him. During the course of the early rescue efforts, however, Loudenslager was seen and heard in a very "heated" confrontation with someone there. Much of his anger stemmed from the fact he felt the ATF was in large part responsible not only for the bombing, but for the death and injury to those inside. He insisted they had prior knowledge and did not warn anyone else.

To the absolute astonishment of a large number of police officers and rescue workers who had witnessed Mike doing rescue work after the bombing, it was later reported that "G.S.A. employee Mike Loudenslager's body had been found inside the Murrah Building the following Sunday, still at his desk, a victim of the 9:02 A.M. bombing!" He is also officially listed as one of the 168 bombing fatalities.

Baker Street Irregular investigator Pat Briley asked in his reporting on the bombing "Was he murdered and placed at his desk by federal agents? Or was he just simply murdered by them and said to have been found at his desk? Access to the inside of the building, from shortly after the bombing onward was extremely limited to nearly all but federal employees, except for the FBI."

Mike Loudenslager's murder, most assuredly was one of the major factors leading to the demise of both Terry Yeakey and Dr. H. Don Chumley.

Dr. Don Chumley

Like Terrance Yeakey, the press claimed that Dr. Don Chumley was saddened and disturbed that he hadn't helped more people that terrible day. Chumley, who ran the Broadway Medical Clinic about half a mile from the Federal Building, was one of the first to arrive at the bombing site on April 19. Shaun Jones, Chumley's step-son, was assisting him. Jones recalled the scene:

"They had sent us around to the underground parking garage, where some people were trapped. Suddenly, three guys come running out of the basement yelling, 'There's a bomb! A bomb! It's gonna' blow!' Everybody panicked and ran screaming away from the building as fast as they could."

No one later could identify who these three men were, and this act became very skeptical later as no "bomb" was found in the underground parking area. What could have been found was the undetonated charges and det cord strung between the columns that failed to explode. These would be the charges that Jane Graham saw two days before the 19th. If rescuers who had any military experience with explosives saw them, that would have destroyed the government's "lone nut with a truck" story. That would have led to an investigation of exactly who put the charges there, and who they worked for.

It should be noted at this point that early on in my investigation I was notified that there was a "pallet" of Composition C-4 plastic explosive that was stolen from Fort Riley, Kansas. Shortly thereafter I received a fax with no address header that said something similar, but that C-4 was stolen in Arizona from Marana, an airfield and training area for both the CIA and the Arizona Army National Guard (who had a helicopter base co-located there named "Silver Bell"). We were never able to verify these two pieces of information, but the "putty" seen by Jane Graham came from somewhere, and it had to be a government military source.

Chumley, who was working with Dr. Ross Harris, was one of the few doctors who actually went into the Federal Building, while the others waited outside. He had helped many people, including seven babies, whom he later pronounced dead.

Chumley was killed five months later when his Cessna 210 airplane crashed near Amarillo, Texas in what I call "mysterious circumstances." As a commercial pilot, and at that time serving as a police helicopter pilot for the Tulsa Police Department's Helicopter Unit, and having amassed over 3000 hours of flying time in both helicopters and airplanes, I could immediately see that there was something wrong with the Chumley accident when David Hoffman called me and said that Chumley had just crashed in Texas, and that the FAA had said that the aircraft had "gone straight down." Then, as more information came out the investigators said that it was "pilot error" because the weather was bad and Chumley was a low time pilot with no instrument rating. If that was true, then what might have happened is called "spatial disorientation," in which a pilot who does not have sufficient instrument time, gets into a "zero zero" visual condition where he loses visual contact with outside references such as the horizon. Then, if the pilot does not trust his instruments, it is easy to get vertigo and think that your instruments, such as the artificial horizon and turn and bank indicator are wrong. You then attempt to “correct” for it by control inputs that make matters worse, often resulting in a “death spiral” spin until you impact on the ground. I have worked accidents where this has happened, and have been in that situation during instrument training, induced by a flight instructor, to familiarize me with what happens if you think your instruments are wrong.

But did this happen to Chumley?

Chumley had been in a minor accident during a landing a year earlier when his plane became trapped in a vortex caused by a large jet landing nearby. The small plane was forced into a snow bank causing some damage to its left wing tip. The damage had been repaired, but even that would not have affected the airplane enough to cause a catastrophic failure of any of the flight components.

According to reports in The Daily Oklahoman, Chumley, who was returning from a hunting trip, had landed twice Friday due to bad weather conditions. The crash occurred three days later, on a Monday.

“The thing that’s odd to me is that Don was perfectly healthy,” said Jones. “He was talking to the tower, and from one minute to the next he just went straight smack down into the ground.”

Investigators said they could find no evidence of an explosion at the scene. Chumley’s throttle was still set at cruise, and his gear and flaps were up. The FAA inspector stated there were “no anomalies with the engine or the airframe,” and the NTSB, who took over on fatal accidents reported “pathological examination of the pilot did not show any preexisting condition that could have contributed to the accident.”

“To me it’s unusual because I know he was a good pilot,” added Jones. “Everything was fine, he was in the air for 15 minutes, he was climbing, he had just asked permission to go from six to seven thousand feet. They tracked him on the screen at 6,900 feet, and the radar technician said he saw him on the radar, then he looked back and he was gone, and the plane came straight, straight down. I mean, no attempt to land… nothing, just straight down.”

The wreckage was found in a cabbage patch near Shamrock, Texas. It was on his course line for Oklahoma City.

Chumley’s hunting partner Joey Chief said in an interview in The Daily Oklahoman:

“He was the kind of guy who did everything right, always. He was very cautious, very professional,” Chief said, adding [that] Chumley’s plane was equipped with extra safety instruments,” meaning that it was IFR equipped for instrument conditions.

Mike Evett, a Federal Public Defender, had known Don Chumley for over twenty years. “I would never get into an airplane with anybody I didn’t know,” said Evett, “and I would never be afraid to fly with Don. For the life of me, this doesn’t sit right with me.”

Though the initial reports stated that Chumley was not IFR qualified and did not have an instrument rating, and that the weather was bad that evening, the doctor did in fact have an instrument rating, and was an experienced pilot, having logged over 600 hours of flying time. And the weather was not bad or, according to those who knew him, he wouldn't have continued the flight.

Did Dr. Don Chumley crash on the evening of September 25th due to bad weather? Did he commit suicide due to his grief over what he saw on the morning of April 19th, or was Don Chumley murdered?

I obtained the NTSB reports on the crash. it specifically states:

"During a refueling stop at Amarillo, Texas the instrument rated, private pilot received a weather briefing and filed an IFR flight plan to Guthrie, Oklahoma. During departure, the pilot took off at night in the auto-pilot equipped airplane, made a climb to 7,000 feet msl. About four minutes after level-off, Albuquerque Center lost radar and radio contact wth the airplane. Several witnesses either heard the airplane crash or saw a post-impact fire, but no known witnesses saw the plane before impact. Examination of the crash site revealed the airplane impacted in a steep descent, but the investigation did not find any anomalies with the engine or airframe. Pathological examination of the pilot did not show any preexisting condition that could have contributed to the accident. Probable Cause: Loss of control for unknown reason(s)."

This report specifically stated that Chumley had a significant amount of hours, that he was instrument rated, that the Cessna as equipped with autopilot which would have been used once he reached cruising altitude (and could be overcome easily by the pilot if it malfunctioned), and that Center—the FAA controlling agency that directs Instrument flights—lost radar contact within four minutes of reaching cruise altitude. Also, the airplane engine and airframe did not show any preexisting condition that would effect flight characteristics, and the post mortem did not give any clues such as a heart attack or stroke. Lack of oxygen would not be a factor since he was only at 7,000 feet MSL (above Mean Sea Level) and you don't need oxygen below 14,000 feet MSL.

The main NTSB report stated that the weather was "Visual meteorological conditions prevailed for the personal flight"—visibility was ten miles. That he received a weather briefing in Amarillo, and that he filed an IFR flight plan. The airplane crashed in a maize field near Groom, Texas, and no distress calls or anomalies were received."

To me, this indicated that something may have been done to sabotage the airplane at some point to provide a flight control failure, or something had been done to incapacitate the pilot.

The Daily Oklahoman article described how he had cried in front of his friend Jim Taylor on the day of the bombing, after tagging seven babies, and was not satisfied he had done all he could, even after helping to organize a fund-raiser for the victims.

It was also rumored that Chumley was about to go public with some damning information. According to a local journalist who has investigated the bombing, Chumley was asked to bandage two federal agents who falsely claimed to have been trapped in the building that morning. Since the pair was obviously not hurt, Chumley refused. When the agents went to another doctor at the scene, Chumley intervened, threatening to report them.

Chumley's crash is reminiscent of that of Dr. Ronald Rogers, whose plane went down on March 3, 1994 near Lawton, Oklahoma in good weather. President Bill Clinton's former dentist, Rogers was on his way to be interviewed by Ambrose Evans-Pritchard of the London Sunday Telegraph, where he intended to reveal evidence of Clinton's alleged cocaine use.

He never made it.

Like Rogers, Hershel Friday, a "top-notch pilot," died in the crash of his small plane only two days earlier during a light drizzle at his private airstrip. Friday had been a member of Clinton's presidential campaign finance committee, and was a close associate of C. Victor Raiser, another member of Clinton's presidential campaign, who died in a suspicious plane crash two years earlier.

In fact, the list of those who had potentially damning evidence on everything from the Kennedy assassination to Clinton's improprieties is a long and sordid one, stretching to hundreds of names and spanning at least three decades.

A few years after the Kennedy assassination, a disgruntled CIA official was on his way to Chicago to inform a journalist of the CIA's complicity in the murder. His plane exploded and fell into Lake Michigan.

Another well-known crash was that of Gary Caradori, a private investigator who was hot on the trail of a pedophile ring being run by Lawrence "Larry" King, manager of the Franklin Community Federal Credit Union in Omaha, Nebraska, and other prominent businessmen and politicians in Omaha.

Caradori and his eight-year-old son Andrew died when their plane crashed in July of 1990. Caradori radioed that his compass was swinging wildly just before he went down. Moments later, the plane went into a steep dive from which it never recovered.

What is interesting is that only several days earlier, the courageous investigator had informed a friend that he had obtained evidence which threatened to break the case wide open.

Like Caradori, Rogers, and numerous other whistle-blowers, Don Chumley had evidently learned of the government's hastily planned cover-up surrounding the Oklahoma City bombing.

Prior to the crash, he was a brave individual who refused "to keep his mouth shut."

Speculation is that both he and Terry Yeakey knew, and were ready to bring forth the fact that Mike Loudenslager was alive and well after the bombing and was not at his desk, killed in the bombing like the government reported.

Glenn Wilburn

Glenn Wilburn, who lost his grandsons Chase and Colton in the bombing, was one of the very first to go public. A staunch opponent of the government's case, Wilburn had teamed up with both J.D. Cash and State Representative Charles Key to investigate the crime.

Key and Wilburn petitioned for the County Grand Jury investigation. Wilburn worked tirelessly to investigate the truth about what really happened that fateful morning, and his evidence was proving more and more embarrassing to authorities.

About a year after he began his investigation, Wilburn, 46, came down with a sudden case of pancreatic cancer. Initially recovering after surgery, he died on July 15, 1997, the day after the County Grand Jury which he convened, began hearing evidence. Was the sudden onset of a fatal cancer a "natural cause," or did something else happen? Students of the JFK assassination will recall that Jack Ruby, while in jail in Dallas, claimed that doctors were coming to his cell and injecting him with cancer cells. And, David Ferrie, a CIA pilot during the Kennedy years, and connected to the JFK case by New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison, also mysteriously came down with a fatal cancer and died.

It is very unusual for someone as young as Wilburn was to have pancreatic cancer. As an example, in the UK a study was done that showed that men, ages 40-49 contracted pancreatic cancer in just over 200 cases per 100,000 population.

Like Dr. Chumley, Glenn would not "keep his mouth shut."

Ted Richardson

Three weeks after Wilburn's death, on August 5th, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ted Richardson was found in a church parking lot with a shotgun wound to the chest. The Medical Examiner's report stated: "No powder residue is apparent, either on the external aspect of the wound or in the shirt." An interesting observation considering Richardson had allegedly pushed a shotgun up to his chest and pulled the trigger.

The death was ruled a "suicide."

Yet the circumstances seemed to concur. Richardson had been depressed. He had been seeing a psychiatrist and was on Prozac. He once told a hunting buddy he "felt like ending it all."

One sunny morning, Richardson rose, fed his two dogs, got in his car, drove to a church near his house, pulled out a shotgun, and inside his car, shot himself through the heart.

He left no note.

Was Ted Richardson depressed enough to kill himself? And if so, why? The 49-year-old father of two had a happy marriage, and adored his 8-year-old son.

The two weeks he took off work at that time, according to others in his office, was due to unexplained "pressures" that may provide a clue. Richardson was the bombing and arson specialist for the Western District of Oklahoma. But he was inexplicably transferred to the bank robbery detail after the bombing—an area in which he had no expertise. As his brother Dan explained, "Ted should have gotten the bombing case."

Friends described Richardson as "one of the few good guys," and a man with a "strong sense of conscience."

In point of fact, Richardson was the U.S. Attorney who was prepared to prosecute Samir Khalil. Richardson had been investigating Samir Khalil for income tax evasion and HUD property scams. Richardson was abruptly taken off the investigation of Khalil just before the results of his investigation were to be submitted to a grand jury, and just after Khalil's name came up in the news media in connection with the OKC bombing in May 1995.

At this point, according to the federal investigators, he decided to kill himself.

Alan G Whicher

Alan Whicher, a 40 year-old member of the Secret Service, who at one time oversaw Bill Clinton's security detail, was transferred to the Secret Service Field office in the Murrah Building. He was told to be at this desk at exactly 9 a.m. for an "important phone call" from Washington. He died at his desk.

Gary Webb

Gary Webb, a Pulitzer Prize winning journalist, was deep into investigating Iran/Contra and cocaine smuggling when he was found dead. He wrote a series on this titled "Dark Alliance," that was published in the San Jose Mercury News in 1996. He claimed the Contra rebels in Nicaragua were shipping cocaine into the US. which was then flooding Compton and South-Central Los Angeles in the mid-Eighties after being turned into crack – a relatively new and highly addictive substance sold in 'rocks' that could be smoked. Webb also said the CIA was aware that proceeds from the sales of those drugs were being funneled back to help fund the Contras. Just prior to publishing an expose' book on this Webb was found dead with "multiple gunshot wounds to the head." It was declared suicide.

Joey Gladden

Joey Gladden was a Bureau of Prisons prison guard at the U.S. Penitentiary at El Reno, Oklahoma, who worked the section housing Tim McVeigh and Terry Nichols. Gladden was found dead on February 6th, 1996 with a bullet in his head. He was sitting on a sofa, still wearing his uniform jacket, and had just opened a can of beer. A .22 caliber revolver was found on the floor at his feet with one expended shell casing in the cylinder and five live rounds lined up neatly on his coffee table.

Gladden had worked in McVeigh's cell block, and had spoken personally to McVeigh. On one occasion, both Gladden and his supervisor, Charles Mildner, discovered syringes on McVeigh's food tray. When Mildner subsequently ordered only one person to deliver McVeigh's meals, Warden R.G. Thompson countermanded the order, saying it was "too much trouble."

Prison officials denied that there was ever any contraband items on McVeigh's tray, and stated in The Daily Oklahoman "The security of this institution has not been compromised, and reports of syringes and other contraband items having been smuggled into defendants Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols on their food trays are absolutely false."

Yet, Mildner's attorney, David Wilson, said numerous staff employees told him and Mildner about the syringes. "This came to me from other employees," said Wilson. "Do you think all these people are lying?"

Joey Gladden was very concerned with corruption inside the prison. He was a very conscientious individual and had decided to document everything with the intention of writing a book about it. He also, according to friends, was very outspoken and did not hesitate to speak his mind about concerns, which "got him into trouble."

Whatever the case, Gladden became frightened about what he knew and reported, only to be rebuffed and warned to keep quiet. The day before his death the 27-year old father of two spoke to his first wife, Shelly Walling, and told her "if anything happens to me, I have it all written down right here in my book." When she asked him what he was referring to, Gladden hesitated, then responded "we don't need to talk about it right now. I don't want you getting mixed up in this too."

On January 14th, three weeks before his death, Joey Gladden called his mother, Sharon Gladden, and said "They told me they were going to kill me." She said "Joey, honey, it's just the stress of everything." Gladden replied "Mom, the federal government has the power. You don't know the power. They could assassinate the president of the United States!"

His mother said "Things like that don't happen in real life."

Gladden then said "Mom, just forget it. Don't ask me about it. At least you know about it." Three weeks later he was dead.

Mark Anthony Finnigin

Finnigin allegedly had inside knowledge of the Oklahoma City bombing. Died May 18th, 1995 in a trailer fire in Wichita, Kansas.

Michael Abbot

Found severely burned in his car near Herington Kansas, not far from Nichols' residence. He died several days later, and allegedly had inside knowledge of the Oklahoma City bombing.

David Hoffman, on September 29th, 1996, faxed me a memo that had some sketchy information on other deaths, but did not, or was not, able to follow up on them:

"Two FBI agents (names not known) died within three weeks of the bombing in a car accident.

FBI agent from Kansas (name not known) died shortly after the bombing. He hung himself.

BATF agent (name not known) disappeared, believed dead.

Ambulance attendant—first ambulance that arrived (female) was very irate and vocal at the scene, died within three days of cancer—so they say.

Oklahoma City fireman who was at the scene died June 1996. May not be related, but…"

U.S. Army officer/survivor in fed bldg/Army recruiting office. Was out on maneuvers later and keeled over of heart attack last summer. He had a physical in May of 1995, then died in July of 1995.

Delmar Bartholomew, Oklahoma County Sheriff's deputy. A cop was loading his gun and accidentally shot Bartholomew. The cop got 'spooked' and disappeared. (Bartholomew was on a stake-out of the Murrah Building on [the morning of] April 19th!)." [author's note: I have not been able to find anything to back up Hoffman's remarks regarding this individual, however we do know that the Oklahoma County Sheriff's Office had deputies on scene that did have the building staked out the morning of the 19th].

Finally,

There were other deaths after the Murrah bombing with many going unreported. But of those recorded before and after the bombing with connections to the Clintons, Mena, cocaine smuggling and money laundering, and Iran/Contra, tends to show that eliminating witnesses or threats to the government was not an uncommon occurrence. Of those who had ties to the Iran/Contra drug smuggling and money laundering, or knowledge of such activities, and subsequently died, the breakdown of just 48 recorded “strange” deaths appear below:

20	Murder
9	Murder—declared suicide
5	Plane crash
4	Shot at Waco (all ATF and former Clinton body guards)
3	Helicopter crash (all former Clinton body guards)
2	Vehicle “accidents”
1	Heart attack
1	Fall from tall building
1	Unknown causes
1	Other accidents
1	Killed in Murrah Building

Is it a coincidence that not only these individuals, but those who had witnessed events on April 19th, or who had been vocal opponents of the government’s case had died?

“Out of roughly 5,000 of us who were originally involved in Iran-Contra,” said Iran/Contra whistleblower Al Martin, “approximately 400, since 1986, have committed suicide, died accidentally, or died of “natural causes.” In over half those deaths, official death certificates were never issued. In 187 circumstances, the bodies were cremated before the families were notified.”

After having investigated a similar spate of suspicious deaths for my book JFK: The Dead Witnesses. That investigation revealed that most of the deaths of witnesses to the assassination of President Kennedy, or knew something about it, peaked in the months leading up to one of the investigations, with the deaths often coming days or even hours before the person was scheduled to testify.

In the three years following the Kennedy assassination, 18 material witnesses perished. In the time period leading up to 1979, when the last of the Kennedy investigations ended, over 100 witnesses had died. Interestingly, most of the deaths coincided with one of the four main investigations: The Warren Commission (1964-65); the Jim Garrison investigation (1965-69); the Senate Committee investigation (1974-76); and the House Committee on Assassinations investigation (1976-79).

Naturally, the CIA had an answer for these mysterious deaths. In a 1967 departmental memo, a CIA officer wrote:

"Such vague accusations as that more than 10 people have died mysteriously can always be explained in some rational way: e.g., the individuals concerned have for the most part died of natural causes; the [Warren] Commission staff questioned 418 witnesses—the FBI interviewed far more people, conducting 25,000 interviews and re-interviews—and in such a large group, a certain number of deaths are to be expected."

If the CIA were not involved in any of the deaths, why was such a memo disseminated?

Then, to add further fuel to the fire, CIA technicians testified before the Senate Committee (Church Committee) in 1975 that a variety of Termination with Extreme Prejudice [TWEP] weapons had been used throughout the years, and many were chosen because they left no postmortem residue.

In one particular memo, the author states:

"You will recall that I mentioned that the local circumstances under which a given means might be used might suggest the technique to be used in that case. I think the gross divisions in presenting this subject might be:

(1) bodies left with no hope of the cause of death being determined by the most complete autopsy and chemical examination;

(2) bodies left in such circumstances as to simulate accidental death;

(3) bodies left in such circumstances as to simulate suicide;

(4) bodies left with residue that simulate those caused by natural death."

Regarding deaths that could be simulated to appear as "natural causes," the various assassination experts within the intelligence communities of the world knew quite well of the effects of such chemical agents as sodium morphate, which causes heart attacks; thyon phosphate, which is a solution that can suspend sodium morphate and provide a vehicle to penetrate the surface of the skin with the chemical (which is used to coat something the victim might touch); beryllium, which is an extremely toxic element that causes cancer and fibrotic tumors, and Plutinium pellets that can be shot into a victim with a very small device that causes fatal radiation poisoning—a favorite of the Soviet KGB.

As the daughter of a CIA contract agent who worked during Iran/Contra told me: "They eliminated my father, and I know what they do in the Agency. I know how they work as far as the Mafia goes.… They have no scruples. And they don't go by any law but their own. There is no conscience to these people; the end justifies the means. They will shut anybody up that they possibly can. They're amazing. And they will go through anything to make you look crazy, to make you appear to be a liar.

"And they go into these operations, and they run amok. They run amok. And then when it gets carried away or there's a leak, here comes the damage control, and you have to make everybody else appear like they're crazy. I mean people out there drop like flies. How many people can commit suicide for God's sake. How many people can be handcuffed behind their back, and they can call it suicide because they were shot in the head?"

Especially if they were shot in the head in an impossible angle to be considered self-inflicted, or shot multiple times?

And the so-called media, like the dead, remain silent.

CHAPTER 21

Hoffman Indicted and Sued

"I told Dave, you get the most flack when you're over the target!"

Craig Roberts, May, 1999

Hoffman called me one day during the Oklahoma County Grand Jury proceedings and said "Looks like I'm in trouble. Macy is after me. Says he's going to get me for jury tampering."

I asked Dave what had happened, and he said that he wanted to make sure that the jurors had the information that he had about the bombing in his recently published book The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror, so he found out where one of the jurors lived (possibly more but he didn't say so) and put a copy of his book in the juror's mail box. The juror evidently took the book to the jury room and showed Macy, who became incensed (and probably saw his opportunity to go after Hoffman whose book was not flattering to Macy—and Hoffman had been on Macy's case for weeks). Macy then filed charges against Hoffman for jury tampering.

Dave asked me what would happen, and having been Court Liaison Officer for Tulsa PD for a year, I knew more than most officers did about court proceedings. I said "Dave, if Macy filed charges, a warrant will be issued and you will either have to turn yourself in or they'll come out and arrest you. What were you thinking when you did this? Didn't you know that would result with jury tampering charges?"

"I thought that if I could get at least one juror to question the current proceedings they would at least have me come in to testify," he said. "Macy does not want that at all. He wants to control the jury and what they see and hear, and who gets to be questioned or give testimony."

Within a day or two Hoffman was booked for the charges brought forth by Macy. He made bond with the financial help of his benefactor who was supporting his investigation, Alex Magnus, a wealthy "concerned citizen" in Chicago who was interested in pursing the facts of the bombing. But when Hoffman was to appear on a later day he failed to do so because he had been advised of the wrong time on the date set to come back to court. One newspaper article did a short piece on the incident:

" The man indicted by the Oklahoma County grand jury investigating the Oklahoma City bombing found himself back in jail Thursday when he failed to appear in court.

"David Hoffman, 38, author of "The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror," blamed his absence at the hearing before Special District Judge Russell Hall on his attorney, Michael Johnston. Johnston also said the mix-up was his mistake. He said he thought the hearing was at 1:30 p.m. instead of 9 a.m.

"The attorney showed up about 20 minutes late after he learned about the problem when he telephoned the district attorney's office with a question about the Hoffman case. Still, the judge increased Hoffman's bond to $12,000, and Oklahoma County sheriff's deputies took Hoffman to jail in handcuffs.

"He spent five hours in jail before being released."

A little over three months later Hoffman decided to plead guilty to two misdemeanor charges of jury tampering to avoid serious jail time. He was facing up to two years in the Oklahoma County jail if convicted, and the last thing he wanted was ending up in the slammer for that long in what he described as "the worst jail in the country." In one article about the case Hoffman explains:

"Hoffman said he probably would not be allowed to present evidence of his conspiracy theories at a trial.

"'We're not going to be able to turn it into a political trial,' Hoffman said. He said he had planned to air obstruction of justice allegations on the local and federal levels as part of his defense.

"'The whole reason I stuck my neck on the line is because I wanted to see justice done. It certainly wasn't being done with (District Attorney) Bob Macy's grand jury.'"

David was right. The way Macy was conducting the grand jury was a sham. No "evidence" was being presented, or being allowed in the court room that contradicted the "official truth" the government had put forth. Macy was following the old saying of "Don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up."

If Dave had called me in advance before putting his book in someone's mailbox, or even going before the grand jury with his findings and other material in the book that brought up any information outside the bombing case, I'd have told him not to do anything with the jurors or even to try to testify before the jury itself. Dave and I, and others, had discovered during our various efforts to follow leads, with some of them being what I call "rabbit trails," information that would almost be cases within themselves. Even if we knew, or if we felt they had connections to the bombing, they would have had no place in jury testimony. Using the adages of "follow the money," and "follow the power," we had chased leads to such entities as the Iran/Contra drug running, and from there to connections that needed a lot more attention and information and investigation into such companies and government contractors as Evergreen Air, Esystems, Raytheon, the FBI Lab corruption, the long list of the deaths that followed the Clintons, a strange Iraqi named Ishan Barbouti who was connected to one Gerald Bull—the inventor of Saddam Hussein's "super cannon"—a company named TK-7 in Oklahoma City, the murder "suicide" of Marine Colonel Sabow at El Toro Marine Corps Air Station in California, several stolen C-130 cargo planes that ended up smuggling drugs, and other areas that all seemed to have some links or tie-ins to the story. These were leads that also may have been mentioned in the "Little Rock Files," as I began to call the files taken from the building on Day One. There was no telling whether the federal investigators in Arkansas with the DEA and IRS had also stumbled into these rabbit trail connections, or even reported them if they did.

The problem that I tried to explain to David, since he had always been a newspaper reporter and had never written a book was that there was a big difference in a newspaper story and a full-length book when it comes to writing style and what to leave in and what to leave out. A newspaper article is very much like a police report. It is a series of facts and quotes with little "meat" to expand the story. It is limited in space, and unless one is doing a series, the space is very limited. In a non-fiction book the author strives to give all the information possible, but not so much as to lose the reader. After an initial rough draft, the author reads his material with a critical eye and "cuts the fat." If it doesn't add to the story, or goes too far astray from what the author is intending to present to the reader, it goes. The hard part is to know how much to actually leave in because as an author you know what you know, and you know what you are trying to say, but are you presenting it to the reader in a cohesive manner so that they understand what you are trying to communicate? That's the issue.

The next thing that must be done in books such as this one is to keep all of your files! Keep the material that backs up what you write. You need source material that you can use to prove what you wrote, everything from newspaper articles, to memos, reports, faxes, government documents, tapes, videos, and witness statements/depositions. When it comes to dealing with people there is legal difference between dealing with a public figure and dealing with a private citizen. Normally a public figure who is being paid with taxpayer money, or is in government service, is fair game if you can show that where there's smoke, there is probably fire. But you can't do that to a private individual until you have evidence to back up a claim such as court documents or other news reports that can't be challenged.

Dave's book went into areas that we could link to the story, but the problem was that any outside reader would not be able to make the detailed connections to the entities that we had made. The only way to do that would be an anthology which is a book of chapters, each with its own topic, such as my book The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government. The format for that book was simply to tell stories of cases of government crimes and coverups from a given point in history—in that case World War II —to another point in history, which in that book was the shoot-down of TWA 800. There had to be a connecting theme that the reader would understand right up front to make the book informative and readable to the interested person. That theme was in the subtitle—crimes and coverups of the government.

Hoffman's book, however, had too many rabbit trails for the reader to follow, and it tended to the divert the story away from the single topic of the Oklahoma City bombing. It did link "politics of terror," but in some areas wandered too far afield of the subject to the point of giving an opening to anyone who wanted to attack him as simply a "conspiracy theorist."

The so-called mainstream media, which is controlled by the government to begin with, will use any opening to discredit, debunk, demonize, deny and destroy an author, reporter or screen writer who they wish to attack, and their favorite method for anyone who writes of conspiracies is to use what I call "The Little Green Men From Mars" attack.

Back in the 1950s there were a rash of UFO sightings. Hollywood jumped on board and capitalized on the then-current fear of an "invasion from outer space" with films such as Destination Moon (1950), The Day The Earth Stood Still (1951), Invaders From Mars (1953), It Came From Outer Space (1953), The War Of The Worlds (1953), Them! (1954), This Island Earth (1955), Forbidden Planet (1956), and many others. There were over 100 such movies from 1951 through the 1960s.

At the same time, the Air Force began its "investigation" into the UFO phenomena with Project Grudge, a cover for chasing down witnesses of sightings and debunking them. This later evolved into Project Blue Book, which also was a mission of damage control. It was not long before anyone who had a sighting and reported it was laughed at and debunked as having seen “little green men from Mars.” There were even news reports on TV showing a few people, either staged or real, wearing tin foil hats on their heads to “keep out the radiation and gamma rays the aliens were bombarding us with.”

Once an author, reporter or citizen came forward with anything pertaining to UFOs, he or she was quickly labeled a nut case accused of seeing the Little Green Men by anyone who did not believe such things existed-and even if they did, they wouldn’t admit it.

I was once asked why I didn’t do a chapter on government coverups of UFOs in The Medusa File and I responded that if you wrote about UFOs, you had to keep it to just that. If I had added a chapter on UFOs in Medusa, too many readers would have chucked the book in the trash and labeled me Agent Mulder from The X-Files, or worse (even though, admittedly, I often can identify with Mulder and his constant uphill battles to find the truth). It would be a case of destruction of credibility. As a career police officer I knew that I had to meld my former career, which entailed writing to-the-point factual police reports into my civilian writing career in the vein of Sergeant Joe Friday in the old television series Dragnet. I can still see Jack Webb saying in his deadpan manner “Just the facts, ma’am, just the facts.”

Since Hoffman’s book on the bombing was the first book he’d written, he made the typical first-time author’s mistakes of trying to include too much in it. I tried to tell him that there were some things he needed to leave out, but he was determined to joust every windmill on the battlefield. He was like a hound on the trail of a stag but he was not going to chase just one deer, but the whole herd. And, in so doing, he stood the chance of making the mistake of not fact-checking everything he wrote before he published it—which is okay IF you credit the information to its source and simply not declare it as fact without anything to back it up. In one incident he described in his book, this came back to haunt him. I was always a fan of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle’s “Sherlock Holmes” mysteries. In various tales regarding Holmes and Watson, he gives Holmes the advice (in various forms): “I never guess. It is a capital mistake to theorize before one has data. Insensibly, one begins to twist facts to suit theories, instead of theories to suit facts.” (Found in The Sign of Four and A Scandal in Bohemia).

“Rabbi” Hoffman, as I often referred to him, called me in May of 1999 to tell me that he was being sued. His book, which had been out for almost a year, had stirred up its share of controversy. But until that time no one named in the book had come forward to contest its contents. Then on May 12th, retired FBI agent Oliver “Buck” Revell, the former Assistant Deputy Director of the FBI, who had a “most interesting career” with the Bureau, filed a defamation of character suit against Hoffman for something he wrote in one of his chapters regarding the fatal bombing of Pan Am 103. Hoffman was attempting to show a connection between terrorism, the political fallout from terrorist events, and more importantly, corruption in the Federal Bureau of Investigation from field agents to the FBI lab. Citizens all over the country were incensed over the events of Ruby Ridge, Waco, and now Oklahoma City and were questioning the conduct and leadership of the FBI, BATF, DEA, and even the IRS. Like Oklahoma City we discovered a lot of strange and suspicious issues in several of the terrorist events “investigated” by the federal government.

Of note here is the tragic bombing of Pan Am 103 in 1988. The more we looked at it, the more we found that disagreed with what we were being told, what the agents in the field at Lockerbie, Scotland were "finding," and where the direction of the investigation was going contrary to known facts and eye witness accounts. And most of all, whether the government might have had foreknowledge that something was going to happen to that particular flight. If they did, and didn't do what they could to protect the passengers on the plane, it would parallel what had been charged in the Oklahoma City bombing.

Typically, U.S. authorities disingenuously denied receiving any warnings, as they would later do in New York on 9/11 and in Oklahoma City. Yet, as in those cases, evidence of prior knowledge would eventually become known. "It subsequently came to me on further inquiries that they hadn't ignored [the warnings]," said a Pan Am security officer. "A number of VIPs were pulled off that plane. A number of intelligence operatives were pulled off that plane."

Due to the warnings posted in U.S. embassies by the State Department (but not forwarded to Pan Am), many government employees avoided the flight. In fact, the Boeing 747 jumbo jet was only two-thirds full that evening. South African president P.W. Botha and several high-ranking officials were advised by state security forces to change their reservations at the last hour. The South African State Security forces, it should be noted, had a close relationship with the CIA.

Strange as it may seem, there were several important people scheduled to fly aboard that flight who were warned to stay off and reschedule. Some were even pulled off the flight before it could take off. (For more on this and the motives for the strange activities by government bodies, read the chapter on Pan Am 103 in The Medusa File).

Hoffman, who had read all he could find on the Pan Am tragedy, read one piece in which a senior FBI agent named Buck Revell had "rushed out on the tarmac and pulled his son and daughter-in-law" off of the plane. Unfortunately, David only sent me pieces of his manuscript as he was working on the original version, and I never saw this assertion until it was too late. Such a statement, to me, didn't make sense. No one just rushes out "onto the tarmac" to approach an airplane. If an announcement was made aboard an airplane for someone to de-plane, that's one thing if it is still at the gate, but not after it has rolled back. My next question to Dave would have been, "What was Revell doing in London in the first place?"

To put it mildly, on this particular story, Hoffman was off the leash and after the stag. But the stag was elusive, and even if true, could not be proven. Now Revell was suing him. And other than showing possible government foreknowledge of a tragic event and not taking proper action, it had nothing to do with the Oklahoma City bomb case.

One newspaper article reported:

"The lawsuit was filed against Hoffman and Alexander B. Magnus, who financed Hoffman's work through a group called Americans for Responsible Media.

"The book claimed Revell had advance knowledge of the Pan Am airliner bombing, which occurred over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 270 people. It alleged Revell personally pulled his son and daughter-in-law off the plane on the tarmac of a London airport.

"At the time of the bombing Revell was in Washington, where he served as the FBI's executive assistant director for investigations. He said his son had left London a month before the bombing and that his daughter-in-law was also in the United States.

"The lawsuit said Hoffman's book also implied that Revell, former head of the FBI's Dallas office, was a co-conspirator in the Oklahoma City bombing, which killed 168 people April 19, 1995.

"'That is the most atrocious kind of lies,' he [Revell] said.

"Revell said Hoffman never spoke to him about the allegations before his book was published."

Hoffman's attorney, Mike Johnston, took the case and after winning against Revell in a lower court, ended up, after Revell appealed, actually trying it before the Supreme Court. In the end, Revell lost the case at that level. An article on the matter published in NewsOK when the Supreme Court case ended in October, 2003, said:

"A former FBI official says he wanted to protect his reputation and refute "the most atrocious kind of lies" when he sued the author of a book that accused him of having advance knowledge of the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland.

"Oliver "Buck" Revell's legal battle may have ended Monday, when the U.S. Supreme Court let stand lower court rulings that said he did not prove author David Hoffman acted with 'actual malice,' the standard required for public figures to recover damages in defamation cases.

"Public officials are left unshielded because people can say anything. They're virtually defenseless," said Revell, whose 1999 lawsuit claimed Hoffman's book, "The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror," accused him of allowing mass murder.

"'It's absolutely, of course, totally false. It's absurd,' said Revell, a Muskogee [Oklahoma] native who retired from the FBI in 1994 and runs a global business and security-consulting firm in Rowlett, Texas."

The case was lost in the Supreme Court partly because Hoffman had quoted another source for the statements regarding Revell in London. I had read that one particular mention on an internet site, but simply having something on the internet without further proof to back it up does not necessarily make it true—or reliable. Simply stating the facts of the number of important people and intelligence assets that had been warned in advance to stay off the plane would have been more than sufficient to show foreknowledge.

As late as 2017, articles saying that Revell "rushed out on the tarmac" still exist on the internet. On one website titled "WikiSpooks," a page is dedicated to Revell with both his awards and duty assignments, and also negative items. Regarding Pan Am 103 and the accusation that Revell "rushed out on the tarmac" the notation states:

"On 21 December 1988, shortly before Pan Am 103 took off from London's Heathrow airport at 18:25 hours, FBI Assistant Director Oliver "Buck" Revell reportedly rushed out onto the tarmac and pulled his son and daughter-in-law off the plane. The Lockerbie bombing was not the first time authorities were warned of an impending terrorist attack.

The situation would repeat itself five years later in New York City, and seven years later in Oklahoma. It was an all too eerie coincidence.”

The point that Hoffman was trying to make was that without a doubt Pan Am 103 showed government foreknowledge. He also showed that the handling of the case afterwards was totally corrupted by the manner in which the FBI lab examined the evidence in order to come to the conclusion that it was a bomb plot by Libyan leader Mohamar Khadaffi, without taking into account other leads that led elsewhere. Hoffman, by the time he had finished his book manuscript, was extremely upset with the actions of the FBI in the bombing case, the corruption within the bureau, and what agents and superiors had gotten away with in the past and would continue to do so. He told me “The FBI needs a good house-cleaning, from the top down.”

I told him “Dave, there’s a lot of good agents out there. They just aren’t allowed to do their jobs, and one even told me he hated two things: criminals and his own headquarters. And Dave, I can say the same thing about a lot of police departments, including my own.”

Hoffman was not the only one sued by Revell. Feral House Inc., the publisher, could not afford to defend itself against the suit in the beginning and instead of fighting it in court came to an agreement to destroy all copies of the book and agree not to print any more. Other than a few rare copies on the internet, the book has gone into the Black Hole.

CHAPTER 22

Rabbit Trails and Mind Control—Was McVeigh a “Manchurian Candidate”?

The more we do to you, the less you seem to believe we are doing it. - Joseph Mengele

If you don’t control your mind, someone else will” - Joseph Allston

Previously I mentioned the “Little Green Men from Mars” syndrome. At the risk of reaching that point in this book I beg the reader to keep an open mind and not to succumb to mental tunnel vision. That is to say that by human nature, we live in our own worlds and we don’t like to look outside our own beliefs and experiences at things that just don’t seem to fit our conception of reality. Unfortunately, at this point, we need to explore the issue of exactly who was Timothy McVeigh, and what made him change from a perfect soldier to a heartless baby-killing assassin?

When working intelligence factors in the military we take all information available and filter it to find the pieces of a puzzle that forms a picture. As Sherlock Holmes stated in at least one short story “Once you eliminate the impossible, whatever remains, no matter how improbable, must be the truth.”

As David Hoffman, myself, and others progressed through this investigation we found ourselves finding more and more “rabbit trails” that led off to other areas that might be connected or have influence on our efforts. Most were dead ends, but some were valid in varying degrees. One of those of significance is why McVeigh did what he did, and, besides Nichols, were any others involved who might be part of the “special team” that he had mentioned in a letter to his sister in which he claimed to have become a “government assassin.”

For the uninitiated in the area of government dirty tricks, I suggest you read my book The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government for more information on terrible things people within our government have been involved with since WWII. It is not a “Conspiracy Theory” book. There is no “theory” in it. All are facts of true conspiracies and crimes that have occurred, with most going unreported and unpunished. One chapter in that book that goes into detail concerning mind control experiments and operations dating from WWII in Nazi Germany, up through the late 1970s in this country.

One Day Six, after the bombing, I met with my contact agent at the FBI office in Tulsa, Pete Rickel. He briefed me on the current status of McVeigh, who was in custody, and saying very little. One thing Pete told me was that McVeigh was complaining about pain in his buttocks, and that the government had “implanted a chip in his butt.”

Pete laughed, and said that this guy was a nut case. I asked him why he thought that and he replied, “A chip in his butt? How ridiculous is that?”

Rickel was a bit shocked when I said, “It’s not ridiculous. It’s possible and you need to check on that.” I knew of Army programs that had mentioned “chipping” Special Forces and Special Operations soldiers with identification chips that would identify them if they were wounded or killed in action, for medical records, or for disposition of remains. One program that was being talked about long before that day was implantation of a chip that could be used to track individuals by satellite. This would be useful not only for special operations, but to track downed pilots and POWs.

I asked Pete "Have you, the FBI, X-rayed his butt?"

"You can't be serious," said Pete, "There's no such thing." There was, but there was no point in arguing about it at that juncture. At that time RFID (Radio Frequency Identification Devices) were put in pets and farm animals, and some human volunteers. As of April 11th, 2017, according to a CBA documentary, humans in Europe were accepting ID chips in their hands for "convenience." They take the place of credit cards, ID pass cards, and even car keys. There was no mention on the program about Christians' concerns regarding the "Mark of the Beast" mentioned in Revelation 13: 16-17 of the Bible.

I let it go. Then Pete said "McVeigh thinks he's still a soldier, and now he's a POW. All he's giving us is basically name, rank and serial number. The only other thing he's saying is that he would talk to Sheriff Mack."

I knew Richie Mack. Sheriff Richard Mack was the sheriff of Graham County, Arizona, and had filed suit on the government in 1994 in regard to an unfunded mandate requiring law enforcement agencies to do background checks in compliance with the Brady Bill. He won the case in the U.S. Supreme court since the court decided that the Federal Government cannot mandate—force—anyone to do anything that the federal government was not ready to pay for.

I responded, "I know. Sheriff Mack called me this morning and told me that and to ask that he be granted visitation with McVeigh. Let's see what McVeigh has to say to him."

"That won't happen. We're not letting McVeigh talk to anyone."

That ended the conversation. I didn't want to inquire why McVeigh, like any prisoner, could not ask for or authorize visitation. To me, McVeigh had that right, and I really wanted to see what Richie Mack might find out. But for some reason, someone, somewhere did not want that to happen.

The week after the bombing I didn't hear anything about McVeigh other than what the media reported. One aspect of his personality that came out was how calm and cool he was when he was stopped by OHP Trooper Charlie Hanger, when he was in jail, and when he was in federal custody. He was armed with a Glock 9mm semi-auto handgun when he was stopped by Hanger. Hanger was simply stopping a speeder who was driving in a car with no license tag. He had not connected McVeigh to the bombing and no information about suspects had been disseminated. McVeigh could have shot Hanger, then drove off. But he didn't. Instead he gave up and cooperated with the trooper. To me, this didn't make sense for someone who had just killed well over a hundred innocent people, including children and babies.

After talking to Rickel, my first inclination about McVeigh is that he might be someone who was under some kind of mind control. I felt this way because of all the past research I had done when writing The Medusa File. I knew of the programs that existed in the past, what they were designed for, and what they actually accomplished—and that such programs still existed. But was McVeigh one who had been so programmed or indoctrinated? And if so, why, who did it, where was it done, when was it done, and what was the purpose? A lot of questions had to be answered.

It was the first rabbit trail that I started a file on.

Shortly after the Korean war, we became aware of U.S. military personnel were been captured in Korea being put through a "re-education" program in the prisoner of war camps. We discovered that the first thing that was done once prisoners were moved from the initial capture point to a prison camp was that the officers were segregated from the enlisted personnel. This was done to take away any higher ranking leaders so that the remaining prisoners would be easier to control and influence. In the following weeks the prisoners were forced to attend "classes" that were little more than indoctrination sessions. All rank was removed and all soldiers were told that they were all equal and no one other than their Chinese captors could tell them what to do. They had to be good students to receive privileges, and often just to receive food and medical care. Over a period of time those who were most malleable were separated for "further training." These individuals became what we later identified as "Manchurian Candidates." The 1962 movie of that same name, which showed what was dubbed by U.S. scientists as "brain washing," was "The Manchurian Candidate," staring Frank Sinatra, Laurence Harvey, Janet Leigh, Angela Lansbury, and Henry Silva. The plot is one wherein one of the POWs becomes a programmed assassin, whose target is a high ranking U.S. political figure.

The movie reflected reality in what was actually happening in several government facilities and organizations. One organization that was extremely interested was the CIA, which not only became concerned that an enemy might be able to program an assassin, but have the ability to create a "super soldier." Then, beyond that, to even control the population by various means. Could we do the that? Could we use the Chinese methods to select and program our own assassins, spies, or super soldiers? That became the issue to be explored by both the CIA and the civilian psychiatric community that could be drawn upon to assist with research and experimentation.

One of the first experimental programs concerning mind control by the CIA was code-named "Midnight Climax." We know very little about this program other than that it involved drugs, some type of mental programming, often involving electric shock, sleep deprivation, subliminal "sound saturation," and hypnosis. We also know that a psychiatrist named Dr. Erwin Cameron was employed as a contractor by the CIA to work in this area, and whose specialty was hypnosis. He also used what he referred to as "psychic driving" and shock therapy to "implant new ideas" in the brains of his subjects. The ultimate goal was whether or not someone could de-program and re-program the human mind to make them do whatever was needed to fulfill a mission.

One of Cameron's "subjects" was an Army veteran, Paul H. Paul—a personal friend of mine—gives his account of his and his then-wife's experiences with Dr. Cameron. Paul was a U.S. Army veteran who had been injured in both knees during a field exercise by the muzzle blast and debris of a .50 caliber machine gun during a field exercise. He had been within the dangerous range of the blanks and their wadding, and had sustained damage that would effect him not only in the remainder of his Army service, but later in civilian life. Here is his story:

"During the Fall of 1956, I worked as a ballroom dancing instructor at the Robert Cowles

Dance Studio on Euclid Avenue in midtown St. Louis. Five days each week, I worked as a Production Control Expediter for the McDonnell Aircraft Corporation, in north St. Louis County, from 7:00 A.M. until 3:30 PM Then, after rushing home to shower shave, and change clothes, I drove to midtown St. Louis where I taught ballroom dancing from 5:30 P.M. until 11:00 P.M. It was a crushing schedule, but it was something I felt I had to do for my own physical wellbeing.

“I was drafted into the United States Army in August 1953, during the closing months of the Korean War. And since the war continued and the weekly body counts mounted, we were subjected to basic infantry training as if the war would go on for years. One dark evening, I was selected for a night recon in the rugged Boston Mountains of northeastern Arkansas. And it was during that patrol, with our faces blackened and our dog tags taped together, that I experienced a very painful “friendly fire” encounter with a .50 caliber machine gun, manned by a team of battle-hardened South Korean (ROK) soldiers. I was raked across the knees with blank fragments from a distance of about ten feet, knocking my legs from under me and deafening me for hours.

“After being assigned overseas, my knees were often quite painful and swollen. And when I was discharged in early June 1955, the Army doctors offered to send me to a Veterans Administration hospital for orthopedic surgery. However, they advised against surgery because they feared the surgery would make matters worse, rather than better. Instead, they advised that I give my knees “extreme amounts of exercise” over a period of years. That, they insisted, was the best medical advice they could give me.

“Hence, my daytime job with McDonnell Aircraft Corporation in St. Louis, in which I walked from five to seven miles each day inside the enormous factory complex, five days a week, and my evening job, in which I taught ballroom dancing for at least five hours each evening. The prescription worked, as hoped, and the pain in my knees gradually dissipated.

“Two of the students who participated in group sessions at least twice each week were a man, known only as Dr. Cameron, and his wife. Dr. Cameron explained that he headed a research organization in St. Louis known as the Kimball Foundation, which was involved in the study of treating psychosomatic illnesses through the alteration of personality factors. He explained that he and his associates were convinced that, if they could somehow alter the self-image and the overall attitude of their subjects, they could ease or eliminate certain physical ailments.

“As the weeks passed, the owners of the studio allowed us to stay late when we were able to converse with Dr. Cameron and to hear tales of his many successes, using a technique referred to as “slumber talk” in which a small voice transmitter was placed under the pillow of their subjects as they slept each night. What emanated from the speakers was all but totally inaudible during waking hours, but totally accessible to the subconscious during sleep. The receivers delivered an endless stream of flattering and encouraging messages to the subject’s ear, causing them to experience a significant change in attitude and personality over an extended period of time.

“Dr. Cameron also entertained us with demonstrations of hypnotic feats. One of my female colleagues , my assigned dancing partner, was found to be an excellent hypnotic subject. While fully awake, She had difficulty remembering the names of more than a few of her high school classmates, and even fewer of her classmates from grammar school and junior high school. However, during age regression demonstrations, she was able to remember most of the names of her classmates and teachers, going all the way back to the early primary grades.

“But what was most fascinating was the changes in her handwriting as she was age-regressed backward to eighth grade, to sixth grade, to fourth grade, and to second grade. With each leap backward, her handwriting gradually changed from the flowing cursive of a seventeen-year-old young woman, to a teenage adolescent, to the cursive scrawl of a pre-pubescent child, and finally to the scrawled block letters of a second-grader.

“After several weeks of hypnotic episodes, Dr. Cameron provided my dance partner with a code phrase which, if spoken or whispered to her by another person, would cause her to enter a deep hypnotic state almost instantaneously and she would then follow instructions without question. Her code phrase was known only to her and Dr. Cameron, but she later informed me that her code phrase was “blue rose,” words that no other human being would ever likely voice in her presence.

“It was entirely reminiscent of the plot of the 1962 film, “The Manchurian Candidate,” in which an American prisoner of war was “pre-programmed” by his Chinese captor to assassinate a major American political figure. All that was required to trigger the assassination attempt months or years later was a telephone call to a pre-programmed assassin which a phrase from a Robert Frost poem ‘…and miles to go before I sleep’… was whispered into his ear.

“But what was most surprising about our months of twice-weekly sessions with Dr. Cameron was something that I did not discover until years later when I had reason to consider exactly who our Dr. Cameron might have been. It was then that I finally realized that, in the time that we spent as dance instructors and psychological subjects of Dr. Cameron, my partner and I had both experienced major alterations in our personalities and our outlook on life.

“Following our time with Dr. Cameron, my partner, who’d been an energetic extrovert when we first met, became quite introverted, wary of strangers, and quite uncomfortable in most social settings. However, in that same time, I went from being a shy, introverted, highly self-conscious young man with a huge inferiority complex, to being a hard charging extrovert, socially self-confident, and unafraid to tackle any problem, no matter how large or how small.

“What caused me to reach that conclusion during the early 1970s was a CBS documentary on a CIA mind-control program in which they performed various mind-control experiments on sometimes unsuspecting subjects. In one widely-reported incident it was learned that the CIA had administered a dose of lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) to an unsuspecting subject. That person, thinking he was capable of flying, leapt from the roof of a tall building, killing himself.

(Author’s note: this man was Frank Olson, bacteriologist and biological warfare specialist who worked at Camp Detrick in Maryland. One night at a party in a rural cabin in Maryland, he was covertly dosed with LSD by his CIA supervisor—possibly Jolyon West—and, nine days later, plunged to his death from the window of a New York City hotel room. Some, including the official U.S. government version, term his death a suicide. Others allege murder).

“In one segment, the investigators interviewed local residents who had, at one time or another, worked at a large hilltop estate in Montreal. What they learned was that those they interviewed had been paid to participate in various mind games and research protocols… for what purpose they did not know. They were being well paid and that was all they cared to know.

“The program was a CIA program known as MKULTRA. But, what came as a complete surprise to me, was the information that their employer, the man in charge of the program, was known as “Dr. Cameron.” Were the two Drs. Cameron one and the same? Were we the unwitting subjects of a CIA mind-control experiment? We may never know. Only the CIA knows.”

Dr. Cameron was put under Dr. Sidney Gottlieb of the Technical Services Section of the CIA. The TSS had several varied programs that ran from mind control to assassination weapons such as poisons, drugs, and other “classified materials.” Known as the “Office of Dirty Tricks,” Gottlieb’s team and a large number of contractors worked in various areas of mind control experimentation, almost always using unsuspecting human “guinea pigs” across the country.

The project evolved into what became code-named MK/ULTRA. It has often been speculated that the “MK” was for “Manchurian Kandidate.”

The object of MK/ULTRA was simply control. From control of individuals to control of entire populations. The scientists experimented with everything from drugs and hypnosis to utilizing mass media ideas to influence human behavior and knowledge, part of which evolved into Operation Mockingbird’s control of the media and what we see and hear on television and radio and read in newspapers and books.

Of particular interest is the compartmentalization of the various segments of the control experiments. Researchers studied animal behavior in which rats, dogs and monkeys were subjected to various stimuli from rewards, to drugs, to pain. Then moving up a step to humans: how men reacted to the same stimuli, and/or blackmail and sense of duty. But the main thrust of the program was to find methods of control that were reliable, could be done in the shortest time possible, and would cause the subject to be able to accomplish a pre-programmed task, then, either not remember what they had done, or self-destruct afterwards. In any case, the subject, after the fact, would not be able to give anyone information on who he worked for, or who was actually behind the “mission.”

Besides hypnosis and other means of breaking down the human mind so that it could be re-programmed, the scientists became very interested in a new drug that was discovered in Switzerland: Lysergic acid diethylamide, or LSD.

LSD, or “Acid” is a psychotropic hallucinogenic drug that behaves differently in different people. It is not reliable for every CIA-intended use, but the TSS under Sid Gottlieb, along with several contractors in the U.S. and Canada, did extensive experimentation with the drug.

Another area of mind control occurs in various cults. Questions surfaced concerning whether large numbers of people could be influenced to do unnatural things by having a leader that could manipulate their thinking. One example of this in the 70s and 80s was Jonestown, Guyana, where cult leader Jim Jones influenced a large number of followers to move to a jungle encampment in where they were abused, turned into basic slave labor, and manipulated to see what could be done by a charismatic leader (probably with the help of drugs). Eventually the word got out to relatives of those living there and an investigation was initiated. California congressman Leo Ryan and a delegation of relatives and media personnel flew to Guyana and managed to visit the compound. Jones appeared to Ryan to be under the influence of some kind of drug, or maybe he was just plain "mental." Jones raved about the government coming after him and "his people," and that they would defend themselves against invaders.

Jones, who appeared to be under some kind of mind control himself, conditioned his followers to do as he said without question. He even had "suicide drills" wherein everyone would line up and drink "poison." On one of these drills, a survivor of Jonestown tells:

"Everyone, including the children, was told to line up. As we passed through the line, we were given a small glass of red liquid to drink. We were told that the liquid contained poison and that we would die within 45 minutes. We all did as we were told. When the time came when we should have dropped dead, Rev. Jones explained that the poison was not real and that we had just been through a loyalty test. He warned us that the time was not far off when it would become necessary for us to die by our own hands."

When the Ryan party, along with several Jonestown residents, tried to leave, they were gunned down at the airport. After this Jones knew he had to destroy Jonestown and everyone in it. It was at this time that he had everyone line up to "drink the Kool Aid."

That is when the problem for Jones surfaced. It seems that not everyone was sufficiently programmed to follow the fatal orders, so besides those who drank from the vat of flavored drink containing Cyanide, there were those who tried to flee into the jungle. Those who attempted this were shot in the back by Jones' security guards. Others were found later with syringe marks in their backs and scattered syringes around their bodies. Over 400 people died at Jonestown. Many doing it willingly.

Other cults that could fall into the category of mind control would be such as Charles Manson's "Family," who killed without remorse on order of Charlie Manson; Anton LaVey's "Church of Satan" in San Francisco; various Satanic and Wiccan groups; and Michael Aquino's "Temple of Set."

Lt. Colonel Michael Aquino's speciality in the U.S. Army was in Intelligence and Psychological Warfare. In 1973 he was the executive officer of a Psywar battalion, and one of his specialities was utilizing electronic emissions to effect the mind. In 1980, Aquino wrote a book titled "MindWar." Amazon's advertisement for the book reads:

"This book's extrapolation and evolution of the original 1980 concept is not merely theoretical. It proposes "laboratory" implementation through the structural redesign of the U.S. Army's three "Special Operations" branches: Psychological Operations, Special Forces, and Civil Affairs. A multiphase sequence of their interaction in a MindWar campaign is outlined, with the international crisis resolution procedures of the United States modified to facilitate it.” [emphasis mine].

Aquino went on to establish his “Temple of Set” in 1975, which he developed after being a member of Anton LaVey’s Church of Satan in San Francisco. One can see how the Luciferian influence and the Scientific efforts were beginning to meld in the intelligence services and the armed services as well.

Aquino ran afoul of the law when he was stationed at the Presidio in San Francisco. He was sued for millions by parents of the Presidio Child Care Center who discovered that he was involved in a child molestation ring. But the Army, for some reason, convinced the parents to drop the suit.

Aquino was also allegedly involved in MK/ULTRA experiments in Vietnam, wherein one tactic was to spray areas of Vietcong and North Vietnamese Army locations with LSD, hence making them combat ineffective.

Aquino and his Temple of Set had ever-mounting problems as time went on. As late as 1999, Aquino was named in an investigation concerning ritual child abuse (and pedophilic mind control). In the August 26, 2005 issue of Executive Intelligence Review, a publication of Lyndon LaRouche’s organization, a case involving Aquino in the U.S. District Court exposes more than a few hints at his, and the government’s, mind control efforts in the civilian and youth population:

“On Feb. 5, 1999, in U.S. District Court in Lincoln, Nebraska, an extraordinary hearing occurred in Paul A. Bonacci v. Lawrence E. King, a civil action in which the plaintiff charged that he had been ritualistically abused by the defendant, as part of a nationwide pedophile ring linked to powerful political figures in Washington, and to elements of the U.S. military and intelligence establishment. Three weeks later, on Feb. 27, Judge Warren K. Urbom ordered King, who is currently in Federal prison, to pay $1 million in damages to Bonacci, in what Bonacci’s attorney John DeCamp said was a clear signal that “the evidence presented was credible.

“During the Feb. 5 hearing, Noreen Gosch stunned the court with sworn testimony linking U.S. Army Lt. Col. Michael Aquino (ret.) to the nationwide pedophile ring. Her son, Johnny, then 12 years old, was kidnapped off the streets of West Des Moines, Iowa, on Sept. 5, 1982, while he was doing his early-morning newspaper deliveries. Since his kidnapping, she has devoted all of her time and resources to finding her son, and to exposing the dangers that millions of children in America face from this hideous, literally Satanic, underground of ritualistic deviants.

“We have investigated, we have talked to, so far, 35 victims of this said organization that took my son and is responsible for what happened to Paul, and they can verify everything that has happened,” she told the court.

“What this story involves is an elaborate function, I will say, that was an offshoot of a government program. The MK-Ultra program was developed in the 1950s by the CIA. It was used to help spy on other countries during the Cold War because they felt that the other countries were spying on us.

“It was very successful. They could do it very well.”

Then, the Aquino bombshell: Noreen Gosch stated, “there was a man by the name of Michael Aquino. He was in the military. He had top Pentagon clearances. He was a pedophile. He was a Satanist. He's founded the Temple of Set. And he was a close friend of Anton LaVey. The two of them were very active in ritualistic sexual abuse. And they deferred funding from this government program to use [in] this experimentation on children where they deliberately split off the personalities of these children into multiples, so that when they're questioned or put under oath or questioned under lie detector, that unless the operator knows how to question a multiple-personality disorder, they turn up with no evidence." [emphasis mine]

She continued: "They used these kids to sexually compromise politicians or anyone else they wished to have control of. This sounds so far out and so bizarre I had trouble accepting it in the beginning myself until I was presented with the data. We have the proof. In black and white."

This testimony parallels what I wrote in The Medusa File in the chapter about the Finders Case, which occurred a bit earlier, in 1987. On February 7th, 1987, the Washington Post ran an interesting story that did not at first seem to have any particularly national significance. The article concerned a case of possible kidnapping and child abuse, and material discovered in the Washington DC area that they say points to a 1960s style commune called the Finders, described in a court document as a "cult" that conducted "brainwashing" and used children in "rituals." DC police who searched a Northeast Washington warehouse linked to the group removed large plastic bags filled with color slides, photographs and photographic contact sheets. Some showed naked children involved in what appeared to be "cult rituals," bloodletting ceremonies of animals and one photograph of a child in chains. Several cameras were found, many behind one-way mirrors that faced bedrooms wherein a "target" would be videotaped having sex with a minor, then later the tape could be used against that person, usually a high ranking politician or bureaucrat in the U.S. government.

When the Washington D.C. Metropolitan police detectives were ready to prepare charges against those involved, they were contacted by the FBI and told to "stand down." According to the Treasury agent's report regarding who was involved in the investigation:

"To the Resident Agent in Charge Date: 04/13/87

On Thursday, February 5, 1987, Senior Special Agent Harrold and I assisted the Washington D.C. Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) with two search warrants involving the possible sexual exploitation of children. During the course of the search warrants, numerous documents were discovered which appeared to be concerned with international trafficking in children, high tech transfer to the United Kingdom, and international transfer of currency.

"DETAILS OF INVESTIGATION:

"On March 31, 1987, I contacted Detective Jim Bradley of the Washington, DC Metropolitan Police Department (MPD). I was to meet with Detective Bradley to review the documents seized pursuant to two search warrants executed in January, 1987. The meeting was to take place on April 2 or 3, 1987.

"On April 2, 1987, I arrived at MPD at approximately 9:00 a.m. Detective Bradley was not available. I spoke to a third party who was willing to discuss the case with me on a strictly “off the record” basis.

“I was advised that all the passport data had been turned over to the State Department for their investigation. The State Department in turn, advised the MPD that all travel and use of the passports by the holders of the passports was within the law and no action would be taken. This included travel to Moscow, North Korea, and North Vietnam from the late 1950s to mid 1970s.

The individual further advised me of circumstances which indicated that the investigation into the activity of the Finders had become a CIA internal matter. The MPD report has been classified SECRET and was not available for review. I was advised that the FBI had withdrawn from the investigation several weeks prior and that the FBI Foreign Counter Intelligence Division had directed MPD not to advise the FBI Washington Field Office of anything that had transpired. [emphasis mine]

“No further information will be available. No further action will be taken.

“ACTION TO BE TAKEN BY LESD/TECS:

No action to be taken on the basis of this report.”

Now, remember that these people were traveling from Washington D.C. and other places to North Vietnam and North Korea during the Vietnam war! That was prohibited travel, but the State Department stated to the MPD that all travel was within the law and there would be no action taken! One can only wonder how many high level State Department officials had spent some time in the Finders warehouse.

We find another strange character on this rabbit trail: Dr. Jolyon “Jolly” West, a mind control expert from the CIA who is connected to the Oklahoma City bombing case. I was amazed at West’s background and where he had been in his psychiatric career, and most of all, who he worked for and who he “treated.”

Dr. Louis Jolyon West’s interest in mind control began when, as Chief of Psychiatry Service at the Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas, he examined POWs from the Korean War to determine the effects of torture and brainwashing during the CIA’s concern of Manchurian Candidates. His experience in this field allowed him to serve as an expert witness in the case of Patricia Hearst, the famous socialite kidnap victim-turned convicted bank robber.

Among West’s other famous clients was Dallas nightclub owner and mobster Jack Rubinstein, or Jack “Ruby,” a paid soldier for Sam Giancana of the Chicago crime family, and assassin of Lee Harvey Oswald. West’s examination of Ruby resulted in Ruby’s diagnosis of mental illness and prescription of psychiatric drugs, which Ruby charged were “poison.” Though West is hailed for helping commute Ruby’s death sentence, Ruby died in prison of cancer two years later, convinced that he was injected with malignant cancer cells by his captors.

West also examined Sirhan Sirhan, alleged assassin of Robert F. Kennedy, and widely suspected of being the victim of a method of brainwashing known as “psychic driving,” first pioneered by Dr. Ewing Cameron when he placed patients into long-term comatose states without their consent and played selected phrases continuously to the patient in loops in order to break down psychological barriers to “open the conscientiousness” of the “subject.”

It is most interesting to note that it was West that headed the American Psychological Association (APA) trauma response team that rushed to Oklahoma City in the wake of the 1995 bombing of the Murrah Federal Building. Timothy McVeigh was examined by John Douglas of the FBI’s Psychological Profile Unit, who determined that McVeigh was “an easily controlled and manipulated personality.” And it was West who visited McVeigh eighteen times in the federal prison in El Reno! West obviously was not there to diagnose McVeigh or treat him, but instead to reinforce McVeigh’s programmed brain. West never issued a report on McVeigh, or on what he had done while he was with McVeigh.

Who, exactly, was Timothy McVeigh? In the covert intelligence and special operations world it’s called “sheep dipping.” Sheep dipping is the term for giving someone an alternate identity, or changing their persona into someone who is different from who they really are. Once this is done the next phase is “building a legend.” In that phase the individual with the new identity develops a new personality that others will see as someone other than the actual person. This method is used on varying levels in the military and intelligence community. On one level, for instance, during the Vietnam War, we needed to set up radar sites in Laos, but the military was prohibited from participating in any manner in Laos itself. So instead, U.S. Air Force technicians were “discharged” from the Air Force, hired by civilian contractors (a front company) then sent to Laos as civilians. But in reality, they never left the Air Force except on paper. Their time in grade continued as did their pay and military benefits for their dependents. That was simple “sheep dipping”.

A different phase, and one in which McVeigh’s story fits, is much more complicated. In this phase a military member is selected and asked to volunteer for a special assignment. Various enticements are given varying from promotion to reward, and always a sense of “duty to country.” In this last part the saying, “The ends justify the means” is always used, as is the reinforcement to the individual of necessity of understanding the unavoidable “collateral damage.”

As I examined McVeigh’s alleged military “record” I saw sure indicators of a man who was recruited into a project, then sheep-dipped, and following that, spending obvious time in a series of events to create his legend. McVeigh’s attendance at:

1. Gun shows, where individuals and groups who were considered threats to the government (at least to the “Secret Team” establishment, as described by Col. Fletcher Prouty in his writings. This “team” is also known in some circles as the Shadow Government);

2. His very obvious and vocal appearances at militia meetings;

3. His appearance at Waco during the siege making sure he was filmed and interviewed.

All of these events reminded me of Lee Harvey Oswald and his open display before the media in New Orleans, standing outside former FBI agent Guy Banister’s private detective office, which was in the same building as Oswald’s “Fair Play for Cuba Committee” office. New Orleans district attorney Jim Garrison exposed Oswald in his investigation into the New Orleans connections to the JFK assassination. In a Playboy interview he addresses Oswald’s persona and his probable connections:

“Playboy: Are you free to discuss Oswald’s role in the conspiracy?

“Garrison: Yes, but before you can understand Oswald’s role in the plot, you’ve got to jettison the image of him as a “self–proclaimed Marxist” that the mass media inculcated in the public after his arrest on November 22nd. Oswald’s professed Marxist sympathies were just a cover for his real activities. I don’t believe there are any serious students of the assassination who don’t recognize that Oswald’s actual political orientation was extreme right wing. His associates in Dallas and New Orleans — apart from his CIA contacts — were exclusively right wing, some covert, others overt: in fact, our office has positively identified a number of his associates as neo–Nazis. Oswald would have been more at home with Mein Kampf than Das Kapital.

“Playboy: If Oswald wasn’t a leftist, what motivation would he have had for shooting at another right–winger, Major General Edwin Walker, eight months before the assassination?

“Garrison: If he did it, his motive — which is to say the motive of those behind him — was a simple one: to ensure that after the assassination, people would ask this very question and assume that because Oswald had shot at General Walker, he must have been a left–winger. It was just another part of Oswald’s cover; if you defect to Russia, pass out pro–Castro leaflets on street corners and take a pot shot at General Walker, who on earth would doubt you’re a Communist?” [All emphasis mine]

Garrison was bringing out the same issues we were seeing when we examined McVeigh, his—McVeigh’s—past, and what was appearing to be a cover, and not who he was prior to 1991 when he was “discharged” from the Army.

That said, Garrison was incorrect in stating that Oswald would have been more comfortable with Adolph Hitler’s Mein Kampf than Marx’s Das Kapital. Contrary to what the current public schools and history books and media says, Hitler was Left Wing! His party was the National Socialist Party, a very militant Left Wing organization in which the State controlled everything. Hitler had more in common with Stalin than most people realize, but he was also in competition with Stalin for supreme power in and over Europe, and eventually the world, hence his invasion of Russia.

In the Playboy interview Garrison was asked to elaborate on Oswald’s connection to the government:

“Playboy: Can you elaborate on this?

“Garrison: Yes, because this incident ties together some of the strands of the spider’s web. At the time Oswald started his so–called Fair Play for Cuba Committee, two men — Hugh Ward and Guy Banister — operated a private investigative agency at 544 Camp Street in downtown New Orleans.

‘There are some intriguing aspects to their operation. For one thing, Guy Banister was one of the most militant right–wing anti–Communists in New Orleans. He was a former FBI official and his headquarters at 544 Camp Street was a clearinghouse for Cuban exiles and paramilitary right–wing activities. Specifically, he allowed his office to be used as a mail drop for the anti–Castro Cuban Democratic Revolutionary Front; police intelligence records at the time reported that this group was "legitimate in nature and presumably had the unofficial sanction of the Central Intelligence Agency." It did.

"Banister also published a newsletter for his clients that included virulent anti–Kennedy polemics. My office also has evidence that Banister had intimate ties with the Office of Naval Intelligence and the CIA. Both Banister and Ward were deeply involved in covert anti-Castro exile activities in New Orleans. Banister in particular seemed to have had an almost messianic drive to fight communism in every country in Latin America; and he was naturally of value to Cuban exiles because of his intimate connections with American intelligence agencies." [Emphasis mine]

Had I not done a huge amount of research into the JFK assassination for my book Kill Zone—A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza, the similarities between Oswald and McVeigh would have gone unnoticed. Anyone who delves into the Kennedy assassination will see how Oswald did have connections to both the CIA and FBI, and indeed had informant/agent file numbers assigned by both organizations.

Did McVeigh have such a relationship? Was he part of a secret team that did covert and often illegal operations? According to his sister he was, but his letter to his sister was not the only evidence uncovered.

In October of 2000 I received a letter from an inmate in the U.S. Federal Penitentiary in Florence, Colorado named Daniel [last name deleted here for his own protection]. "Daniel" wrote that he had inside knowledge from other inmates regarding the bombing. The Florence prison, known as the "Super Max," for Maximum Security, houses the most dangerous and infamous prisoners in the federal system. Inside are such characters as Ramzi Yousef, the World Trade Center and Operation BOJINKA bomber; Ted Kaczysnki —the Unibomber; abortion clinic bomber Eric Rudolph; former FBI agent-turned-Russian-spy Robert Hansen; former CIA agent Harold Nicholson who also sold secrets to the Russians; and several mob figures.

In his letter, and letters to follow, Daniel made many statements on what information he could provide, but most of it—the most important and relevant parts—would only be provided if there was something I could do "to help him." Other statements mentioned that he could only go further in his information to me if he was released from prison. Eventually his last letters included the release of at least one other prisoner who was his friend and also had information.

He described trying to work with federal authorities, namely the FBI and Department of Justice, in trading prison time for becoming an informant, and being able to infiltrate groups associated with militias, McVeigh, and other groups that were considered threats to the government.

No government agency took him up on his offer. In one letter he described writing to then U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft with his offer. He received no reply.

As a career police officer who had dealt with "cons" numerous times, and as every cop knows, people who are incarcerated will do anything they can to obtain privileges or to make deals that would benefit them. It's human nature. The problem is that you can't trust them to tell the truth. There is an old saying in police work "don't let the con con you." And when I was a young rookie officer the old timers told me that "in prison, none of them are guilty. They all are innocent. They were set up. Just ask them and they'll tell you." I found this to be true throughout my 27 years with the Tulsa Police Department.

That said, I read (and responded to) each letter. I explained that there was nothing I could do personally to help him, but he should give me all the information he could to get to the truth on the case in honor of the innocent victims of the bombing. I knew that what he might offer would have to be checked, if possible, and verified as factual.

In his letter of October 21, 2000 he wrote:

"Regardless of whether or not I was set up, I have important information, and the documents. Four separate individuals told me of the event before it happened. Three, I believe, were directly involved, having told me several important details one week prior to the incident, including the date and time, and they had just come from Oklahoma.

"I am also in possession of some documents, acquired in the beginning of 1999 by another gentleman who was in direct contact with Terry Nichols. The documents are: A 3 page letter from Terry (I have enclosed parts of the two pages), a list of names of people involved and dates (including FBI, NSA, BATF, Military Intelligence Agents, a Judge, a Senator, and more. [Also] a wire transfer receipt for $5 million, signed by Timothy McVeigh.

"The letter mentions the list, and Terry's split of $2.5 million.

"I was in contact with Representative Charles Key for a while. He visited me with Michael Johnston, his attorney, on 9/1/99. Earlier this year he was in receipt of a copy of these two pages of the letter, unedited. Somehow a copy of these two pages ended up in the hands of the FBI, and another acquaintance was questioned for 36 hours concerning it. When I contacted Mr. Key later he denied receiving an un-edited copy, but only an edited one. My contacts [on the outside] first sent him an edited copy, then a full copy later…I have tried to use go-betweens because my life was threatened before by federal agents, and so were the lives of my now ex-wife and children. I don't know who to trust."

The letter ended with "Can you help me in any way? I have much more info to tell. The whole thing is eating away at me inside." The letter was signed with his name and prisoner number.

He added a P.S. and in it he wrote "I've even met someone who has knowledge of the middle-eastern connection. This same person (formerly CIA) can tell you where to find terrorists with barrels of Anthrax in the U.S."

Each letter I received from Daniel, and later his "friend," had items that I knew were outright fabrications or just simply didn't make sense. In this one, I knew that there was no such thing as "barrels of Anthrax." Anthrax is kept in secure glass storage containers in small amounts, then only used as a chemical bioweapon when mixed with a much larger amount of other "vector agents." I think that Daniel and his friends tried to gain my interest in this after reading a copy of my book "The Medusa File," which had a chapter on bioterrorism. He later mentioned that they had a copy in the prison and several inmates had read it.

That said, you never "kill the messenger" until you have heard everything he as to say. There's often a nugget of information that matches other intel you already have, or might receive in the future. You only throw away pieces of the puzzle that don't fit after the puzzle has been completed.

Daniel claimed that he had a friend who cleaned Nichols' cell, and that he had copied, by hand, pages from one of Nichols letters (or possibly notes to himself as it was not addressed to anyone in particular). I received two pages, but not the most important one that would list "others involved." The handwriting on what I received is legible, but the spelling makes me wonder if Nichols, who is more literate than what was copied, actually wrote such a letter. Also, it is missing at least one previous page, if not more, as it begins in the middle of a statement, missing what came before the first sentence on the page I had. It also is written as if Nichols, if it was Nichols, was having mental problems or was on some type of drug. The letter as written, mistakes included, read:

"I've seen this man here before or someplace. His eyes how they hurt.

"The Guard, I can't think! But I need to do this before it turns dark again. And I am unable to think.

"I think I am still on orders but I am confuss. (The goverment has been watching us from a distance) yet not the group doesn't care, nor do I.

"Timmy moved the date and time up [and] ask me to use ID for truck & room. They laughed at us. Said Timmys out of .T. [out of touch?]

"Tryed to help in Waco. Failed: did we fail here too! (I must speak, but can i for fear of insteant death.) The top dog here, Sg Daniels. But what [is] the target and why is Helms so distance from him!

(I must write names, date of what we planned.) The Guard I must forget. Must hide this. Give it to whom! I'll sit on finish.

They moved me. Why? He's w my ciell.

[End of first page]

Second page:

"Trust no one. Sg Sullivan said it be ok but no hope. My head hurts, tests and more tests yet if I break I must not.

"(Percy couldn't place charge right cause all I saw was smoke. It was to fall inward.)

"V.J. Young, why didn't baseball field go code yellow. Must stay calm.

"Cox said he get me out but not a word. (Timmy said it just a drill. But not sure. he said split 2.5 mill. A privt acount overseas) Towers will come. No were matters. No it a name not what we did or how! For our friend[s] who were killed: they pay big: Bang…

"(Here my list of names of all whom help or was part of.)

[signed] TerryN"

I don't think Terry Nichols was this illiterate. And the handwriting of his signature did not match that on his signed depositions. It is possible that the person who copied it was in a hurry, and also "literacy challenged" and tried to sign his signature like his actual hand writing. Still, when wading through what was written several things stuck out that would not have come from another convict that did not have the information we had. First, he mentions being on orders. Next he mentions “the Group.” Then he names “Sg Sullivan” probably meaning Sergeant Sullivan, followed by the names “Percy,” “V.J. Young,” and “Cox.”

Finally what stuck out to me was a huge missing piece of the puzzle, one that I had heard of before but could not back up with any more information, and that was the mention of a pay off! $2.5 million dollars to be split between McVeigh and Nichols!

Why would he mention this? How would the other cons know about this tidbit to fake a letter containing that particular sum?

I wrote Daniel back and asked for more information. What I received shortly thereafter was a single page that was allegedly copied on a copy machine of an “original” sheet that was supposedly taken from Nichols’ cell. In the first letter the hand writing was all capital block letters. In this one it was cursive. The spelling was just as bad, and the only way to verify it was written by Nichols would be to compare his hand writing, samples of which I did not have at the time.

The disjointed and rambling text, with circled numbers, reads as if the writer was under the influence of drugs::

Was this the referenced list of names that Nichols allegedly wrote down? I never found out. It was very hard to read and disjointed. However, I did run some of the names and got a hit on one: Judge Robert Henry of the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals. According to his bio in Wikipedia:

"In 1994, President Bill Clinton appointed him as a federal judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, which, as all other federal judges appointed under Article III, is a lifetime position. He was confirmed by the Senate on May 6, 1994. Judge Henry is a cousin of former Oklahoma Governor Brad Henry and administered the oath of office at the governor's inauguration in 2003."

Wikipedia also mentioned his memberships in various organizations, one being the Council on Foreign Relations, a very dangerous New World Order globalist organization with ties to the British Royal Society for International Affairs in London. For a detailed study into this group see my book Kill Zone—A Sniper Looks at Dealey Plaza. So of all the names this is the only one I could find any reference to on the Internet, and it was obvious that if Daniel and his friends did actually try giving this information to the FBI, nothing was done with it.

As I was beginning this chapter Attorney Jesse Trentadue called me in relation to the chapter I had written on the death of his brother Kenneth. Jesse and I had been in contact years ago and in the interim he had filed several lawsuits and FOIA suits against the federal government and the FBI. Like me, Jesse was a Truth Warrior and would not give up. During the conversation he told me of several things that he had discovered in his suits and depositions. One particular Deposition titled "Declaration of Terry Lynn Nichols" was a huge piece of the puzzle. It was filed February, 2016 in the U.S. District Court of Utah in Salt Lake City.

As I read through it several items jumped off the pages. Among them was Nichols' sworn statement that "I am also now prepared to identify others who played a role in the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma on April 19th, 1995."

In this statement Nichols admits that others besides him, McVeigh and Fortier were involved in the bombing. He went on to state that he had written Attorney General John Ashcroft, who worked for President George W. Bush, and said that he wanted others involved in the bombing "brought to justice." He said he was prepared to fully cooperate with the Department of Justice to achieve this goal, but "I have never received a response to that letter" from Ashcroft or anyone else in the DoJ. Further, Nichols stated that "I have been trying to speak out on the Oklahoma City bombing but have been frustrated in this effort by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Department of Justice." Further he stated that "The Bureau of Prisons and Department of Justice have denied me all contact with the media."

This declaration was taken in 2016! The coverup of the case through three presidents has continued, no matter who was in power.

Nichols then went on to state that he had met with Congressman Dana Rohrabacher, who was investigating the bombing in his committee in Congress, and said "I had hoped that the results of that meeting would lead to an independent, deeply probing, open investigation of the Oklahoma City bombing, including what I now believe was the hidden role of various federal agencies in that matter. Unfortunately, that did not happen…I was not able to speak openly and candidly with Congressman Rohrabacher since, despite my objections, an FBI agent was present during that interview."

Nichols also stated that in Rohrabacher's findings that the congressman believed that there were others involved who escaped capture and prosecution, and that the congressman "was correct about 'Others Unknown'."

(It was sometime later that I received a call from Rohrabacher's office from a female staffer. She was somewhat antagonistic and did not impress me as someone who is really interested in the case, or cared about what anyone had to say. She asked if I would be willing to travel to Washington to tell Rohrabacher and his committee what I knew or had discovered about the case. I said that I would, but I heard in the background a voice say "we have a cop that might come forward." It was obvious to me that Rohrabacher's office was very skeptical about the case and to waste my time going to D.C. to testify would be an exercise in futility. Nevertheless, I never heard from that office again).

In paragraph 9 of Nichols' later Declaration to Jesse Trentadue, Nichols talks about others involved. "One was acting as a government provocateur. The other was a high-ranking federal government official. I believe both men are now being protected by the federal government in a coverup to escape its responsibility for the loss of life in Oklahoma. It is my desire that as a result of the Declaration, my videotaped deposition can be taken so that I can tell what I know about the Oklahoma City bombing and, thereby, hopefully trigger a full, fair and impartial investigation of that event."

Dissecting this paragraph we see that Nichols may have inadvertently identified Andreas Strassmeir as the Government provocateur. But who was the high-ranking government official?

As I read through the pages of the deposition I got to paragraph 33. All of a sudden a huge piece of the puzzle jumped off the page! Nichols named McVeigh's handler!

"McVeigh was extremely upset and angry," the paragraph begins. "There, in what I believe was an accidental slip of the tongue, McVeigh revealed the identity of a high-ranking FBI official who was apparently directing McVeigh in the bomb plot. The name McVeigh let slip was Larry Potts—lead FBI agent at Ruby Ridge. McVeigh said he believed Potts was manipulating him, and forcing him to go 'off script,' which I understood to mean 'change the target of the bombing.' That was the only time I heard McVeigh refer to Larry Potts in that context."

The deposition was full of bits and pieces of information that tied together many of the loose ends and things we had turned up over the months and years following the bombing. Nichols admitted to being the one who robbed Roger Moore in Arkansas and what he and McVeigh did with the money and the guns, which according to Nichols was actually donated by Moore to help finance the bombing, and the robbery was staged to give Moore a way out when and if the guns were later found. He describes how he and McVeigh mixed the ANFO at Geary Lake on the 18th of April, the day before the bombing, and then admits that neither he nor McVeigh had the "level of expertise and sophistication" to build such a bomb that would work. He also states that McVeigh had purchased five black metal barrels and five white plastic barrels, and that if that was true, the shards of blue plastic barrels allegedly found at the scene of the bombing were not from the Ryder truck—or never even existed. As for them not having the expertise, that is very questionable considering that he had received bomb making instructions in the Philippines, and McVeigh had most likely had the same training at Camp Grafton.

It was paragraph 10 that literally leapt off the page! Here Nichols states under oath:

"10. In December of 1992, Timothy McVeigh told me that while he was serving in the U.S. Army, he had been recruited to carry out undercover missions. McVeigh did not say who recruited him, or specify the nature of his mission. McVeigh did say, however, that he was to begin making contacts with a 'network' of people after the first of the year and that he was to take no action in furtherance of the mission until called upon. McVeigh said he would soon be making his first contact 'down south.'"

This, a hard reference from Nichols to McVeigh's recruitment into a special organization or team, was a huge find! It was one more piece of information that what McVeigh had written to his sister about being selected at Fort Bragg more credible. In paragraph 11, Nichols went on to declare:

"11. McVeigh's first contact came one month later, in Florida. It was with Roger Moore: a gun dealer who lived in Royal, Arkansas, with his girlfriend and business associate Karen Anderson. McVeigh met Moore at the gun show in Ft Lauderdale in January of 1993."

Besides many other pertinent items revealed in the deposition, Nichols states that Roger Moore would never be prosecuted for lying about his robbery because in relation to the Oklahoma City bombing, he was a "protected witness." I tried to discover whether Moore had any prior military background or experience, where he might have been recruited, but was unsuccessful.

The reader will question whether such secret government teams that perform "dirty tricks" actually exist.

Years ago someone sent me a book titled simply The Squad written by Michael Milan. The book went into detail about a secret "squad" of hit men that worked for J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI. In it, the author tells stories from a man who allegedly worked as a hit man for Hoover. The book linked organized crime hit men to Hoover and the FBI. If Hoover felt someone was a threat to his position, or even a threat, in his mind, to the security of the U.S., he allegedly could order a hit on that person or persons. In return, Hoover would need to not use "his" FBI to pursue the Mafia, or even deal with formal investigations, arrests or court proceedings. In this way each would benefit from the other. For many years Hoover would not recognize the existence of organized crime, possibly because of his arrangement with the mob for access to men "who would paint houses," or make hits in Mafia lingo wherein an execution in a house would leave blood spatter on the walls. In the instance of The Squad, the book states that none of the hit men knew each other and operated singly, thereby reducing the chances of one being caught and giving up others.

There has been a lot of controversy as to whether the stories in the book are true or not, but if one spends time studying the Cosa Nostra/Mafia of the time, it would be very easy to conclude that what is described in the book actually happened. Hoover is known to have had then-secret communication with mob bosses such as Sam "Momo" Giancana in Chicago, Santo Trafficante in Florida, Meyer Lansky in New York, Carlos Marcello in New Orleans, and Johnny Roselli in Las Vegas. Every one of these "bosses" figure in the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

Another report of such a secret government organization came across my desk during the initial bombing investigation. I did not see any connection to it at first, but it did raise questions about "others unknown" to the point that I started a file and "put the info on the wall" for later scrutiny if needed and more was revealed. I had read of the 1993 case of a Chicago attorney named Paul Wilcher who had written a letter to Janet Reno asking that the Waco case be exposed with new information Wilcher had obtained. The actual letter was over a hundred pages long and named names and organizations, including a mysterious "Council of Nine." This council consisted of nine men, whose names Wilcher did not know, but who had the power to have anyone, anywhere, killed, "including presidents."

Wilcher, shortly after sending this letter to Reno and others, was found dead in his Chicago apartment in a manner that even the medical examiner could not determine the cause of death—and the FBI refused to investigate.

Within the original letter, a copy of which was sent to me anonymously, Wilcher also mentioned a group who was responsible for the final outcome of the Waco massacre. It was a special operations military group that was sent in to "advise" the FBI. But by the 19th of April, 1993 (two years to the day before the OKC bombing), this "team" entered the Branch Davidian's gymnasium building and set fires that would consume the compound. I sent out enquiries asking if any of my contacts knew anything about the team or its mission. The reference to it was "DFG" or possibly "DF6." It was a bit hard to read so I used both in my enquiry. It was allegedly a team out of Fort Bragg that did "special missions." After a week or two I received a single page note back from one of my contacts, a former Los Angeles police detective who had worked in the LAPD Organized Crime Intelligence Unit. In the note he said "Craig, I made a few calls regarding DFG and DF6. Here is what I learned: DF6 'Special Ops'—cover is Direction Finding Group. Also Delta Force Group or Delta Force 'G' Squadron."

My contact then listed a DFT and a DAT. The DAT was "Direct Action Team."

It was already known that Fort Bragg had sent "special operators" to Waco to advise the FBI. And I would surmise that they would be Delta Force operators. But I had never heard of a "G Squadron." So I did some more checking. No one I knew in Special Forces had heard of a G squadron. Delta's actual name is 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment-Delta, or 1st SFOD-D. It's missions are multi-dimensional, running from hostage rescue to intelligence gathering to the capture or elimination of terrorist threats. The group is made up of four "Squadrons" running from A to D. Officially there is no squadron beyond D Squadron. However, it's been reported that there is one smaller specialized squadron that has the mission of "sensitive reconnaissance operations." I never received any information regarding an alpha or numeric designation for this team.

Was such a team involved in the Oklahoma City bombing? Was McVeigh part of a team as he claimed?

What we do know is that McVeigh was officially discharged from the Army in 1991, but was seen in uniform at Camp Grafton in 1993 driving an Army armored personnel carrier. When questioned by a photo journalist, he said, "I'm nobody. I'm just a parts clerk.” That video, as of this writing is available on Youtube by searching for “Timothy McVeigh at Camp Grafton.” In the video the closeup of McVeigh’s face is unmistakable, and the reader has to remember that this was taken two-plus years after McVeigh was allegedly “discharged.”

McVeigh video taken at Camp Grafton, North Dakota in 1993, two years after his discharge from the Army. “I’m nobody,” he told the photographer. “I’m a parts clerk.”

We know that McVeigh’s sister received a letter describing McVeigh’s selection for such a unit, and we know that Nichols verified that McVeigh told him that he, McVeigh, was recruited for that unit, being 10 out of 400 who were trying out for Special Forces.

We know that McVeigh said in his letter to his sister that his “work for the government” would include helping the CIA fly drugs into the U.S to fund many covert operations, serve as military “consultants” to work hand-in-hand with civilian police agencies (read “FBI”), and to “quiet” anyone whom was deemed a “security risk.” Then, in parenthesis, he added, (“We would be gov’t paid assassins!”).

We know that McVeigh acted like a different person after he left Fort Bragg and surfaced working for Calspan in New York. Besides building a Legend with his activities and statements there, including passing out copies of the Turner Diaries (like Oswald in New Orleans), he exhibited a totally different man than what others knew of him previous to leaving Fort Riley for Fort Bragg.

Calspan and electromagnetic mind control both have roots at the same Ivy League institution - Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Calspan was founded in 1946 as Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory. And Cornell was also the contract base for the CIA's "Human Ecology Fund," a means of financial support for classified experimentation at the country's leading universities.

Cornell Aerospace was reorganized in 1972 and renamed Calspan. Six years later, the firm was acquired by Arvin Industries. Arvin-Calspan later merged with Space Industries International (SII), a commercial space-flight venture based in Texas.

McVeigh was assigned to the company's Advanced Technology Center in Buffalo, N.Y. ATC had a large energy shock tunnel, radar facilities and a radio-frequency (RF) simulator facility for evaluating electronic warfare techniques. One Calspan research lab specialized in microscopic engineering. Calspan literature boasts that ATC employs "numerous world-renowned scientists and engineers" on "the cutting edge" of scientific research. It was in this environment that McVeigh may have undergone more mind control reinforcement and programming.

McVeigh wasn't the Gulf War super patriotic career soldier who spent all of his time reading Army field manuals, doing physical training, and polishing his boots like the that soldiers he knew and served with at Ft. Riley prior to his leaving for Fort Bragg.

Investigative journalist Alex Constantine wrote in an article on McVeigh and mind control: "Captain Terry Guild, McVeigh's' former company commander (while he was in the Army at Ft. Riley), said that 'McVeigh demonstrated a willingness to carry out orders, any orders. He trained on his own time while other soldiers languished in their bunks or caroused at the PX.'"

" As a civilian, Timothy McVeigh continued to dwell on the military. In 1992 he took a job with Burns International Security Services in Buffalo and was assigned to the security detail at Calspan, a Pentagon contractor that conducts classified research in advanced aerospace rocketry and electronic warfare. Al Salandra, a spokesman for Calspan, told reporters that McVeigh was "a model employee."

""He was real different," Todd Regier, a plumber who knew McVeigh, told the Boston Globe. "Kind of cold. He was almost like a robot." Jeff Camp, who worked as a guard with McVeigh, told Newsweek that the bomber was "a very strange person. It was like he had two different personalities." (It should be noted that McVeigh also had used several aliases, some of which were Tim Tuttle, Robert Bridges, Robert Kling, Shawn Rivers, Sean Rivers, and Daryl Bridges, and Nichols also used aliases including Joe Kyle, Ted Parker, and Mike Havens).

We know that while in prison, Tim McVeigh was visited numerous times, apparently 18 times, by a psychiatrist Dr. Louis Jolyon West, often referred to as Dr. Jolly West. We know that Nichols had mentioned to another prisoner at one time that "Sarge will get us out of this," and we know that McVeigh referred to "the Major" as their boss.

We also know that he had at least three bogus names and identities: Tim Tuttle, Robert Bridges, and Robert Kling.

Who was the real Tim McVeigh?

So many questions remain about McVeigh. Was he a part of a government operation? If he was, was he a mind-controlled programmed assassin sent on a mission? Whatever the case, we do know that McVeigh never showed any negative emotions while a prisoner, and in the end he dropped his remaining appeals, saying he'd rather die than spend the rest of his life in prison. On January 16, 2001 the Federal Bureau of Prisons set a date of execution for May 16, 2001. McVeigh stated that his only regret was not completely leveling the federal building!

Six days prior to the date set for his execution, the government turned over thousands of pages of documents of evidence that had previously been withheld from McVeigh's attorneys, which would take months to go through. Attorney General John Ashcroft granted a 30 day delay period, totally insufficient time to wade through the mountain of paper.

When the day of his execution arrived, strange things happened. First, instead of using the prison's execution staff, the government flew in it's own "executioner," complete with his own drugs. Then, according to Dr. Lorraine Day, McVeigh's execution was a farce. According to Dr. Day, there were several things that "just weren't right" about the execution:

"Before Tim McVeigh's scheduled execution, the state announced that none of his organs would be donated after his execution. This is very strange. A state OWNS the body of an executed prisoner, and can receive $200,000 or more for the body parts of a young healthy specimen like McVeigh.

"Before his execution, the state announced that Tim McVeigh's medical records would be sealed for 25 years. The question is, Why?

"Tim McVeigh's lawyers petitioned a judge to rule that no autopsy would be done on his body after his execution, a highly unusual request.

"The IV that was supposed to deliver the lethal injection dose to Tim McVeigh was placed, of all places, in his leg! I knew right then that they were NOT going to execute him. This was a fake execution, to pacify the families of the victims involved in the bombing disaster.

"The public doesn't understand what every surgeon and anesthesiologist knows very well. There is no large vein close enough to the skin surface in the leg to place a large enough needle or catheter to deliver the proper dose that would reach the vital organs fast enough to kill a person cleanly. It would be a mess.

"IVs are placed in the arm, the hand, occasionally in the foot (but not in the foot for extensive or difficult procedures) and certainly not in the foot or leg for an execution. If an IV cannot be placed in one of these upper extremity locations because of previous injury or scarring, or some other reason, then a small incision is made in the area near the clavicle to gain access to a large vein going directly to the heart."

One of the witnesses at Tim McVeigh’s supposed execution was Susan Carlson, a reporter for WLS-AM Radio in Chicago. She stated on the air that McVeigh “ appeared to be still breathing or what appeared to be shallow breathing, even after being pronounced dead, and his eyes remained open.”

Carlson’s account is not exactly what was later reported on ABC News. ABC, who interviewed several of those in attendance at McVeigh’s execution, wrote that Carlson told them “At one point, he filled up his cheeks with air and then just kind of let it go. But I don’t believe that was his last breath. There was still some shallow breathing that followed. His skin began to turn a very strange shade of yellow towards the end. And he remained extremely rigid.”

Reporter Karen Grunden of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star in the same interview stated “And, as others described, he looked around. He did swallow and puff some air and you could see his chest moving up and down. The warden did look at Timothy McVeigh. His eyes blinked a few times, and then they remained open.”

McVeigh’s body was transported away in a government van, allegedly to a funeral home where it was to be cremated, and the ashes given to his attorney. From there the ashes would be scattered in an unrecorded location.

Or, as some might wonder, did “the Major” or “the Sarge” take care of him? Does he have a new identity, and is he now somewhere living off his half of the $2.5 million dollars placed in a private account as described by Nichols?

The question most would ask is, “why would “they” even let him live?”

Indeed. Why not just kill him and get rid of the only person other than Nichols who would know names of others involved?

The simple, and only answer is that if he were part of a team, and he was on a mission, and he was allowed to be executed, then the message to the rest of the team members would be that their chain-of-command could not be counted on to take care of them in future missions. And, those that were involved in the Oklahoma City case just might decide to come forward—unless, of course they too were subjects of a mind control program.

Whatever the answers are, McVeigh’s death certificate leaves a lot to contemplate. As if giving him recognition, his death certificate in the box for “Decedents Usual Occupation” it states “Soldier.” In the box for “Kind of Business/Industry” it states “U.S. Army.” And in the box for disposition and “Embalmer’s Name,” it says “No Embalming.”

One has to wonder about McVeigh’s poem that he copied in his own handwriting while on death row, and the last paragraph:

“It matters not how strait the gate,

How charged with punishments the scroll,

I am the master of my fate;

I am the captain of my soul.”

CHAPTER 23

Odds, Ends, and Dead Ends

It's been said: "Never fight a battle you know you can't win."

Early on in the investigation, and in the months that followed, the Baker Street Irregulars received so many "clues," anonymous "Intel Memos" and emails regarding the case, that we began to wonder if some organization was trying to either muddy the water or lead us off track to waste our time. In any case, I was seeing once again a repeat of what happens when too many people offer their personal theories, then try to bolster them with "evidence." Like the books on the Kennedy assassination, where books were written by authors to bolster their own theory of what happened in Dallas on that fateful day, there were individuals and so-called "committees" that sent us information that they thought would help. The problem is that one cannot disregard anything that might have some factual meaning, even if you had to dig through a mound of dirt to find a diamond. All of this took time.

Many other theories concerning who was involved and how the building was attacked emerged during the course of the investigation. Most of them, if any at all, were not followed up on by the FBI. Still, some of us felt that every lead should be looked at, and if necessary, investigated further. Some leads were very interesting, but not enough evidence existed to pursue them further, and some were just plain unworkable.

I often had to keep reminding the team that we needed to stay focused on the mission at hand, and that we had to answer certain relevant questions to get to the bottom of the case (if that was even possible). Considering the resistance of the FBI, the Oklahoma City Police Department, the media—both national and local, and much of the population in general that accepts the media version as gospel truth, it was a difficult scenario to operate in. In the military, there is a saying, "Never fight a battle you know you can't win."

Was this battle winnable? The longer our investigation lasted, and the more questions we brought up and tried to answer, the more difficult it seemed. Would our efforts be successful in regard to solving the case and putting bad people in jail? We didn't know. But we had to try. So when information came in we had to decide whether to explore it or discard it. Some were obviously ridiculous and a waste of time. Some opened doors that we needed to peek in. In investigating some areas I once again began to feel like Agent Mulder of The X-Files.

As for the battle you can't win, in this case the battle had to be fought. It was discouraging to find so many roadblocks set up by the government and media, but we, myself in particular, felt "The Truth Will Out."

It is always important to "fight the good fight." Yogi Berra said, "It ain't over till it's over."

As time wore on the team began to dwindle in size. Eventually, after Charles Keys' grand jury was concluded, I found myself and David Hoffman the only ones still chasing leads, building files, and doing what we could to get to the truth and prove it. By this time we knew we had a good idea of who McVeigh was and why the Murrah Building was selected as a target, and who Nichols was and why he went to the Philippines so many times. We knew that the official government version of the event was a coverup and a lie. We knew that there were several “others unknown,” and we felt we knew who many of them were. We both knew that the coverup and the motive behind the bombing of that particular building went to the highest level. But even so, what could be done with this information that had been gathered, and who could we turn to for even further investigation and justice? That was the question.

Hoffman called me one afternoon and we pondered over these questions. The best I could offer was that we were doing what we could. We were writing about it. In this case the Pen would have to be mightier than the Sword! I told Dave “We need to drive on and get everything down on paper that we can and get it out to the public. Maybe a future administration, an honest one, will take up the case and do what needs to be done. Failing that, maybe someone in the future will pick up the gauntlet. This was the mass homicide of over 160 Americans, and there is no statute of limitations on homicide.”

Hoffman agreed, and the result of Dave’s efforts culminated in his 1998 book The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror. By then I was just finishing The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government, in which I did a chapter on the bombing as one of the coverups. But it was not until now, 22 years later, that I felt compelled and obligated to write this book while I was still able. Especially now that we have, at this writing, the Trump administration, our last best hope.

As I went through my boxes of files on the case that have remained in storage for 22 years, I found several files of reports and memos that I or Dave received that we followed up on, but due to the lack of resources, could only go so far. Whether they have any concrete connection to the bombing or not (some do), I would be remiss to leave them out. I’ll head each one with a subject line then give a brief description when the information we obtained was limited.

The Hula Hoop Men

Hoffman and I both received a very interesting note from an anonymous witness, dated January 8, 1996, nine months after the event, that said “0330 hrs on April 19th, a witness saw a lot of activity in front of the Murrah Building. He was shunted through a roadblock that was just closing on the street, and as he proceeded by, he noticed several cars parked on both sides of the street, and men with “hula hoop” type antennas standing on the sidewalk, holding them over their heads and turning them slowly in different directions. He also noticed a white car with a stripe around it with flashing lights. He described it as an ‘MP car.’ It was funneling traffic through the roadblocks, then around them. All of the men were dressed in black.”

What this report described was men with, what we know in the aviation world, and in HAM radio, as direction-finding antenna. Years ago airplanes were equipped with what was known as RDF antennas and radios. RDF stood for Radio Direction Finder. The user would dial into a certain frequency (usually a known radio station) and get a bearing fix by turning the loop antenna on top of the aircraft. Then, repeat that with another station. Where the lines of the two reference directions crossed on the chart, that was the location of the aircraft. Amelia Earhart’s Lockheed Electra had such a system when she disappeared over the Pacific.

It occurred to me that the only reason for this activity was to occur in Oklahoma City, as described, would be if the Ryder Truck was transmitting its location and was being tracked. It would appear that there was a lot of concern because the original story early on in the investigation was that McVeigh was supposed to have arrived by 3 a.m. to mitigate casualties, but ran late for some reason. We have other witnesses who said that the building was staked out all night, but by dawn the stakeout was called off. Other nighttime witnesses describes "flashlights moving around inside the building that were visable through the windows from the street. True or not, these things can't be proven until someone, and probably more than one person, comes forward.

The issue I had with the timing was that if the original plan was for McVeigh and John Doe 2 to arrive at 3:00-3:30 a.m., then why would he be so late unless someone ordered him to do so. The object then would be to create mass casualties instead of hitting a mostly empty building. The motive for that would be two-fold: incite the American public with a Pearl Harbor style event, and to generate support for the Draconian Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 that was languishing in Congress. The bombing that occurred at 9:03 a.m. that morning accomplished both.

Ted Gunderson and his fuel-air barometric bomb

Ted Gunderson, a former FBI agent who was in charge of the Los Angeles office of the FBI until he retired, called me and wanted to inform me of something that he felt had bearing on the case. He told me that a CI that he knew well, Michael Riconosciuto, who was being held in prison on a 30 year charge of manufacturing with intent to distribute Methamphetamine, thought he knew what device did the damage to the building.

It was after Riconosciuto had testified in a high profile case regarding a company named INSLAW, that had invented and produced a software program called PROMIS (for Prosecutors Management System) that could track criminal cases for the Justice Department. Riconosciuto claimed he was one of the designers and had programmed a back door into the system that would allow a user to track almost anything and anyone, including bank and monetary transactions.

The software was sold to the Department of Justice under Janet Reno, but was never paid for. INSLAW had to file for bankruptcy, then sue the government, eventually being rewarded with several millions of dollars.

Michael Riconosciuto stated that PROMIS had been further modified by the DoJ so that any agency using it could be subject to undetected eavesdropping by the DoJ (and CIA) — a sort of software Trojan Horse that could also be used to track not only bank transactions, but to move and launder money, and to even keep an eye on what other governments were up to that had PROMIS software installed in their computers.

In1991, Riconosciuto filed an affidavit before a House judiciary committee investigating the Inslaw bankruptcy case. Riconosciuto was called to testify before Congress regarding the modification of PROMIS. Riconosciuto declared that he had been under the direction of one Earl Brian, a long-time Reagan confidant and insider, who was then a controlling shareholder and director of Hadron, Inc.. Hadron was a competitor to Inslaw and was also a government consulting firm with several contracts with the Department of Defense and the CIA. In the affidavit Riconosciuto stated that he was working for the Wackenhut company, a security firm with many black budget contracts with the federal government. He stated in paragraph 2 of the affidavit that "The Wackenhut-Cabazon joint venture sought to develop and/or manufacture certain materials that are used in military and national security operations, including night vision goggles, machine guns, fuel-air explosives, and biological and chemical warfare weapons."

The reference to Cabazon had to do with the the Cabazon Indian tribe which had a reservation in California that the Wackenhut company operated under a contract with the tribe.

Within eight days of this declaration, Riconosciuto was arrested for conspiracy to manufacture, conspiracy to distribute, possession with intent to distribute, and distribution of Meth—a total of ten counts—related to methamphetamine and methadone. Gunderson told me that it was a setup to shut Riconosciuto up and to punish him for the affidavit. He had a lab in his house but, according to Riconosciuto, it was used to extract Platinum from other minerals. The bottom line was that he couldn't effectively fight the corrupt Janet Reno DoJ and ended up with a 30 year sentence in federal custody. As of this writing he is in the federal penitentiary in Lompoc, California, due to be released in June 2017.

Later, when the Congressional committee probing the Inslaw affair reported its findings, they wrote: "The enhanced PROMIS software was stolen by high level Justice officials and distributed internationally in order to provide financial gain to Dr. Brian and to further intelligence and foreign policy objectives of the United States." Earl Brian later was convicted on 10 counts of criminal behavior, including conspiracy, and commission of bank and securities fraud. He was ordered to report for the start of a four-and-a-half-year prison term on Aug. 18, 1996.

Within days of the bombing in Oklahoma City, Gunderson called me and said that he had talked to Riconosciuto on the telephone and Riconosciuto had told him that from the appearance of the Murrah Building he saw on television, it looked like what he called an "Electro-hydrodynamic Gaseous Fuel Device," also known as a "Barometric Bomb."

I was familiar with fuel-air bombs. Basically they are weapons that first saturate an area with a flammable fuel, then when it is vaporized, ignites it to create an explosion.

The problem with what Gunderson told me, and what I could discern from the damage to the Murrah Building, was that it did not show indications of such damage, and the witnesses did not describe anything like such an event. They described a rumble before the main explosion. A fuel-air bomb, when it detonates, is horrendous and would have done much more significant damage to the structure. What was described by victims and witnesses is much more descriptive of a series of cutting charges on columns in the base of the building, followed almost immediately by the detonation of the Ryder truck. The odd man out on this was the radiation that was picked up on the radiation detectors that were shown on the charts of the Yeakey computer disk—if that is indeed what is shown.

Hoffman and I decided to leave Gunderson's fuel-air bomb to Ted. It just didn't fit.

The Dirty Bomb

One of our original members of the Baker Street Irregulars was retired New York City Detective Jim Rothstein. Jim had a very interesting background when he was with the NYPD that ran the spectrum from undercover operations to working organized crime. He brought his expertise to the team early on after being hired and sent to Oklahoma City by a wealthy Chicago real estate mogul named Alex Magnus. (Later Mr. Magnus provided the funding for David Hoffman to continue his efforts).

Throughout the investigation Jim, David and I shared information. Among the things that Jim turned up from his sources was that he didn't believe the OKC bomb was a "dirty bomb." In other words, it didn't in itself contain radioactive material. If such material was involved, which appeared to have shown up on the FEMA charts on the Yeakey disk, it was probably washed away the day of the bombing when it rained. Jim, according to his sources, said that at least three pillars had satchel charges on them. He was the first to mention that "there was one agent in particular that 'they' wanted killed, and that one charge was placed on a column below his office." That had to have been the Secret Service agent who was ordered to be at his desk at 9 a.m. for "an important call from D.C." That would be Alan Gerald Whicher, who had left President Clinton's personal security contingent for what he presumed would be a more peaceful assignment in Oklahoma. It is probable that Whicher knew many things about the Clintons that they would not like exposed. Was he ordered to be at his desk at that particular time because someone knew what would happen that morning? The evidence leans in that direction. I would not hesitate to add him to the Clinton Death List toll.

Jim also received information through his sources that "there were guys all around the area with hoops, looking for the transponder signal on the truck, but someone in the truck turned the transponder off." My files don't name Jim's source, but this was one more source regarding the "hoop" antennas.

At about this same time we received an email that mentioned someone named "Granse," on a "forensics team." The email, which Hoffman received said, "According to Granse, who was part of the forensic team that went to OKC, they were not allowed to make scrapings off the pillars or take anything with them. The level of radiation at the building site was 50% higher than the background radiation levels of surrounding areas. After the implosion of the building all of the building debris was then summarily buried, fenced, and guarded (by Wackenhut). The fence was eventually moved and the site obscured to make it difficult to find. The "Granse" mentioned may have been one Karl Granse, a legal researcher who lived in Michigan and had an interest in the case. He also, according the The New York Times, had a 20 minute conversation with Terry Nichols in which Nichols basically would not admit anything, including whether he even felt McVeigh was actually the driver of the Ryder truck.

The point of interest in what Rothstein's sources offered and what this forensic team claimed, all verify Terry Yeakey's computer disk graphs. There was come kind of radioactive activity involved in the vicinity of the bombing.

Comparison of Two Bombings

Khobar Towers bombing on June 26, 1996: 5,000 lbs high explosive barely removes the outer wall. (Photo US Air Force)

On June 26, 1996, terrorists blew up a tank truck that contained over 5,000 pounds of high explosives in front of the Khobar Towers building in Khobar, Saudi Arabia, that housed US Air Force personnel. The building, unlike the Murrah Building, was not “bomb proof,” nor was it built to American building standards. The Murrah Building was much stronger, and built to withstand a bomb blast from the outside. The Khobar Towers was not. The estimate of the actual effect of the explosives used in the attack was the equivalent of 20,000 to 30,000 pounds (9,100 to 13,600 kg) of TNT. In the Murrah Building attack the truck was parked on the street directly in front of the day care center. At the Khobar Towers the truck was parked 35 yards away. The Murrah Building crater was approximately 8-10 feet across and about 6-8 feet deep. The Khobar Towers crater was 20 feet deep and 30 feet wide. Yet, the damage to the Khobar Towers was much less than to the Murrah Building with only the front wall blown off the building and very few floors collapsing. It is obvious from the damage to the two buildings that the Ryder truck bomb did not cause all of the damage to the building, hence other bombers put explosives inside the building in advance.

On May 13, 1995 I received a letter from a good friend who is an attorney in Iowa. He said in the letter “This is interesting. A guy was in yesterday about a divorce. After going through that part of the discussion I visited with him for a while. He works for the General Services Administration at the federal building here. He is a heating and air conditioning guy so he has access to the entire building and knows a lot of people, including the BATF guys. This office of the BATF sent their agents to Oklahoma City to assist after the explosion.

“Upon their return they were talking to my client about some things, including that there were one or two bombs in addition to the truck bomb. They also told him that an unexploded bomb was found in the building and defused. Sounds like Mr. McVeigh must have been busy that morning.”

Gen. Partin’s diagram for blast effect and pressure analysis on the building

Then we have an extensive analysis by retired U.S. Air Force Brigadier General Benton Partin, a career explosives expert. He did an engineering study of the damage and concluded that the truck bomb was not powerful enough to do the damage that was done and that there had to be other devices in the building. His sketch shows the damage on the street floor.

Hoffman’s Contacts

David called me one day and said that he had made contact with an Israeli intelligence agent who had been sent to Oklahoma City prior to the bombing. It seems that some faction of Israeli intelligence, whether the Mossad, Israeli Defense Intelligence or some other faction had advance knowledge that something big was going to happen in Oklahoma City, and it would be related to the Palestine Liberation Organization. The contact that Hoffman established a repoire with was named William “Bill” Northrop. According to Northrop, he was an American-born Israeli, living in Tel Aviv, but had taken up residency in Oklahoma in 1994. He claimed he served in the U.S. Special Forces in Vietnam, and was wounded in the battle of Lang Vei Special Forces camp. He later was involved in Iran/Contra on behalf of Israel’s arms dealing participation with the CIA. His business card, which he provided Hoffman, was for “Bateman Project Holdings Limited,” a company with a Johannesburg, South Africa, address.

When David sent me a copy of the card I researched Bateman Project Holdings, figuring it might be a front company for the Mossad, or some other Israeli organization. Bateman turned out to be an “International engineering, contracting and project management group that operates through strategic business units, subsidiaries and associated companies.” Whatever that means, it would be akin to James Bond’s “Import-Export business.”

Hoffman believed Northrop was a good inside source to information that might be privy to intelligence organizations in Israel. The truth was that Northrop, which held 11 passports, had other names, and whose name was found in CIA Director William Casey’s personal phone book, was not all that he claimed. A much later investigation into Northrop’s viability showed that there is no record of him being in Special Forces, or Vietnam. This was discovered in 2006 when questions about his background were raised when he was working as the commandant for the Oak Ridge Military Institute, a military academy with 250 students. He was discharged after a few months when his background check was completed and his claims did not hold up regarding his prior service and achievements.

We do know that he was an arms dealer, he did have a residence in Tel Aviv, he traveled internationally, and that his background was very shady—exactly what one would expect from a “spook.”

We also know that he was in Oklahoma City before the bombing, and he did say that there were people with PLO connections—who would meld with the Iraqi/Palestinian connections through Samir Khalil. It was also through Northrop that Hoffman was told that the Southern Poverty Law Center, under Morris Dees, was a conduit and “of use” to the Mossad, and that Dee’s “handler” was in the Anti-Defamation League. That alone would explain a lot considering Strassmeir was an informant not only to his handlers, but to the SPLC, and a reason why the SPLC and the ADL teamed up against the militias and the Right Wing.

In one memo that Hoffman sent me, possibly with information from Northrop, paragraph 1 stated: “The information and leads supplied to the media (from Day One on) that was taken as gospel came from the Anti-Defamation League of the B’Nai B’Rith, and the extreme left Southern Poverty Law Center.” Paragraph 2 read “The ADL is basically an extension of the Israeli intelligence agency, the Mossad. This extension is divided into two parts: the ADL and the JDL. As in Northern Ireland, where the IRA is divided into two parts, the Sein Fein and the Provisional (action) Brigade., the ADL (like the Sein Fein) is the political arm, while the JDL (like the Provisional Brigade) is the military arm.”

In an investigative report that Hoffman faxed to me, which I understood may have originated with Northrop, the writer said that “In March of 1995, Israel’s Shin Bet (GSS or General Security Services) made some administrative arrests of suspected Hamas terrorists in Jerusalem. Interrogations of these suspects is thought to have revealed information on a bomb plot targeted on Oklahoma City in the United States. Shin Bet filed a warning with the Legal Attache’ (FBI) at the American Embassy in Tel Aviv as a matter of course. The warning did not come through the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the State Department. This was a week or two prior to the bombing of the Murrah Federal Building on 19 April 1995.”

The report, titled “Prior Warning” went on to state: “A secondary source has stated that the German Federal Government also issued a warning, which was thought to have come through the State Department. The same source indicated that the Saudi Government also sent a warning through the State Department. A Saudi Major General also informed former CIA operative Vince Cannistraro, who in turn informed the FBI. There is a 302 in existence.”

To me, knowing more than most about intelligence operations, I thought this report was most interesting. I knew that Vincent Cannistraro was definitely CIA. He had served as Director of Intelligence Programs for the NSC from 1984 to 1987; Special assistant for Intelligence in the Office of the Secretary of Defense until 1988; and Chief of Operations and Analysis at the Counter-terrorist Center until 1991. Also, before 1984, he was an officer with the CIA’s Directorate of Operations in the Middle East, Africa, Europe, and Central America, and was a key figure in the the investigation of the bombing of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. According to my sources, Cannistraro tried to warn the FBI about the possible attack on the airplane, but nothing was done.

The wording and the information in this report rang true, but like so many other pieces of the puzzle that could not be verified with other backup information, it was another piece that we put on the wall until it would fit the puzzle.

In the end, by 1996, I just couldn’t develop a lot of confidence in what Northrop told Hoffman. Still, you can’t totally ignore it either, hence the reason I kept a file on him and his information.

McVeigh’s friend, Michael Fortier

Within a week of the bombing federal agents swarmed in on the small Arizona town of Kingman. The relationship of Kingman to the Oklahoma City bombing was one Michael Fortier. Fortier and McVeigh were best friends in the Army, and McVeigh felt he could rely on him for assistance and support for the mission McVeigh (and his handlers) had planned.

According to Fortier, “I thought he was still in the Army when he showed up at my door.” Fortier described McVeigh with short cropped hair and neatly pressed camouflage fatigue pants. “When you saw him,” said Fortier, “it was like he never left.”

Fortier, McVeigh and Nichols had enlisted in the Army on the same day, May 24th, 1988. They trained at Fort Benning, Georgia, in what was known as a Cohort Unit—a company of soldiers who would take their basic training together, then serve together for the rest of their enlistment. When they graduated from Basic, then from AIT, (Advanced Individual Training), they were assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry, 1st Infantry Division—“The Big Red One”— at Fort Riley, Kansas.

According to Fortier, “McVeigh’s shoes were always spit shined and his clothes always pressed. When others went off base to party, he was still in the barracks, spit shining his boots and ironing his fatigues. When in the field, when others took a break, he shouldered his pack and ran around.” McVeigh, because of his efforts and attitudes, made sergeant long before his contemporaries.

Fortier also described McVeigh as having a “real New York attitude, real rude and blunt. He just had no tact.” According to a *New York Time*s article dated May 21, 1995, “Mr. Fortier appears to have been Mr. McVeigh’s main anchor as he drifted about in the last two years, making a living at short-term jobs and selling weapons and key chains at gun shows in Kingman. In his travels, Mr. McVeigh frequently stayed over at Mr. Fortier’s trailer house in a nondescript new subdivision at the far edge of Kingman, distinguishable from his neighbors mainly by a flagpole flying an American flag and a reproduction of one of the first Revolutionary War banners, bearing a rattlesnake and the motto “Don’t Tread on Me.” The flag, with its connotations to Minuteman militias, provides a clue that Mr. Fortier might have shared McVeigh’s far-right hatred of the Federal Government.”

When the FBI searched Fortier’s house they found guns and in a storage shed, a “Right Wing Book” titled, “Citizen’s Guide to the Constitution.”

The writer of this New York Times article, John Kifner, showed in the writing the Left Wing bent of the New York Times. After all, why should American citizens need to know anything about our Constitution? And, horrors if the American people became knowledgeable of the Constitution and its contents and then forced our politicians to actually abide by it!

A friend who was in Kingman called me during the FBI occupation and said “there’s an FBI agent on every street corner! People are afraid to even go outside.”

But in the end, the FBI found that it was Fortier’s trailer that McVeigh used as an address to open a drop box at the Mail Room in Kingman. The address there was under his name, and his alias of Tim Tuttle. With over 100 FBI agents occupying Kingman, and shadowing Fortier everywhere he went, he eventually agreed to testify before the federal Grand Jury. Fortier became a states evidence witness against McVeigh.

CHAPTER 24

The Uphill Battle

"The battle of life is, in most cases, fought uphill; and to win it without a struggle were perhaps to win it without honor. If there were no difficulties there would be no success; if there were nothing to struggle for, there would be nothing to be achieved."

Samuel Smiles (Scottish author,

There comes a time when you know that the road you are on is a dead end. It is human nature to go as far as you can, but eventually, when the path you are on is not proceeding in the right direction, it is time to find a new route to successfully reach your destination.

This became obvious to me at about four months into the investigation. I really did want to try and trust the FBI—at least the local office to which I was assigned—with the leads and information that I and the Baker Street Irregulars were discovering, but it just wasn't working. With a very few exceptions in my 26 years as a police officer, I—and most of my fellow officers—considered the FBI the Black Hole. Everything you put in disappears and nothing ever comes back to you. By August of 1995 I finally knew that, no matter what we presented the feds, nothing would change their course. To my knowledge, they never followed any of our leads and I'm not even sure any of my reports or memos ever left the local office. The Black Hole description was once again proving true.

One day I decided to take one of my files to the Tulsa FBI office and sit down with Pete, my FBI contact agent. It was the file I had on the Clinton-Bush connection to the Iran/Contra affair. I wanted to feel Pete out and see if I could detect any recognition of the matter or if he was not in-the-know about who was involved and how deep the tangled web of players actually was. Or even if he cared.

When we sat down I began by briefing him on how, over time, I had obtained a certain amount of information that neither he, nor the FBI would have access to.

"Pete," I began, "I'm sure you know my recorded background. I'm sure you've done an extensive background check and that you know that the Defense Intelligence Agency has also done two extensive background checks on me for my Top Secret clearance. But what you don't know is that for several years I have had access into international issues that the government has been involved with—especially the CIA and certain foreign activities. The reason is that you probably have not checked my immediate family members. That said, I'll give you a short briefing so that when I open this file you might give it some credibility. I don't actually expect you or anyone in this office to do anything about it, but it will hopefully at least make you understand that the memos and reports I've given you just might have some credibility."

As Pete sat there I began. "First, let me tell you who my father is. He is a World War II Marine, and when he got out of the service in 1946 he found a job on the shipping dock of Byron Jackson Oil Tools in Los Angeles. Few people stay on their first job for long, but my dad was a hard core Tennessee farm boy who grew up on the family farm during the Depression. Because of that he was grateful for any job that was not on a farm. To get to the point he stayed with Byron Jackson for 40 years.

“When I was five years old my parents divorced. For various reasons my dad got custody of me and my little brother who was still in the crib then. We lived with my dad in an apartment in Bell, California for a year, then he was promoted to Sales, and we were transferred to Oklahoma City when I was in the fifth grade. The next year he received another promotion to district manager for Oklahoma and we were transferred to Tulsa to the B.J. Tools plant here. When I graduated from high school, I joined the Marines and left home. But my family, which now included a step brother and step sister and a half brother received a transfer to Europe. I missed that move by just a few months, so my overseas tour was Vietnam while the rest got to see Europe.”

I knew Pete was wondering where I was going with this so I continued: “While in Europe, my dad was managing director for B.J. Oil Tools, which became B.J. Hughes when Byron Jackson was merged with Hughes Tool Company. Eventually Baker Oil bought B.J. Hughes to become Baker Hughes. But through these years, with my dad being involved in higher positions as time went by and also being able to travel to Russia and the Middle East, even to Siberia on business, he was able to see many things that would not be open to any of our government officials or organizations such as the CIA. This was during the Cold War and wherever Dad went he had a KGB escort who limited what he could photograph, or not. Still, he was able to remember a great deal of his travels and when he returned to his home office in the Hague or back in the U.S. he was always debriefed by the CIA or your FBI.”

I could see Pete was beginning to pay a bit more attention with the last statement.

“Also, you will find it interesting that it was my dad’s company, when it was B.J. Hughes, that outfitted the Hughes drilling ship, Glomar Explorer, under contract to the CIA with all of its lift equipment that was used to salvage the Russian submarine K-129 that sunk 1500 miles northwest of Hawaii in 1968. The salvage effort happened in 1974 and we were told that the Glomar Explorer was only able to raise a section of the bow and torpedo room. My dad, who was a senior official with the company then, later told me that ‘we got a lot more than that, but we couldn’t tell the Russians.” Needless to say, I have contacts through my father and his sources that are much more than most others would have. And when I was working on my first draft of Legacy of Dishonor (which later became The Medusa File) I ran the draft chapters by my dad and often I would receive more information back from not only him, but from his anonymous contacts.”

I could tell Pete was getting more interested in my tale by the minute.

“Now, my little brother. He joined the Marines a few years after I did and served in Southeast Asia as a helicopter crew chief. After that he went to work for Bell Helicopter International as a maintenance instructor in Isfahan, Iran, when the Shah was in power. When the Shah regime fell he managed to get all of his American team members out of the country and to safety, over land, just as the U.S. Embassy was taken along with more than 60 American hostages. After leaving Bell International, he went to work for Airitima Marritima Italiana Aviation Services, a CIA front company based out of London. His boss was one Ed Wilson, a CIA agent who was involved with a front company known as EATSCO, or Egyptian American Transport and Services Company, which was later caught selling explosives and weapons to Libya when Khadaffi was in power. No one other than the CIA knows why we would sell seven tons of C4 explosives and thousands of M-16 rifles to Libya, so let's keep that in mind when I tell you about what is in my file. Meanwhile, my brother was posted to Benghazi, Libya during the late 1970s and through the Reagan administration, and when we bombed Libya, he was one of those on the ground who gave bomb damage reports on the Benghazi airfield to his contacts."

I continued, "My brother, Brent, returned to the U.S. after that and went into the truck driving business out of Los Angeles. He met and married a Vietnamese woman who was a refugee who had fled Vietnam during the fall of Saigon. Unfortunately, she left a daughter behind. Brent evidently had valuable contacts within the covert action world. He disappeared one day and traveled to Thailand, then disappeared for several more days. When he returned to Bangkok he had the girl. He had no trouble getting her back to the U.S., so must have had State Department assistance. Later, he eventually went to work for Hughes Aircraft on the AH-64 Apache attack helicopter project where he remains today."

I ended my little briefing with "I guess you could say between my dad, my brother and me, I'm the only one who wasn't a spook."

Pete just sat there. Then he said "well, I guess we didn't know all that. But, what exactly does any of that have to do with the Oklahoma City case?"

"Pete, I'm just telling you that I'm not some jack-leg off the street with wild theories about the case. When I check something out that just doesn't add up, I run it by my father and my brother and see what they can offer. That said, I wanted to have your serious attention to what I'm about to go into. And if I'm right, then the motives behind why the Murrah Building was picked as a target will be totally different than what I believe is a cover story of McVeigh wanted to 'strike back' for Waco."

"I'm listening," said Pete.

What I'm about to relate here all began during World War II. After the Japanese invaded China and Indochina (Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia), we sent an OSS team (maybe more than one) to the Golden Triangle to take over the French opium poppy fields.

Known as Detachment 101, the team consisted of Paul Helliwell, Ray S. Cline, Richard Helms, E. Howard Hunt, Jake Esterline, Mitchell WerBell, John K. Singlaub, Jack Anderson, Robert Emmett Johnson and Lucien Conein. Others working in China at that time included Tommy Corcoran, Whiting Willauer and William Pawley. Of note is Lucien Conein, known as "Black Luigi," who became the liaison between the opium production and smuggling out of the Golden Triangle to the Corsican Mafia, who was part of the French underground. After World War II the smuggling to the Corsican Mafia grew into smuggling heroin into the United States in what later became the "French Connection" case.

Next, E. Howard Hunt, who was part of Nixon's "Plumbers" during the Watergate scandal, was later CIA and worked for CIA Station Chief Theodore "Ted" Shackley during the anti-Castro days when they had the CIA's JM/WAVE control headquarters in Florida. Hunt was later identified as one of the "tramps" that was caught in the train yard next to Dealey Plaza when JFK was assassinated.

Then we have Mitch WerBell, a self-styled mercenary who was also the inventor of the Scionics sound suppressor used by the U.S. military and the CIA during the Vietnam war.

Richard Helms later served as Director of the CIA from June 1966 to February 1973. He was involved in several plans to assassinate Castro and did not hesitate to use assassination as a political weapon. He was also implicated in the opium smuggling that occurred in the Golden Triangle of Laos, Cambodia, Burma (Myanmar) and part of Vietnam during the war in Vietnam and after—and that still goes on today.

William Pawley was instrumental in forming the Flying Tigers, and also in obtaining air assets for Detachment 101. He later was appointed ambassador to Peru, and several researchers have implicated him in the Kennedy assassination as one of the planners. A close friend of both President Dwight Eisenhower and CIA director Allen Dulles, he took part in a policy that later become known as Executive Action (a plan to remove unfriendly foreign leaders from power). Pawley played a role in Operation Success, a CIA plot to overthrow the Guatemalan government of Jacobo Arbenz in 1954 after he introduced land reforms and nationalized the United Fruit Company. Pawley was also heavily involved in anti-Castro operations.

John K. Singlaub was later career Army and remained heavily involved in special operations and clandestine operations. As a specialist in unconventional warfare and covert operations, General Singlaub kept a low profile. However, he eventually became chief of staff of the United Nations Command in South Korea. He was forced to resign in May, 1978, after criticizing President Jimmy Carter and his plans to reduce the number of troops in South Korea. According to Peter Dale Scott, ten days before his retirement, Singlaub attended a meeting of right-wingers who “Didn’t think the country was being run properly and were interested in doing something about it.” The meeting was hosted by Mitch WerBell.

Singlaub then joined forces with Ted Shackley, Ray Cline and Richard Helms to get Jimmy Carter removed from the White House. In December, 1979, Singlaub and retired General Daniel Graham headed a delegation from the American Security Council, a private right-wing organization, on a trip to Guatemala. Singlaub pointed out that Ronald Reagan “recognizes that a good deal of dirty work has to be done” in order to destroy communism in Guatemala. “Death squad activity in Guatemala increased dramatically following the trip.” Upon his return to the United States, Singlaub called for “sympathetic understanding of the Guatamalan death squads”

As one can see, these particular members of Detachment 101 continued in clandestine services, often involving drug smuggling to support covert operations, for decades after WWII.

When the war in Vietnam was underway the CIA, through Theodore Shackley and Thomas Clines worked with Pepsi Cola to establish a heroin processing plant in the old Pepsi Cola bottling plant outside Vientiane, Laos. Raw opium was smuggled into Vientiane through Air America flights that brought it out of the Golden Triangle. It was then processed and smuggled out though various conduits including the South Vietnamese Air Force, commanded by Air Vice Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky’s air transports, to Saigon. From there it either ended up in the veins of American troops in Vietnam, or it was sent inside dead GI bodies to Travis Air Base in San Francisco, or to Europe or Australia. The money was laundered through a clandestine bank known as the Nugan Hand bank in Australia, run by an Australian lawyer named Francis John Nugan and a Special Forces soldier named Michael Hand,. When that arrangement was discovered the bank (which had 13 branches around the world, all headed by retired admirals or generals), shut down, it re-emerged with a different name in Honolulu: the BBRDW Bank (for Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham and Wong). When that bank was discovered to be conducting illicit activities, massive amounts of drug money was then laundered through the criminal enterprise known as BCCI (Bank of Credit and Commerce International), or, as we in law enforcement knew it "The Bank of Crooks and Criminals International. Eventually, when BCCI was exposed as nothing more than a huge drug money laundering enterprise, it dissolved. In 1990, BCCI was convicted of money laundering for the Columbian Cocaine cartels in Miami. In 1991, BCCI collapsed and millions of investors in 73 countries lost their life savings.

After the BCCI collapse the cartels and the CIA had to find other methods of laundering drug money. This was not difficult. Due to the amounts of money involved, counted in the billions of dollars, large banks could easily be bribed to deposit the money in various accounts, transfer it as needed, and keep their mouths shut. In February of 2016 several U.S. families brought suit against one such bank. A group of families in the United States whose relatives were killed by Mexican drug cartels filed a lawsuit against the large financial institution HSBC, alleging that the bank's admitted laundering of roughly $881 million for the Sinaloa, Juárez, and Los Zetas cartels played a key role in the deaths of their loved ones.

"Money laundering is the lifeblood of the Mexican drug cartels, enabling them to construct a façade of legitimacy through which they establish, continue, and grow their global enterprises," the families' lawyers wrote in the complaint filed in federal court, alleging that cartels use that money to buy the weapons, vehicles, and the public officials needed to operate. "Thus, by facilitating the laundering of billions of dollars of drug cartel proceeds through its banks, HSBC materially supported the terrorist acts of the cartels, including the terrorist acts committed against the families."

After I explained all of this to Pete, I could still see he was puzzled as to why I was bringing it up.

What does all of this history have to do with the Oklahoma City bombing case? To understand just why the Murrah Building was targeted we need to follow the trail from the CIA's drug smuggling operations during Iran/Contra to understand how all of this connects.

After the fall of Saigon and the end of the Vietnam war, CIA agents Ted Shackley and his old Laos opium smuggling partner Thomas Clines were heavily involved in establishing the Cali and Medellin drug cartels in Columbia. The purpose was to use drug profits to support the Contra forces in Nicaragua in their efforts to oust Nicaraguan dictator Daniel Ortega, who was sympathetic to both Fidel Castro and Russia. Certain factions of the U.S. Government feared that Nicaragua would become another Cuba and were determined to do a better job of ousting Ortega than they did in their attempts to get rid of the Castro brothers.

While Clines was busy setting up the banking conduits, including accounts in the Cayman Islands, Shackley was organizing the cartels and establishing methods of moving the Cocaine shipments North. What would happen when the drugs hit the streets of America was of no concern to these two operatives, or to anyone else that was involved, for that matter.

The reason the CIA wanted two cartels was for control. They wanted competition in order to get the best prices for the "product," and they wanted to pitch the two cartels against each other if necessary to control the powerful drug lords.

The system worked well at first. The flights out of Columbia made a stop in Panama where Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega skimmed off his percentage. At the same time two Israeli Mossad agents, Amiram Nir (who later died in a suspicious plane crash in Mexico in 1998), and Michael Harare, both of whom served as Noriega's personal body guards, trained his elite security forces and were his Israeli contacts, took a percentage for Israel. The drugs taken by the Israelis were smuggled into Florida in fishing boats belonging to a front company named Sea Trader Incorporated. The profits went to Israel and reportedly were used to finance the Israeli Nuclear weapons program at their Nuclear facility in Dimona, Israel.

The invasion of Panama, codenamed "Operation Just Cause," had to do with Noriega's greed and his skimming too much off the top of the drug shipments, not the "official lie" that he was consorting with Colombian drug lords and was part of a drug smuggling network himself. He was, but that was only used against him with media spin. After Noriega was arrested, and Harare and Nir escaped due to advance warning of the invasion by leaks within our own CIA, the flow of drugs continued unabated—and much more profitable.

The drugs that were left after Noriega and the Israelis got their cut were then flown by clandestine drug flights in both private airplanes and CIA contract airplanes (such as Southern Air Transport, and by Barry Seal in Lear Jets or his C-123 cargo plane named "Fat Lady") to a private ranch in Honduras or to El Salvador's Ilopango Air Base. Ilopango was used by both the Salvadoran Air Force and the CIA. It was an arms transshipment point for the Contras on inbound flights and a drug transshipment point for drugs going North, which included both cocaine and in some instances bales of marijuana. One CIA agent in Columbia said that for $400 worth of Marijuana in Columbia, it would turn $40,000 profit in the U.S. in street value. Cocaine was much more profitable, and easier to pack into smaller loads and smaller planes.

From Honduras and El Salvador the drugs were split up and flown into the U.S. by at least two routes to destinations for further distribution—not including all of the small cross-border smuggling or offshore coastal drops that some of the planes did. Even oil platforms in the Gulf of Mexico were used by helicopters and small boats. Many of the platforms belonged to Zapata Petroleum out of Houston, Texas, a Bush family operation, and one which my father knew well. One smuggling route by air was across Mexico and Arizona into California, and the second was across Mexico, sometimes landing to refuel or drop off partial shipments, then to Mena, Arkansas. Mena, according to some law enforcement officials in Arkansas, was not a huge distribution point for drugs, but more often was used to modify airplanes for the long flights at Mena's Rich Mountain Aviation, which had a contract with the CIA. The key point on Mena is the amount of cash that came into the facility that was either deposited in Arkansas banks, in amounts less than $10,000 per deposit, or dropped in duffel bags full of cash on a ranch owned by Dan Lasater, a good friend of Governor Bill Clinton. The money in the bags was picked up by other Clinton associates and taken to the Rose Law Firm where, according to sources in Little Rock, Hillary Clinton, Webb Hubbell and Vince Foster logged the money in. Then it was banked in Little Rock, then laundered by Jackson Stephens through his firm of Systematics, Inc., using stolen PROMIS software, to other banks and savings and loans across the country.

A huge cut went to the Clinton's for helping to cover up the Mena operation, while the major portion was being funneled into the Iran/Contra arms-for-drugs efforts being run at the top by then Vice President George H.W. Bush (himself former CIA) and CIA Director William Casey

The Flow Chart I drew for Pete Rickel of the FBI

There were many others involved, and eventually the house of cards fell when the Iran/Contra investigations began. The Democratic-controlled Congress did not want to interfere in the Nicaraguan situation, black funding, and Oliver North and others making deals to send American-made missiles to Iran in exchange for hostages being held by Hezbollah.

By then the drug cartels were thoroughly entrenched, the routes established, the money conduits working well, and the Mexican cartels were now involved and on the rise.

It was during the late 1980s and early 1990s that certain Mexican drug cartels began smuggling massive quantities of drugs across the border by various means that ran from truckloads, airplanes, and even drug tunnels. The “War on Drugs” was not succeeding, and would not succeed because the CIA still had its source of black funding, and when the war in Afghanistan began, it only got worse. Northeastern Afghanistan is one of the Opium growing capitals of the world, and is only getting bigger, overtaking the Golden Triangle.

When I met with Pete, I laid out all of this information (except the Afghan connections since they were not in play to my knowledge in 1995 when this meeting took place). Then I brought up, again, after the phone call from Little Rock when an alleged government agent (either DEA or IRS—and I suspect DEA) said their files on the Clinton drug involvement and money laundering were sent to Oklahoma City and hidden in the Murrah Building.

I mentioned that some people speculated that the files were about the Waco massacre, others the Clinton’s Whitewater scam, and others about Agent Orange usage in Vietnam. I never considered any of these to be relevant or true. But records that could threaten the Clintons, and George H.W. Bush, not to mention several members of the Dixie Mafia, the CIA, and other private businessmen and government officials? That would explain everything: why the conspirators would pick that building, the boxes of files removed on Day One despite so many people trapped in the building that needed rescuing, and the threat to future politicians who may have been part of the Iran/Contra operation

When I finished my story, including showing Pete diagrams of the connections of the players, the drug routes, and the money distribution and laundering methods, I waited for his reaction. I only wanted to make him understand that I—and others in the Baker Street Irregulars—should not be dismissed out of hand. Also, I wanted him to know that a massive coverup was underway, and that this whole affair just might eventually blow up in the FBI's face along with several prominent politicians. Especially Bill and Hillary Clinton.

I also wanted to make him understand that Juan Garcia Abrego did fit into all of this, and Pete had been the one who told me "he doesn't exist."

Pete's answer to all of this: "Thanks, I'll give this all some thought."

And that's the last word I ever heard of it from him or from his office. Who do you turn to when the guardians refuse to guard?

Mexican drug lord Juan Garcia Abrego, who my FBI contact said did not exist, being escorted off a plane in Houston, Texas in January 1996.

It was indeed an up hill battle. No matter what I did, no matter what the others did, it went nowhere. The FBI, which had the responsibility for bringing the case to a successful conclusion refused to follow up on all the material and information we provided. None of the information we had on the Middle Eastern Connection was addressed. They dismissed the solid leads to other John Does. They removed the video surveillance cameras from the scene around the Murrah Building, and covered up the mounting holes, and painted over them. They refused to acknowledge the existence of the video tapes until Jesse Trentadue forced them in court to admit that some existed, and they did everything they could to intimidate witnesses, change stories, change testimony, change reports, and obscure facts. Then they demolished the building before any independent investigators could inspect it, and had the rubble buried in a guarded location.

The media was just as complicit. Anyone who attempted to point out any of the above was ostracized, denied, and attacked. In the Tulsa World alone a huge editorial department and political cartoonist stooped to the lowest forms of yellow journalism to attack anyone who attempted to expose the truth. Charles Key, and anyone in the OBIC were free game, as were myself and others who tried to just open their minds a crack to let in some light. That, trying to get the media to understand anything other than the official Clinton-Reno government version was an exercise in futility. The media was controlled, and still is.

Hopefully, one day all that may change. Attorney Jesse Trentadue's continuing law suits have developed several damning depositions showing how much the case was mishandled by the FBI and how much it has been covered up. Just as at fault are the local politicians from the governor's office on down to the Oklahoma City government and Oklahoma City police department.

One recent discovery by the Oklahoma City Medical Examiners Office is in regards to the single left leg of a female dressed in camouflaged fatigues that was found at the scene on Day One that did not belong to any of the victims bodies. All limbs of victims, except for that one, were accounted for. I held hope for a new break in the case when a Washington Times article of December 7th, 2015 by Jeffrey Scott Shapiro came out: "The Oklahoma City Medical Examiner has partial DNA from an unmatched left leg collected from the ruins of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building bombing, reviving the possibility of a 169th unidentified victim from the 1995 terror attack as well as defense lawyers' long-held belief that Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols had an additional accomplice.

"An Oklahoma state forensics expert told The Washington Times the DNA tests were conducted by a private lab about two years after the attack, and no known person who was in the vicinity of the building the day of the bombing is presently unaccounted for.

"The Office of the Chief Medical Examiner has a copy of the results. However, the results are confidential pursuant to state law, Oklahoma Chief Toxicologist Dr. Bryon Curtis said."

To date nothing more has been said of this possible break through. The battle continues up hill.

CHAPTER 25

Never let the truth stand in the way

N*unquam veritatem fabulae bonae impedire sinamus*—Never let the truth stand in the way of a good story—or a "good" investigation…

To do a proper and thorough investigation of this magnitude, it would take a large staff of professional investigators, researchers, evidence technicians, and field operatives, of which only the federal government could field and support. Our small band of Baker Street Irregulars did all we could do as an ad hoc team, and surprisingly we accumulated more true evidence, developed a wider range of leads, and were obviously much more open-minded than the FBI and DoJ. The longer we dug into the case and each of us followed our various leads, the closer we got to the truth.

In the beginning there were, counting the members of Rep. Charles Keys' OBIC and the Irregulars, approximately 18 of us. That number dwindled over time and within 18 months only a handful of us remained. Eventually, those that trudged ahead were myself, David Hoffman, and Jayna Davis. David's part culminated in his book The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror. Jayna wrote her book, The Third Terrorist, OBIC released The Final Report on the Oklahoma City Bombing, and now my book, The Medusa File II—The Politics of Terror and the Oklahoma City Bombing.

I have to at this point recognize and compliment those who, despite the dangers involved, were brave enough to press forward in the investigation. For those of us who stood fast, it was "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!"

But it's not over. As long as these books remain in print, and the various video documentaries are produced, the investigation will never cease until the full story is told and the "others unknown" are brought to justice.

For those that fall for the "Oswald did it by himself" scenario, and the "McVeigh's dead, Nichols is in prison, case closed" scenario, no amount of truth or facts will make a difference. But for those who know in their gut that the complete truth is still out there, these and other books will open many doors.

And for those who think McVeigh and Nichols, unaided, pulled off, at the time, the biggest terrorist event on U.S. soil in history, I would like to quote from Attorney Stephen Jones outstanding book Others Unknown—The Oklahoma City Bombing Case and Conspiracy:

Stephen Jones, during his investigation as McVeigh's defense attorney, traveled to Wales and England to confer with experts that might be of help in the case. One such meeting was with a retired British army officer who had done service in British Internal Security, or MI5, and had been involved in tracking down IRA terrorists in Northern Ireland. After having heard Mr. Jones' explanation of the event, the retired officer said, "I'm not sure your chaps (meaning McVeigh and Nichols) didn't do it. I'm just telling you that no one else has ever been able to do it that way. Since we've been keeping records, and that goes way back before 1968, there has been no major incident of terrorism anywhere in the world, where anything like this number of people were killed and injured, that was the work of only two men. If it was that easy, we would have bombs going off in London all the time. Terrorism requires an infrastructure, supplies, financing, safehouses, a getaway plan, lookouts, engineers, and leadership.

"So, if your clients are guilty, they and no others, one has to ask oneself: What did Terry Nichols and Tim McVeigh know that the PLO, the General Command for the Liberation of Palestine, Black September, and the Provos of the IRA, and every other terrorist organization in the world that uses ammonium nitrate bombs, didn't know?"

He continued "If your clients are guilty, Mr. Jones, I hope, before your government executes them, that you will make them available to the rest of us, so we can ind out how they did it."

It should be obvious to the reader at this point that the official Clinton-Reno false flag story that McVeigh, with a little help from Nichols, managed to build a sophisticated truck bomb powerful enough to do, by itself, the damage that was done to the Murrah Building with no outside assistance is a lie. It should also be obvious that the damage was done with the aid of internal explosives strategically placed on select columns, that the blast from those explosives blew outwards, and that not all of them went off as planned. According to OCPD officer Don Browning, who was one of the first officers in the building, the most significant damage was in the "cut" in the back of the building (where the "V" is located in photographs). Also, according to survivor Jane Graham, plastic explosives or demolition charges were place on columns in the parking garage area beneath the building by three unknown individuals (with one later being identified as Andreas Strassmeir).

Besides what is known, above, when we take all the known facts and put the pieces of the puzzle together we begin to form a very convincing picture of what happened before, during, and after the bombing.

The key points that make up the case

From what we know and can prove, and what we are convinced did occur but cannot prove, the events, when tied together, present this series of events:

1. The original "conspiracy theory" was that the Murrah Building was actually a federal government "sting" operation gone wrong. We know that the building had been staked out, and according to some witnesses it had been staked out all night but the stake out was called of around 6 a.m. when the Ryder truck had not shown up. We have witnesses who saw men with hoop antennas, like they were trying to track a transponder that may have been on the truck, and we know the Oklahoma Sheriff's office had deputies on stake out a block away taking photographs of the building early that morning, captured the image of a USP truck in front of the building entrance just before 9 a.m., which caused McVeigh to stop the truck a block short, where witnesses saw him and another man talking on the sidewalk.
2. We know that witnesses saw two "Middle Eastern males" in blue jogging suits in front of the Murrah Building entrance who held the parking spot for the Ryder truck when the UPS truck left. We know they then ran down the sidewalk to their parked brown GM pickup truck described as having dark windows and a smoked glass bug shield on the front, then leaving the scene at a high rage of speed.

3. We know McVeigh and John Doe 2 exited the Ryder truck and managed to leave the scene in McVeigh's yellow Mercury.
4. Witnesses in the building described first a rumble, then a larger explosion, indicating two separate events. Seismograph tapes also showed two distinct events, and later when the building was imploded there was only one seismograph event recorded.
5. On Day One all rescue personnel, with a few exceptions, were pulled back away from the building after it was announced that more devices were found in the building.
6. Also, later on Day One, everyone was pulled back again while unmarked and unidentified "federal agents" swarmed to the building to remove boxes of files and even filing cabinets, while leaving victims still trapped in the rubble who required rescue and medical attention.
7. Sgt. Don Browning, of the Oklahoma City Police Department, described a tour of the building at one time prior to the bombing where he was shown security cameras on the south side of the building (where the Ryder truck would be parked). But all security cameras in the vicinity, their recording equipment, and all of the video tapes were confiscated by the FBI. Then, not only were the mounting holes patched up an painted over, but even the wiring was torn out of the walls so that there would later be no evidence of any video cameras recording the scene, or video tapes that would be the OKC version of the Zapruder Film.
8. McVeigh's military record is very strange. McVeigh was a model soldier during his service in Desert Storm as a Bradley Fighting Vehicle gunner, he made sergeant before any of his peers, and he even received a Bronze Star medal. He applied for Special Forces after returning to the States, but according to contacts at Fort Bragg, he dropped out due to problems with his feet, or not being able to pass the physical requirements (both of which are ridiculous excuses by the Army since McVeigh kept himself in top physical condition). Then, according to what McVeigh wrote to his sister, he had been selected with ten other soldiers for a "special team" that did covert operations both inside the U.S. and abroad. These actions included running drugs, robbery, dirty tricks, and even assassinations. His records say he was discharged in 1991, however he was seen and videotaped in uniform driving an M-113 Armored Personnel Carrier in 1993 at Camp Grafton, North Dakota, where he told the photographer "I'm nobody. I'm a parts clerk." We know he worked at Calspan, Inc. as a security guard for Burns Security Services, and it was during this time that he may have been subjected to mind control indoctrination and training. Later, when apprehended, he showed no emotion for the bombing or the deaths he had caused, and after being found guilty and given the death sentence he also showed no emotion. Then later, he refused any court appeals and demanded to be executed as soon as possible. Finally, there are many questions concerning whether he was actually executed or not. We also know that Nichols wrote that "Sarge will take care of us," and that he and McVeigh would split $2.5 million that, according to Nichols, had been set aside for them, probably in an offshore account if this is true. As for Nichols, he had asked to be interviewed by the media on more than one occasion, but all requests have been denied by the government, and his request to be interviewed by then-Attorney General John Ashroft was never even acknowledged.

9. Any witness that wanted to come forward with any story other than the official version was intimidated by the FBI, ignored, or forced to change their story. Some witnesses died shortly after the event, and any so-called “suicide” was highly questionable, if not an outright coverup of a homicide.
10. Nichols made several trips to the Philippines and met with terrorists. He had no job and no money, yet someone paid all his expenses for the trips. We know he met with Abu Sayyaf, the Philippine Muslim terrorist group, which included 1993 World Trade Center bomber Ramzi Yousef, Mohammed Wali Khan, Edwin Angeles and Khalid Sheik Mohammed among others. We also know that Khan’s and KSM’s boss was none other than Osama bin Laden.
11. While this was going on, radical White Separatists were being influence by a German national named Andreas Strassmeir. Strassmeir was a lieutenant in the Panzer Grenadiers in Germany, and his father was a top aid to German chancellor Helmut Kohl. Evidence points to him also working for German intelligence missions dealing with covert operations. Those in contact with Strassmeir were ATF informant Carol Howe, radical racist Dennis Mahon, and Timothy McVeigh. Also in contact were various members of the Aryan Republican Army “Midwest Bank Robbers.” Mahon admitted casing the Murrah Building, and driving the second Ryder truck that was seen as a diversion in Bricktown along with one of the John Doe 2s on the morning of April 19th.
12. The so-called ARA bank robbery gang was infiltrated with at least three federal informants, and the FBI knew in advance every robbery that occurred, or at least who was involved in a robbery after the fact, but took their time in apprehending them. Was these robberies to be a layer of the onion regarding who helped finance the bombing, or allow the robberies to continue to use them to build a plausible means of finance? That would be a plausible explanation.
13. If the files that were removed from the federal building on Day One were the files on the Iran/Contra and Mena drug smuggling and money laundering operations, that would incriminate the president and first lady at the time, they would connect with the CIA, Colombian cartel drug smuggling, the Mexican Mafia drug cartels, many federal agents and government bureaucrats, and expose more of what we knew about the arms-for-hostages, and guns for Contras operation. But most of all, if those files were the DEA and/or IRS files from Little Rock that showed the Clintons being involved in these activities they would be shocking evidence of criminal activity on their part that might lead to impeachment or worse. Such files might also have led to exposing various high-level crime figures in northwest Arkansas, Georgia, Florida, Texas and California.
14. The Colombian and Mexican cartels were initially organized by the CIA, just as the opium running out of the Golden Triangle had been organized in the past, and by the same CIA officers and chain-of-command. The cartels also had liaison with Islamic terrorist groups, and still do today. Intelligence sources here and abroad confirm that Islamics do not hesitate in using “White neo-Nazis” to do their bidding, thereby tying in the Middle Eastern Connection, Nichols trips to the Philippines to meet with Abu Sayyaf, Colombian and Mexican drug running, and certain Americans both inside and outside government service. Basically, when one understands that the drug running into the United States is a coordinated international affair between all of the above entities and players, then the picture becomes much more clear.

15. To try to bring an end to the investigation the FBI declared that after thousands of agents, investigating and hundreds of thousands of reports, that the apprehension of McVeigh and Nichols ended the case. According to the FBI, the Doj, and the Clinton White House, there are no others involved. The official version, backed-up by the controlled media, is that McVeigh did the bombing by himself (even though Mike Moroz at Johnny's Tire Store saw McVeigh in the Ryder truck with another individual as did others at the scene) for revenge for the Waco massacre. The FBI alleges that only Nichols helped build the bomb. Both McVeigh and Nichols were arrested and found guilty. Case closed. But if you try to dig into the case by filing FOIAs, you will either be denied and told that it is an open and ongoing investigation, or it is sealed because of "National Security."

16. After McVeigh and Nichols were in federal custody Andreas Strassmeir, who federal authorities never once interviewed, felt he needed to quickly leave the country and return to Germany as soon as possible. Even though he had been an informant to the Southern Poverty Law Center, a very Left Wing organization, he turned to Kirk Lyons of the Cause Foundation for help, a very Right Wing law office which is exactly the opposite of the SPLC. Kirk Lyons wrote on Cause Foundation letterhead in an undated letter to supporters that "Living in Elohim City was a friend of CAUSE Directors Kirk Lyons and Dave Hollaway, Andreas C. Strassmeir. Strassmeir is a German national who's [sic] father just retired as secretary of State for West Germany." The letter goes on to say Stephen Jones "has subpoenaed CAUSE Director Kirk Lyons and Strassmeir to testify in McVeigh's case." Lyons then decides to ignore the subpoena and instead writes "Strassmeir had to be spirited out of the country before Jones and company could get their hands on him. Also, there was some danger that the FBI might take Jones seriously and it would be much easier to defend Strassmeir from German than from inside a federal detention facility. This required a clandestine and circuitous route through Mexico, Paris, Frankfurt and Berlin, with numerous investigators, agents and process servers one step behind. Next, Associate Director Dave Hollaway had to go with him; there were numerous obstacle which developed and had to be overcome; language barriers, entanglements with four countries' border and immigrations service, security etc. At one point the Kriminal Polizei and Bundes Grenschutzgruppen 9 (GSG-9) were involved because of death threats against Strassmeir and his family passed to them through Interpol by the FBI." Taking all of this at face value we know that no one stopped Strassmeir from leaving, and the FBI and other organizations even warned Strassmeir of death threats to the point of having to have him protected by the German Criminal Police and the Special Operations GSG-9, of which Strassmeir was possibly a member. Also a factor in this is a reference we found in one report that states that David Michael Alexander Hollaway served 8 years in Special Forces as a Green Beret, and that he allegedly also was at one time a pilot for the CIA and that he had a well-established connection to the FBI. Also of note is that Lyons had lived at Elohim City during the Fort Smith sedition trials, and Hollaway had married one of the group's young girls. Strassmeir, who had lived at Elohim City and advocated blowing up federal buildings, and had trained the residents there to be their own "militia," and had been friends with McVeigh, Mahon, and the members of the ARA, was allowed to escape and never extradited to face charges.

17. Attorney Jesse Trentadue filed a lawsuit over his brother's death while his brother, Kenneth Trentadue, was in federal custody, and filed several FOIA requests for records and for the tapes of the surveillance cameras in FBI custody. He was fought by the DoJ and FBI at every step. He also obtained depositions from several key individuals that still may lead to more discovery of the truth about the event. He also obtained critical FBI reports that exposed the FBI's "PATCON" operations against "American Patriots" and the Right Wing.
18. The "Violent Crime Control And Law Enforcement Act Of 1994," which was on stalled in Congress was passed into law. It became the predecessor to the Patriot Act passed after 9/11. Both take liberties away from American citizens and increase government power.
19. The Clintons never face an official investigation into their involvement with the Mena affair, money laundering, or being ancillary to drug running.
20. "Others Unknown" remain at large.

Further proof of the files being taken:

One of Jesse Trentadue's depositions was with OCPD, officer Sergeant Don Browning. In it, several of the questions concerned things that happened on Day One.:

"16. The second witness is Donald Browning, a retired Oklahoma City Police Officer. Mr. Browning's duties as an Oklahoma City Police Officer included assisting the Secret Service in providing security for visiting federal officials. The Secret Service's Office was likewise located in the Murrah Building.

"17. Mr. Browning was familiar with the external security or surveillance cameras on the Murrah Building. The last time he toured the Murrah Building the cameras were operating, the images from those cameras were being recorded on videotape and those videotapes were being stored. Mr. Browning testimony involved removal of the surveillance cameras. According to Mr. Browning:

"A. Browning: We were told by a female, a white Caucasian female, wearing an FBI rain jacket, … that there were files so critical to the government that there would be no recovery effort. We were told to stand our ground on the courtyard of the Murrah Building … and they would let us know when we would be allowed back into the building. [Emphasis mine]

"Q. So you testified that a female in an FBI jacket came into the area and stopped, prevented you, made you leave the area, preventing you from rescuing others so that in your words critical files could be recovered. Is that – is that correct?

“A. Yes, sir. That is exactly what she told us.

“Q. If I was prevented from rescuing people who were potentially in harms way I would be pretty upset about that. Were you?

“A Yes, sir, extremely upset.

“19. While standing outside waiting to be allowed to re-enter the Murrah Building and continue in his efforts, Mr. Browning saw several men wearing FBI rain jackets remove surveillance cameras from the building:

“Q. And explain to the court what you saw in terms of being removed. Who removed them?

“A. There was three or four men wearing FBI rain jackets using an extension ladder and they were removing not only the camera but the bracketing and a good distance of the wiring.

“Q. Fair to say that they were removing all evidence of the camera having been there?

“A. Yes, sir.

“16. Mr. Browning’s testimony about the surveillance cameras being removed that morning is confirmed by Trial Exhibit 20, which contains photographs taken immediately after the bombing. This Exhibit shows the ladder described by Browning that was used by men wearing FBI jackets to remove the surveillance cameras, the surveillance cameras in place and the same location after the cameras had been removed, just as Browning had testified.

“20. It is also noteworthy that the FBI had known of the substance of the of what was on the tapes.”

In 2011, Chris Emery, who had been involved in the later investigations into the OKC bombing, and especially into the death of Terry Yeakey, called me and asked if I would be willing to help, and appear in, a new documentary film about the bombing. He had joined a group of concerned film producers who were working on a expose’ for Free Mind Films. I agreed to assist, and on a given date the film crew arrived at my location in Northeast Oklahoma. We spent half a day setting up and filming the interview. The end result, A Noble Lie, was a very well-done video in DVD format, and also available on the internet. As of this writing the documentary is also available to watch for free on Youtube. The only issue I had with the documentary was that it went more into Yeakey’s death than any other topic, and left out the Middle Eastern connection completely. I asked Chris about this later, and he told me that they planned on a second production that would include that part of the case. Unfortunately, that never happened. Instead, the second DVD, written and produced by one of the crew members, Wendy Painting, was State of Mind about government mind control. Still, the production of A Noble Lie continues to educate many who know nothing about the case, and those born long after 1995.

CHAPTER 26

How it All Comes Together

An honest witness does not deceive, but a false witness pours out lies.

Proverbs 14:15

There comes a time in an investigation that the investigator must take all of the information and the pieces of the puzzle and see if it forms a picture. Seldom are all the pieces in place, and more so when the investigator is limited by the resources available during the investigation. So it was with my efforts, and those of the Baker Street Irregulars as the months and years passed by after that terrible day in April, 1995.

There are many pieces of the puzzle that we uncovered and investigated that are directly connected to the bombing, but that the government either discredits, deny's or refuses to even acknowledge. The government's "investigation," extolled to be the biggest, most thorough investigation in the history of the FBI, totally ignores reams of solid leads, eye witness statements, input from other investigators, and the solid evidence that exists or had existed prior to being seized or destroyed by the FBI under orders of the DoJ and Attorney General Janet Reno. It should be obvious to the reader at this point that a massive coverup had been orchestrated at the highest levels, and continues to exist to this day.

I have attempted to provide the reader with the majority of the information that I, and those who helped in the investigation have available. I have combed my case files and brought forth as much as I could that would provide the reader with the facts of the case and the information that would prove that the bombing of the Murrah Federal Building was not a happenstance event, and that there were more people involved than just Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols.

There are lists of unanswered questions; questions the government agencies refuse to answer. When important documents were eventually released due to efforts of such patriotic people as attorneys Jesse Trentadue, Stephen Jones and Mike Johnston, they are heavily redacted to the point that makes them almost useless. If it were not for the courageous few who continued to drive on with the investigation, the case would have died within months of the bombing. As long as there are Americans—including the generations to come—that will not let the dragon of deceit stay in its cave, then there is hope that those involved in the criminal coverup, and possibly those that participated in the actual event in one form or another besides McVeigh and Nichols will eventually be identified, apprehended and brought to justice. The Oklahoma City bombing is not just a case of terrorism, it was a planned event that took the lives of 168 innocent people—Americans all. Those guilty of perpetrating the tragedy, supporting it in various manners from planning, to logistics, to finances, and covering it up to this day—are all guilty of murder. The Oklahoma City bombing is a homicide case, and murder has no statute of limitations.

In police work, cases all have three basic elements: Means, Motive and Opportunity. Someone has to have the means to accomplish the act—including the logistics—then they must have a motive to do so. Finally, an opportunity must exist to accomplish the crime.

The Oklahoma City bombing is no different. To understand the investigation one must fill in those blanks. This means asking question and finding answers. Some questions in this case will go unanswered other than addressing theories. Others have answers that are provable. The challenge is filling in the blanks between the theories and the facts. By taking what has been presented in this writing, we can sum up the main questions and where possible, the answers. As we examine the below questions, answers and evidence, it is easy to use the “D’s” to deal with the “official government version.” By peeling off the layers of the onion we can get closer to the truth. And to do that is to show how the government version of events can be discredited or debunked. This includes alternate theories propagated on the Internet that divert the thrust of the investigation.

1. McVeigh left the Army after failing to qualify for Special Forces at Fort Bragg, became disgruntled after seeing what happened at Waco, then decided to strike back at the government by setting off a truck bomb at a federal building. He chose Oklahoma City.

The problem with this version is that the offices in the Murrah Building had nothing to do with Waco (with the exception of the small ATF office). If McVeigh was going to attack an ATF or FBI office that would be directly linked in public opinion with Waco, he would have selected the ATF office in New Orleans where the plan originated, or Waco where the event happened. Also, the federal agency involved in the final outcome of Waco was the FBI, yet no FBI office existed in the Murrah Building.

2. McVeigh left the Army in 1991 and was discharged. McVeigh did not qualify for Special Forces.

If McVeigh was no longer in the Army after 1991 how is it that he was video-taped in uniform as a soldier inside an armored personal carrier at Camp Grafton in 1993? McVeigh’s letter to his sister regarding being selected for a “special unit” that did nefarious things from drug running to money laundering to assassinations makes sense if one knows the inner workings of the “dirty tricks” community that has existed in special operations and CIA operations for decades. The original story that McVeigh was AWOL from the Army did not hold up upon questioning Army officials and was quickly discarded.

3. It was a “sting” operation gone wrong.

There is a certain amount of evidence and witness statements that support this claim. The Oklahoma County Sheriff’s office had a stakeout vehicle northeast of the Murrah Building that took photos of the UPS truck which arrived just before 9:00 a.m. that morning; witnesses saw lights moving around inside the Murrah Building during the night before; Rep. Ernest Istook stated to two different witnesses that the government had prior knowledge; the local bomb squad was on the scene early that morning, as was parked two blocks away when the truck arrived. They had been seen searching the grounds around the building that morning by several witnesses; men with “hoop antennas” were seen on the sidewalk that appeared to be searching for a signal such as a RF transmitter on the truck; some reports mention that John Doe #2 was a DEA agent—which is unlikely, and is probably disinformation to distract from the real JD#2. Still, JD#2 was seen by numerous witnesses, and managed to get away with McVeigh in the yellow Mercury, never be properly followed up on or apprehended.

3. Damage to the building was caused by the Ryder truck and barrels of ANFO.

We’ve shown that such a device could not have done the damage. The size of the crater is too small to match the effect on the “bomb proof” building—especially from the outside. General Partin’s analysis alone shows that the pressure wave from 4800 lbs of ANFO would not do significant damage but would lose force-effect prior to the pressure wave making contact with the building. Also, much of the building and its windows were blown outward, the exact opposite of an outside explosion. Next, witnesses prior to and after the event saw explosives inside the building or on columns. Some did not detonate. Rebar on some of the columns showed evidence of “cutting charges,” charges placed directly on the columns. The Air Force at Wright Patterson AFB attempted to duplicate the government version of the event and could not do so. Comparing the damage to the Murrah Building with the alleged 4800 lbs of ANFO low explosive to the 5000 lbs of high explosive at the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia in 1996—a non “bomb proof” building tells all. 186 dead in Oklahoma City, 20 dead in Saudi Arabia.

4. There are no video surveillance tapes of the bombing (and alternate versions of this statement).

False. Three versions of this claim exist: A. “There were no surveillance tapes/cameras that saw anything;” B. “We can’t show the tapes due to ‘national security;’” or “It’s an ongoing investigation,” and C. “We can’t find the tapes—if they even existed.” All of these are lies. First, there were numerous video cameras in the area, and several video recorders that caught many aspects of the actions which occurred that morning. The entire front of the Murrah Building was under surveillance; cameras existed at the entrance and on the corners of the nearby Regency Tower apartment building, and also cameras existed on buildings around and near the area in question. The FBI made a concerted effort to not only seize all the videotapes and recorders, but to also remove all the cameras and evidence that they even existed—include removing the wiring from the inside of the walls, sealing up the mounting holes, and painted over the patches. We also now know that a local video duplicating shop made 400 copies of tapes for the FBI and that one rogue FBI agent later attempted to sell a tape to the Dateline for $850,000. The video tapes are the Achilles Heel to the case as they show—and would prove— the existence of John Doe #2 and most likely provide an identifcation as well. This bolsters the claim that, if JD#2 was a government CI or provacateur, not only did the government have foreknowledge of the event, but actually had a participant that might have been exposed if proven so. The video tapes from the attack on the Murrah Building are akin to the Zapruder film taken of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. They need to be shown nationally.

There is no matter of “National Security” as an excuse for keeping the tapes sealed. If so, the FBI and DoJ must show how this could be so. And, out of 400 tapes, all could not be “lost.” If the FBI is this inept, there should be an investigation from an outside agency, and many individuals in the J. Edgar Hoover building should have their careers terminated immediately. All FBI supervisory personnel involved in the investigation at the time should be subpoened to appear before a Congressional investigating committee or special counsel to explain their actions—or inactions. The Committee should demand that the FBI turn over the video tapes for viewing and determination of exactly what was on them, then the tapes should be shown on national television.

5. The Murrah Building was selected because of Waco.

False. The Murrah Building in Oklahoma had nothing to do with the events in Waco, Texas. The only possible motive to attempt to destroy that building and everything in it would have to be what was in the building. That means that the second Achilles Heel to the case would be what happened on Day One when the government made the decision to abandon people trapped inside, to “rescue” files from a building that had nothing to hide regarding national security, or that were time sensitive. Beside numerous witness statements and local media reports of this particular event, media outlets across the nation mentioned it and questioned why the government would do such a thing. The New York Daily News on Monday, May 1st, 1995 wrote in one article: “Hours after the truck bomb ripped apart the Oklahoma City federal building, some rescue workers were ordered to stop searching for survivors while federal officials removed boxes of documents. ‘You’d think they would have let their evidence and files sit at least until the last survivor was pulled out,’ one rescue worker said. ‘They had guys carrying out boxes while the rescue workers were forced to sit on their hands.’ About 10 hours after the blast federal officials began limiting the number of rescue workers in the building to about a dozen… Meanwhile, groups of 40 to 50 federal agents spent much of the night carrying dozens of boxes from the seventh and ninth floors, where the federal Drug Enforcement Administration and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms had offices. The contents of the files are unknown, but federal sources said they were looking into the possibility that the alleged bomber Timothy McVeigh and his accomplices had targeted the nine-story building in an effort to destroy DEA or ATF investigative files. FBI spokesman Gene Pogue called the allegations that rescue workers were restrained by the feds ‘unfortunate’ but otherwise refused to comment.”

Besides the concern for files-over-victims—which shows us what priority the files were to the government—what stands out is the reference to those federal “agents” who had no markings on their jackets is that they ascended to the 9th floor, to the DEA office. Is that where the Mena files were actually stored? Probably not, but they could not take the chance of missing any DEA files that might reference the Mena drug smuggling when Clinton was governor. My source did not say exactly where in the building the files were secreted, but agents also brought files out of what they could access in the basement.

To add to this, my contact with the BBC in London, Jan Klimkowski, had sent me an email three days after this article appeared that said “I have been told that the stories about the Gulf War Syndrome files and the Whitewater files being at the Murrah building are disinformation. It is files relating to drug running out of Mena (involving neo-Nazis as well as spooks) which, I am told, were stored at OK City. Proof of this for me was that the files removed from the building after the blast were from the DEA office.” I do not know where Jan got his information or his sources, but it matched what we suspected-and I felt confident was the truth.

6. There is no Middle-Eastern connection.

False. We know about the Iraqi “former POW” connection as described in this book, and we know about the connections through the Philippines with Nichols and Abu Sayyaf —and its connection to not only Ramzi Yousef and other Islamic terrorists, but al Qaeda and Osama bin Ladin. It was Bill Clinton who decreed on Day Three that “there is NO middle eastern conection.” At that point the FBI stopped looking in that direction, no matter what the witnesses said or, the evidence we provided later showed.

7. Where did the files go?

We know that the files were taken to the post office a block away. These files were so important that it took two cordons of armed agents to guard the boxes of “unsent mail” when they were brought out of the back of the post office, where they had been secreted for ten days behind a plywood wall. They were then loaded into an unmarked white “Ryder-type” truck and driven off. The question remains “were they taken to be destroyed, or protected?” I felt they, like the Murrah Building itself, were destroyed. If they weren’t they would have surfaced by now.

8. There was only one Ryder truck.

False. We know of at least two Ryder trucks. We now know that one Ryder truck was seen at Geary Lake in Kansas while another was seen at Junction City at the Dreamland Motel. We also know of a third Ryder truck that the FBI had the Tulsa Police Department stake out at the Coppermill Appartments in Tulsa, and which may have been the Ryder truck seen with McViegh, Strassmeir and two “unknowns” at Lady Godiva’s strip club in Tulsa. Whether the Ryder truck and the strange operation at Camp Gruber is connected may never be known, however, the proximity and the appearance of the temporary facility erected there is very suspect—and why would the Army or DAARPA need a civilian Ryder truck when so many military vehicles were available? And what was the strange machine depicted in the aerial photographs, and what was the yellow substance that was spilled on the ground around it?

We then have the McVeigh truck, and a different Ryder truck being driven around Bricktown at the same time McVeigh was parking in front of the Murrah Building. I feel confident that Dennis Mahon was John Doe #3 and was the driver, and either Michael Brescia from the Midwest Bank Robbery Gang was John Doe #4. It is also possibly Andreas Strassmeir was with him Mahon instead of Brescia. Stassmeir’s appearance could easily be confused with McVeigh’ features if witnessed by anyone as they drove by. Their mission was to be witnessed in that area as a diversion to the later investigation.

9. It was the Militias that did it.

False. We have already shown that no militia groups or individuals were involved. That said, McVeigh’s handlers (or chain of command) did their best to have him build a “legend” as a “Right Wing Fanatic with ties to the Militia(s).” The media, being part of the disinformation campaign, using “expert statements” from the far left Southern Poverty Law Center and the Anti-Defamation League, bolstered this assertion at every opportunity. This created a false trail and also attempted to influence the national population of the evilness of such groups—and those on the Right in general.

This also was beneficial to the Clinton administration and the Leftists in both houses of Congress who by then felt that there was a dangerous resistance movement brewing among the population that they needed to counter—by force of arms if necessary. Globalist politicians knew that these groups would resist any move of the the government to bring America into their so-called “New World Order.” These groups had already witnessed the government’s move to take away guns from the population to reduce the firepower of the average American and the militias, and to also pass the Omnibus Crime Bill that was on hangfire in Congress and would not have moved without public support. The excuse for all of these Draconian measures was fed to the public was that we needed a “more secure nation.” All of these points add to the “motives” list to shut down the militia movement and other resistance groups.

Then there was PATCON, the “Patriot Connection” operation being conducted by the FBI. PATCON was, among other things, a means for the FBI to infiltrate various groups that ranged from neo-Nazis to Constitutional Militias by using “UCA’s”—Under Cover Agents. Any group of significance or size was penetrated with informants—often by more than one agency, as was the case with the FBI and ATF at Elohim City. The militia trail was a total, but time consuming, false lead.

10. McVeigh’s accomplishes all came from Elohim City.

Partially true. We know that McVeigh had a definite relationship with Strassmeir, and through Strassmeir to Carol Howe and Dennis Mahon. We also know that Nichols was involved in the guns stolen from Roger Moore in Arkansas. We know that the Midwest Bank Robbers also made visits and often stayed at Elohim City. However, McVeigh’s accomplices actually were outside Elohim City and would fit into the category of “others unknown.” These would include those associated with Nichols, the other John Does seen with McVeigh at various times and locations including restaurants and motels, and the Iraqi “Middle Easterners” that McVeigh had met with previous to the bombing at two known locations. Even though Nichols made several trips to the Philippines and met with other Islamic terrorists, there is no evidence of any one of them being in Oklahoma City though Cary Gagan made references to such being in Las Vegas and having meetings with Samir Khalil, Cary Gagan, and other PLO figures who were above Khalil, if what Gagan relates is accurate.

11. Andreas Strassmeir is not a figure of interest.

False. Strassmeir is a key figure in the investigation and a possible participant in the bombing. His background alone draws attention. As a lieutenant in the Panzer Grenadiers, and as a member of GSG-9 (according to some sources) it is obvious that he was a plant to infiltrate the neo-Nazi culture in this country. Germany was very concerned with Nazi material, literature, and artifacts being smuggled into their country from the U.S. that would bolster the illegal new Nazi movement in Germany. In this aspect, Dennis Mahon figures in being a person of interest to the German government. And through Mahon, and other inside informants in the neo-Nazi movement here, Strassmeir was brought over and inserted as an undercover agent for at least one, if not more, U.S. intelligence organizations. Beside attempting to arm and train the residents in Elohim City, he also tried to instigate the residents to “blow up a federal building.” Instead of being picked up and questioned by federal authorities, since they knew of these efforts from their inside sources, he was allowed to continue his activities. When his car was stopped, and its contents discovered, several powerful individuals intervened in the custody of the vehicle and its contents. Then, when Strassmeir began feeling the heat of the aftermath of the bombing, he was spirited out of the country by Kirk Lyons and his CAUSE foundation, through Mexico to Germany. He was never questioned in Germany either. Much of his information coming out of Elohim City was provided to the SPLC—the exact political opposite of the CAUSE foundation.

12. There is no connection between the Murrah bombing and Iran/Contra.

Maybe. But the evidence would be in the files that the "federal agent" in Little Rock told me about at the beginning of the investigation, bolstered by the fact that the feds put a precedence on retrieving files over rescuing trapped victims—a display of heartlessness the government will never live down. Also, we have to add to that how much resistance I received when I attempted to expose the Mexican Mafia/drug lord connections to the bombing. From the FBI denying to me that there was a Juan Garcia Abrego, to the "two Mexican bag men dressed as Arabs" who checked into the hotel in Oklahoma City, to the denial by the FBI that Mena and cocaine running had anything to do with the bombing (and the selection of the Murrah Building over all others).

13. The Arkansas license plate, PTA-811, found near where McVeigh was stopped by Oklahoma Highway Patrol trooper Charlie Hanger, had nothing to do with the bombing.

Suspected to be false. It was not a coincidence where and when the plate was found, and that it was a stolen tag out of Fort Smith not far from Elohim City. And a bigger point to be made is that when I first ran the tag, I received an NCIC "hit" that it was stolen from a family in Fort Smith, but when I ran it a week later it came back "Not in the system." It had disappeared from the computer data banks nationwide. This change in national computer data can only be done at the federal level. Add to that the fact that the family who owned the car that the tag was taken from would not return my calls after I discovered it was missing from the NCIC data bank.

14. There was only one explosion at the building.

False. Not only did two separate seismograms show 2-3 distinct "events" on their graphs, but witnesses inside and outside the building describe more than one blast. Many inside reported a "rumble," then a blast. People at a morning meeting at the nearby Water Resources Board produced a tape of their meeting that showed at least two blasts The witnesses and the forensic evidence of the building itself shows one blast outside (the truck) and one or more blasts from the inside, hence the glass and debris that was blown outwards.

15. McVeigh acted alone.

False. Throughout this writing I have shown that there were numerous events and witnesses that saw McVeigh with others. On the day of the bombing witnesses and video cameras saw McVeigh talking to a "dark complected man" on the sidewalk across from the Post Office prior to moving the truck up to the building. Other witnesses saw McVeigh and his passenger exit the truck the passenger back to the back of the truck (evidently to initiate the bombing sequence), then walk briskly across the street with McVeigh to get into the yellow Mercury (others say the passenger, John Doe #2, went east on the sidewalk to the brown GMC pickup truck, however there were only two men who did that, and they were the two "Middle Easterners" in blue jogging suits. Then we have Mike Moroz at Johnnie's Tire Store who witnessed McVeigh, and who was later identified as Hussain al Hussaini, in the truck when they stopped to ask directions. We also have the witness in the alley behide the Journal Record building that McVeigh almost hit with his car when he raced from the scene who saw a dark complected male with a “hateful look on his face” as he went by. Also, previous to the bombing, the people in Junction City, Kansas, at both the Dreamland Motel and the Ryder Truck rental shop, reported at least two others with McVeigh when they dealt with him. The FBI, under the gun from Washington, was forced to make up an alternative “John Doe” as a “case of mistaken identity” in one Todd Bunting who rented a truck during the same week that McVeigh did. For the FBI and media, that was “case closed” on the hunt for John Doe #2. And like Lee Harvey Oswald, that was the end of their investigation.

To summarize the above, we have the Means. That is the Ryder truck, the fact that Nichols was able to buy a truckload of Ammonium Nitrate fertilizer and barrels, the outside assistance in constructing the truck bomb (there is no way Nichols and McVeigh could have mixed and loaded all that in one evening), the team(s) that put explosives on the columns of the building. The Motive would be the destruction of the files in the building, failing that, their retrieval, then ultimate destruction. A side benefit/motive would be the attacks in the media on the militias, the passing of the Omnibus Crime Control Act, and more justification for the FBI’s PATCON operation of infiltrating any “resistance groups,” or government-threatening organizations, to be extended past its authorization date.

The Opportunity, well-planned in advance, came on April 19th, 1995, the anniversary of the Waco debacle.

As I waded through my boxes of case files I came across a “wiring diagram,” or flow chart that I had drawn that showed connections between various entities and the bombing. The below had places on the chart with lines that connected them to other persons, groups or organizations. With the bombing of the building located in the middle of the chart, the lines radiated out to, or were cross-connected with:

McVeigh—Fort Bragg—“Army” special team
McVeigh—Nichols
Nichols—Philippines—McVeigh in Army
Bombing—Records/files

When we peel the onion, removing the layers of lies, false leads, disinformation, bogus stories, and dead-end trails, what appears to hold the most damning picture of what led up to, and what happened after the bombing, is frightening. To fit in what has been exposed in this book—to assemble the pieces of the puzzle—here is what appears to be the evolution of the crime—if all facts hold true:

Timothy McVeigh, an outstanding soldier, decided to advance his career by joining the Special Forces—the Green Berets. But according to what he wrote his sister, he was selected from among 400 applicants to SF to instead join a "special team" that specialized in criminal activities—all for the good of the nation. He then was "discharged" and sheep-dipped to become the vile extremist "McVeigh, the anti-government zealot." In this mode he would be used where needed. (Unknown to him, he would be considered expendable). His missions at the time were to infiltrate anti-government groups and militia units, attempt to talk them into doing illegal activities, and report all information to his handlers concerning the groups and individuals he encountered.

An extensive investigation of the Mena and Iran/Contra drug running was in progress in Arkansas and other places. A great deal of damning evidence was gathered against those involved in the Mena affair, money laundering, and in some cases, questionable homicides and "suicides." Those being investigated were Dan Lassater and Governor and Mrs. Clinton, among several others. Because of this the files were kept secured and safe until the presidential election of 1992. In January of 1993, when the Clintons moved to the White House, the DEA (and possible the IRS) knew that to keep these records where they could be discovered would be dangerous. The decision was made to move them out of state—but not too far. The Murrah Building, a federal facility only a few hours driving time away from Little Rock, was selected, and the move was coordinated with the DEA office in Oklahoma City. Exactly where the records were moved to in the building appears to be two locations: storage in the basement, and in the the DEA office on the 9th floor IF the Mena records were moved to the DEA office itself at all.

McVeigh was given his orders at some point in 1992-93 to prepare for a new mission. In this he was to make contact with various individuals and groups. These would include Nichols and Fortier, and at some point along the line, the "Middle Easterners" who had been brought into the country at the end of the Gulf war. These groups of POW "refugees" made automatic terrorist cells, most of which could be controlled by domestic handlers. He would eventually to be told to contact Strassmeir, then become familiar with Elohim City and it inhabitants.

McVeigh and his ad hoc "team" of John Does, along with Nichols, Brescia, Mahon and Strassmeir, each played a part. By introducing various persons and groups into the event that would also create conflicts, confusion, and plausibly deniable connections to the case. These branches to the case would also create mountains of paperwork in investigative reports—far too many in the end for any one person or small group to wade through.

Whether McVeigh or Nichols knew anything about the files or not is unknown. They did not have a "need to know." It is entirely possible that McVeigh originally thought that it would be a sting operation where he and his passenger was to deliver the truck to the Murrah Building at 3 a.m., but for some reason they ran six hours late. Whether due to a change in orders, or for some other reason, the event became 168 times more tragic than it would have been. McVeigh may have been led to believe that the operation was conceived to attack the militia movement or other groups.

After McVeigh and his accomplices made their escape from the scene, Phase II of the operation, which was a back-up plan in case the building wasn't demolished, began. This was the search and removal of the files. This could not be done right after the bombing for many reasons: too many witnesses, too much on-site media coverage, too many people trapped in the building, and too many victims in the street. To attempt to stop the rescue efforts simply to recover paperwork at that point would not have worked.

A large quantity of files were found and removed, including entire filing cabinets. They were whisked away as soon as they could be retrieved and loaded onto the trucks. Meanwhile, McVeigh had been stopped and north of Oklahoma City and arrested. He exhibited no sign of stress or remorse. After he was identified, the investigation then expanded to look for the various John Does, some of which were ignored by the FBI, or discredited and labeled as "not involved." It is incredible that of all the witnesses who saw another man with McVeigh in the Ryder truck, and that man was not Nichols, that the FBI would cease looking for "John Doe #2." Someone higher than local FBI agents made that decision. The question was "who?" That decision had to have been made at the Washington level.

With the assistance of the national media, from print to television, the case was manipulated to the point of only finding McVeigh and Nichols guilty of the bombing, and Fortier guilty of knowing and not revealing what he knew to the government. In the 12 months following the bombing no one else was picked up for questioning, or even followed up on even though we provided many leads that needed checking.

As for the case at this writing, McVeigh was "executed;" Nichols is incarcerated for life; Fortier is free; Strassmeir is free in Germany and protected by the German government; Mahon is in federal prison on a 40 year sentence for bomb making; Carol Howe is in the witness protection program; the Iraqis who worked for Samir Kahlil have disappeared; Elohim City is still there, but no longer "of interest" since Rev. Millar died; and the files…have gone.

Bill Clinton was re-elected in 1996.

CHAPTER 27

Where Do We Go From Here?

We can never let this case or any other coverup be forgotten. We must always demand from our public representatives and federal agencies to be above reproach, and understand they have a responsibility to keep and maintain an honest government. In this, we have to demand that such events as the Oklahoma City bombing and those events surrounding 9/11 be thoroughly and openly investigated until the proper resolution is achieved and the guilty are prosecuted and sentenced.

We cannot let status, rank, or position be a factor in who is investigated or prosecuted such as happened not only with the Mena affair and Iran/Contra, but with many other crimes that involved persons in high places. Congress and the White House are no exceptions.

As I write this, we have a new outside-the-Beltway president who has promised to “drain the swamp.” Let us hope he does exactly that. The so-called Establishment is long overdue for a house cleaning. Until that happens, and we have honest patriotic people in power and in authority, the rocks that hide the crimes and coverups will remain in place.

As author Ayn Rand said in her essay Man’s Rights, “There are two potential violators of man’s rights: the criminals and the government. The great achievement of the United States was to draw a distinction between these two — by forbidding to the second the legalized version of the activities of the first.”

There are three agencies that must be forced to adhere to the Constitution and to their oaths of office: The Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Central Intelligence Agency. The Department of Justice can be controlled by the president, and if proper vetting occurs, honest individuals will do an honest days work every day. The same goes for the FBI, which over time has become in many compartmentalized areas, a rogue agency. As one FBI agent once told me “J. Edgar Hoover don’t live here anymore.” Though most of the field agents are good law enforcement officers, there are those who pull the strings above them that hamper the good sheep dogs from effectively guarding the sheep.

And as for the CIA, President Harry Truman, who signed the orders creating the CIA to take the place of the OSS at the insistence of Allen Dulles, summed up his feelings in a letter written to The Washington Post in 1963, shortly after the assassination of JFK:

INDEPENDENCE, MO., Dec. 21 — I think it has become necessary to take another look at the purpose and operations of our Central Intelligence Agency—CIA. At least, I would like to submit here the original reason why I thought it necessary to organize this Agency during my Administration, what I expected it to do and how it was to operate as an arm of the President.

I think it is fairly obvious that by and large a President’s performance in office is as effective as the information he has and the information he gets. That is to say, that assuming the President himself possesses a knowledge of our history, a sensitive understanding of our institutions, and an insight into the needs and aspirations of the people, he needs to have available to him the most accurate and up-to-the-minute information on what is going on everywhere in the world, and particularly of the trends and developments in all the danger spots in the contest between East and West. This is an immense task and requires a special kind of an intelligence facility.

Of course, every President has available to him all the information gathered by the many intelligence agencies already in existence. The Departments of State, Defense, Commerce, Interior and others are constantly engaged in extensive information gathering and have done excellent work.

But their collective information reached the President all too frequently in conflicting conclusions. At times, the intelligence reports tended to be slanted to conform to established positions of a given department. This becomes confusing and what's worse, such intelligence is of little use to a President in reaching the right decisions.

Therefore, I decided to set up a special organization charged with the collection of all intelligence reports from every available source, and to have those reports reach me as President without department "treatment" or interpretations.

I wanted and needed the information in its "natural raw" state and in as comprehensive a volume as it was practical for me to make full use of it. But the most important thing about this move was to guard against the chance of intelligence being used to influence or to lead the President into unwise decisions—and I thought it was necessary that the President do his own thinking and evaluating.

Since the responsibility for decision making was his—then he had to be sure that no information is kept from him for whatever reason at the discretion of any one department or agency, or that unpleasant facts be kept from him. There are always those who would want to shield a President from bad news or misjudgments to spare him from being "upset."

For some time I have been disturbed by the way CIA has been diverted from its original assignment. It has become an operational and at times a policy-making arm of the Government. This has led to trouble and may have compounded our difficulties in several explosive areas.

I never had any thought that when I set up the CIA that it would be injected into peacetime cloak and dagger operations. Some of the complications and embarrassment I think we have experienced are in part attributable to the fact that this quiet intelligence arm of the President has been so removed from its intended role that it is being interpreted as a symbol of sinister and mysterious foreign intrigue—and a subject for cold war enemy propaganda.

With all the nonsense put out by Communist propaganda about "Yankee imperialism," "exploitive capitalism," "war-mongering," "monopolists," in their name-calling assault on the West, the last thing we needed was for the CIA to be seized upon as something akin to a subverting influence in the affairs of other people.

I well knew the first temporary director of the CIA, Adm. Souers, and the later permanent directors of the CIA, Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg and Allen Dulles. These were men of the highest character, patriotism and integrity—and I assume this is true of all those who continue in charge.

But there are now some searching questions that need to be answered. I, therefore, would like to see the CIA be restored to its original assignment as the intelligence arm of the President, and that whatever else it can properly perform in that special field—and that its operational duties be terminated or properly used elsewhere.

We have grown up as a nation, respected for our free institutions and for our ability to maintain a free and open society. There is something about the way the CIA has been functioning that is casting a shadow over our historic position and I feel that we need to correct it. Signed "Harry S. Truman."

At this point I am reminded of the scene in a movie where an investigator meets a contact known as Man X in a park, sitting on a park bench, watching children play on a playground.

"Well, you've finally got there," said Man X.

"Have I?"

"You managed to not be diverted by false flags and leads, and that's saying quite a bit."

"So what do I do now," asked the investigator.

"About what?" was the reply.

"About the case. Someone needs to go to jail. The American people need to know what happened and who's involved."

Man X lights his pipe, exhaling a puff of blue smoke. "You know by now that it goes all the way to the highest levels, don't you?"

"I suspect, yes."

"And if you write about it, you could disappear, or commit suicide, or have a heart attack?" Man X asks.

"So again," asks the investigator, "what do I do after all this work?"

"It all depends. Are you a crusader? They hate crusaders, you know. Hard to buy them off or intimidate them."

The investigator rubbed his forehead. He was beginning to get a headache. "Okay, I guess I'm a crusader. So are my friends."

"Then write a book. Get it published before they find out about it. It's your only insurance. After that they'll simply try to debunk you, discredit you, make you look like a fool, a crazy."

"That should be easy, considering how they run the media and have all their mind control background when it comes to propaganda. So I write a book, then I'm discredited, my writing career is ruined, and nothing happens. What's the use?" asked the investigator.

"Because the American people will believe you, at least most of them. And that's all that counts. You just have to take your best shot. Fire your volley down range and see what happens. The more the liberal establishment media attacks you, the more credibility you will have in the minds of the public. But most of all, after you publish, you have your insurance policy. If they killed you or made you disappear then, it would only add credence to your story. After that, it’s up to you how to proceed. And remember, you’re not alone. You do have friends. Even a few in high places.”

“…give me your blessing: truth will come to light;…murder cannot be hid long, at length truth will out.”

Shakespeare—The Merchant of Venice

EPILOGUE

Time to Retire: My Oklahoma City Report

“The high office of the President has been used to foment a plot to destroy America’s freedoms, and before I leave office I must inform the citizens of this plight”

President John F. Kennedy—ten days before he was assassinated

The more I became involved, and the deeper I went into the Oklahoma City investigation, the more apprehensive my chief became. I know he was not happy when the local office of the FBI requested my help, and he never showed me any support from his office. The remark his administrative sergeant, “The Weasel,” as I referred to him, made when in the beginning he said “the chief says you are now assigned to assist the FBI at their request, but he said for you to do it on your own time when you aren’t involved in your daily duties.”

I knew the chief was looking forward to my upcoming retirement that would occur on the last day of March, 1996 as he considered me a “loose cannon,” which I will plead guilty to. I never let tact or inhibitions stand in the way of what I had to say—or do. And with my seniority and a short timer’s attitude, I was basically untouchable as far as the department and the City of Tulsa was concerned. Most of all, the Marine in me has always been “mission oriented.” Give a Marine a mission, then get out of the way. That mission would be accomplished, one way or another.

I felt it was my duty the week I retired to write my final report to the chief and the local office of the FBI. At that time, in March of 1996, I wrote of what I, and the Baker Street Irregulars, had come up with during the course of the investigation. Obviously it was not the government-issued version. And it did not make the chief, who was very political, very happy. The day after his office received his copy in interoffice mail I received an angry phone call from the chief: “I’ve read this report, and I don’t ever want it to see the light of day. Get rid of it. Shred it. Make sure it disappears.”

It is one thing to order me to do something regarding what I do or did on duty, but it is another to try and order me to do something that I did or did not do when off duty. I had written the report off-duty, just like they wanted me to handle my part of the investigation—so that it didn’t interfere with my official duties. And my official duties concerned flying police helicopters on patrol, and even so, since the chief assigned me to the case, then it was only correct for me to report the results.

I wrote a 28-page report that detailed my investigation and included information gleaned from my “other sources” that I did not name to protect those who put their lives on the line while searching for the truth. The things I exposed in that report, which can be found in my chapter on the Oklahoma City bombing in my previous book, The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government.

So, beyond keeping the report and publishing it, I kept all my files and documents as well. What you have read here is the culmination of my investigation in book form.

All my life I have been a “truth warrior.” And so I remain.

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Craig Roberts is a retired career law enforcement officer, having served 27 years with the Tulsa Police Department. He is a United States Marine Vietnam veteran, and an investigative journalist and author or co-author over over 20 books and dozens of magazine articles. He also retired from the Army Reserve in 2006 as a lieutenant colonel, Infantry and Intelligence branches, after 30 total years service (US Marines and US Army). He lives with his wife and two dogs in the Ozark hills of northeastern Oklahoma where he teaches civilian, law enforcement, and military firearms courses on his private range. His website is www.riflewarrior.com.

All of his books are available on Amazon, Kindle and your favorite bookstores.

When Tulsa, Oklahoma, police officer Craig Roberts saw the television covereage of the Oklahoma City bombing on the morning of April 19, 1995, little did he realize that he would, at the request of the FBI, be the only Tulsa police officer assigned to the case. Over the following weeks and months Roberts investigated the events, followed leads that led him into very dangerous places, interviewed witnesses, and gathered numerous case files. His investigation, with the help of others, would take him in a totally different direction than what the official government version--accepted by the media--portrayed. Like his previous book "The Medusa File: Crimes and Coverups of the U.S. Government," Roberts pulls no punches. After more than twenty years he felt it was time to condense four file boxes full of case files into a book so that the truth can finally be told. The American people are owed the truth, and so are the 168 victims who lost their life in this tragic event.

Editor's note: I have certainly been astounded by the material contained in this "unpolished" manuscript, as I am sure you will. It is quite evident, that all of us, not just investigative journalists, have the capacity and opportunity to write something of value. In this case the pseudonimous Carol Marshall, happens to be a journalist. This document was sent to me by a close friend and confidant who has maintained, as I have discovered, that this unpolished document had been prominent for quite some time on the Web up until late 1996, but has since diappeared. If anyone has info as to its authors whereabouts please let me know. The material contained in this document is extremely volatile, as evidenced by Danny Casolaro's death, and I feel that I may be taking a tremendous risk by publishing this on the Web. I must also, unequivocally ascert my Right as a Human Being, to disseminate anything that I find of inherent value to the community at large.

I must admit that I am not as familiar with the Cabazon/Inslaw/Wackenhut/Casolaro case as I should be, but that does not preclude me from sharing this important information with you. Your input and contributions are encouraged and welcome. I hope you find this significant.

Please read the Introduction first, as it sets the story properly so that the rest will follow logically. If you'd like to help me with brief descriptions of each chapter, I'd love to hear from you. Email me jeff@tomdavisbooks.com.

INTRODUCTION

Regarding "The Last Circle"

The following condensed version of The Last Circle was provided in October 1996 to a secret Investigative Committee comprised of Congress people, lawyers and former POW's at their request. I originally contacted Congresswoman Maxine Waters in Washington D.C. and offered information relative to CIA drug trafficking, but was told the information was too complex and would I mind putting the information into a newspaper story, get it published and send it to her office?

I agreed and contacted a local newspaper reporter who, after reading portions of the material, decided it needed to be reviewed by individuals who had special knowledge of CIA drug trafficking, arms shipments, and biological warfare weapons.

After a brief meeting with these individuals, former Special Forces soldiers from the Vietnam era, they asked for copies of the manuscript, guaranteed an immediate congressional inquiry, and advised me NOT to place the information on the Internet as they feared the information could be, in their words, "taken as just another anti-government conspiracy."

I condensed the manuscript into the attached treatise, covering information relative to THEIR focus, and sent it to them along with key documents. Shortly afterward, they re-contacted me and set up elaborate security measures to insure my safety. As of this writing, I've had no need to institute those measures.

I have in my possession five boxes of documents, obtained from a convicted methamphetamine chemist whose closest friends were a 20-year CIA operative and a former FBI Senior-Agent-in-Charge of the Los Angeles and Washington D.C. bureaus. The labyrinthine involvements of these people and their corporate partners is revealed in this manuscript, along with information obtained by Washington D.C. journalist Danny Casolaro prior to his death in 1991.

A great deal of investigation still needs to be accomplished. I have neither the financial means nor the ability to obtain "evidence" for "prosecution." I am simply an investigative writer, placing this information into the public forum in hopes that someone, somewhere, will grasp the significance of the data and initiate a full-scale investigation with subsequent subpoena power.

With subpoena power, government agents can testify (some kept anonymous in this manuscript) who would otherwise lose their jobs and retirement if they came forward. Witnesses can be protected and/or provided immunity, and financial transactions of government and underworld figures can be scrutinized.

To date, I have not had more than one hour conversation with anyone associated with any Congressional investigation, and therefore am extremely limited in my ability to present the information I have. Much of what I learned during my five-year investigation cannot at this point be inserted into a manuscript. I must be assured the information and witnesses will be handled appropriately.

I personally do not believe the Department of Justice will ultimately "prosecute" this or any other drug trafficking case if it involves government officials. But I have made the effort to put forth enough information to generate interest and show good faith. I hope it will be of some value to the American public.

Please keep in mind as you read the attached pages that the complex corporate structures and technological projects described herein "may" have been nothing more than an elaborate smoke and mirrors cover for narcotics trafficking.

This aspect of my investigation was corroborated by several government investigators, one of whom was a House Judiciary investigator, who spent three years investigating the Inslaw stolen software case and said in response to my findings:

"There's some great information here. You did a very good investigative job, I have to commend you on that. I realize it's only a fraction of everything you have. What you have done, you have put the pieces of the whole thing together. Little bits and pieces of things that I have known about, that I had theorized about, you have found answers to those specific questions." (See Chapter 13 for entire conversation). That investigator is now in the White House Office of Drug Control Policy.

To those interested, nearly everything noted in the attached manuscript is supported by documents or tape recorded interviews. Some are extremely bulky and not quoted extensively in the manuscript, such as lengthy FBI wire tap summaries. However, any key documents mentioned in The Last Circle can be obtained by notifying JBC@BITTERROOT.NET. "This E - Mail address is a forwarding service for the author, the service has no information as to the author's physical location. Documents are NOT located at the service address. Document orders will be shipped directly by the author from another location. Cost of shipping and copying will be returned via E - Mail. Attached to each document is a cover page identifying the significance of the document and its relation to the manuscript. Hard copies of the manuscript can also be ordered.

I wish to thank Garby Leon, formerly Director of Development at Joel Silver Productions, Warner Bros. in Burbank, California for tirelessly prompting me to get a first draft of The Last Circle written in 1994 and helping me with countless tasks during our joint investigation of the death of Danny Casolaro.

CHAPTER 1

For the deputies of the Mariposa Sheriff's Department, the awakening occurred on June 24, 1980, when deputy Ron Van Meter drowned in an alleged boating accident on Lake McClure. The search party consisted mainly of three divers, deputies Dave Beavers, Rod Cusic and Gary Estep. Although adjacent counties offered additional divers, sheriff Paul Paige refused outside help, even a minisubmarine offered by Beavers' associate.

In the shallow, placid waters of Lake McClure, Van Meter's body was not recovered that week, and indeed would not be found until ten years later, in September, 1990 when his torso, wrapped in a fish net and weighted down by various objects, including a fire extinguisher, washed ashore a few hundred yards from where Sergeant Roderick Sinclair's houseboat had once been moored.

Van Meter's widow, Leslie, had been at home baking cookies when she was notified of her husband's disappearance. She was an Indian girl who had no affinity with sheriff Paul Paige. The horror began for her that day also. Her home was ransacked and her husband's briefcase and diary were seized by the Mariposa Sheriff's department. Only she and a few deputies knew what Van Meter's diary contained. He'd told his wife he'd taken out a special life insurance policy two weeks before, but after the search that was missing also.

Leslie was taken to a psychiatric clinic for evaluation shortly after the incident.The story surfaced years later, one tiny bubble at a time. The selfinvolved little community of Mariposa did not cough up its secrets gladly. On March 23, 1984, Leslie Van Meter filed a Citizen's Complaint with the Mariposa County Sheriff's department alleging that the Sheriff's office had been negligent and unprofessional in their investigation of her husband's disappearance. His body had still not been found, despite private searches by Sergeant Beavers and other friends of the missing deputy. She wanted the case reopened.

Paul Paige was no longer sheriff, but newly elected Sheriff Ken Mattheys responded by reopening the investigation. Investigator Raymond Jenkins, a Merced College Police Chief, and retired FBI agent Tom Walsh from Merced, were notified by Sheriff Mattheys in October, 1984 that the Van Meter case had been reopened and he wanted their help in cleaning up the Sheriff's Department.

Their investigation led them straight to the doorstep of MCA Corporation (Music Corporation of America), parent company to Curry Company, the largest concessionaire in Yosemite National Park. A major drug network had surfaced in the park, compelling one park ranger, Paul Berkowitz, to go before the House Interior Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation to testify about drug distribution by Curry Company officials.

Ed Hardy, the president of Curry Company, was closely associated with Mariposa County officials, in particular, Mariposa District Attorney Bruce Eckerson, County Assessor Steve Dunbar, and Congressman Tony Coelho, whose district encompassed Mariposa and the Park. The annual camping trips that the three men took together was encouraged by the local townsfolk because most of Mariposa's tax base emanated from Curry Company.Coelho and Hardy were regular fixtures around town, seen at most of the social events. Coelho even cooked and served spaghetti dinners for the whole town annually at the Mariposa Fair Grounds, and purchased property in partnership with one member of the Mariposa Board of Supervisors. In fact, Mariposa was one of the first places he bid farewell to after resigning from Congress to avoid an investigation of his finances.

Meanwhile, investigator Raymond Jenkins had followed the drug trail from Yosemite back to the Mariposa airport, where sheriff's deputies were seen regularly loading and unloading packages from planes in the dead of night.

One Indian girl complained bitterly about deputies using the Sara Priest land allottment (reservation) to grow marijuana and operate methamphetamine labs. Jenkins, by now retired from the position of Police Chief of Merced College, was called in to interview the Indian girl. That same day, as a favor, he provided me with copies of his notes. I followed up with a tape recorded interview at her home in Bear valley. Her father and uncle operated a small auto dismantling business on the reservation in Midpines, and after locating them and gaining their confidence, the uncle drove me out to Whiskey Flats, the site of the marijuana and methamphetamine lab operations. That week I rented a horse and rode down into the rocky, isolated valley of Whiskey Flats. Brush and shrubbery tore at the saddle on the horse and at the end of the dirt path I encountered three snarling Rottweiler dogs who put the horse into a frenzied lather.

Nevertheless, I managed to photograph the irrigation system, artesian spring and pond from which the water was supplied as well as various points of identification for future reconnaisance. I later returned in a fourwheel drive pickup truck and managed to view the trailer and lab shack.

The tape recorded interview with the Indian girl, the photos and notes from my discovery were provided to the Stanislaus County Drug Task Force, but jurisdictionally, they couldn't enter Mariposa County without authority of the Mariposa Sheriff's department. It was a catch 22 situation. Ultimately I provided the same information anonymously to several related agencies. It was not until 1993 that the fields were eradicated, and 1994, before the labs were raided. However, no arrests of any deputies were ever forthcoming. In fact, no arrests occurred at all, except for a few nonEnglish speaking Mexican nationals who had handled the "cooking." The head of the Los Angeles Drug Enforcement Agency noted to a local newspaper that the meth lab was part of a large California drug network, but they were unable to identify the kingpins.

On July 6, 1985, Mrs. Van Meter filed a "Request for Official Inquiry" with the State of California

Department of Boating and Waterways stating that no satisfactory investigation was ever conducted into the matter of her husband's disappearance.

That same month, shortly after a meeting at Lake McClure with Mrs. Van Meter, Sheriff Mattheys mysteriously resigned from his position at the Mariposa Sheriff's Department. Mattheys revealed to reporter Anthony Pirushki that he had been ordered by two county supervisors and the county's attorney "to stay away from the Van Meter investigation." But that was not the reason he resigned. The whole story would not surface until seven years later when a reporter for the Mariposa Guide interviewed him.

However, while still in office, Mattheys and his internal affairs investigators had learned the reason for Van Meter's disappearance. A few weeks prior to his death in 1980, Van Meter had driven to the Attorney General's office in Sacramento and reported drug dealing and other types of corruption within the Mariposa Sheriff's Department. This, according to his friends whom he had confided in, deputies Dave Beavers, a fifteen year veteran of the sheriff's department, and Rod Cusic, a seventeen year veteran. Both deputies were ultimately forced out of the department and retired on stress leave.

On that same day, reserve deputy Lucky Jordan had driven to the Fresno office of the FBI to report similar information. According to Jordan, they had split up and reported to separate agencies in the event "something" happened to one of them.The crux of the story was State Attorney General Van De Kamp's response to the requested investigaion by Ron Van Meter. When Ron returned home from Sacramento, he was confronted by Sheriff Paige. Paige had received a call from the Attorney General informing him of the visit and its contents, and the sheriff was livid about Van Meter's betrayal.Van Meter had been photographing and journalizing drug activity by deputies at Lake McClure. He was part of a California State Abatement Program which involved harvesting and eradicating marijuana fields in Yosemite National Park and adjacent counties. Instead, the harvested marijuana was being stored in abandoned cars and towed out of town by a local wrecker under contract with the sheriff's department. It was also being distributed at a hidden cove at Lake McClure.

On June 24, 1980, frustrated and angry at the Attorney General for betraying him, Van Meter had borrowed a boat and was on his way to arrest the deputies at Lake McClure himself. He never returned. The investigation of Van Meter's "accident" was initially handled by Sergeant Roderick Sinclair, who could not have known on that fateful day that in exactly three years, three months, and nineteen days, he would enter the Twilight Zone where his own private hell awaited him.

******

The first substantial hint that a tentacle of the Octopus had slithered into Mariposa County occurred on March 5, 1983 when a Mariposa County Sheriff's vehicle scouting Queen Elizabeth II's motorcade route rounded a curve in the Yosemite National Park foothills, crossed a highway and collided headon with a Secret Service car, killing three Secret Service agents. CHP (California Highway Patrol) Assistant Chief Richard Hanna reported that the collision occurred at 10:50 a.m. between Coulterville and La Grange on Highway 132 about 25 minutes ahead of Queen Elizabeth's motorcade.CHP Sergeant Bob Schilly reported that Mariposa County Sheriff's Sergeant Roderick Sinclair, 43, was driving with his partner, Deputy Rod McKean, 51, when "for some reason, [he didn't] know why," Sinclair crossed the center line and hit the second of the three Secret Service cars, which went tumbling down a 10foot embankment.

The three Secret Service agents killed in the collision were identified as George P. LaBarge, 41, Donald Robinson, 38, and Donald A. Bejcek, 29. Sinclair, who had sustained broken ribs and a fractured knee, was first stabilized at Fremont Hospital in Mariposa, then transported several days later to Modesto Memorial Hospital.

Years later, several nurses who had been present when Sinclair was brought into Fremont Hospital confided that Sinclair had been drugged on the day of "the Queen's accident" as it became known in Mariposa. For months Sinclair had been receiving huge daily shots of Demerol, "enough to kill most men," according to one billing clerk. Some former deputies who had feared punitive measures if they spoke up, later corroborated the story of the nurses.

Meanwhile, Assistant U.S. Attorney James White in Fresno ordered Dr. Arthur Dahlem's files seized to prove Sinclair's drug addiction. Sinclair's Mariposa doctor and close friend had been prescribing heavy sedatives to him for years. When White attempted to prosecute Sinclair for criminal negligence, he was called into chambers during the federal probe and told by U.S. District Court Judge Robert E. Coyle to "drop the criminal investigation" because Sinclair's drug problem was not relevant to the prosecution and the drug records could not be used in court. Judge Coyle's reasoning was that no blood tests had been taken on Sinclair at the Fremont Hospital on the day of the accident, therefore no case could be made against him.

In fact, the blood tests HAD been taken, but later disappeared.A significant piece of information relative to Judge Coyle's background was passed to me during my investigation of the Queen's accident by retired FBI agent Thomas Walsh. Allegedly, the Judge was once the attorney of record for Curry Company (owned by MCA Corporation) in Yosemite National Park. I later learned, in 1992, that Robert Booth Nichols had strong ties to MCA Corporation through Eugene Giaquinto, president of MCA Corporation Home Entertainment Division. Giaquinto had been on the Board of Directors of Nichols' corporation, MIL, Inc. (Meridian International Logistics, Inc.) and also held 10,000 shares of stock in the holding corporation. MIL, Inc. was later investigated by the Los Angeles FBI for allegedly passing classified secrets to overseas affiliates in Japan and Australia. It is interesting to note, though unrelated, that shortly afterward, the Japanese purchased MCA Corporation, one of the largest corporate purchases to take place in American history.

Relative to the Queens accident, in the civil trial that followed the tragic accident, Judge Coyle ruled that both Sinclair and the deceased Secret Service agents were at fault. Mariposa County was ordered to pay 70 percent of the claim filed by the widows, and the Secret Service to pay 30 percent. The county's insurance company paid the claim, and ironically, Sinclair was subsequently promoted to Commander of the Mariposa Sheriff's Department where he is still employed as of this writing.

In an interview on March 7, 1988, at Yoshino's Restaurant in Fresno, former U.S. Attorney James White recalled that the original CHP report on the Queens accident was sent to the State Attorney General's office (Van De Kamp) in Sacramento. The report was first received by Arnold Overoye, who agreed with White that Sinclair should be prosecuted. But when the report crossed Van De Kamp's desk, he told Overoye and his assistant to discard it trash it.

Van De Kamp then appointed Bruce Eckerson, the Mariposa County District Attorney, to take charge of the investigation and submit a new report. Coincidentally, Bruce Eckerson's disclosure statements on file at the Mariposa County Courthouse indicated that he owned stock in MCA Entertainment Corporation. White added that ALL of the crack M.A.I.T.S. team CHP officers involved in the original investigation either resigned or were transferred (or fired) afterward. The CHP Commander and the Deputy Commander who supervised the M.A.I.T.S. investigation also resigned as did Assistant U.S. Attorney White himself after the coverup took place.

However, White noted that before he resigned, he quietly filed with Stephan LaPalm of the U.S. Attorney's office in Sacramento the transcripts of the trial and an affidavit which listed the "hallucinatory" drugs Sinclair had used prior to the accident. I privately continued with the Queen's accident investigation, interviewing deputies Dave Beavers and Rod Cusic who had been privy to Sinclair's drugged condition on the day of the accident.

Beavers, who was the first deputy to arrive on the scene, maintained four years later, in 1987, that he was cognizant of Sinclair's condition, but when he was questioned by James White he was NOT ASKED about the drugs. (James White had by then been ordered to drop the criminal investigation and stay away from the drug aspect of the case).

In January 1988, deputy Rod Cusic strode into the offices of the Mariposa Guide, a competitor newspaper to the Mariposa Gazette, and stated that he was "told by Rod Sinclair to lie to a Grand Jury" about Sinclair's drug addiction and the resulting Queen's accident. Cusic added that he officially disclosed this to the Fresno FBI on April 26, 1984 and again on October 9, 1987. In 1987, Cusic also noted that he witnessed a boobytrapped incendiary device explode at Rod Sinclair's home during a visit to his residence. Additionally, earlier on, Sinclair allegedly barricaded himself inside his home and boobytrapped the property, as witnessed by numerous deputies who tried to persuade him to come out.

While reviewing old newspaper clippings from the Mariposa Gazette, I discovered an odd sidebar to the story. In December, 1984, during the Queen's accident civil trial in Fresno, U.S. Attorney James White had introduced testimony that Sinclair's vehicle contained "a myriad of automatic weapons including a boobytrapped bomb" when the collision occurred on March 5, 1983. It was not until 1991 that I discovered the depth of the coverup.

A CBS television executive and a Secret Service agent who had ridden in the third car of the Queen's motorcade in 1983, arrived in Mariposa to enlist my help in putting the pieces of the puzzle together on the Queen's accident. The Secret Service agent's best friend had been the driver of the car in which all three agents were killed. I signed a contract with the television executive for the sale of the story then drove them to the site of the accident, then to the site of where the damaged vehicle was stored near Lake McClure. The Secret Service agent broke down at the sight of the vehicle, remembering the gruesome appearance of his dead friend in the front seat. He turned, tears welling in his eyes, and said, "His heart burst right through his chest and was laying in his lap when I found him."

Dave Beavers joined us the next day. As did former sheriff Ken Mattheys. Beavers did not know that the same Secret Service agent whom he was sitting with in the car was the man who had tried to pull Sinclair out of the sheriff's vehicle on the day of the accident. There had been a scuffle, Beavers insisting that Sinclair go to the hospital with "his own people," and the Secret Service ultimately conceding.The Secret Service agent reflected sadly that they didn't know to ask the hospital for blood tests on Sinclair that day, didn't know of his drug addiction. By the time the case went to court, the records at the hospital were gone.

Two weeks after the agent left Mariposa, I received a packet containing copies of Sinclair's drug records for three years prior to the accident. They were the same records that U.S. District Court Judge Robert Coyle had disallowed in the Queen's accident trial. But it was not until producer Don Thrasher, a tenyear veteran of ABC News "20/20," came to town, that I learned of Sinclair's background, or the extent of his addiction.

By chance, at a book signing engagement at B. Dalton Bookstore, I had mentioned to the manager, Shaula Brent, that my next book contained information about the Queens accident.Surprised, Shaula blurted out that she had worked at Fremont Hospital when Sinclair was brought in from the accident. Shaula recounted the following: Rod Sinclair was brought into Fremont Hospital and placed in a room with an armed "FBI" agent outside the door. Sinclair had been receiving huge shots of Demerol in the arm every day prior to the accident, by order of Dr. Arthur Dahlem. Shaula noted that Sinclair was a big man and the amount of Demerol he had been receiving would have killed most men. After the Queen's accident, all drugs were withdrawn from Sinclair, and employees, including Shaula, could hear him raving aloud for days from his hospital room. The employees at the hospital were instructed not to speak about or repeat what took place at the hospital while Sinclair was there.

Because Shaula and her friend, Barbara Locke, who also worked at the hospital, were suspicious about Sinclair's hospital records, they secretly took photostats of the records "before they were destroyed by the hospital." Blood HAD been drawn on Sinclair on the day of the Queen's accident, and he HAD been under the influence, according to Shaula. Shaula gave the names of six nurses who were witness to Sinclair's condition at the time he was brought into Fremont Hospital. When his body was finally drugfree, Sinclair was transported, against his wishes, to Modesto Hospital.

******

In January, 1992, the final pieces to the puzzle fell into place. Sinclair's background had been the key all along. Producer Don Thrasher had interviewed the Secret Service agent and, although the information he obtained would not be used in his production, he advised me to follow up. The Secret Service corraborated the following profile: Sinclair's father had been a military attache to General Douglas MacArthur during World War II. (I had privately mused how many of MacArthur's men later became arms of the Octopus). In Japan, after the war, Colonel Sinclair (sr.) supervised the training of selected Japanese in intelligence gathering operations.

According to the Secret Service, he was an "international figure," highly regarded in the intelligence community. Rod Sinclair, Jr. attended school in Japan during this time. He later reportedly worked in the Army C.I.D. in a nonmilitary or civilian capacity, allegedly receiving training at Fort Liggett in San Luis Obispo, a training center for military intelligence operations.

Could it have been possible for Colonel Sinclair, Sr. to have called upon old friends in high places to rescue his son, Rod, from the Queen's accident investigation? Did the Octopus have enough power to alter an investigation of the death of three Secret Service agents? According to the Secret Service agent in Los Angeles, it did. And he intended to tell the story after he retired.

CHAPTER 2

By this time three consecutive grand jury foreman's had sought help from the Attorney General, to no avail. It came to pass that one of the deputies, Dave Beavers, was having trouble obtaining his "stress leave" pay and hired a Jackson, California lawyer to represent him in the case. The lawyer, Ben Wagner, not only interviewed Beavers, but began interviewing other deputies who corroborated Beavers' story. Most of them, thirteen in all, had at one time or another testified before the grand jury and subsequently been forced out of the department. Interestingly, none of the deputies knew "why" the others had been been placed on stress leave or resigned until Wagner finally assembled them together and the story was aired.

At that point some of the former grand jury members were called in to confirm the testimony of the individual deputies. Most refused to speak up, but a few corroborated the deputies' story. Ultimately, after numerous meetings, the group of deputies and grand jurors formed and later incorporated an organization they called D.I.G. (Decency in Government).

By now, Wagner was carrying a gun inside and out of Mariposa for the first time in his life and writing letters to the Attorney General, the FBI, and even President Ronald Reagan. One response was forthcoming, from a special agent at the Fresno Department of Justice, Division of Law Enforcement. This agent listened to Kay Ritter, a former grand jury foreman and several deputies after reviewing Wagner's evidence.

Wagner was contemplating a huge civil rights lawsuit against the county of Mariposa, but it was imperative that he first understand "why" the attorney general refused to help these people.When the special agent drove to Sacramento and reviewed the files within the attorney general's office emanating from Mariposa, and talked to some of the office staff there, he learned that everything pertaining to Mariposa was automatically "trashed" when it crossed the A/G's desk.

Disgusted, the agent called Ben Wagner and told him "Go ahead with the lawsuit." He had no idea why all the grand jury documents had been trashed, but he was convinced no help would be forthcoming from the attorney general's office.

On November 20, 1987, Wagner filed with the U.S. District Court in Fresno the first of two lawsuits, later revealed in a Sacramento newspaper to be the largest civil rights lawsuits ever recorded in California history. Newspaper reporters and television crews flocked to Wagner for interviews. In one instance, Wagner, former Sergeant Dave Beavers and others stood in front of the Fresno FBI building while being interviewed by Channel 3 Sacramento News.

On camera, without hesitation, Beavers recalled observing deputies carrying packages of drugs from the Gold Coin Saloon, a notorious drug hangout, and placing the packages in the trunk of their patrol car. A subsequent raid indicated the drugs had been stored by the owner in a historic underground tunnel once used by the infamous bandit, Juaquin Murietta, to escape the sheriff's posse.

Meanwhile, on February 10, 1988, attorney Wagner filed at the U.S. District Court in Sacramento a Writ of Mandamus against John Van De Camp, the State Attorney General; George Vinson, regional director of the Fresno FBI; George Deukemejian, then Governor of California, and David F. Levi, United States Attorney for refusing to investigate corruption in Mariposa County.

The citizens of Mariposa were choosing sides, writing letters to the editor, arguing amongst themselves, and being interviewed on the sidewalks by news media. D.I.G. was the talk of the town. On February 17, 1988, Capitol News Service in Sacramento ran a story entitled, "Law & Order Failing on Hill County," by Jerry Goldberg. The article noted that Capitol News Service had had discussions with several Attorney General staff members who "stonewalled questions about any investigation of charges or direct answers on the willingness of Van de Kamp to meet with the citizen's group [D.I.G.]."

Goldberg mentioned the "Queen's accident" in his article: "The Fresno case charges destruction of records on individuals [Commander Rod Sinclair] involved in the case. This includes possible information about the fatal accident which occurred in the area [of Mariposa County] when an escort vehicle involved in the visit of Queen Elizabeth in 1983 [crashed.]"

Goldberg went on to note that "several people had received threats about dangerous things happening to them if they continued to stand up to the sheriff and district attorney." A San Joaquin County official, who asked not to be named, told Goldberg that a key element to the problems in Mariposa County "related to the fatal accident which occurred to Queen Elizabeth's escort vehicle."

On February 19, 1988, Ben Wagner's wife, a legal secretary, sent a letter to President Ronald Reagan at the White House. The Wagners did not live in Mariposa County, indeed, lived far away in Jackson County, unfettered by corruption, yet they saw fit to take it upon themselves to write for help. That emotionally gripping letter was headed, "Restoring Equal Rights to the Citizens of Mariposa County." It read as follows:

"Dear President Reagan: I am writing to you not only as the wife of an attorney, but as a citizen of the United States. My initial concern is that you personally receive this letter and enclosures, as many residents of Mariposa County have literally placed their lives, and the lives of their families in jeopardy by coming forth to expose the local government corruption detailed herein.I understand that your time is at a premium, however, your immediate attention regarding these matters is of the utmost importance, and respectfully requested.

"In August, 1987, our office was approached by several exdeputies and individuals from Mariposa County requesting assistance in redressing unlawful and corrupt activities by officials and departments within their local government, and failure on the part of the State Attorney General John Van De Kamp, the Office of the Attorney General, and our Federal agencies, to investigate these alleged activities.

"What we found through our initial investigations and accumulation of evidence into these allegations was appalling. It took us time to realize that in fact, the Constitution of the United States had been suspended in this county.

"The organization, Decency in Government [D.I.G.], was formed, and on November 20, 1987, the first multimillion dollar Civil Rights suit was filed in Fresno. We felt media coverage would lay a solid ground of personal safety for other complaintants to come forth. This coverage proved to be successful, and on February 11, 1988, the second Civil Rights suit was filed, along with the filing of a Writ of Mandamus in Sacramento.

"I have enclosed copies of these suits, including several newspaper articles regarding the situation. Since 1979, many residents, including individuals, sheriff's deputies, groups, organizations, members of Grand Juries and Grand Juries have taken their complaints to the Office of the Attorney General, State Attorney General John Van De Kamp and Federal authorities for investigation.

"These agencies have continuously and blatantly failed to redress the grievances of these citizens. What appears to be a consistent procedure of one Arnold O. Overoye, of the State Attorney General's Office, is to refer the complaints directly back to the local agencies to whom the complaints were made.

"Over the years, this has perpetrated threats, intimidation and fear by these local officials to the complaining individuals. There has also been questions regarding the disappearance of citizens possessing incriminating evidence, and the incompletion or failure to investigate `homicides' and `suicides'.

"Further, it has recently come to our attention, that Mr. Overoye's `procedure,' and the inaction of State Attorney John Van De Camp and Federal agencies is not limited to Mariposa County, but in fact, expands to a number of foothill counties who are experiencing the same types of local corruption.

"The grievances of these citizens, as you will note in paragraph IV of the WRIT are: (1) Violation of Individual Civil Rights (2) Abuse of discretion in the prosecution of criminal complaints (3) Intentional obstruction of the due course of Justice (4) Malicious prosecution (5) Bribery (6) Intimidation of Grand Jury members and witnesses (7) The deprivation of property (8) Illegal and unlawful land transaction (9) The failure to arrest and prosecute those involved in illegal drug sales, including individuals employed by the County of Mariposa (10) Violation of Property Rights (11) Conspiracy to impede and obstruct criminal investigations (12) Homicide (13) Attempted homicide (14) Rape (15) Battery (16) Perjury.

"Why Mr. President, are we bound to the laws of this country, and our officials are not? Life in Mariposa is as if the citizens were being held in detention, and the local agencies, the criminals, were running the county.

"Needless to say, residents feel it is a way of life to literally arm themselves and their homes against their government! I have been in these people's homes, and have witnessed the arsenal of weapons they feel they must possess to protect themselves and their families.

"My husband must travel in, around and out of this county [Mariposa] with an armed escort. He is transported during `the midnight hours' to interview Plaintiffs and witnesses.

"I ask you, Mr. President, what country are we living in? We should certainly make sure that our backyard is clean before we boast to the Soviets regarding the Civil Rights of Americans.

"On January 19, 1988, my husband took two witnesses, Kay Ritter, a former Mariposa Grand Jury Forewoman and Robert Ashmore, an exdeputy, to Mr. [George] Vinson, the Regional Director of the FBI in Fresno. The testimony, both oral and documentary, took approximately 3 hours to present. To this date, the FBI has failed to redress the grievances of these complaintants, and Mr. Vinson did not even have the courtesy to return my husband's phone calls. It came to our understanding, through a reliable source, that Mr. Vinson felt the complaints had `no substance.'

"Mr. President, my husband has been a trial attorney for 14 years. He certainly wouldn't waste his time or expertise, or the time of these witnesses, if he felt there was `no substance' to the contents of their testimony.However, this attitude by Attorney General Van De Camp, his office, and Federal agencies is typical and consistent.

"Shortly after this incident, a major drug dealer contacted our office with valuable information detailing the sale of illegal drugs to county officials, and wanted information regarding the Federal Witness Program. Mr. Vinson, knowing this by telephone messages, again failed to return my husband's inquiries.

"There is evidence by another credible witness, who was informed by the FBI, that should they get involved now, it would be `bad publicity,' and `they have let the problems in Mariposa get too far out of hand.'

"You may wonder why my husband and I became dedicated to the citizens of this county. We certainly don't foresee large amounts of money at the end of this case. Our investment in time and expenditures exceeds $40,000 to date.What we do see are people, just like you and I, who have been suppressed by their own `elected ' officials, with no help or assistance from Attorney General Van De Kamp, his office, or Federal agencies. If someone doesn't help them, they will continue to live under these conditions, which I could never imagine would exist in America.

"My husband is not a righteous individual, nor is he perfect. None of us are you know. He also doesn't believe that he can solve the problems of the world. However, being an attorney, he is an officer of the Court, and he feels a professional obligation to uphold the laws of the State, and to maintain the freedom of the citizens of this country.

"This is, however, more than I can say about a number of `representatives' and officials, who have failed to perform their appointed duties of their office, and are paid by the taxpayers.Through my involvement in this case, I have found, to my repulsion, that my lifelong conception of our government's representation of the `people,' its vested authority and ability to uphold Civil Rights, and its duty to maintain the laws and the Constitution, has been only an shattering illusion.

"Our system has failed, Mr. President. And by its failure, has crushed and destroyed the lives of many innocent, lawabiding people. Why? There is an answer. And we will utilize every legal avenue to find it. We will not be discouraged, or give up in our effort to restore the Constitution of the United States in Mariposa County, and other foothill communities. We will continue until the answer is found. Even if it means presenting the problem to you, Mr. President, on the steps of the White House.

"Our best regards to Mrs. Reagan. Respectfully yours, Vivian L. Wagner."

******

Shortly before Ben Wagner's first scheduled appearance in U.S. District Court in Fresno on behalf of D.I. G. (Decency in Government), Wagner received an obscure response from "Chuck" at the Reagan White House. Wagner excitedly called Kay Ritter and Dave Beavers, myself and a few others to note that a meeting with "Chuck" was scheduled that week. It was to be a somewhat secret meeting as requested by the White House.

However, the day after meeting with "Chuck," Wagner unplugged his phone and walked out on his law practice and his home in Jackson, California, taking nothing with him except his clothes and his wife, never to be seen again. I was later told that Jerry Goldberg of Capitol News Service did the same, on the same day, and I was never able to locate either of them again.

CHAPTER 3

The last remnants of the D.I.G. group were beginning to call themselves "The Loser's Club," resembling forlorn characters out of a Stephen King novel. They had squared off against a labyrnthine evil so incomprehensible, they didn't know what they were fighting. It was time to bring in some outside help.

During a strategy meeting in Jackson, California, Ben Wagner had received an impressive 700 page report commissioned by the Tulare City Council. The report, compiled by Ted Gunderson, a former Los Angeles FBI agent, was indepth and straightforward about deputies receiving payoffs and distributing drugs in the small farmtown of Tulare. Wagner had given me a copy for my files.

On an impulse, I picked up the phone and called Gunderson's telephone number listed at the top of the attached resume. The resume was impressive. He'd worked as SAC (Senior Special Agent in Charge) at Los Angeles FBI headquarters, Washington D.C. headquarters and in Dallas, Texas. It would be two years before I would grasp the significance of the Dallas connection. After retiring from the FBI, he'd worked for F. Lee Baily, Esq., then formed his own investigative agency in Los Angeles county.

I left a message with the answering service and he returned the call a few days later. His voice was open, attentive, devoid of the bureaucratic hollowness I had come to expect from FBI agents. We talked briefly, mostly about the problem DIG was experiencing in Mariposa. I said I needed help, anticipating his next question. But none came forth. Instead, a clipped knowingness entered his tone, as if nothing more should be said on the phone. He agreed to meet with me at his home a few weeks later and we hung up.

Unknown to me at the time, I had taken a quantum leap in the direction of the Octopus when I contacted Ted Gunderson. The mystery of the Mariposa coverups would soon be divulged through an associate of his, a former member of "The Company" in nearby Fresno, California.

******

On November 30, 1991, Ted Gunderson opened the door at his Manhattan Beach home and ushered us into a small living room cluttered with toys. He made no explanation for the toys scattered around the floor and the couch, but offered coffee and donuts, then proceeded to eat most of the donuts himself. I had expected someone dripping with intrigue, instead he was classic in the sense of an investigator; rumpled shirt and slacks, nervous movements, distracted behavior. We sat on the couch bunched together amongst the toys. Gunderson pulled a kitchen chair up in front of us, leaned over and began stuffing his mouth with cheese and crackers, all the while talking, his body in perpetual motion. He was a big, handsome man with an aging face and tossled silver hair. He seemed entirely unaware of his appearance or the appearnce of his home, but his pale eyes were intelligent and probing. Intuitively, I knew he was more than he appeared to be.

A young woman, perhaps early thirties, entered the room brushing long blond hair, still wet from the shower. Her faded jeans and sundrenched appearance reminded me of friends I'd known growing up in Newport Beach. Gunderson introduced her as his "partner," as she seated herself silently on the floor next to him. The flush on her face brought a fleeting prescience to me that they had been making love shortly before the meeting.

Ray Jenkins recounted the Mariposa story for several hours, with the rest of us digressing to insert a fact here or there. The investigation had led beyond Mariposa into MCA Corporation, and various State and Federal levels of government. I noted that Danny Casolaro's research had started at the eastern end, in Washington D.C., yet he had been preparing to travel to California for the rest of the story, before his death three months earlier.

Gunderson listened carefully, occasionally interrupting to ask questions, then motioned us to follow him to the backyard. There we stood in a circle in the middle of his yard while he surveyed the area. Satisfied that he was not being watched, he agreed to come to Mariposa, with media, and perform a citizens arrest on the corrupt officials. He pulled a frazzled piece of paper from his pocket and gave me a list of telephone numbers to write down. They were numbers to telephone booths at various locations in the vicinity of his home. Each booth had been coded 1,2,3,4, or 5. He instructed that the next time I called him, he would give me the code number of the booth and a time to call. I would then call him at the designated booth.

Eight hours later, I handed him a copy of my first book, as a courtesy, then left Manhattan Beach loaded with newspaper clippings and documents, mostly relating to Casolaro's investigation of the Octopus. One packet was titled, "The Wonderful Weapons of Wackenhut," others related to the Inslaw affair, Iran/Contra and various savings and loan scandals.

In the van, reviewing the documents, I wondered what relationship they had to Mariposa County and why I was given the packet. The documents were far ranging, beyond anything I had heretofore imagined. But within days of my visit to Gunderson, I would be introduced to the Octopus.

******

The following morning, at 7:30 a.m., I received a collect call from a man who identified himself as Michael Riconosciuto (pronounced Riconoshooto). Riconosciuto, calling from the Pierce County jail in Tacoma, Washington, said he had been informed by Gunderson that I was investigating a corruption/drug ring in Mariposa County. For 45 minutes Riconosciuto related the names of those in charge of methamphetamine operations in Mariposa, Madera and Fresno counties.

A ton of methamphetamine had been seized in the area of my investigations, according to Riconosciuto. Richard Knozzi was a high level "cooker" and Jim DeSilva, Ben Kalka, and others were medium level distributors or lieutenants. Kalka was currently serving time in a Pleasanton prison; 900 pounds of methamphetamine had been seized under his control.

"Who's behind this ring?" I asked. Riconosciuto paused for a moment, then took a deep breath. "It's The Company. Arms get shipped to the Contras, the Afghanistan rebels [Mujahaden], the Middle East. You know, to fight the Soviet influence. But the Contras and the Mujahaden don't have money to pay for arms, so they pay with drugs, cocaine or heroin. The Company handles the drug end of it in the U.S ..."

"What's The Company ...?," I asked. Riconosciuto interrupted, "Wait a minute. It's a long story. You have to start at the beginning." Concerned that Riconosciuto might have to hang up, I hurriedly pushed for answers. "Arms for drugs, do you have proof?"

"Oh, yeah. It's a selfsupporting system, they don't have to go through Congress ..."

"Michael," I pressed, "who ships the arms?" Riconosciuto quieted for a moment, gathering his thoughts. "Let's start with Wackenhut. I didn't play ball with Wackenhut so they poisoned the well for me. I'm in jail because I worked for Wackenhut. The government has put together a very simple drug case against me ... as if that's what I'm about, just a druggie."

"Tell me about Wackenhut."

"It's a security corporation headquartered in Coral Gables, Florida. Wackenhut provides security for the Nevada nuclear test site, the Alaskan pipeline, Lawrence Livermore Labs, you know, all the high security government facilities in the U.S. They have about fifty thousand armed security guards that work for minimum wage or slightly above.

"On the other hand, on the Wackenhut board of directors, they have all the former heads of every government agency there ever was under Ronald Reagan and George Bush; FBI, CIA, NSA, Secret Service, etc.

"You know, they've got retired Admiral Stansfield Turner, a former CIA director; Clarence Kelley, former FBI director; Frank Carlucci, former CIA deputy director; James Rowley, former Secret Service director; Admiral Bobby Ray Inman, former acting chairman of President Bush's foreign intelligence advisory board and former CIA deputy director. Before his appointment as Reagan's CIA director, the late William Casey was Wackenhut's outside legal counsel ..."

I interrupted him, wanting to know where HE fit into the picture?

"Well, I served as Director of Research for the Wackenhut facility at the Cabazon Indian reservation in Indio, California. In 198384 I modified the PROMISE computer software to be used in law enforcement and intelligence agencies worldwide. A man named Earl Brian was spearheading a plan for worldwide use of the software, but essentially, the modified software was being pirated from the owners, Bill and Nancy Hamilton."

I asked, "So how did that cause your arrest?" Michael was articulate, but his story was becoming complicated. He continued. "I signed an affidavit for the Hamiltons stating that I had been responsible for the modification. The House Judiciary Committee on Inslaw was investigating the theft of the software and I was afraid I would be implicated since I had performed the modification. Nine days later, in an attempt to discredit my testimony, I was arrested for allegedly operating a drug lab."

I didn't want to push Riconosciuto on the subject of a drug lab at that point, but voiced my foremost concern. "Will the House Judiciary Committee be bringing you in to testify?"

"Eventually, yes."

"Are you in any danger where you are right now?" I was unaware at the time that Riconosciuto had been recruited at Stanford University into the CIA nearly twenty years earlier, and danger was a matter of fact in his life.

"Oh, you bet! Several of the jail guards here moonlight for Wackenhut here in Tacoma." Riconosciuto went on to discuss the Wackenhut setup. "Basically, what you have is a group of politically well connected people through Wackenhut who wanted to get juicy defense contracts when Ronald Reagan got elected president. And they did! They also preyed on high tech start up companies, many of them out of Silicon Valley in California.

"They saw technology that they wanted and they either forced the companies into bankruptcy or waited on the sidelines, like vultures, and picked them up for pennies after they were bankrupt."

I made profuse notes as Riconosciuto spoke, not knowing where he was leading, but assuming his narrative would eventually intersect with my investigation of government sanctioned drug operations. Finally it did. According to Riconosciuto, Wackenhut Corporation "made inroads" into the methamphetamine operation. A man named Richard Knozzi allegedly headed major government sanctioned meth laboratories in Fresno, Madera and Mariposa counties. A man named Al Holbert, a former Israeli intelligence officer with U.S. citizenship, was the liaison or connection between the Knozzi operation and the U.S. government.

In subsequent documents obtained from Michael's secret hiding place in the California desert, I located documents which indicated Michael had first been recruited into the CIA by Al Holbert. However, during this first of many phone conversations with Riconosciuto, I found myself searching for a beginning, something concrete to get a foothold. "Michael, is there any proof that you worked at Wackenhut?"

Michael responded diffidently. "CNN recently ran a piece, and they filmed a location shot from the parking lot of the casino. Then they aired another location shot on the [Cabazon] reservation of just an expanse of bare land, blue sky, sand and sagebrush. Then the narrator says, `Here on the Indian reservation is where Michael Riconosciuto claims to have modified the PROMISE software.' They didn't show the tribal office complex, they didn't show the industrial park. They showed a bare expanse of land, like I had a computer out in a teepee in the middle of the desert! The government is doing a character assassination on me. I'm fair game now that I'm in jail, because I've raised too many provocative questions, you know, and they're trying to relegate me to the area of delusion ..."

******

For three months Riconosciuto called daily from the Pierce County jail in Tacoma, Washington. At his request, I attached a tape recorder to my phone and unraveled a complicated web of illegal overseas arms shipments, espionage, CIA drug trafficking, biological warfare development, computer software theft, money laundering and corruption at the highest levels of government.

Throughout this time span, I also obtained every newspaper and magazine article I could lay my hands on relative to Riconosciuto's background and contacts. Riconosciuto had been communicating regularly with journalist Danny Casolaro prior to his death on August 10, 1991 when Danny's nude body was found in the bathtub of room 517 of the Sheraton Hotel in Martinsburg, West Virginia. His wrists had been slashed ten or twelve times. No papers were found in his hotel room or in his car, though he was known to cart a briefcase and files everywhere he went. An XActo blade found in the bathtub was not sold locally and his briefcase is still missing to this day.Casolaro was working on a book entitled, "Behold a Pale Horse," which encompassed the October Surprise story, the Inslaw computer software case, the Iran/Contra affair, the B.C.C.I. scandal, and M.C.A. entertainment corporation, all overlapping and interconnecting into one network which he dubbed, "The Octopus."

He told friends that he "had traced the Inslaw and related stories back to a dirty CIA `Old Boy' network" that had begun working together in the 1950's around the Albania covert operations. These men had gotten into the illegal gun and drug trade back then and had continued in that business ever since.

Before his death, Danny had made plans to visit the Wackenhut Corporation in Indio, California, and even considered naming his book, "Indio."

CHAPTER 4

The history of Wackenhut Corporation is best described from its own literature. An outdated letter of introduction typed on Wackenhut letterhead once sent to prospective clients provided me with the following profile: (Excerpted) "Wackenhut Corporation had its beginnings in 1954, when George R. Wackenhut and three other former Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation formed a company in Miami, Special Agent Investigators, to provide investigative services to business and industry.

"The approach was so well received that a second company was formed in 1955 to apply the same philosophy to physical security problems. In 1958 the companies were combined under the name of Wackenhut Corporation, a Florida company. From the outset, George Wackenhut was President and chief executive officer of the enterprise. Wackenhut established its headquarters in Coral Gables, Florida in 1960, extending its physical security operations to the United States government through formation of a whollyowned subsidiary, Wackenhut Services, Incorporated. This was done in order to comply with federal statute prohibiting the government from contracting with companies which furnish investigative or detective services.

"In 1962, Wackenhut operations extended from Florida to California and Hawaii. On January 1, 1966, the company became international with offices in Caracas, Venezuela, through half ownership of an affiliate.

"The Wackenhut Corporation became public in 1966 with overthecounter stock sales and joined the American Stock Exchange in 1967. Through acquisitions of subsidiaries and affiliates, now totaling more than 20, and expansion of it contracts into numerous territories and foreign countries, the Wackenhut Corporation has grown into one of the world's largest security and investigative firms.

"In 1978 acquisition of NUSAC, a Virginia company providing technical and consulting services to the nuclear industry, brought Wackenhut into the fields of environment and energy management. In 1979, Wackenhut acquired Stellar Systems, Inc., a California company specializing in outdoor electronic security.

"The executive makeup of the company reflects the stress Mr. Wackenhut placed on professional leadership. The Wackenhut Corporation is guided by executives and managers with extensive backgrounds in the FBI and other military, governmental and private security and investigative fields.

"The principle business of the company is furnishing security and complete investigative services and systems to business, industry and professional clients, and to various agencies of the U.S. Government.

"Through a whollyowned subsidiary, Wackenhut Electronic Systems Corporation, the company develops and produces sophisticated computerized security systems to complement its guard services.

"Major clients of Wackenhut's investigative services are the insurance industry and financial interests. These services include insurance inspections, corporate acquisition surveys, personnel background reports, preemployment screening, polygraph examinations and general criminal, fraud and arson investigations.

"The wide variety of services offered by Wackenhut Corporation also includes guard and electronic security for banks, office buildings, apartments, industrial complexes and other physical structures; training programs in English and foreign languages to apply Wackenhut procedures to individual clients needs; fire, safety and protective patrols; rescue and first aid services; emergency support programs tailored to labormanagement disputes, and predeparture screening programs widely used by airports and airlines.

"The company now has some 20,000 employees and maintains close to 100 offices and facilities with operations spread across the United States and extending into Canada, the United Kingdom, Western Europe, the Middle East, Indonesia, Central and South America and the Caribbean."

******

On the surface, Wackenhut Corporation seemed innocous enough, but through documents later obtained from Michael Riconosciuto, I learned there was another, darker side to Wackenhut operations, at the Cabazon Indian reservation near Indio, California.

Because Indian reservations are sovereign nations and do not come under federal jurisdiction, Wackenhut International had formed a partnership and entered into a business venture with the Cabazon Indians to produce hightech arms and explosives for export to thirdworld countries. This maneuver was designed to evade congressional prohibitions against U.S. weapons being shipped to the Contras and middle eastern countries.

In the early 1980's, Dr. John Nichols, the Cabazon tribal administrator, obtained a department of Defense secret facility clearance for the reservation to conduct various research projects. Nichols then approached Wackenhut with an elaborate "joint venture" proposal to manufacture 120mm combustible cartridge cases, 9mm machine pistols, lasersighted assault weapons, sniper rifles and portable rocket systems on the Cabazon reservation and in Latin America. At one point, he even sought to develop biological weapons.

Again, through Michael Riconosciuto's files, I later obtained interoffice memorandums and correspondence relating to biological technology, but more on that in chapter 10. Meanwhile, in 1980, Dr. John Nichols obtained the blueprints to Crown Prince Fahd's palace in Tiaf, Saudi Arabia, and drafted a plan to provide security for the palace.

The Saudis were interested enough to conduct a background check on the Cabazons. Mohammad Jameel Hashem, consul of the Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia in Washington, D.C., wrote former South Dakota Senator James Abourezk at his offices in Washington D.C. and noted, "According to our black list for companies, the Cabazon Band of Mission Indians/Cabazon Trading Company and Wackenhut International are not included." Translated, that meant that neither the Cabazons or Wackenhut were Jewishrun enterprises.

George Wackenhut's political leanings were once described in a book entitled, "The Age of Surveillance, The Aims and Methods of America's Political Intelligence System," by Frank J. Donner (Knopf, 1980), pp. 424425 as such: "The agency's [Wackenhut] professional concerns reflect the political values of its director, George Wackenhut. A rightist of the old blood, he selected as his directors an assortment of ultras prominent in the John Birch Society, the ASC, and other rightwing groups. The agency's monthly house organ, the `Wackenhut Security Review,' systematically decried the subversive inspiration in virtually all the protest movements of the sixties, from civil rights to peace. This vigilance earned the publication the accolade of rightwing organizations, inluding (in 1962) the George Washington Honor Medal and the Freedom Foundation Award at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania; and (in 1965 and 1966) the Vigilant Patriots Award from the AllAmerican Conference to Combat Communism."

******

Of all the articles written about Wackenhut Corporation, probably the most provacative was written by John Connolly for SPY magazine, published in September 1992, pp. 4654. Connolly, a former New York police officer turned writer, began his story with the following introduction: "What? A big private company one with a board of former CIA, FBI and Pentagon officials; one in charge of protecting nuclearweapons facilities, nuclear reactors, the Alaskan oil pipeline and more than a dozen American embassies abroad; one with longstanding ties to a radical rightwing organization; one with 30,000 men and women under arms secretly helped Iraq in its effort to obtain sophisticated weapons? And fueled unrest in Venezuela? This is all the plot of a new bestselling thriller, right? Or the ravings of some overheated conspiracy buff, right? Right? WRONG."

Connolly highlighted George Wackenhut as a "hardline rightwinger" who was able to profit from his beliefs by building dossiers on Americans suspected of being Communists or leftleaning "subversives and sympathizers" and selling the information to interested parties. By 1965 , Wackenhut was boasting to potential investors that the company maintained files on 2.5 million suspected dissidents one in 46 American adults then living.

In 1966, after acquiring the private files of Karl Barslaag, a former staff member of the House Committee on UnAmerican Activities, Wackenhut could confidently maintain that with more than 4 million names, it had the largest privately held file on suspected dissidents in America.

Connolly wrote that it was not possible to overstate the special relationship that Wackenhut enjoys with the federal government. Richard Babayan, claiming to be a CIA contract employee, told SPY that "Wackenhut has been used by the CIA and other intelligence agencies for years. When they [the CIA] need cover, Wackenhut is there to provide it for them."

Another CIA agent, Bruce Berckmans, who was assigned to the CIA station in Mexico City, but left the agency in January 1975 (putatively) to become a Wackenhut internationaloperations vice president, told SPY that he had seen a formal proposal submitted by George Wackenhut to the CIA offering Wackenhut offices throughout the world as fronts for CIA activities. In 1981, Berckmans joined with other senior Wackenhut executives to form the company's Special Projects Division. It was this division that linked up with exCIA man Dr. John Phillip Nichols, the Cabazon tribal administrator, in pursuit of a scheme to manufacture explosives, poison gas and biological weapons for export to the contras and other communist fighting rebels worldwide.

SPY also printed testimony from William Corbett, a terrorism expert who spent 18 years as a CIA analyst and is now an ABC News consultant in Europe. Said Corbett, "For years Wackenhut has been involved with the CIA and other intelligence organizations, including the DEA. Wackenhut would allow the CIA to occupy positions within the company [in order to carry out] clandestine operations."Additionally, Corbett said that Wackenhut supplied intelligence agencies with information, and it was compensated for this "in a quid pro quo arrangement" with government contracts worth billions of dollars over the years.

On page 51, in a box entitled, "Current and Former Wackenhut Directors," SPY published the following names: "John Ammarell, former FBI agent; Robert Chasen, former FBI agent; Clarence Kelly, former FBI director; Willis Hawkins, former assistant secretary of the Army; Paul X. Kelley, fourstar general (ret.), U.S. Marine Corps; Seth McKee, former commander in chief, North American Air Defense Command; Bernard Schriever, former member, President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board; Frank Carlucci, former Defense Secretary and former deputy CIA director; Joseph Carroll, former director, Defense Intelligence Agency; James Rawley, former director, U.S. Secret Service; Bobby Ray Inman, former deputy CIA director."

Danny Casolaro's body was found at 12:30 p.m. in a bloodfilled bath tub by a hotel maid who called the Martinsburg police. The body contained three deep cuts on the right wrist and seven on the left wrist, made by a single edge razor blade, the kind used to scrape windows or open packages.At the bottom of the bathwater was an empty Milwaukee beer can, a paper glass coaster, the razor blade and two white plastic trash bags, the kind used in wastepaper baskets.On the desk in the hotel room was an empty mead composition notebook with one page torn out and a suicide note which read: "To those who I love the most, please forgive me for the worst possible thing I could have done. Most of all, I'm sorry to my son. I know deep down inside that God will let me in."

There were no other papers, folders, documents of any sort, nor any briefcase found in the room. Danny's wallet was intact, stuffed with credit cards.The body was removed from the tub by Lieutenant Dave Brining from the Martinsburg fire department, and his wife, Sandra, a nurse who works in the hospital emergency room. The couple, who often moonlighted as coroners, took the body to the Brown Funeral Home where they conducted an examination.Charles Brown then decided to embalm the body that night and go home, rather than come back to work the next day, Sunday.

No one in Danny Casolaro's family had been notified of his death at that time, nor had they requested the body be embalmed.When Casolaro's family learned of the death, they insisted it was not a suicide and called for an autopsy and an investigation. Though the body had already been embalmed, an autopsy was performed at the West Virginia University Hospital by a Dr. Frost. The findings indicated that no struggle had taken place because there were no recent bruises on the body. The drugs found in Casolaro's urine, blood and tissue samples were in minute amounts but they were also unexplainable by his brother, Tony, who is a medical doctor.

According to Tony Casolaro, Danny did not take drugs or have any prescriptions for the drug traces of Hydrocodone and Tricyclic antidepressant that were found in the body. No pill boxes or written prescriptions were found. Dr. Casolaro searched through his brother's Blue Cross records and found no record of the prescriptions or doctor visits.

During the autopsy of the body, Dr. Frost had found lesions within the brain which were characteristic of Multiple Sclerosis. It was possible that Danny was having blurring of vision, but Dr. Frost downplayed the possibility that this contributed to any suicide. Of particular interest, was Frost's observation that the deep razor wounds on Danny's wrists were inflicted "without any hesitation marks." However, the lack of hesitation did not indicate one way or the other whether they were or were not selfinflicted. Investigators and police never found Danny's missing briefcase.

On August 6, 1991, Casolaro's housekeeper, Olga, helped Danny pack a black leather tote bag. She remembered he also packed a thick sheaf of papers into a dark brown or black briefcase. She asked him what he had put into the briefcase and he replied, "I have all my papers ..." He had been typing for two days, and as he left the house, he said, "Wish me luck. I'll see you in a couple of days."

By August 9th, Casolaro's friends were alarmed. Noone had heard from him and Olga was receiving threatening phone calls at Danny's home. On Saturday, August 10th, Olga received another call, a man's voice said, "You son of a bitch. You're dead."After learning of Danny's death, Olga recalled seeing Danny sitting in the kitchen on August 5th with a "heavy man ... wearing a dark suit. He was a dark man with black hair he turned towards the door, I saw he was darkskinned. I told police maybe he could be from India."

At 3:00 p.m. on Friday, the day before Danny's death, Bill Turner, a friend and confidante, met Danny in the parking lot of the Sheraton Hotel to deliver some papers to him. The papers allegedly consisted of two sealed packages which Turner had been keeping in his safe at home for Danny, and a packet of Hughes Aircraft papers which belonged to Turner.

Danny had appeard exhuberant to most of his friends before his death, noting that he was about to "wrap up" his investigation of The Octopus. Casolaro was trying to prove that the alleged theft of the Inslaw computer program, PROMISE, was related to the October Surprise scandal, the IranContra affair and the collapse of BCCI (Bank of Credit and Commerce International).

Turner later admitted to police that he had indeed met with Danny on August 9th, but at that time he refused to specify what time and would not describe what was in the papers he delivered to Danny. I later learned that Turner had been investigating discrepancies involving his former employer, Hughes Aircraft Company. The documents he had delivered from his safe to Danny had been sealed, with Casolaro's name written across the seal, and he claimed not to have known what they contained. Nevertheless, it is feasible to assume that Turner may have known who Danny was preparing to meet that evening at the Martinsburg Hotel because, for reasons of his own, Turner apparently wanted Danny to show the Hughes Aircraft documents to whoever he was meeting with.

Turner later noted to reporters that he was "scared shitless" about information he had seen connecting Ollie North and BCCI. "I saw papers from Danny that connected back through the Keating Five and Silverado [the failed Denver S & L where Neil Bush had been an officer]," he said.

To his friend, Ben Mason, Danny showed a 22point outline for his book. Included in the information he shared with Mason were papers referring to IranContra arms deals. Photocopies of checks made out for $1 million and $4 million drawn on BCCI accounts held for Adnan Khashoggi, and international arms merchant and factotum for the House of Saud, and by Manucher Ghorbanifar, an arms dealer and IranContra middleman, were presented.

"The last sheet," noted Mason, "was a passport of some guy named Ibrahim." Casolaro had emphasized that Ibrahim had made a big deal of showing him (Casolaro) his "Egyptian" passport."Ibrahim" was obviously the informant whom Olga, Casolaro's housekeeper, had seen sitting in the kitchen with Danny on August 5th. Hassan Ali Ibrahim Ali, born in 1928, was later identified as the manager of Sitico, an alleged Iraqi front company for arms purchases. Casolaro had obtained these papers from Bob Bickel, who in turn obtained them from October Surprise source Richard Brenneke.

Ari BenMenasche, a self proclaimed Israeli military intelligence officer, was responsible for the tipoff to an obscure Lebanese magazine about what later became known as the IranContra scandal. After Casolaro's death, Menasche called Bill Hamilton, the president of Inslaw Company and creator of the PROMISE software. (Hamilton had been in daily contact with Casolaro until about a week prior to his death).

Menasche claimed that two FBI agents from Lexington, Kentucky, had embarked on a trip to Martinsburg to meet Casolaro as part of their investigation of the sale of the PROMISE software to Israel and other intelligence agencies.Ben Menasche told Hamilton that one of the FBI agents, E. B. Cartinhour, was disaffected because his superiors had refused to indict high Reagan officials for their role in the October Surprise. Ben Menasche claimed the agents were prepared to give Casolaro proof that the FBI was illegally using PROMISE software.

It is highly unlikely that the two FBI agents were enroute to Martinsburg to GIVE anything to Casolaro, but they may well have been on their way to obtain HIS documents and those belonging to Bill Turner. If, in fact, Danny had disclosed to any one of the many "sources" he had developed during his investigation, that he was turning over his documents to the Lexington FBI, that may well have alarmed a few of them.

Casolaro was also investigating Colonel Bo Gritz's expose of CIA drug trafficking, and had requested to meet with a former police officer who had information on Laotian warlord Kuhn Sa's Golden Triangle drug trade proposal to the U.S. He had learned through a Sacramento Bee newspaper article, dated June 2, 1990 that Patrick Moriarty, the Red Devil fireworks magnate convicted of laundering political contributions and bribing city officials in Sacramento, had been subpoenaed to testify on behalf of Gritz at his trial in Las Vegas where he was tried for using a false passport. Gritz was acquitted of the charges.

Moriarty's lawyer, Jan Lawrence Handzlik, told the Bee that Moriarty had paid Gritz to make business trips to China, Singapore and other parts of Asia. Gritz said his business trip to Asia in July 1989 was for the purpose of negotiating an oil interest that he and Moriarty had set up between the People's Republic of China and Indonesia.

It is noteworthy that Patrick Moriarty is the longtime (30 years) partner of Marshall Riconosciuto, Michael Riconosciuto's father. They owned several California businesses together, two of which were Hercules Research Corporation, of which Michael was a partner, and Pyrotronics Corporation.

******

Casolaro at one time considered the title of "Indio" for the book he was writing about "The Octopus." His death occurred just days before he planned to visit the Cabazon Indian reservation near Indio, California. Though his notes did not divulge what role the Cabazons may have had in the conspiracy, Casolaro listed Dr. John Phillip Nichols, the Cabazon administrator, as a former CIA agent.

A source of information which Danny may have read is entitled, "DARK VICTORY, Ronald Reagan, MCA, and the Mob," by Dan E. Moldea. Moldea named this unholy alliance "The Octopus" in his book.

Numerous publications reporting on Casolaro's death corroborated that one of his sources included Michael Riconosciuto, a "44yearold former hightech scientist who had connections with Wackenhut Corporation ..." What brought Casolaro to Riconosciuto was an affidavit signed by Riconosciuto claiming that when he worked on the WackenhutCabazon project, he was given a copy of the Inslaw software by Earl Brian for modification. Riconosciuto also swore that Peter Videnieks, a Justice Department official associated with the Inslaw contract, had visited the WackenhutCabazon project with Earl Brian.

Earl Brian was a businessman and Edwin Meese crony who served in Governor Ronald Reagan's cabinet in California.The $6 million in software stolen from William and Nancy Hamilton, coowners of Inslaw Company, was allegedly sold by the Justice Department through Earl Brian to raise offthebooks money for covert government operations.

On May 18, 1990, Riconosciuto had called the Hamiltons and informed them that the Inslaw case was connected to the October Surprise affair. Riconosciuto claimed that he and Earl Brian had traveled to Iran in 1980 and paid $40 million to Iranian officials to persuade them NOT to release the hostages before the presidential election in which Reagan became president of the United States.

Riconosciuto's information created a domino effect in Washington D.C., opening numerous investigations and causing a media blitz. At that time, Casolaro headed the Hamilton's private investigation of the theft of their software and he had regular communication with Riconosciuto.

Former U.S. Attorney General Elliott Richardson, the Hamilton's attorney, subsequently sent Riconosciuto an affidavit to sign, to be filed by Inslaw in federal court in connection with Inslaw's pending Motion for Limited Discovery. The affidavit, Case No. 8500070, entered into court records, resulted in Riconosciuto's arrest within days. It read as follows:

"I Michael J. Riconosciuto, being duly sworn, do hereby state as follows:

"(1) During the early 1980's, I served as the Director of Research for a joint venture between the Wackenhut Corporation of Coral Gables, Florida, and the Cabazon Band of Indians of Indio, California. The joint venture was located on the Cabazon reservation.

"(2) The WackenhutCabazon joint venture sought to develop and/or manufacture certain materials that are used in military and national security operations, including night vision goggles, machine guns, fuelair explosives, and biological and chemical warfare weapons.

"(3) The Cabazon Band of Indians are a sovereign nation. The sovereign immunity that is accorded the Cabazons as a consequence of this fact made it feasible to pursue on the reservation the development and/or manufacture of materials whose development or manufacture would be subject to stringent controls off the reservation. As a minority group, the Cabazon Indians also provided the Wackenhut Corporation with an enhanced ability to obtain federal contracts through the 8A Set Aside Program, and in connection with Governmentowned contractoroperated (GOCO) facilities.

"(4) The WackenhutCabazon joint venture was intended to support the needs of a number of foreign governments and forces, including forces and governments in Central America and the Middle East. The Contras in Nicaragua represented one of the most important priorities for the joint venture.

"(5) The WackenhutCabazon joint venture maintained close liaison with certain elements of the United States Government, including representatives of intelligence, military and law enforcement agencies.

"(6) Among the frequent visitors to the WackenhutCabazon joint venture were Peter Videnieks of the U. S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and a close associate of Videnieks by the name of Earl W. Brian. Brian is a private businessman who lives in Maryland and who has maintained close ties with the U.S. intelligence community for many years.

"(7) In connection with my work for Wackenhut, I engaged in some software development and modification work in 1983 and 1984 on the proprietary PROMIS computer software product. The copy of PROMIS on which I worked came from the U.S. Department of Justice. Earl W. Brian made it available to me through Wackenhut after acquiring it from Peter Videnieks, who was then a Department of Justice contracting official with responsibility for the PROMISE software. I performed the modifications to PROMIS in Indio, California; Silver Spring, Maryland; and Miami, Florida.

"(8) The purpose of the PROMISE software modifications that I made in 1983 and 1984 was to support a plan for the implementation of PROMIS in law enforcement and intelligence agencies worldwide. Earl W. Brian was spearheading the plan for this worldwide use of the PROMISE computer software.

"(9) Some of the modifications that I made were specifically designed to facilitate the implementation of PROMIS within two agencies of the Government of Canada; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) and the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS). Earl W. Brian would check with me from time to time to make certain that the work would be completed in time to satisfy the schedule for the RCMP and CSIS implementations of PROMIS.

"(10) The proprietary version of PROMIS, as modified by me, was, in fact, implemented in both the RCMP and the CSIS in Canada. It was my understanding that Earl W. Brian had sold this version of PROMIS to the Government of Canada.

"(11) In February 1991, I had a telephone conversation with Peter Videnieks, then still employed by the U.S. Department of Justice. Videnicks attempted during this telephone conversation to persuade me not to cooperate with an independent investigation of the government's piracy of Inslaw's proprietary PROMIS software being conducted by the Committee on the Judiciary of the U.S. House of Representatives.

"(12) Videnieks stated that I would be rewarded for a decision not to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee investigation. Videnieks forecasted an immediate and favorable resolution of a protracted child custody dispute being prosecuted against my wife by her former husband, if I were to decide not to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee investigation.

"(13) Videnieks also outlined specific punishments that I could expect to receive from the U.S. Department of Justice if I cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee's investigation.

"(14) One punishment that Videnieks outlined was the future inclusion of me and my father in a criminal prosecution of certain business associates of mine in Orange County, California, in connection with the operation of a savings and loan institution in Orange County. By way of underscoring his power to influence such decisions at the U.S. Department of Justice, Videnieks informed me of the indictment of these business associates prior to the time when that indictment was unsealed and made public.

"(15) Another punishment that Videnieks threatened against me if I cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee is prosecution by the U.S. Department of Justice for perjury. Videnieks warned me that credible witnesses would come forward to contradict any damaging claims that I made in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, and that I would subsequently be prosecuted for perjury by the U. S. Department of Justice for my testimony before the House Judiciary Committee."

It is noteworthy that in January, 1992 when I obtained boxes of Michael Riconosciuto's hidden documents, included in those documents were handwritten pages of telephone numbers belonging to various Washington D.C. dignitaries. One number, "(202) 4260789" was listed as belonging to "PV," but it was no longer in service.

******

Danny Casolaro was, of course, intent on interviewing Peter Videnieks. A strange coincidence occurred during the week prior to his death. While sitting in a pub, having a beer, a man named Joseph Cuellar approached him and they began talking. At some point during the conversation, Danny disclosed the contents of his investigation and expressed a desire to interview Peter Videnieks.

To Danny's astonishment, Cuellar, claiming to be a Special Forces operative, said he could arrange a rendevous between Peter Videnieks and Casolaro. Cuellar's connection to Peter Videnieks allegedly came through Videnieks' wife, Barbara, who was the executive assistant to the powerful West Virginia Democratic Senator, Robert Byrd. Byrd played a major role in the effort to have the CIA move some of its administrative offices to Charlestown, 20 miles from Martinsburg, on the Virginia border. It was apparently through Barbara Videnieks that Cuellar intended to arrange the interview.

Casolaro confided to friends that he was unnerved by this supposedly chance meeting. He met with Cuellar at other times that week, but it is unknown whether he ever spoke with Videnieks. To date, that question remains unanswered.

Significantly, Elliot Richardson, the respected former U.S. Attorney General representing Inslaw, called for the appointment of a special counsel to look into the death of Casolaro.

CHAPTER 6

At Michael Riconosciuto's trial in Tacoma Washington, Peter Videnieks testified that while working for the Justice Department he had contact with the PROMISE software. He "conducted the competitive contract competitive procurement for acquisition of the services to implement PROMISE."Under cross examination he testified that "it required preparation of a request for proposals issuance of that document to industry ... negotiating, selecting, and awarding the contract. Then after award, administering the contract to see that the work that the government paid for was properly performed."

So, essentially, Videnieks administered the Inslaw contract with the government. His employment record included work with the Internal Revenue Service as a revenue officer from 1964 to 1967. From 1967 to 1972 as a contract specialist with NASA. From 1972 to 1973 with Customs as a contract specialist. From 1973 through 1975 back at NASA as a contract specialist. From 1975 through 1981 as a contract specialist with Customs, supervisory at this time. From 1981 through September, 1990, with the Department of Justice as a contract specialist. And from September 1990 through present (January 1992) as a supervisory contract specialist at Customs again.

Thomas Olmstead, Riconosciuto's attorney, showed Videnieks the Inslaw affidavit signed by Riconosciuto. Videnieks said he had seen the affidavit prior to court, but testified that he'd never heard of the WackenhutCabazon joint venture and never visited the WackenhutCabazon facility in Indio, California. He also testified that he'd never met Earl Brian.

Olmstead asked Videnieks if he knew Robert Chasen [Executive Vice President of Wackenhut]? Videnieks testified that he knew him "by name since he was head of Customs for about a threeyear period, from about 1977 through 1980. I met him once in the line of my duties."

Interestingly, according to his resume, Robert Chasen was Commissioner of Customs in Washington D.C. from 1969 to 1977, then Executive Vice President of Wackenhut from 1981 to present (1991). And Peter Videnieks, a contract officer at Customs in Washington D.C. from 1972 to 1974, then again at Customs from 1976 to 1981, said he did not know Robert Chasen. How could that be? Videnieks had worked in the same department with Chasen, off and on, for at least three years.

Videnieks also testified that he met Chasen in the line of his duties sometime between 1977 and 1980. Yet, Chasen no longer worked at Customs between 1977 and 1980?

Olmstead asked Videnieks to reiterate his position with the PROMISE software. "I worked on the [PROMISE] contract. ... The procurement was assigned to me by a lady named Patricia Rudd. ... My function was to conduct a competitive procurement, negotiate an award of contract, and then administer the contract."

Olmstead: "What time frames are we talking when you were ...?"

Videnieks: "We're talking about from the day that I reported for duty at Justice, which was in September 1981, through about 1985."

Olmstead: "Are you familiar with Hadron Company?" (This was a loaded question because Earl Brian, who Videnieks testified he did not know, owned Hadron Company at the time of the court proceedings.)

Videnieks responded, "Yes, I am."

Olmstead: "Have you done work for Hadron Corporation in your procurement contract?"

Videnieks: "I supervise currently a contract specialist who is administering a contract with Hadron."

Olmstead: "Prior to supervising someone, did you personally handle that particular contract?"

Videnieks: "I have administered well over a hundred contracts, maybe a couple hundred or several hundred over my career, and I don't recall whether I have or not."

Olmstead: "And you have never given a deposition in regards to the Inslaw matter?"

Videnieks: "My recall is not that good. Like I said, I have administered hundreds of contracts, and I may or may not have administered one with Hadron."

Again Olmstead asked Videnieks if he knew Earl Brian?Videnieks responded, "No, sir."

Olmstead: "Do you know who owns Hadron?"

Videnieks: "I really don't. I've heard I mean, I don't want to speculate now. He may be an officer with Hadron. He may be."

Olmstead: "You don't recall any questions in any depositions at all regarding that?"

Videnieks: "I do recall questions along these same lines. But again, from general knowledge, I think he is an officer or has been an officer with Hadron."

Olmstead: "In fact, in your deposition, you admitted you knew that he was an officer of Hadron, didn't you?"

Videnieks: "I would like to see my transcript from my deposition as to what I said ..."

Olmstead went on to question Videnieks about "Modification No. 12" of the PROMISE software.

Videnieks stated that he knew what Modification No. 12 was, but repeatedly refused to discuss it until someone produced the original Inslaw contract. Finally, under pressure to give a general recollection, he said it dealt with the twelfth modification to the PROMISE software.

Olmstead asked, "Were you personally chastised as a result of Modification No. 12 in the way you handled that?"

Videnieks: "Please define `chastised.'"

Olmstead: "Were you told that you took, converted, and stole six million dollars worth of Inslaw software through the way you handled Modification No. 12?"

Videnieks: "A judge in the bankruptcy court ruled that. Since then the record was erased. And that language should not be the way a nonlawyer like me understands, it is no longer in existence ..."

******

It is necessary to digress here to disclose the magnitude of the apparent government coverup relative to Riconosciuto's case. About two weeks before Riconosciuto's trial began, I had received a call from Michael asking me to contact Brian Leighton, a former assistant U.S. Attorney in Fresno, whom Michael claimed to have provided information to. Michael was lining up his ducks. Essentially his defense rested on his ability to prove he worked for the U.S. government in intelligence operations, but his lawyer was behind schedule in making the contacts.

Brian Leighton had been instrumental in prosecuting 29 members of a drug/arms organization called "The Company." The Company had been written up in the San Francisco Chronicle on April 28, 1982 under the heading "Story of Spies, Stolen Arms and Drugs." According to reporter Bill Wallace, The Company consisted of (quote) "about 300 members, many of them former military men or expolice officers with nearly $30 million worth of assets, including planes, ships and real estate."

The article went on to say that "federal drug agents said the organization had imported billions of dollars worth of narcotics from Latin America, and was also involved in gunrunning and mercenary operations." Specialized military equipment consisting of nine infrared sniperscopes, a television camera for taking pictures in darkness, 1500 rounds of small arms tracer ammunition for night combat, a fivefoot remotecontrol helicopter, and secret components from the radar unit of a Sidewinder guided missile were stolen from the U.S. Naval Weapons Station at China Lake in the Mojave Desert.

Federal agents said some of the stolen equipment was going to be used to make electronic equipment for drug smugglers and some was traded to drug suppliers in Columbia. Twentynine members of the Company were indicted by the Fresno federal grand jury in 1981. Amongst those indicated was Andrew "Drew" Thornton, 40, a former narcotics officer.

On September 13, 1985, the Los Angeles Times published the story of Thornton's death, entitled, "Former Narcotics Officer Parachutes Out of Plane, Dies with 77 Pounds of Cocaine." The article said Thornton was indicted in 1981 for "allegedly flying a plane to South America for a reputed drug ring known as `The Company.'" In an interview with the Los Angeles Times, Brian Leighton said, "I'm glad his parachute didn't open. I hope he got a hell of a high out of that ..."

Thornton's mysterious death was discussed at length in a book written by Sally Denton entitled, "The Blue Grass Conspiracy." Part of The Company was headquartered in Lexington, Kentucky. Prosecutors in Lexington, Fresno, California (Brian Leighton), and Miami, Florida were working together in a joint effort to bring down The Company.

The San Francisco Chronicle noted that in January, 1982, Gene Berry, a state prosecutor in Charlotte Harbor, Florida, was shot in the face as he answered his door. Police subsequently arrested Bonnie Kelly as Berry's murderer. Bonnie's husband, Mike McClure Kelly, was a suspected member of The Company who later pleaded guilty in the Fresno, California case.

In Michael Riconosciuto's documents, I discovered a letter dated March 24, 1982, written on Cabazon letterhead to Michael McClure at Hercules Corporation from Art Welmas, President of the Cabazon Band of Indians. Copies (cc:) were also noted to Marshall Riconosciuto and Michael Riconosciuto. The letter complimented McClure's competence in presenting a clear and lucid explanation of a power pack under development at Hercules. (Hercules was owned by Marshall Riconosciuto, Michael Riconosciuto and Patrick Moriarty, the Red Devil fireworks mogul. More on Moriarty later.)

Throughout Michael's documents, I found references to Michael McClure and Bonnie Lynne G. Kelly. Michael's code word for Mike McClure was "Gopher."

Journalist Danny Casolaro had been communicating regularly with Michael Riconosciuto and obviously learned about The Company. It is not to be overlooked that coincidentally or not, Ari BenMenashe (a former Israeli intelligence agent who lived in Lexington, Kentucky) told Bill Hamilton that two Lexington FBI agents had been enroute to meet with Danny at the Martinsburg Hotel on the day of his death. The Company was headquartered in Lexington. Danny was not meeting with the FBI relative to PROMIS, he was preparing to turn over drug trafficking information on The Company.

BenMenashe further told Hamilton that one of the agents, E.B. Cartinhour, was angry that the Justice Department was not pursuing Reagan administration officials for their role in the October Surprise.

******

Meanwhile, it was necessary to contact Brian Leighton to corroborate Riconosciuto's story that he had been instrumental in helping Leighton identify members of The Company.

I did not directly contact Leighton, who had resigned from the U.S. Attorney's office shortly after the prosecutions and entered into private law practice, but asked the Secret Service agent in Los Angeles who had visited my home regarding the "Queen's accident" in Mariposa (mentioned in the first chapter of this book) to run a check on Riconosciuto.

Instead, he called Brian Leighton and when I checked back with him, he acknowledged talking to Leighton about Riconosciuto. Leighton confirmed to the Secret Service agent that he recalled a threehour facetoface meeting with Riconosciuto and remembered him well. He gave specific details of Riconosciuto's cooperation with the U.S. attorney's office. I thanked the Secret Service agent and hung up.

I next contacted a retired police officer and colleague in the Mariposa investigation, and asked him to put me in touch with someone trustworthy in government who could corraborate Leighton's information. The contact was made and this individual agreed to call Brian Leighton to see if he could glean further details of Michael's cooperation with the U.S. attorney's office. For purposes of anonymity, this source will be identified as "R.J." When I checked back, he confirmed that Leighton did indeed remember Michael's help with the case and, in fact, said Michael led law enforcement officers to a marijuana cache belonging to members of The Company.

At that point I was satisfied that Michael had been operating within the framework of The Company and had spoken accurately about his cooperation with Brian Leighton. I called Thomas Olmstead, Michael's attorney, and related the above information.

Two weeks later, on January 15, 1992, at Michael's trial in Tacoma, Washington, Brian Leighton testified that the case in question involved the theft of military equipment from the China Lake Naval Weapons Center in California. "The FBI and Naval Intelligence Service began the investigation," he said, "and there were several people that were targets of the investigation. One of those targets began cooperating with us and then it became a DEA and FBI investigation. The thefts occurred in 1979 and 1980, and the case continued on for a couple of years."

Leighton testified that he "could not recall ever meeting personally with Mr. Riconosciuto and he didn't know if he spoke to him personally or spoke to him through a government agent." Under crossexamination, Leighton testified that he thought Riconosciuto was brought to him by an agent Barnes from the Oakland or San Francisco office of the FBI, but he couldn't remember exactly ..."

After Leighton's testimony, Michael called me and asked, "What happened?" I was astonished at Leighton's testimony. What was at stake here? Michael speculated that Leighton was operating out of fear. He said Leighton retired from the U.S. Attorney's office shortly after prosecuting members of The Company, and recalled that the prosecuting attorney in Florida had been shot in the head.

I called the Secret Service officer and R.J. individually and asked them to repeat what Leighton had told them before the trial. They both repeated verbatim what Leighton had told them the first time about Michael Riconosciuto. I said it appeared Leighton had perjured himself in court. Neither could understand why?

******

In August 1994, I received from a friend of Bill Hamilton's (President of Inslaw) a Declaration, signed by Hamilton, which stated that " ... On or about April 3, 1991, I spoke by telephone with Mr. Brian Leighton, an attorney in private practice in Fresno, California. He stated that during the early 1980's, while serving as an Assistant United States Attorney in Fresno, California, he had investigated a nationwide criminal enterprise known as `The Company,' which was engaged in illegal drug trafficking on a massive scale.

"Mr. Leighton told me that (A) Michael Riconosciuto had furnished Mr. Leighton `valuable intelligence' on illegal drug activities and The Company; (B) Mr. Leighton had been unable to use the information in prosecution but (C) the failure to use Mr. Riconosciuto's intelligence information was not because of any fault of Mr. Michael Riconosciuto."

Also mentioned in the affidavit was corroboration of Riconosciuto's work in the defense and national security fields. Section six of the affidavit noted that during the course of a telephone conversation with Robert Nichols on or about April 18, 1991, Hamilton learned that Nichols had attended a meeting that had been organized by a Colonel Bamford, an aide to General Meyer, then Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Others participating in the meeting were department heads from Department of Defense scientific facilities.

Michael Riconosciuto was the principal presenter to this group of seniorlevel national security research and development officials. According to Nichols, Riconosciuto made a day long presentation to this meeting of scientists lasting from approximately 9 a.m. until approximately 4 p.m., answering questions from the participants and filling the halls of the conference facility with his handprinted notes on the scientific and technical issues that arose in the course of his presentation.

I was able to locate in Riconosciuto's files, a letter written on July 20, 1983 from Tom Bamford, Vice President of Research and Development at FMC Corporation in Santa Clara, California to William Frash in Escondido, California. At that time, Frash, a retired USMC Colonel, was Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Lilac Corporation.

Essentially, the letter expressed enthusiasm for the potential application of technologies being proposed to FMC Corporation by Meridian Arms, and called for a list of all active participants in the joint venture. At that time Riconosciuto was vice president of Meridian Arms. Bamford added, " ... You may want to do this only for Mike at this stage."

Frash hastened to respond to Bamford on July 27, 1983 to apprise him of a meeting between himself and

Michael Riconosciuto, Robert Booth Nichols, Peter Zokosky and Patrick Moriarty (Michael's father's business partner) regarding "energy transfer phenomena." A proposal was underway to outline technology in the form of patents applied for jointly between Meridian Arms and FMC. Frash noted that the technology would "supercede all existing world patents in the field."

"Had we patented previously, it would only have announced our `edge' in the field," he wrote. Three of the four major patents that would be forthcoming were (1) the application of Perturbation Theory to enhanced energy transfer, (2) the application of stationary methods with powders and aerosols to enhanced energy transfer and (3) the application of Perturbation Theory to hydrodynamic flow regimes.

It is noteworthy that the submarine propulsion system depicted in the movie, "Hunt for Red October" utilized this theory. Frash concluded, "Tom, as you well know, Mike's tried and true value is in the field of high voltage and electrostatics and their application. The meetings in San Jose highlighted application of this technology in over one hundred areas that are inhouse FMC." He added, " ... Per your reference to meetings in Washington, D.C., I assume the meetings with Dr. Fair, Admiral Renkin and the ACCOM people will suffice in this matter. In closing we are very enthused, Tom, and we look forward to an expeditious closing. Sincerely, William Frash."

Frash's payment for putting together the above referenced joint venture, if successful, would be $500,000 for the first fifteen million invested, or $166,666.66 for only five million invested, a onehundredthousanddollar per year salary for a period of 20 years, and a 2% share in the gross profits. This, according to a Letter of Understanding sent to and signed by Robert Booth Nichols and Michael Riconosciuto in July, 1983.

In questioning Michael Riconosciuto about the FMC agreements, he said he attempted to break away from Robert Nichols in 1984. "The guy nearly got me terminated," declared Riconosciuto. "At the time I was working with Nichols on a proposal to FMC Corporation, which is Food Machinery Corporation, they produced the Bradley Personnel Carrier. I've got a complete papertrail on the technology that was being presented. We conducted a test demonstration of an enhanced airfield device which I developed. We also conducted a test of a hydrodynamic implosion type of explosive device.

| Chapter 5 | Chapter 6, Part 2 | Table of Contents |

The Last Circle - Chapter 6, Part 2

"The implosion device settled the Nevada Test Range by about 30 feet. The Lawrence Livermore Labs and the Gallup Ordinance people built a prototype of the device, but they overbuilt it because they wanted an impressive demonstration. It created an international incident because the demonstration was picked up by Soviet monitoring satellites.

"Anyway, the bona fides were established. The next thing was to get the business done and get me into harness in a program. I was all for it, but Bob [Nichols] started getting spooky on me. He wanted to receive the setup of our end offshore, in Singapore. He wanted to receive $20 million dollars in cash in Singapore, and he wanted to use certain of the technology overseas, namely in Australia, OK?

"Bob started drinking a lot. He was obviously under a lot of pressure from somewhere, and his fascade of respectability started to crack. About that time Bob began pressuring me to do things a certain way. We'd already been approved at the executive level by FMC. But we still had to go through the legal department and FMC is a publicly held stock corporation. So we still had to go through the shareholders for about eight months, which put us about a year away from consummating the deal.

"So, I asked Bob for some extra money to meet my everyday expenses, but Bob said, `Hurry up and get the business done and then you'll have plenty of money.' I tried to explain to Bob that there was no way he could expedite this thing, and so on and so forth. Well, Bob became really overbearing. And that's when he demanded that I state things in the contract proposal to FMC which would have been misstatements, to the point of being illegal. That's when I started having second thoughts about it.

"There were other people involved in the development of that technology. Bob wanted me to pay him out of my share and make no reference to the other people in the agreement. But when you've got the University of California and the University of Chicago having 16 percent of your company, having 16 percent of Hercules Research and Interprobe, you know, how could I misrepresent the interests of my dad, Moriarty and [Admiral] Al Renkin in a deal with a U.S. publicly held corporation [FMC]?

"At that time, Riconosciuto had been Vice President of Meridian Arms, a subsidiary of Meridian International Logistics. But he was also technical advisor for F.I.D.C.O. (First Intercontinental Development Corporation) of which Nichols was on the Board of Directors. Noted Riconosciuto, "I walked into F.I.D.C.O. in equal good faith. And that also turned sour because Bob wanted me to illegally take embargoed technology out of the United States, to run an operation with embargoed armaments and high technology outside of the United States.

"So I walked out on Bob. And Bob put the heat on me and they wouldn't leave me alone. When I got remarried [to Bobby Riconosciuto], they continued to harrass me by putting out false intelligence reports on me to law enforcement ..."

I asked Michael why he didn't fight back? Michael responded, "You don't seem to understand. All my involvements were under closely controlled situations. There's only one time in my life when I was planning on doing something offcolor, and it never went anywhere. All the rest of the time, everything was under complete controls. I never took any elective actions. Everything was, you know, on direct orders. And I got to the point where I balked with Bob Nichols and that's when he went ballistic on me."

Riconosciuto said he was in the process of cleaning up his life in Washington state when a private investigator from Inslaw contacted him. "I didn't want to get nailed for piracy of that software, so I talked to my attorney, who talked to the Inslaw attorneys, and I gave them a declaration. And about that time, Peter Viedenieks, who was an associate of both Robert Booth Nichols and Dr. John Nichols, called me and told me I was my own worst enemy. He said if I didn't cool it, if I didn't stonewall any further requests for information from the House Judiciary Committee, I was going away forever. I told Viedenieks that I was already in too deep, and he repeated that `I was my own worst enemy.' Seven days later I was arrested on drug charges."

Ted Gunderson was one of the few "cooperating" witnesses at Michael's trial. Through his affidavit and testimony, Ted hoped to supply the defense with needed corroboration of Michael's covert government sanctioned activities. Unfortunately for Michael, Ted could not disclose numerous activities which had included Robert Booth Nichols. At one time Gunderson, Nichols and Riconosciuto had been inseparable, like the three musketeers. But, Nichols was currently under investigation by the Los Angeles FBI for alleged involvement in organized crime in the U.S. and abroad.

Fortunately, however, Gunderson's resume added credibility to the provocative affidavit he entered into court on Michael's behalf. He had been Senior Special Agent in Charge (SAC) at Los Angeles FBI headquarters from 1977 to 1979 when he retired from the FBI and went to work as chief investigator for F. Lee Bailey, Esq. Prior to that, from 1960 to 1965, Gunderson was Special Agent Supervisor at FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C.. Interestingly, amongst a prestigious list of positions nationwide, he was also SAC from 1973 to 1977 in Dallas, Texas (where he became friends with Clint Murchison, Jr., according to his livein partner, J.M.. J.M. stated in phone interviews that she and Gunderson attended parties with Murchison in Dallas, and Gunderson phoned him often from their Manhattan Beach home).

In 1979, Gunderson received the Alumni Highest Effort Award in the Field of Law Enforcement from Sigma Alpha Epsilon Social Fraternity at the University of Nebraska. In 1979, he also received the Distinguished Alumnus Award from the University of Nebraska in recognition of distinguished and devoted service to his country.

Gunderson's handwritten affidavit, submitted to Michael's lawyer on September 27, 1991, read as follows (excerpted): "I, Ted L. Gunderson, make the following free and voluntary statement. No threats or promises were made to get me to make this statement. I was born 11/7/28 at Colorado Springs, Colorado.

"In early 1986, I met one Ralph Olberg through a friend of mine, Bill Sloane. Sloane is a former official with HUD. Sloane was appointed by President Ronald Reagan to the HUD position after the president was elected in 1980.

"Olberg is a prominent American businessman who was spearheading procurement of U.S. weapons and technology for the Afghanistan rebels.

"In late Spring or early summer of 1986, Ralph Olberg, one Tim Osman, Michael Riconosciuto and I met in a room at the Hilton Hotel, Ventura Blvd., Sherman Oaks, California. I accompanied Michael Riconosciuto, and Osman and Olberg were together. We were there to discuss Olberg's role with the worldwide support network involving the Mujahaden, Afghanistan Resistance Movement against the Soviets.

"In particular we discussed the ability of the Mujahaden's willingness to field test weapons, new and esoteric in the field and to return a research report, complete with photos.

"We also discussed the capture and/or defection of high ranking Soviet military personnel who had sensitive compartmentalized information and the availability of their briefings. We discussed one person who was a Soviet defector and was a communications officer who had detailed information of the highest levels of Soviet military C3I (Command Control Intelligence and Communications).

"We also discussed the Soviet directed weapons system referred to in the conversation as `Blue Death.' Michael and I were told by Olberg that witnesses stated the corpses did not decay even after being exposed and unburied for six months.

"We discussed the possibility of Michael analyzing one of these units captured in the field by the Afghan rebels for the purpose of having Michael help their technical experts develop effective countermeasures.

"We discussed a military joint venture in Turkey to produce specialized ammunition. We discussed a lobbying effort to legally obtain Stinger II missiles as well as the various Stinger post and Stinger alternates. Michael was to formulate a plan to sanitize the electronics of any Stingers that would be at risk of Soviet capture so any information gained from a captured Stinger could not be effectively used against the U.S. or NATO forces.

"This report was to be presented to a Congressional position as support for the lobbying effort to convince Congress to legally sanction the shipment of these missiles to the Afghan rebels.

"We discussed Michael's proposed modification of Chinese 107 MM rockets and how to reconfigure the package into a backpack portable effective artillery counter battlery system.

"We discussed Michael's connection with the Chinese weapons position, Norinco, to provide the basic components for the unassembled rocket system. We discussed the modification and assembly of these 107 MM rockets and their launchers at a facility in Pakistan known as the Pakistan Ordinance Works.

"It was my understanding from the discussion that we were working on a legally sanctioned arms assistance project to the Afghan rebels and that Ralph Olberg was working through the Afghan desk at the State Department as well as through Senator Humphreys office. "This was subsequently confirmed by journalist Danny Casolaro who was recently `suicided.'

"Olberg indicated a potential turf battle problem with certain factions of the CIA and his group MSH (Management Science For Health). In negotiations and/or lobbying efforts with Congress, the CIA MSH people were arguing that Ralph and Tim Osman's group did not truly represent the leadership of the Afghan rebel resistance.

"Tim and Ralph proposed calling their people and having an unprecedented leadership meeting in Washington D.C. to prove that their group did in fact represent the full leadership of the Mujahaden.

"When I recently called Ralph, he denied that the above meeting had taken place and then after prodding, he finally admitted to it and he asked me not to talk about it. This five page statement is true and correct to the best of my knowledge. Ted L. Gunderson."

******

Later in my investigation, I obtained from Michael Riconosciuto's files in the desert, a handwritten note from "T.G." to "Michael" which read as follows: "Raymond is arriving at LAX 7:55 p.m. Air Canada via Flight 793 from Toronto. Will have to go through Customs. This will give us another member for our drug/arms operation." The note gave a telephone number where "T.G." could be reached. "Raymond," referred to in the note, is presumably Raymond Lavas, Gunderson's former forensic's expert during his tenure in the FBI.

******

Michael's trial was not going well. He called and asked me to contact R.J. and bring him to my house. Michael was ready to talk he wanted me to set up a phone conversation in which he could preliminarily open negotiations for entry into the Federal Witness Protection Program. I was out of my depth here. I had no idea whether R.J. would cooperate with such a request. Nevertheless, I called him and related Michael's proposal. He said he had no authority to approve such a request, but he would take the information and pass it along.

He arrived at my home early the following week and Michael called as scheduled. Excerpts from that first taperecorded conversation went as follows: (Michael did most of the talking) " ... In the Fresno area, there was a group of people known as the Fresno Company, and the Bernard brothers were involved in it and Jamie Clark was involved and all of these people seemed to have charmed lives ...

"The Company was originally out of Lexington, Kentucky and Mena, Arkansas. Brian Leighton was the assistant U.S. Attorney who was the most effective person in formulating a strategy in the Justice Department to go after these people.

"We recognized what they were, for what they were, at that time, and there were a few ATF guys down in Los Angeles that recognized them for what they were, OK? Here was a group of over 300 people, most of them exlaw enforcement and exmilitary, exintelligence people involved in a major drug and smuggling operation. And they were involved in compromising activities. The bottom line was espionage.

"And all Leighton served to do was vaccinate the group against further penetration. Just hardened them. And all the major sources that were developed from inside turned up dead. A federal judge in Texas turned up dead.

" ... This is a nasty bunch of people. And they're still alive and well. Now where that dovetails into my current situation, is in 1984 I was involved with Robert Booth Nichols who owns Meridian Arms Corporation and is a principle in F.I.D.C.O., First Intercontinental Development Corporation. The CEO of FIDCO is George Pender and Bob Maheu was Vice President ...

"FIDCO was an NSC [National Security Council] corporate cutout. FIDCO was created to be the corporate vehicle to secure the financing for the reconstruction of the cities of Beirut and Damour in Lebanon. And they were working out of an office in Nicosia, Cyprus.

" ... And here I got involved with a group of people that were all high profile and should have been above reproach. FIDCO had a companion company called Euramae Trading which operated througout the Middle East. I came in contact with the PROMISE software (unintelligible). Euramae had a distribution contract with several Arab countries and I was asked to evaluate the hardware platforms they had chosen. That was IBM/AS400 stuff ...

" ... That had come from IBM Tel Aviv but it came through a cutout, Link Systems, because they couldn't deal directly with the Arabs.

"And I came across a guy named Michael T. Hurley and I thought he worked for the State Department but it turned out he was incountry attache for the DEA in Nicosia, Cyprus. [Nicosia is the capital of the island of Cyprus, off the coast of Lebanon]. Now, the DEA had no real presence in Lebanon. Neither did anybody else, including the Israelis. They had their usual network of contacts but it was very ineffective. The only way to penetrate that situation, was to get into the drug trade.

"Euramae got into the drug trade and I was told that it was a fully sanctioned NSC directed operation, which it turns out that it was ... All those operations were bonafide and all the people who were in them were definitely key government people, although they were not who they said they were.

"They all worked for different agencies other than was stated. Probably part of the normal disinformation that goes with that. And I was technical advisor for FIDCO and we had auspices through the government of Lebanon to get in and out of Lebanon.

"But as far as going to the eastern part of Lebanon, unless you were connected with the drug trade, your chances were slim coming out unscathed ... They built a network throughout the Bekaa Valley, and [Robert Booth] Nichols ... he is under Harold Okimoto from the Hawaiian Islands.

"Harold Okimoto was represented to me as being an intelligence person, which he is. He has worked under the auspices of [Frank] Carlucci for years. [Carlucci was former CIA deputy director and former Defense secretary]. Apparently Harold performed services for the U.S. government during World War II. He's of Japanese ancestry. I guess he was rewarded for services well done.

" ... Harold operates through a company called Island Tobacco Corporation. He has contracts for all the condiments at all the casinos in Atlantic City, in Reno, in Vegas, in Macao, China ... he's got contacts in Honolulu, the Orient ... a couple of Jews he knows in Bankok ... and there is a casino, no a city about 15 miles north of Beruit that Harold has his fingers in.

"When FIDCO was wheeling and dealing on financing for the reconstruction of the infrastructure of Beirut, they were making sweetheart deals with Syrian mobsters and the brother of the president of Syria, Hafez Assad.

" ... The intelligence people in their infinite wisdom decided to capitalize on the longstanding battle between Rifat Assad and his group and the Jafaar family. Selectively they were backing both people, but they were also playing them off against one another, developing networks. They got a bunch of prominent Syrians thoroughly compromised and they were in tow in the intelligence game. And they had people that could get me in and out of the Bekaa Valley, even out of certain areas of Syria.

"From an intelligence standpoint, it was a success. But to maintain the credibility of those intelligence operations the heroin had to flow. To make it real. And the stuff was starting to accumulate in a warehouse outside of Larnaca. "I personally was in a warehouse where Hurley and George Pender and George Marcobie (phonetic spelling) told me there was upwards of twentytwo tons. And even though it was packaged for shipment, the smell of it in that closed warehouse was overpowering. You know, white heroin like that has a certain odor because of the way it's processed.

"They had authorization for what they called `controlled deliveries' into the United States. And they would target certain cities and then follow the stuff out, ostensibly unmasking the network and conducting prosecutions.

"However, the operation became perverted at the U.S. end of the pipeline. Controlled heroin shipments were doubled, sometimes tripled, and only one third of the heroin was returned to the DEA.

"At a certain transfer point at the airport in Larnaca, the excess baggage from the original controlled delivery would be allowed to go through. I was given the names of the narcotics people who were handling that. But there were a couple of agents who were on the up and up, and they had suspicions.

"An intelligence agent who worked with DIA is now deceased. His name was Tony Asmar and he got on to the operation early on, and started going toe to toe with Hurley [DEA]. He died in a bomb blast and it was ascribed to terrorists. And it actually was terrorists who did it, but his cover was deliberately blown. Myself and others suspected Hurley and Bob Nichols and Glen Shockley were responsible for that ... "

******

After researching Michael Riconosciuto's information, R.J. noted to me that Michael gave mostly valid information, but he could not prove that Michael had been involved. He did, however, verify (through Customs) that Michael HAD been in Lebanon, but he could not verify the details of the drug operation.

Michael responded (on a taped message to R.J.) by visually recounting the DEA apartment/condo in Nicosia, Cyprus: "The DEA had a condo, I think it was on Columbra (phonetically spelled) Street, in Nicosia, Cyprus [off the coast of Lebanon].

"They had a ham radio station there. It was an ICOM single side band amateur radio setup, with a linear ..."

"Were you actually there?" I asked. Michael quipped, "Yes, I was there," then continued. "I can describe the antenna system, on the top floor and the way it's wired up and everything. Unless you were there, you wouldn't know it was ICOM equipment.

"Now, the game plan with Euramae and Hurley's operation ..." Pause. " ... You need to understand that the airport in Lebanon was closed down. I took the ferry from Larnaca to Jounieb. Now Jounieb was slightly south of where the casino city was and the casino city was intact. Beirut was a nightmare, and so was Damour, because the PLO destroyed the infrastructure by burrowing bunkers, and there was no water, electricity or phones. It was a combat zone.

"The Syrian mob controlled the Casino du Liban in a little city north of Beirut. It was used as a front by narcotics people. Island Tobacco, owned by Harold Okimoto, sells all the cigarettes there. Now, I could give you the names of the families. They pitted them off against one another. F.I.D.C.O. was to finance the reconstruction of the infrastructure of the cities of Beirut and Damour. Deals were cut as to who got what concessions. There were certain families, like the ElJorr family that had to be placated. And there was Rifat Assad and his group. "Tony Asmar figured out what was going on with Hurley, that they were shipping `noncontrolled' loads of heroin back to the U.S.. They killed Tony ..."

The Last Circle - Chapter 6

"What were the names of the people you were working for over there?," I asked. Michael's time was always limited on the phone.

"Ok, there was a man named Maurice Ganem. He had a relative, either a brother or a cousin, who is a senior DEA official with Michael Hurley. I can't remember his name right now. Anyways, Maurice was agency, you know, in country, in Lebanon. And Maurice and I and George Pender worked together."

"Which agency? CIA or DEA?," I asked.

"CIA." Michael continued. " ... And then there was Danny Habib. Danny Habib and Bob Nichols worked out of Cario (phonetic spelling) and Italy."

"And Bob was NSA or ..." "No, Bob was NSC at that time."

"George Pender and Bob Clark were the high level contacts on all of this. Bob Clark got drummed out because he was clean. And McFarland then took over, OK?"

"Uh huh."

"So, it was George Pender and McFarland and Michael McManus[Assistant to President Reagan at the White House]."

I asked, "What was your involvement with that particular operation?"

"I handled communications protocol. All the communications and financial transactions. If I could get my records on line I could show all the money flows, everything."

******

Michael called back later that day and we continued our conversation. He was intent on talking to someone in FinCen (Financial Crimes Enforcement Network). " ... The keystone cops are working on my defense. You know it's really an ordeal. Have you talked to R.J. again?"

"No Mike, he's not giving much information."

"Listen, tell him that not only am I willing to polygraph, but I need some expert help and I think he needs some expert help. In the league we're playing in, the only guys we can get that have the wherewithall are with FinCen. That stands for Financial Crimes Enforcement Network. Get me a technical guy that speaks my language."

"Alright, Mike ..."

"I'm talking about Swift Chips. That stands for Clearing House Interbank Payment System, Ok?"

"Right."

"Im mad, OK?"

"Uh huh."

"I'm real mad. The government has all my files and records. They've got all of my optical storage disks. Each of those optical storages, 130 of them, contains 20,000 plus pages. They jacked me around so bad ..."

"Mike ..."

" ... Get an expert that speaks my language, and I'll tell him everything I know and he can do so much damage, they won't need my testimony or anything else."

"Mike, everything you know about what?"

"Tell R.J. it goes all the way back to the Cayman Islands and the Bahamas and Castle Bank. Norm Caspar ... Resorts International Bank ..."

"How'd you get this stuff?"

"I handled the money for them, OK?"

"For who?"

" ... For the Wackenhut people. For Norm Caspar who was a Wackenhut employee during all of this. Now, there was the Workers Bank in Columbia. I can't pronounce the Spanish name for it, I just know it as Workers Bank. I set up their virtual dead-drops ..."

"What's that?"

"It's a way to get around A.C.H. reconciliations on a daily basis. It'll take an expert, you know, I can't even talk to a normal human being about this ..."

"O.K."

" ... And the bottom line here is Bob Nichols and Gilbert Rodriguez, Michael Abbell, whose now an attorney in D.C., but he was with the criminal section of the Justice Department and Harold Okimoto, and Jose Londodo, and Glenn Shockley are all in bed together. (Three years after this conversation, Michael Abbell was indicted for laundering money for the Cali Cartel).

"Now Ted Gunderson ..."

"Mike, have you got any paperwork on that?"

"Now, wait a minute. Gunderson was physically with me when Wayne Reeder, Peter Zokosky and his wife and several of Wayne Reeder's lieutenants, Bob Nichols and his wife, Harold Okimoto, George Pender, Deborah Pender, Dill Pender, and myself were all together ..."

" ... Where?"

" ... At Wayne Reeders country club, golf club, in Indio, California. And Bob discussed openly in front of Ted Gunderson and myself and everyone present bragged about Glenn Shockley and Jose Londono having 3,500 soldiers. It's now almost double that ..."

"What does that mean? What are the soldiers?"

Mike: "R.J. will know what it means."

"Alright. OK."

"This took place in 1983. I have correspondence on the things we were doing. But I was in fear of my life because Bob was starting to act irrational. The guy was getting drunk all the time, waving a gun out of the car window, shooting in the air, you know, just really doing a mind trip on me. I've been on the run ever since ..."

"Listen, Mike, what do you need from FinCen?"

"If I had help from the FinCen people, I could reconstruct my files. Tell them that I need two types of computers. I need a VAX 11730 set up with two RLO II disks; one RA80 and a TU80 tape drive. That's one package. And then I need a VAX 3900 computer. Now the reason why I need the older, slower VAX and I know where to get all this stuff, no problem, I've got the VAX's in Southern California, but I need a place to set them up and somebody to operate them, and just follow my instructions."

"Alright."

"Now, the VAX Series 3900 machine ... it's too complicated to go into what mass storage devices, but those are the two levels of machines I need.

"Ok, I'm thinking about going to visit your wife in Southern California, do you want us to bring those computers up here?"

"No, No! No, leave them where they're at. Tell R.J. to find someone at FinCen. If we move them around, we're going to wreck them. I'm not trying to talk down to R.J., but this is too far above him."

"Mike, Raymond Lavas turned some of your disks over to the Jack Brooks investigative committee (House Judiciary Committee on Inslaw)."

"Yeah, I know. There's no data on those disks. What that is, is that is a subset of VAX B.M.S., OK? What I do is I modify some of the VAX BMS routines to activate a one time pad encryption scheme. That's why I have to have two RLO2 drives on the VAX 11730, because one RLO2 Platter is a system planner, the other one is the one time pad. The data is on a 1625 BPI 9 track tape on the TU80 tape drive. That's the system configuration."

"If you say so."

"Now, R.J. needs to put me in touch with somebody he trusts at FinCen. There's about 120 experts there. There are a few guys there that speak my language.

"What's the encryption key?"

"Well, they're ten digit numbers ... it's a one time pad, but it has a pseudorandom, prime number expansion system ..."

"Mike, do you have access to PROMISE through this system?"

"What? Oh, I've got access to PROMISE, I've got access to FOIMS ..."

"Well, PROMISE is the one that's going to get you off the hook in court."

"Ok, I understand that. But PROMISE and FOIMS are one and the same. Now they will say no, that's not true, but in Virginia where the FBI has their center, and where the Justice Department has a center in D.C., they're both Amdahl mainframes, OK?"

"Yes."

" ... You see, I want that RLO II Platter out of the hands of the Brooks Committee and into the hands of somebody who'll do with it what I tell them to do. I don't want somebody to run it up without first getting my instruction."

"Does it have to be that particular one?"

"Yes, either that or it will take me six months to rewrite the subset. They want me to give them the codes to unravel everything. If I did, they wouldn't know what to do with it anyway. They'd make a mess out of things."

"Mike, what are you going to provide to FinCen?"

"I'm going to show them how these boys handled the life blood of the cash flow on a day to day basis. I'm going to unmask the whole operation ..."

"Anything specific on Robert Booth Nichols?"

Mike: "Nichols is Harold Okimoto's godson. He's also Renee Hanner's (phonetic sp.) boy, and Wolfgang Fosog's (phonetic sp.) boy."

" ... And who are they?"

"The FinCen people will know. There's also Octon Potnar "

"Alright. Well, if I'm going to play around with this, I don't want to be in the dark ... I could end up like Danny. I've got to know what I'm dealing with ."

"If you get the right guy at FinCen, he'll jump at this, OK? We've got to start right now. We're talking about some time getting things up and rolling to where we're fluid and flexible and functional in their system internationally. They'll be able to watch the daily transactions ..."

******

Michael continued to request of R.J. that he be connected with someone "trustworthy" at FinCen, to no avail. He also requested to be placed into a Witness Protection Program, again offering to assemble his computer equipment in a secret location and provide FinCen with a day by day view of Mob (and MCA Corporation) illegal banking transactions.

According to Michael, before his arrest, he had been handling gold transfers, money laundering, "virtual dead drops," altered ACH daily reconciliations and other transactions for various underworld figures including Robert Booth Nichols, Harold Okimoto, George Pender, Wayne

Reeder, Michael A. McManus, Norm Caspar, Gilbert Rodriguez, Jose Londono, Glen Shockley, and others.

Michael continued to call and give me taperecorded (at his request) messages to pass on to R.J. The man accepted the messages, but they just went down the big, black hole and never emerged again.

One message in particular later became significant to me. The message from Michael to R.J. went as follows: (Quote) "There are three dozen C130's down at the Firebird Lake Airstrip on the Gila Indian Reservation in Arizona. Check out J & G Aviation, it's an FBO. The Fresno Company is alive and well down there.

"The real activity is not at Mirana, it's at Firebird Lake Airstrip. Other airlines operating at Firebird are Beigert, Macavia International, Pacific Air Express, Evergreen and Southern Air.

"Question to R.J.: How much cocaine or heroin can be transported in a C130? Do you want the C130, or do you want the guys who orchestrate it?

"Do a matrix link analysis, then sit down and pick the targets. Otherwise, you will tip off the others and the proof will dry up.

" ... Brian Leighton made 29 arrests out of five hundred within the Fresno Company. All Leighton succeeded in doing was to `vaccinate' the Fresno Company against further penetration."

Riconosciuto said he had a fragile window into this organization (The Company), but Leighton and others were causing the window to close by being too public about their investigation.

The message continued regarding Robert Booth Nichols: "Bob Nichols runs Glen Shockley. Glen Shockley runs Jose Londono. I [Michael] sat with Bob Nichols and Mike Abbell. Bob handed him $50,000 cash to handle an internal affairs investigation that the Justice Department conducted which would have led to the extradition of Gilbert and Miguel Rodriguez and Jose Londono.

"Bob Nichols told me [Michael] that it was necessary to `crowbar' the investigation because they were `intelligence people.'

"Michael wanted to hand The Company and Bob Nichols over to FinCen in exchange for entry into the Witness Protection Program, but nothing was forthcoming from R.J.

It was two years before I learned who Mike Abbell, Gilbert Rodriguez and Jose Londono were. Abbell had worked in the criminal division of the Justice Department, according to Bill Hamilton. Hamilton added that, to his knowledge, Abbell had left the DOJ in 1982 and went directly into the Bogota, Columbia law offices of Kaplan and Russin.

A member of our loosely coalesced investigative team, George Williamson, a former San Francisco Chronicle reporter, obtained Abbell's background from library directories: From 1973 to 1979 Abbell was staff assistant to the Assistant U.S. Attorney General. From 1979 to 1981 he was the Director of the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice.

After leaving the Department of Justice in 1982, Abbell became counsel at the law firm of Kaplan, Russin and Becchi, with offices in San Francisco, California Bogota, Columbia Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic Bangkok, Thailand Tapai, Taiwan New York Madrid, Spain and Miami, Florida.

As of this writing, Abbell was listed as working in his own firm with a partner named Bruno Ristau (Ristau and Abbell) in Washington D.C. Ristau was also formerly with the law firm of Kaplan, Russin and Becchi. And from 1958 to 1963 he was an attorney in the Internal Security Division and Civil Division of the Department of Justice. He was also with the DOJ from 1963 to 1981 where he was Director of the Office of Foreign Litigation. Ristau speaks German, Polish, Spanish and French. He was Chairman of the Division of International Law of the Washington D.C. Bar from 1971 to 1973. In the American Bar Association from 1981 to 1984, he was Chairman of the Committee of Private International Law Practice. He is also a member of the American Society of International Law. Ristau is obviously a heavyweight in the field of international law.

A TIME magazine article, dated July 4, 1994, described Gilbert Rodriguez as a "leader of the Cali [Columbian drug] cartel, which controls 80% of the world's cocaine trade." The newly elected president of Columbia, Ernesto Samper Pizano, was accused of taking $3.7 million in campaign funds from Rodriguez, which in effect, put Samper in league with Columbia's drug lords.

Three audio tapes of conversations between Rodriguez and Samper's campaign manager, Santiago Medina, had been handed over to U.S. State Department officials before the election, but nothing was done. DEA officials were furious, stating to TIME that "No one did anything. They [the State Department] allowed this travesty to take place. Everybody, including the U.S. government, is participating in this coverup."

The State Department responded, "We can't interfere with elections."

I pulled out a book from a dusty corner of my library entitled, "Cocaine Politics" by Peter Dale Scott and Jonathan Marshall, and looked up the name Gilbert Rodriguez. On page 83, Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela and Jose Santacruz Londono were mentioned as part of the early leadership of the Cali cartel. On page 88 it was noted that the "Calibased Ocampo and Gilberto Rodriguez had been the principal targets of a major DEA Centac investigtion that resulted in indictments of Rodriguez in Los Angeles and New York in 1978."

At that time, President Jimmy Carter's Human Rights foreign policy in Latin America distanced the CIA under Stansfield Turner (later a Wackenhut Board Director) from any deathsquad interdiction. The Carter administration was also reportedly reluctant to go after Ocampo because of its determination in 1977 to sign a Panama Canal treaty with General Torrijos, even though Torrijos and family members were heavily involved at the highest levels of the world cocaine trade.

The Cali cartel, described in a 1983 Customs report, laundered its profits through Miami banks, one of which was Northside Bank of Miami, owned by Gilberto Rodriguez. Rodriguez popped up again as the leader of a delegation to the "cocaine summit conference" in Panama City in the early 1980's. Yet, Rodriguez's name was subsequently removed from DEA reports under the Ronald Reagan administration. In fact, according to disgruntled DEA agents, some of whom suspected they were stumbling into a CIA connection, the case was never pursued past the indictment level and the Centac 21 task force was totally dismantled when Reagan and Bush came to office.

So, Gilbert Rodriguez and Jose Londono were revealed to be high ranking members of the Cali drug Cartel in Columbia. I wondered if they were also CIA intelligence operatives? Or CIA drug operatives? Or both, as Manuel Noriega had been? Noriega had ultimately been ousted when he chose to back the violent Medellin cartel, George Bush's target. If in fact Gilberto Rodriguez had been compromised and forced to cooperate with U.S. officials after his 1978 indictment, and taking into account his strategic position of leadership in the Cali cartel and his alleged funding of the newly elected president of Columbia in 1994, it would indeed place the U.S. government in a powerful controlling position within the cartels today. In fact, it would place CIA drug operatives behind the election of the president of Columbia! The implications were earthshaking.

It is important to point out here that, on August 5, 1991, Michael Riconosciuto had called Bill Hamilton at Inslaw and asked him to obtain information on former DOJ official Mike Abbell. Riconosciuto planned to trade information on Abbell, Rodriguez, Nichols and others to the FBI in exchange for entry into a Witness Protection Program.

But Hamilton, pressed for time and not comprehending the significance of the "drug" connection, had turned the investigation over to Danny Casolaro. Riconosciuto had stressed to Hamilton that Abbell's activities might be risky to track and he should not take the information lightly.

That same day, August 5, Casolaro called Bob Bickel, the Texas oil engineer who once worked as an informant for the Customs Bureau, to discuss Mike Abbell. Bickel later confirmed that Casolaro had in fact discussed Abbell, Nichols and Rodriguez at length during that last phone conversation. And he added, "Danny confronted Robert Booth Nichols about his relationship with Mike Abbell."

Hamilton and Casolaro secretly devised a plan whereby Danny would conduct an inquiry with the Department of Justice, but would couch a number of other inquiries in with the Mike Abbell inquiry to avoid alerting authorities to the real "focus" of their search.

An October 15, 1991 Village Voice investigative piece, entitled "The Last Days of Danny Casolaro," by James Ridgeway and Doug Vaughan, shed further light on Casolaro's investigation during those last five days: (Note that most of Danny's last calls focused on "drug connections.") On Monday, August 5th, "Riconosciuto called Bill Hamilton from his jail in Tacoma. He wanted some information about a former Justice Department attorney [Mike Abbell], and warned Hamilton that getting the information might be dangerous. Hamilton called Casolaro to help him find out about the attorney.

"That same day, Danny called Bob Bickel to say that he was "getting close to the source, and he would soon go to Martinsburg and bring back the head of the Octopus."

Tuesday, August 6: Casolaro had been typing steadily since Monday, and by afternoon, he'd finished. Olga, his housekeeper, helped him pack a leather tote bag. She also remembered him packing a thick sheaf of papers into a dark brown or black briefcase. Danny walked out the door saying, "I have all my papers ... Wish me luck. I'll see you in a couple of days." That was the last time Olga saw Casolaro alive.

Wednesday, August 7: According to Inslaw records, Casolaro called the Hamiltons in the afternoon, and was put on hold. Before Hamilton could get free, he had hung up. At some time on that same day, Riconosciuto called Hamilton again to ask for the information about the Justice Department lawyer [Mike Abbell]. Hamilton called Casolaro, but he had already left for Martinsburg.

The Last Circle - Chapter 6

Thursday, August 8: Casolaro called Danielle Stalling and asked her to set up appointments for him the next week with a former police officer, now employed as a private investigator, to learn more about the Laotian warlord Kuhn Sa's proposed Golden Triangle drug trade.

Friday, August 9: By now Hamilton was starting to worry. I talk to Danny everyday," Hamilton said. "I had never [gone without speaking to him for so long] before, so I called Bob Nichols in Los Angeles and asked whether he had heard from Danny recently."

Nichols told Hamilton "Yes," he had spoken with Danny late Monday night [August 5th] and he had been "euphoric." Nichols told Hamilton he (Nichols) was taking off for Europe that evening.

It was at that point that Olga, Danny's housekeeper, received four or five threatening phone calls. The first was about 9 a.m., a man's voice, in good English, said, "I will cut his [Danny's] body and throw it to the sharks."About a half hour later, another call came in. "Drop dead," the man's voice said.

Saturday, August 10: At 12:30 that afternoon, a maid knocked on the door of room 517 at the Sheraton Martinsburg Inn. Nobody answered, so she used her passkey to open the door; though it had both a security bolt and a chain lock on the inside, neither one was attached. When she glanced into the bathroom, she saw a lot of blood on the tile floor and screamed. Another hotel maid came into the bathroom and saw a man's nude body lying in the bloodfilled tub. There was blood not only on the tile floor but splattered up onto the wall above the tub as well. The police were called to the scene.

At 8:30 p.m. that night, unaware that Danny's body had been found, Olga, Danny's housekeeper, returned to Casolaro's house to look for him. The phone rang. A man's voice said, "You son of a bitch. You're dead." It was not until Monday, August 12, that authorities notified family and friends that Danny Casolaro was dead.

Had Danny in fact called Robert Booth Nichols on Monday, August 5th, and confronted him about his relationship with Mike Abbell? Had he told Nichols he planned to meet with FBI officials from Lexington, Kentucky? And what about FBI agent Thomas Gates, Nichols' antagonist? SPY magazine's article on Danny Casolaro indicated that he spoke with Gates three days before his death, relating a conversation in which Nichols had warned him to abandon the investigation.

Riconosciuto later conceded that he had tried repeatedly to reach Hamilton and Casolaro between August 5 and 10th to warn them NOT to mention Abbell or Rodriguez to Nichols, but it had been too late. Bill Hamilton told one investigator that he did NOT know WHY Riconosciuto was inquiring about Mike Abbell - until AFTER Danny's death.

Bob Bickel's confirmation that Danny WAS trailing Mike Abbell in the last days before his death indicate that Danny may have unknowingly stepped into the largest narcotics trafficking/ intelligence operation the world.

******

Another indepth article came to my attention which further corroborated Danny's investigation of Gilberto Rodriguez. "The Strange Death of Danny Casolaro," by Ron Rosembaum in Vanity Fair's December 1991 issue included an interview with Michael Riconosciuto. According to Rosenbaum, Danny's investigations were taking him into areas that involved dangerous knowledge and dangerous characters. It was Danny's habit of "bouncing" Riconosciuto's stories off Robert Nichols that put him in peril, Riconosciuto told Rosenbaum. One of the things he reportedly "bounced" involved a major heroinrelated sting operation.

Another involved Riconosciuto's claim about an "effort by the Cali cocaine cartel to derail the extradition of an alleged Columbian kingpin called Gilberto."

Nichols "went ballistic," according to Riconosciuto, when Danny bounced the Gilberto (Rodriguez) matter off him. Riconosciuto said he tried to warn Danny. "I called from that day on it was on a late Monday Tuesday, Wednesday, all the way through the weekend when they found Danny [dead]," he said. "Every day I was calling the Hamiltons, asking if anybody had heard from Danny. And I was frantic."

Labeled by Rosenbaum as the "resident demon of the labyrinth," Riconosciuto said "Danny's theory was different from the typical megaconspiracy theory. Danny was dealing with real people and real crimes."

Rosenbaum asked Riconosciuto about the germ warfare technology he had found in Danny's notes. Riconosciuto admitted that he had learned about "horrible things" going on at the Cabazon Indian reservation but did not elaborate on the subject. Wrote Rosenbaum, "This is the labyrinth [that] Riconosciuto was leading Danny into the one he died in."

Just days before his death, Danny had planned to visit the reservation. In his notes were cryptic references to slowacting brain viruses like Mad Cow Disease, which could be used against targeted people by slipping the virus into meat pies. Riconosciuto told Rosenbaum that Danny was "concerned" that he may have been a target of this virus. "That was one of the reasons he [Danny] had such an obsession with this story. He felt he had been hit by these people."

Accordingly, Riconosciuto filled Danny's head with allegations of Robert Booth Nichols' sinister, international covertworld connections. He painted a picture linking Nichols to organized crime syndicates, the fearsome Japanese Yakuza, and various CIA and British intelligence plots emanating from Nichols' friendship with "a legendary Bondish Brit known as `Double Deuce' [Sir Denis Kendall]."

Riconosciuto said Nichols was the key to Danny's Octopus. But Danny was receiving warnings from Riconosciuto's counterpart as well. Robert Booth Nichols had flown to Washington D.C. from Puerto Rico to warn Danny to stay away from Riconosciuto.

Danny's girlfriend, Wendy Weaver, had been present at one of the meetings at the Four Seasons Hotel bar when Nichols issued the warning: "You don't know how bad this guy Riconosciuto is ... he might not get you today, he might not get you next month. He might get you two years from now. If you say anything against him he will kill you."

Nichols repeated the warning several times, said Weaver. "At least five times." Weaver described Nichols as "very charming, very handsome," but said "it [the meeting] was a weird night, so weird."

Another friend of Danny's met Nichols at a luncheon at Clyde's in Tysons Corner where Nichols allegedly informed them that he had just been asked to become "minister of state security" on the island of Dominica. Reportedly, the island was going to be transformed into a CIA base. The friend, who spoke to Rosenbaum on condition of anonymity, said Nichols was "very slick, very civilizedappearing" ... "oozing intrigue," but he added that he had never witnessed a performance like the one that ensued.

After lunch Danny had pulled his friend aside and showed him a purported FBI wiretap summary on Nichols. The summary was part of FBI agent Thomas Gates's affidavit in Nichols' slander suit against him. The summary linked Nichols to the Yakuza and to the Gambino crime family as a money launderer.

Danny's friend had been shocked. "You just put me in a meeting with this man and didn't tell me what the hell why didn't you tell me before?," he asked Danny. Danny said he wanted to see how Nichols would react. The friend told Rosenbaum, "In other words, he gaffed me with a hook and tossed me in the water to see if the Octopus would move!"

Danny HAD in fact been receiving death threats on the phone. One threat reported by his housekeeper, "You're dead, you son of a bitch," which came hours AFTER Danny's body had been found, ruled out Danny himself as a possible source of the threats. And his prophesy to his brother, Tony Casolaro, "If anything happens to me it won't be an accident," made it unmistakably clear that Danny did, indeed, feel threatened.

Nevertheless, Danny appeared upbeat to most of the people he talked to prior to his death. Dr. Tony Casolaro, a specialist in pulmonary medicine, told Vanity Fair that he didn't believe his brother committed suicide because Danny was so excited and upbeat about his investigation on that last Monday when he saw him.

The autopsy examination of Danny's brain had revealed possible symptoms of Multiple Schlerosis, but friends and family dismissed this as irrelevant because Danny had never complained of symptoms or, to their knowledge, known of the disease, if he had it.

Tony was also troubled by a number of facts, one of which was Danny's current papers and files which he took to West Virginia were missing from his motel room. His body had been embalmed even before family members were notified of the death, and the motel room had been commercially cleaned before any type of investigation, other than a cursory look at the death scene by police, could occur.

In his Vanity Fair article, Ron Rosenbaum wrote that he had obtained one of Casolaro's surviving notebooks and found mentioned under the heading of August 6, four days before Danny's death, the name "Gilberto." It read: "Bill Hamilton August 6. MR ... also brought up `Gilberto.'" Rosenbaum did not speculate publicly who Gilberto might be, but it was obviously Gilberto Rodriguez, head of the Cali Cartel, at that time deeply involved with Michael Abbell, formerly of the Department of Justice.

******

A dozen or so drafts of Casolaro's proposed manuscript along with notes and phone bills had been sent to the Western Historical Manuscript Collection at the University of Missouri by his brother, Dr. Tony Casolaro.Tony Casolaro had sent the material to the University because, at one time, the IRE (Investigative Reporters and Editors) Association, headquartered at the University, had researched the fatal carbombing of reporter Don Bolles in Arizona.

Bolles had been researching a mobconnected gold smuggling operation in that state. Through Tracy Barnett at IRE, I learned that a graduate student at the University had been assigned to catalog all Danny's material for eventual insertion into a data base. In contacting the graduate student, who by then (September 1994) worked for ABC in Houston, Texas, I learned that few if any journalists had inquired about the notes.

But, interestingly, Chief Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Zipperstein from Los Angeles, working for the Department of Justice, had requested copies of Danny's NOTES, but declined Danny's phone records. The graduate student noted that the notes and drafts of Danny's proposed manuscript focused on a Cabal of intelligence people who, originally consisting of numerous names, were subsequently narrowed down to about eight. One of those names was Glen Shockley. Shockley, of course, was listed on the Board of Directors of F.I.D.C.O. along with Robert Booth Nichols.

Shockley was also a corporate partner in Meridian International Logistics, headed by Nichols. Shockley was also a CIA contract employee (according to several sources) who allegedly "ran Jose Londono" of the Cali Cartel. This according to Riconosciuto's taped interview with government agents while negotiating for Witness Protection.

I purchased everything of any significance pertaining to Danny's writings and documents, including the FBI wire tap summaries which corroborated everything I had learned to date.

In reviewing the summaries, it became apparent that the FBI had inadvertently stumbled onto a CIA drug trafficking operation which included high ranking La Cosa Nostra figures, the Gambino crime family and the Japanese Yakuza.

One affidavit in support of an application to intercept wire communications over the telephone listed names of those to be intercepted: Robert Booth Nichols, Eugene Giaquinto (then President of MCA Corportion Entertainment Division, and corporate partner with Nichols in Meridian International Logistics), Angelo Commito, Edward Sciandra, Michael Del Gaizo, Joseph Garofalo, and others.

The purpose of the interceptions was to determine "source, type and quantity of narcotics/ controlled substances, methods and means of delivery, and the source of funding for purchasing of narcotics/controlled substances."

The intercepted conversations read like a "Who's Who" of organized crime. It was also apparent that Eugene Giaquinto enjoyed a special relationship with John Gotti.

******

Ann Klenk, a long time friend of Danny Casolaro's and former associate of Washington D.C. columnist Jack Anderson, held all his personal notes which were not sent to the University. In a September 14, 1994 phone interview, she noted that the last time she talked to Danny, that last Monday before his death, he told her he'd cracked the Inslaw case.

I asked her, "Do you think he resolved that?"

Ann responded, "Oh, yes. I KNOW he did. He TOLD me he did. He said, `Ann, I broke Inslaw.' And I said, `Geez, Danny that's great!' But, I never asked him what he found because he was very despondent about it. He said, `You can have it. You and Jack [Anderson] can have the story. I don't even want it.'"

Ann said Danny was disgusted and related their last conversation: "I said, `Danny, you worked on this [so long] and now you don't want it?' He said, `It's just a little piece of the puzzle anyway.' See, Inslaw led him into this, but Danny quickly became more involved with the drug aspects ... with the CIA aspects, with the Wackenhut aspects."

I said, "I know what you mean, because I followed the same trail."

******

Danny's proposed drafts and notes obtained from Western Historical Manuscript Collection at University of Missouri revealed information never published in mainstream media. Typewritten and handwritten lists of contacts included names and telephone numbers of Ted Gunderson, Raymond Lavas, Robert Nichols, Peter Zokosky, Bob Bickel, Fahim Safar, Earl Brian, Peter Dale Scott, Art

Welmus, John Vanderwerker, Jack Blum, Dr. Harry Fair, Bill Hamilton, Bob Parry, Bill McCoy, and numerous others.

Most of Danny's drafts focused on the Southeast Asian heroin connection, CIA drug money used to finance the Contras, and the ability of terrorists to send missiles containing dangerous chemicals and biological diseases into the U.S.

One typewritten draft, entitled, "Behold, A Pale Horse," described an "international cabal [in Southern California] whose freelance services covered parochial political intrigue, espionage, sophisticated weapon technologies that included biotoxins, drug trafficking, money laundering and murder-for-hire." According to Danny, the cabal continues today, "its origins spawned thirty years ago in the shadow of the Cold War."

Casolaro's June - July (1991) phone bills told a story of their own. Having followed Danny's investigative trail for three years, I had an entire directory of phone numbers relating to his inquiries. Most obvious were Danny's numerous calls prior to his death to Robert Booth Nichols in Los Angeles. Most of the calls from Washington D.C. to Los Angeles lasted an average of one to two hours, invariably in the wee hours of the morning 1:50 a.m., 12:36 a.m., 1:13 a.m., 12:18 a.m., etc.

It was also apparent that Danny was riding a seesaw with Nichols and Riconosciuto. He would talk to one, then the other, often on the same day, back and forth for months. Then suddenly, he cut off Riconosciuto and his calls to Nichols increased in frequency.

Other phone numbers matched those of Ted Gunderson, Alan Boyak, a lawyer in Utah, Bo Gritz, Heinrich Rupp and Chuck Hayes, a self-professed (on the Internet) CIA operative. Danny often called Hayes immediately after he spoke with Nichols. Oddly, Hayes never came forward during the official investigation of Danny's death to disclose the content of those conversations.

******

Within six months of Casolaro's death, Riconosciuto was again attempting to trade information in exchange for entry into a Witness Protection Program. But this time, instead of using Casolaro or Bill Hamilton, he was using me to make the contacts.

At Riconosciuto's request, I contacted a man whom I will identify as N.B. at the BATF (Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms) in San Francisco. Michael had advised me to call this agent because the BATF was "Treasury Department" as was FinCen.

I set up the phone meeting and Riconosciuto called the San Francisco BATF collect, as scheduled. N.B. listened attentively to Michael, then ran a check on him through the departmental computer system. Shortly thereafter, I received an unnerving phone call.

N.B. advised me in strong terms to "get out of this" while I still could. He said I would end up getting subpoenaed as a witness if I didn't discontinue my investigation. He added that sometimes people got killed or committed suicide when they got involved with Michael Riconosciuto or Robert Booth Nichols.

N.B.'s computer inquiry had bounced back on him. His superior in the BATF had been notified by someone from another agency he didn't say who who had instructed N.B. that he was to have NO further contact with Michael Riconosciuto or me.

When I related this conversation to Michael, he indicated no surprise, but immediately wanted to be put back in touch with R.J. He needed someone in the government with access to his files to verify his credibility and get that information back to Tom Olmstead, his attorney. Regarding the computer inquiry, Riconosciuto explained as follows: "I know what's happening here. Tell R.J. if he uses FOIMS, Field Office Information Management System, and if he leaves an audit trail, he's going to be exposed. There are all sorts of different levels of flags on my name. Whenever the computer gets a hit, the issuing agency is notified as to who made the request and from where it came."

"Mike," I asked, "how can he get around that? I don't understand ..."

"Listen, whenever there's a hit on one of those flags, whether it's a want or [a] warrant, or whether it's simply an administrative interest, unbeknownst to the user who's making the request, his access is audited. Tell R.J. before he starts making inquiries, no matter how discreet he thinks they are, that he should have someone totally uncoupled from him to enter into FOIMS."

"Alright."

"Now," Michael continued, "if he goes into NCIC or NADDIS, ah, NCIC is the least dangerous as far as making inquiries, because NADDIS can track just like FOIMS ..."

"Alright."

"Now, on NCIC there is a `nonelectric' filing on me and he can make the request that way without alerting anyone. If he has trouble checking anything out, tell him I can help him along."

"He can't call you at the jail. How can he get in touch with you?"

"Through my attorney. The minute he [R.J.] gets a line on me, ask him to notify my attorney. Tell him he can check my attorney out through the government. Tom has excellent records with the government."

"Alright."

"Explain to R.J. that I know PROMISE, I know FOIMS inside out. I helped develop that internal tracking audit trail ..."

I had lost all hope of R.J. rescuing Michael Riconosciuto, and I think in his heart, Michael knew that too, but I passed the information along as requested. R.J. politely accepted the information as he always did, then I never heard from him again.

Construction value of present business backlog of Burns & Roe, Inc. is in excess of six billion U.S. dollar.

(6) Frances T. Fox, Vice President and Director former General Manager of L.A. International Airport, former Director of Aviation for Howard Hughes Nevada operations, now called Summa Corporation, City Manager of San Jose, California.

(7) Clint W. Murchison, Jr. Director Owner of the Dallas Cowboys NFL football team.

(8) William M. Pender, Director and Sr. Vice President licensed contractor, State of California.

(9) Glen R. Shockley, Director Consultant to Fortune 500 Companies in business management. Internationally known as financial consultant in funding.

The list of directors was accompanied by a letter dated January 11, 1983 on FIDCO letterhead originating out of Santa Monica, California addressed to Robert Booth Nichols in Marina Del Rey, California. The letter, signed by George K. Pender, briefly referenced a copy of a resolution resulting from a meeting of the Board of Directors of FIDCO.

On April 13, 1983, Robert Booth Nichols wrote a letter to Joseph F. Preloznik in Madison, Wisconsin, outlining proposed arms projects, one of which was to build a two story building of approximately 7500 square feet with concrete walls and floors to house the "R & D position." (I later found the R & D facility referenced in a 1981 Wackenhut Interoffice memorandum as a companion facility to Wackenhut to be constructed on the Cabazon Indian reservation for the assembly of shell casings, propellants, war heads, fuses, combustible cartridge cases and other weapons systems).

Nichols wrote to Preloznik, "Should there be any questions with regard to my credibility, verification can be made through F.I.D.C.O. I have enclosed a copy of that appointment."

If in fact, F.I.D.C.O. was a vehicle of The Octopus, then the tentacles of its Board of Directors lead straight to the head. Clint Murchison, Jr. of Dallas, Texas was the son of Clint Murchison, Sr. who, according to Dick Russell, author of the book, "The Man Who Knew Too Much," (pp. 521523) was cut from the same political cloth as H.L. Hunt.

Wrote Russell: "Back in 1951, after General Douglas MacArthur was relieved of his Korean command by President Truman, H.L. Hunt accompanied MacArthur on a flight to Texas for a speaking tour. Hunt and Murchison were the chief organizers of the proMacArthur forces in Texas. They would always remember the general standing bareheaded in front of the Alamo, urging removal of the `burden of taxation' from enterprising men like themselves, charging that such restraints were imposed by `those who seek to convert us to a form of socialistic endeavor, leading directly to the path of Communist slavery.'"

According to Russell, Hunt went on to set up a MacArthurforpresident headquarters in Chicago, spending $150,000 of his own money on the general's reluctant 1952 campaign, which eventually fell apart as MacArthur adopted the strident rhetoric of the right wing.

"Still, connections were made," wrote Russell, "Charles Willoughby, for example, was a regular part of the MacArthurHunt entourage and undoubtedly was acquainted with Murchison as well." Both [the Hunts and the Murchisons] cultivated not only powerful people on the far right, but also J. Edgar Hoover, Richard Nixon, organized crime figures, and Lyndon Johnson, whose rise to power emanated directly from his friends in Texas oil.

"Like Hunt, Murchison was an ardent supporter of Senator Joseph McCarthy's anticommunist crusade. McCarthy came often to the exclusive hotel that Murchson opened in La Jolla, California, in the early 1950's. So did Richard Nixon and J. Edgar Hoover.

"In 1961, after Nixon had lost the presidential election to JFK the previous year, Murchison sold Nixon a lot in Beverly Hills for only $35,000 a lot Murchison had financed through a Hoffa loan which Nixon sold two years later for $86,000.

When Hoover visited the (Murchison) Hotel Del Charro, as he did every summer between 1953 and 1959, Murchison picked up his tab. That amounted to about $19,000 of free vacations for the FBI Director over those years.

Whether Hoover knew it or not, almost 20 percent of the Murchison Oil Lease Company in Oklahoma was then owned by Gerardo Catena, chief lieutenant to the Genovese crime family.

By the autumn of 1963, a major scandal was brewing around Bobby Baker, whom Vice President Lyndon Johnson had made secretary of the Senate Democrats in 1955, when LBJ was majority leader. LBJ called Baker "my strong right arm, the last man I see at night, the first I see in the morning."

On October 8, 1963 Baker was forced to resign, as a Senate investigation of his outside business activities began producing sensational testimony on numerous questionable deals. "Baker's deals were tightly interwoven with the Murchison family and the Mob," wrote Dick Russell. "What first attracted the attention of Senate investigators was a lawsuit brought against Baker in 1963 by his associates in a vending company, alleging that he failed to live up to certain bargains. Those associates were, for the most part, Las Vegas gamblers; one of them, Edward Levinson, was a lieutenant of Florida mobster Meyer Lansky, whose Fremont Hotel in Vegas was financed through a Hoffa loan.

"Baker, it later turned out, did considerable business with the Mob in Las Vegas, Chicago, Louisiana, and the Caribbean. Through Baker, Levinson had also gotten to know Clint Murchison."

"Clint Murchison, Jr. [listed on the Board of Directors of FIDCO] tried to persuade the Senate Rules Committee in 1964 that his ownreal estate dealings with Jimmy Hoffa in Florida were `hardly relevant' to the Baker investigation."

Robert Maheu (Senior Vice President and Director of F.I.D.C.O.), was also mentioned in Russell's book, "The Man Who Knew Too Much," (pp. 190). Wrote Russell: "Back in 1960, with then vice president Richard Nixon serving as the White House's liaison to the CIA's Cuban operations, the CIA had initiated its long series of assassination attempts against Castro. The `cutouts' in the operation started with Las Vegas billionaire Howard Hughes's righthand man, Robert Maheu, who got in touch with organizedcrime leaders Sam Giancana, Johnny Rosselli, and Santos Trafficante, Jr. They in turn enlisted the direct assistance of Cuban exiles ..."

Throughout my conversations with Michael Riconosciuto the names of Robert Booth Nichols, George Pender, Glenn Shockley and Michael McManus (other directors of F.I.D.C.O.) cropped up repeatedly, but I found few references to them in any published books or magazines. Riconosciuto often stated that George Pender and Glenn Shockley were CIA officials, which I later corroborated through Peter Zokosky, a partner of Robert Booth Nichols's.

In August, 1994, I did, however, manage to obtain three significant letters with the signatures of Michael A. McManus and George Pender on them.

The following letters on F.I.D.C.O. confirm its presence in Lebanon.

Letter No. 1 Written on White House letterhead stationary, dated, June 29, 1983, from Michael A. McManus, Assistant to the President (Reagan) to George K. Pender in Santa Monica, California:

"Dear George: It was good to see you again. I appreciate the update you and your associates gave me concerning the status of your efforts in the rebuilding of Lebanon.

"Without question FIDCO seems to have a considerable role to offer particularly in the massive financial participation being made available to the government of Lebanon.

"As you are aware, the United States government is providing financial aid. We are very interested in the success of the rebuilding effort in Lebanon. I will appreciate your continuing to keep me posted. Best personal regards. Sincerely, Michael A. McManus, Assistant to the President."

It is interesting to note that in 1982, one year before the above letter was written, Israel invaded Lebanon in a bid to crush the PLO strongholds there and install the Gamayel family in power. At that time TelAviv was supporting the ultraright Christian Phalange militia . It was the Christian Phalangist militia which first brought Lebanon into the heroin trade. And the powerful Christian Gamayel family which led the way in turning to outside forces for money, guns and political support. Foremost among those sources was the international heroin trafficking network.

This according to Bill Weinberg, editor of High Times magazine, who wrote the indepth article, "The Syrian Connection" in March 1993. Weinberg also noted that as far back as 1955, U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee hearings learned that Sami el Khouri, the Gamayel's chief of finances, was importing raw Turkish opium into Lebanon, where it was processed into heroin and then shipped to Sicily for reexport throughout America and Europe.

El Khouri controlled the Gamayel family's shipping lines, trading, trucking and air freight companies. El Khouri's machine was the Lebanese wing of the French Connection the wing that continued to do business with the Sicilians in a bid to propel the Gamayel family to power.

After the Israeli invasion, the Lebanese Parliament elected to the presidency Bechir Gamayel who had long been on the CIA payroll. But before he could take office, Bashir was killed by an assassins bomb, and Bechir's brother, Amin, was installed as president.

The following letter from George Pender, President of FIDCO, to President Amin Gamayel in Beirut is printed in its entirety here.

Letter No. 2 Written on F.I.D.C.O. letterhead stationary, dated July 12, 1983, from George K. Pender, President of FIDCO, to President Amin Gamayel, Presidential Palace, Beirut, Lebanon.:

"Dear Mr. President: I had visited Beirut in February and May, 1983 to discuss FIDCO participation in the redevelopment of Lebanon. These meetings were held with the Chamouns, Maurice Ghanem and Mourad Baroudy. Of particular interest is the fact that FIDCO offered to arrange the financing of projects considered, provided they were in the government sector. Unfortunately, the response, to date, is dragging and a golden opportunity for Lebanon is slowly dying.

"I had made no effort to see you at that time as I thought it more prudent to delay until I had something more tangible to present. I expressed specific interest in the rebuilding of Damour and Alkhyam. FIDCO has presented these projects to an international Trust with whom we have a close relationship, and we are very confident that we can arrange the funding under International Chamber of Commerce format, provided FIDCO can negotiate turnkey contracts on both projects. We are ready, willing and able to proceed immediately on this basis.

"I understand you will be at the White House on July 22nd. Would it be possible for me to meet with you in Washington, D.C. on July 21st briefly so that I may personally present our interest in Lebanon? As per copy of attached letter, the White House is actively interested in our efforts.

Chapter 7, Part 2

"For your personal information, I was a good friend of Bechir. I was with him in Beirut in 1976 when the Syrian Army came in to police. When he later visited the United States on a speaking tour, my wife and I went to Framingham, Massachusetts to meet with him. I miss him tremendously.

"I would appreciate your reply as soon as possible. You can also reach me via telex 652483 RBN [Robert Booth Nichols] ASSOCS LSA. Thank you for your time and consideration. Sincerely yours, George K. Pender."

I cannot stress enough the importance of this letter From George Pender to Amin Gamayel. In the very first paragraph of Pender's letter he noted that "Maurice Ghanem" participated in the meetings held in Beirut in May 1983 to discuss F.I.D.C.O.'s participation in the redevelopment of Lebanon.

Michael Riconosciuto had stated (on page 40 of this manuscript) that he had worked directly under "Maurice Ganem" and George Pender in Lebanon! Riconosciuto had explained that Maurice had a "relative, either a brother or a cousin, who was a senior DEA official with Michael Hurley."

Then, in a 1993 book entitled, "Trail of the Octopus" by Donald Goddard with Lester Coleman, on page 152, I stumbled across the name of Fred Ganem in the following context: "The number of DEAcontrolled deliveries of heroin down the pipeline to the United States had increased noticeably during the winter as a result of Fred Ganem's special knowledge of the Lebanese communities in Detroit, Houston and Los Angeles."

This was independent corroboration of a link between F.I.D.C.O. (George Pender and Michael McManus) and the very same heroin operation in Nicosia, Cyprus which Riconosciuto had described in detail to me in December 1991!

It also directly connected George Pender with Michael T. Hurley. Goddard and Coleman recounted how "members of the Jafaar clan and other DEA couriers would arrive at Larnaca with suitcases full of highgrade heroin, white and crystal, and be met off the boat ... by officers of the Cypriot Police Narcotics Squad, who then drove them up to the Euramae office in Nicosia."In his interview with R.J. (page 37), Riconosciuto had maintained that "F.I.D.C.O. had a companion company called Euramae Trading ..." Three years later, "Trail of the Octopus," described Euramae as such: "Coleman was given a desk at the Euramae Trading Company., Ltd., a DEA/CIA `front' newly set up by the Cypriot Police Narcotics Squad in a luxury threebedroomed penthouse apartment down the street from the US Embassy. It gave him the creeps from the start.

"Intended as a place where DEA and CIA agents could meet unobserved with informants and clients, as a message drop for CIA arms dealers supplying Iraq and the Afghan rebels, as a waiting room for DEA CI's and couriers from Lebanon, and as a transit point, not just for heroin, but for cash, documents and bootleg computer software moving to and fro along the BeirutNicosiaUS pipeline, Eurame, as run by ElJorr, was more like a lowlife social club than a secret intelligence centre." Coleman had complained to Hurley, but Hurley had just brushed it aside.

It is noteworthy that George Pender listed Robert Booth Nichols's "telex" number at the bottom of his letter to Lebanon President Amin Gamayel. During that time span, Nichols and Pender (when they weren't in Lebanon) were operating a NSC listening post from a condo at Marina Del Rey. It was allegedly the U.S. end of the Nicosia, Cyprus operation. Michael Riconosciuto, Ted Gunderson and Allan Boyak, an attorney representing Riconosciuto, all had stories to tell about apartment number "007." More on this in a moment. Next, was the Lebanese response to George Pender's aforementioned letter (No.2).

Letter No. 3 Written on Arab Bank Limited letterhead, dated November 23, 1983, from Abdul Majeed Shoman, Chairman/General Manager of Arab Bank Limited in Amman, Jordan to George K. Pender in Santa Monica, California:

"Dear Mr. Pender: Mr. Ahmad has talked to me about the fund to reconstruct Lebanon and we the Arab Bank together with a group of other banks will be glad to cooperate with you concerning this respect.

"We shall discuss, in future, how this cooperation will be made and on what conditions and plans.

"You have mentioned in your letter to Mr. Ahmad on September 27th that this fund amounts to US$ three billion or more. There is no problem to take care of this by the Arab Bank and the other group of banks as stated above. The terms and conditions will be discussed with you provided the condition is clear in Lebanon and subject to the approval and counter guarantees of the Lebanese Authority. Yours sincerely, Abdul Majeed Shoman, Chairman/General Manager."

It is unlikely any "reconstruction" (funded by F.I.D.C.O.) ever took place in Lebanon. Only a Congressional investigation could determine what the US$three billion dollars was actually used for.

The next document, pertaining to Robert Booth Nichols, Senior Vice President of F.I.D.C.O., originated from an interview between Jeffrey Steinberg, a writer for Executive Intelligence Review, and Allan Boyak, an attorney in Utah whom Michael Riconosciuto contacted immediately after his arrest in Washington state.

Michael T. Hurley had allegedly been transferred from Nicosia, Cyprus to DEA in Washington state shortly before Michael's arrest. Riconosciuto's arrest had taken place with a week after signing the Inslaw affidavit.

It is noteworthy that Danny Casolaro also contacted and interviewed Allan Boyak shortly before his death. According to Ted Gunderson and others who knew Danny, Boyak met with Casolaro in Washington D.C. and provided him with a copy of a transcript of the meeting between himself (Boyak), Riconosciuto, and Ted Gunderson, who at that time was Riconosciuto's investigator.

I later obtained the same transcript from Gunderson's live-in partner, J.M., and have related the contents of that explosive transcript in Chapter 13.

Meanwhile, the following "Memorandum for the File," dated 62591, was written by Steinberg after his interview with Boyak: (Excerpted) "I met at length Saturday, June 22, 1991 with Allan Boyak, an attorney from Utah who is representing Michael Riconosciuto in his pending drug case. Boyak is not the lead attorney and will not apparently be making court appearances in the case.

"Boyak recounted the following personal background information: He was in the U.S. Army in Special Forces and apparently did some contract work for the CIA during the 1960's and early 1970's. At some point in the early 70's, he worked briefly for the Drug Enforcement Administration (or its antecedent agency), being stationed in California.

"Boyak had some falling out with the DEA and left the government service altogether, entering law school. While in law school, Boyak became friendly with Jim Nichols, a classmate. Nichols told him that he had a brother who was heavily involved in organized crime and had been disowned by his family.

"Once out of law school, Boyak joined a Hollywood law firm and became involved in criminal defense work, representing a number of well placed West Coast drug traffickers. At some point, Boyak moved to Utah (he is a practicing Mormon), while retaining his California law practice on a parttime basis.

"In addition to his o.c. [organized crime] clientel, Boyak also maintained contacts and apparently did some legal work for some of his old buddies from his Green Beret and CIA days. One such pal was Art Suchesk, who ran a CIA proprietary company called Hoffman Electronics.

" ... At some point in the late 1970's, one of Boyak's clients, a Mormon old boy named Cap Kressop, who was a technical wizard, was approached by Robert Nichols and asked to manufacture a prototype laser site for a rifle. Kressop was offered a $200,000 contract for the job but he became suspicious when Nichols wanted to pay him in cash.

"Boyak contacted Nichols at his Marina Del Rey, California home/office [apartment "007"] and the two had a lengthy meeting there. Boyack's description of that meeting is that it was continuously interrupted by telephone calls and telex messages. Boyak came away convinced that Nichols was involved in large scale illegal drug operations.

"After consulting with one of his close friends from Green Beret days, then an assistant U.S. Attorney named Dexter Leitenen (now the Miami U.S. Attorney), Boyak went to the Los Angeles FBI office with the suspicions about Nichols' activities.

"The FBI background check [conducted by Ted Gunderson] on Robert Booth Nichols (born 1943 or 1944 he couldn't remember for sure) revealed that he was `squeeky clean.' In fact, he had a Class I machine gun license.

"Boyak did discover, however, that one of the people Nichols referenced as a business associate and personal friend, Harold Okimoto, was believed by some of his sources to be a top Japanese organized crime figure based in Hawaii. Okimoto was described as a top agent in the Yakuza overseas.

"Over the next two year period, after the L.A. FBI had dropped any interest in the Nichols matter, Boyack's friend, [Arthur] Suchesk, repeatedly ran into Nichols in such places as Singapore, the Philippines, and Taiwan. Suchesk was based out of Zurich, Switzerland during this period, apparently still doing his front man work for the CIA.

"Boyak says that information developed during this period, through Suchesk and others, [indicated] that Nichols was indeed a bigtime drug dealer who was very well insulated from any U.S. law enforcement problems. Nichols operated exclusively overseas. Whenever he came to the United States, he never engaged in any illegal activities.

"However, Boyak described Nichols' rum importing business as a cover for bigtime heroin trafficking from the Golden Triangle. Nichols was also named as `Mr. Big', according to Boyak, in the Medellin Cartel, in drug prosecutions in Utah and Los Angeles.

"Three to four years ago, Boyack received an out of the blue telephone call from Michael Riconosciuto. Michael identified himself as a former employee of Robert Nichols. He also referenced Ted Gunderson as a `mutual friend.' Boyak had only met Ted once very briefly when he was pressing the L.A. FBI to look into the Nichols dope suspicions ..."

" ... Then in April 1991, Boyak received a phone call from Ted Gunderson, informing him that `Michael was in trouble. He was caught in a government frameup.'

"Boyak returned to his background profile of Bob Nichols, parts of which were apparently provided by Bob's estranged brother, Jim Nichols. It seems that as a young man, Robert Nichols wound up in Hawii functioning as a hitman for the Tongs. He was `adopted' as the Yakuza godson of Harold Okimoto, a 67yearold car dealer in Hawaii.

"Nichols grew up to be a big business front man for the Far East syndicate. He reportedly laundered between $50200 million for Ferdinand Marcos. He now owns an estate in Hawaii, a feudal castle outside of Milan, Italy and the referenced Marina Del Ray home in California.

"Nichols has an office in Zurich. At one point, he was reportedly involved in the smuggling of China White heroin into Mexico where it was treated to look like the Mexican brown heroin which was more popular at the time.

"It should be emphasized that all of this information about Robert Nichols comes exclusively from Allan Boyak. None of it has yet been independently corroborated to my knowledge. Bill Hamilton and some other people involved in tracking the Inslaw story have all spoken to [Robert] Nichols and report that he has been straightforward with them and has provided leads and documents re: Michael Riconosciuto.

"Nichols is listed on the board of directors of First Intercontinental Development Corporation (FIDCO) along with George Pender and several officials of the Howard Hughes linked Suma Corporation."

One of the most surprising, and disturbing, documents I found in Michael Riconosciuto's hidden files (see Chapter 9) was an envelope with a notation on it, handwritten and signed by Ted Gunderson, which read as follows:

"Michael: Raymond [Lavas] is arriving at LAX, 7:55 p.m., Air Canada via flight 793 from Toronto. Will have to go through Customs. This will give us another member for our drug/arms operation. Only problem [is] Raymond will probably be using instead of selling. Sorry I didn't get to D.A. office. I tried to call, but no answer. By the time I fought the traffic to the bank and did my banking, it was too late Will be home tonight (818) 8806238. T.G."

Raymond Lavas was Ted Gunderson's forensic expert when he worked for the FBI. Lavas was in constant contact with Bobby Riconosciuto after Michael was incarcerated. In fact, everyone was watching Michael and Bobby very closely.

CHAPTER 8

In March, 1993, two years after Michael Riconosciuto had attempted to trade information on the F.I.D. C.O./Euramae drug/intelligence operation in Lebanon to the government, the aforementioned magazine article printed in High Times magazine by Bill Weinberg, entitled, "The Syrian Connection," exposed CIA penetration into the Bekaa Valley drug trade in Lebanon.

Essentially, this article validated much of Riconosciuto's earlier information. The following are some excerpts:

" ... Many of Lebanon's armed factions depend on the international drug trade for funds," wrote Weinberg. "Each paramilitary group controls its own port in or around Beirut which serves as a transfer point for drugs on the way out of Europe and America and weaponry on the way in from the international market. Whoever holds the fertile Bekaa [Valley] holds the ticket to power. As the war escalated in the late 1970's, hashish, the traditional mainstay of the Bekaa, started to be replaced by the more lucrative heroin. Marijuana fields were converted to opium fields, hashish production compounds converted to heroin labs."

Heroin production exploded in the Bekaa Valley under the Syrian occupation. However, the Syrian occupation forces didn't touch the drugs, but "profited from the trade and protected it." It was estimated that up to $2 billion in protection money was paid annually by dope plantation operators to Syrian occupation forces.

DEA official Felix Jimenez told a reporter in 1990 that the Syrian occupation received $10,000 per kilogram of Bekaa heroin. With the valley producing over 20,000 pounds a year, that was a lot of money.

Bekaa also became a center for processing Columbian cartel cocaine for reexport to European markets.

In 1988, two Syrians arrested with large quantities of heroin and coke in Milan [Italy] claimed to be working for a Syrian colonel in Bekaa. Prior to Desert Storm, Syria's president Hafez Assad and Iraq's Saddam Hussein were rival factions in the Arab nationalist Ba'ath Party. Syria was the only Arab nation to back Iran in the long and brutal war against Iraq in the 1980's. So when President George Bush invited Syria to join the Arab coalition against Saddam after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, Assad accepted.

After Desert Storm, Assad closed ranks with the White House and even softened his stand against Israel. President Bush and Secretary of State James Baker peddled a postwar peace plan for the region and Syria and Israel were encouraged to recognize each others' Lebanese occupation zones.

Under a 1990 accord, Christians and Muslims were finally granted equal representation, officially bringing the civil war to an end. A new Syriabacked Muslimled government came to power. Under the accord, Syria maintained control of the Bekaa Valley. Among the areas still under Syrian control were the notorious drug ports north of Beirut.

High Times maintained that there were long standing backchannel relations between Washington D.C. and Damascus. According to a 1987 Pentagon memo leaked to the Chicago paper, In These Times, Lt. Col. Oliver North was personally notified that Syrian intelligence in Lebanon was willing to negotiate with the White House for release of the hostages held by Lebanese terrorists.

The Washington Jewish Week reported that Bush himself had made secret visits to Damascus for hostage negotiations. But there were other reasons for the U.S. to be in Lebanon. In 1988, when Pan Am Flight 103 exploded over Scotland, Pan Am hired the private investigative firm of Interfor to look into the bombing. The owner, Juval Aviv, was reportedly a former Mossad agent.

Interfor maintained that the Syrianbacked Popular Front for the Liberation of PalestineGeneral Command (PFLPGC) was behind the bombing. The PFLPGC had been able to get their bomb on board the 747 because the flight was part of a heroin smuggling route run by a drug trafficking ring connected to the Syrian regime and protected by both the U.S. DEA and the CIA.

Interfor claimed the ring was overseen by Syrian kingpin Monzer AlKassar often known as the world's biggest arms dealer. The CIA was protecting the AlKassar operation because he was cooperating with efforts to free U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Reporter Bill Weinberg added that "the CIA and DEA had apparently both instructed Germany's internal intelligence agency, the BKA, to allow certain suitcases to pass uninspected onto USbound flights at the Frankfort airport, where Flight 103 originated."

Apparently, unknown to anyone except the PFLPGC and AlKassar, a suitcase which was supposed to be full of the usual heroin was covertly substituted with a suitcase full of explosives.

A London Times news article, dated July 22, 1991, entitled, "US Drugs Sting Gave Pan Am Bomber Cover," noted that the DEA admitted that the protection program had existed. The explanation for this operation, which was codenamed Khourah, was provided by Ronald Caffrey, acting assistant administrator of the operational division of the DEA. In a U.S. government submission, dated March 20, 1991, Caffrey said the drug operation was a "controlled delivery."

According to Caffrey, in a controlled delivery, a law enforcement agency permits and monitors shipments of contraband, including drugs, to move from a source or transit location to its intended destination. Use of this technique is sometimes essential to enable law enforcement agencies to identify and arrest highranking members of trafficking organizations, rather than simply arrest low level couriers.

Pan Am argued in court that it had been the pawn of an international intelligence operation, but still lost the case and was forced into bankruptcy.

In 1990, when the White House started to woo Syria as a partner in the Allied coalition, blame for the Pan Am bombing suddenly shifted from Assad's Syria to Qaddafi's Libya, and that is pretty much where it stands today.

Meanwhile, AlKassar was alleged to have provided Oliver North with drug profits to purchase arms for the Nicaraguan Contras. The U.S. Tower Commission probe into Irangate revealed that AlKassar had been paid $1.2 million by Oliver North's coconspirator General Richard Secord to move weapons from Israel to the Contras.

In her book "October Surprise," former Reagan White House aide Barbara Honegger alleged that AlKassar's heroin smuggling network in Italy was used to launder NATO arms stocks for diversion to Iran with the help of corrupt Italian intelligence officials linked to the secretive fascist Masonic lodge, P2.

It is noteworthy that AlKassar was reported to hold large tracts of land in the Bekaa Valley. The PFLPGC also has camps in the Bekaa which were the target of Israeli air strikes in 1989.

The U.S. government's presence in Lebanon is not to be taken lightly according to Lester Coleman, a selfemployed freelance writer, editor and security consultant who once moonlighted as a DIA (Defense Intelligence Agency) covert intelligence officer when he was called to serve. Coleman, age 47, told the London Times that for six years he worked as an intelligence officer with the secret unit, Middle East Collection 10 (MC10) in Cyprus, running a network of agents in Beirut whose mission was to find American hostages held by extremists.

Coleman was paid in travelers checks sent from the Luxembourg branch of the now collapsed Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI). Two senior MC10 members, Mathew Kevin Gannon and Major Charles Dennis McKee, had been on PanAm flight 103 and had just returned from a mission in Beirut.

Coleman explained that the DEA, with the narcotics squad of the Cypriot national police, the German BKA police and British customs, ran a "drug sting operation" through Cyprus and airports in Europe, including Frankfurt.

The operation involved delivering heroin from the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon to the United States; the operation was codenamed "Khourah." Coleman maintained that Pan Am Flight 103 was being used by the DEA as a "controlled delivery" flight.

After the explosion, the Beirut end of MC10 had obviously been "blown." There were five key members of the MC10 cell in Cyprus and Beirut, one of whom was Lester Coleman. Another was Werner Tony Asmar, a German Lebanese, who was killed in a bomb explosion at his office in east Beirut on May 26, 1988.

Another member of MC10 was Charlie Frezeli, a Lebanese army officer, who was shot dead at his home in east Beirut in November 1989. When Asmar was killed, the DIA ordered Coleman home.

Danny Casolaro had contacted Coleman in Sweden on August 3, 1991, seven days before his death in Martinsburg, West Virgnia. They talked about the sale of the PROMISE software by the U.S. Government to foreign governments, the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI), and the IranContra scandal.

After Coleman learned of Danny's death on August 10th, 1991, he provided Inslaw president Bill Hamilton with an affidavit in October 1991. That affidavit read as follows:

"Affidavit of Lester K. Coleman, being duly sworn, do hereby state as follows:

"(1) I am currently selfemployed as a freelance writer, editor, and security consultant. I am a United States citizen and am temporarily outside of the United States.

"(2) In November 1984, the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) offered me a position in human intelligence operations in the Middle East. I was raised in the Middle East, where I lived in Iran, Libya and Saudi Arabia. I speak three dialects of Arabic and some Farsi. I accepted the position and received training from the DIA. I was assigned to a Middle East intelligence unit.

"(3) Between February and September 1987, I was seconded by DIA to the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) in Nicosia, Cyprus, reporting to the DEA Country Attache, Michael T. Hurley.

"(4) After a cover assignment in the United States, I was again seconded to the DEA in Nicosia, Cyprus, in early 1988.

"(5) During April and May 1988, I worked in the office of Euramae Trading Company, Ltd. in Nicosia, Cyprus, a DEA proprietary company. On or about May 29, 1988, because of my concern about poor security in the DEA operation in Cyprus, I returned to the United States, having previously obtained the concurrence of DIA.

"(6) During my two stints as a DIA covert intelligence officer seconded to the DEA in Nicosia, Cyprus, I became aware of the fact that DEA was using its proprietary company, Euramae Trading Company, Ltd. to sell computer software called PROMISE or PROMIS to the drug abuse control agencies of various countries in the Middle East, including Cyprus, Pakistan, Syria, Kuwait and Turkey.

"(7) I personally witnessed the unpacking at the Nicosia, Cyprus, Police Force Narcotics Squad of boxes containing reels of computer tapes and computer hardware. The boxes bore the name and red logo of a Canadian corporation with the words `PROMISE' or `PROMIS' and `Ltd' in the company name.

"(8) The DEA objective in inducing the implementation of this computerized PROMIS[E] system in the drug abuse control agencies of the Middle East countries was to augment the drug control resources available to the United States Government by making it possible for the United States Government to access sensitive drug control law enforcement and intelligence files of these Middle East governments.

"(9) It is also my understanding that thirdparty funds were generally made available for the purchase of these computer software and hardware systems. One thirdparty funding source was the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in Vienna, Austria.

"(10) As DEA Country Attache for Cyprus, Michael T. Hurley had overall responsibility for both the Euramae Trading Company, Ltd. and its initiative to sell PROMIS[E] computer systems to Middle East countries for drug abuse control.

"(11) In 1990, DEA reassigned Hurley to a DEA intelligence position in Washington State.

"(12) I became aware in 1991 that Michael Riconosciuto, known to me as a longtime CIA asset, was arrested in Washington State by DEA for the manufacturing of illegal chemical drugs. I had also become aware of the fact that Riconosciuto had made a sworn statement, prior to his arrest, about his participation in a covert U.S. intelligence initiative to sell Inslaw's PROMISE software to foreign governments.

"(13) In light of Hurley's personal involvement in the U.S. Government's covert intelligence initiative to sell PROMIS[E] software to foreign governments and his reassignment to a DEA intelligence position in Washington State in advance of the DEA's arrest of Riconosciuto, the arrest of Riconosciuto should be regarded as suspect. I do not believe that Hurley's posting to a drug intelligence position in Washington State in advance of Riconosciuto's arrest on drug charges is merely coincidental. Rather, the probability is that Hurley was reassigned to Washington State to manufacture a case against Riconosciuto in order to prevent Riconosciuto from becoming a credible witness about the U.S. Government's covert sale of the PROMIS software to foreign governments.

"(14) The investigative journalist Danny Casolaro contacted me in Europe on August 3, 1991. Mr. Casolaro had leads and hard information about things that I know about, including Department of Justice groups operating overseas, the sale of PROMIS[E] software by the U.S. Government to foreign governments, the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI), and the IranContra scandal. I subsequently learned of Mr. Casolaro's death in Martinsburg, West Virginia, one week later, on August 10, 1991. I contacted Inslaw in October 1991, after learning about Mr. Casolaro's death under suspicious circumstances."

Village Voice magazine ran an article entitled, "The Last Days of Danny Casolaro," by James Ridgeway and Doug Vaughan on October 15, 1991 which gave a brief profile of Michael Riconosciuto's background:

"The 44yearold Riconosciuto is to put it mildly a colorful character, wilder than anything in `The Falcon and the Snowman.' He was a gifted child. When he was just 10 years old, Michael wired his parents' neighborhood with a working, private telephone system that undercut Ma Bell; in the eighth grade, he won a science fair with a model for a threedimensional sonar system. By the time he was a teenager, he had won so many science fairs with exhibits of laser technology that he was invited to be a summer research assistant at Stanford's [University] prestigious Cooper Vaper Laser Laboratory. Dr. Arthur Schalow, a Nobel laureate, remembered him: `You don't forget a 16yearold youngster who shows up with his own argon laser,' he told Casolaro."

CHAPTER 9, Part 1

Bobby Riconosciuto lived with Michael Riconosciuto at the time of his arrest in Washington state. Immediately upon learning of his arrest, she had fled to California with her four children, the youngest of which, Elizabeth, had been fathered by Michael.

Bobby was well situated in an exclusive suite at the Embassy Suites Hotel in Orange County, California. Her suite contained a living room and bar overlooking lush indoor tropical gardens and water fountains, marble walkways over bridgecovered ponds and a gazebo where free breakfasts were cooked and served to order.

Within the room, she had at her disposal office equipment, phones in every room, answering machines, room service and anything else she needed for herself and her children. Patrick Moriarty, Marshall Riconosciuto's business partner of 40 years, was paying the bills.

Moriarty and the Riconosciutos, father and son, had once owned Hercules Research Corporation together in Hercules, California. An old Contra Costa County newspaper article, dating back to April, 1981, gave the story of Hercules. The subheading of the article pretty much said it all, "Device Could Make Hercules a Silicon Valley."

In 1981, Hercules had developed a small electronic power supply the size of a tissue box, designed to specifically feed 30,000 volts of electricity to another device, a METC (Modular Energy Transfer Catalyzer) unit, that would cut the heating and cooling time in food processing and of making glass, metal and other products by 40 percent.

The METC unit, patented by Interprobe of Chicago, worked by electrostatically exciting air molecules by moving them through a charged field. This removed a boundary layer of molecules that inhibited the exchange of thermal energy. Hercules' highvoltage power supply was essential to the application of Interprobe's METC unit, so both companies were in the process of working out a merger in order to market both technologies as a complete system.

Admiral Henry Rankin, vice president of Interprobe, was a longtime family friend, and was very enthuiastic about incorporating the Hercules power pack with Interprobe's high voltage electrostatic technology.

Patrick Moriarty and Marshall Riconosciuto had funded research for 15 years and spent about $1 million of their own money on the project.

By 1983, things were not looking so good for Patrick Moriarty. The Los Angeles Times newspaper reported in a series of articles that "fireworks magnate W. Patrick Moriarty, his business and associates spent nearly half a million dollars in the last three years to influence government decisions throughout California."

Moriarty's relationships with several key state legislators and his campaign contributions to elected officials from Anaheim to Sacramento had made him a powerful force in state and local politics. His association with the notorious Robert Ferrante, head of Consolidated Savings and Loan which failed in 1985, and who was the subject of a disorganized, onagain offagain FBI investigation, was written up in the book, "Inside Job," by (Mary Frick?).

Patrick Moriarty was described as "the manufacturer of Red Devil fireworks, who founded the Bank of Irvine. The bank failed in 1984, the victim of fraud and mismanagement, according to regulators." In 1985, Moriarty pleaded guilty to mail fraud in a case that became the biggest political scandal in California in 30 years. Over 10 prominent politicians, including one state senator, were indicted for taking bribes from Moriarty.

Though I'd spoken with her on the phone numerous times, I first met Bobby Riconosciuto facetoface on January 15th, 1992. On the day I visited her hotel suite, I hauled my Mita copy machine on a cart up to her room and we talked and made copies of documents all morning. Bobby was young, boxom and attractive in a natural, mother earth sort of way. Her long blond hair hung loosely around her shoulders, she wore no makeup, and her nose and mouth had an impish upturn that made her appear to be smiling even when she was not.

We became friends as the day progressed. Bobby confided that some of the more sensitive material was stored at Michael's hidden trailer in Trona, California.

While working at Wackenhut, Michael had anticipated a future need to have a hiding place for himself and his files in the event that things got out of control. Bobby, who had met Michael in Washington state after he left Wackenhut, had been instructed by Michael to stay away from the trailer in case she was being surveillanced.

The files and computer equipment stored there were Michael's last ace in the hole. Nevertheless, Bobby was frustrated by the slow progress of Michael's court defense, by R.J.'s lack of response to Michael's request for Witness Protection - and she had been barraged by reporters who wanted documented proof of Michael's statements.

I offered to drive her out to Trona, near Death Valley, to retrieve Michael's files and ultimately, she acquiesced. We arrived at the isolated trailer at dusk and began sorting through documents that could substantiate Michael's claim that he worked for the government.

The electricity had been shut off and as it became dark, we were forced to use flashlights. Bobby was terrified that we might get caught in that Godforsaken place. The children were cold and tired, and from sheer exhaustion, she finally offered to turn all the boxes and documents over to me to make copies at home.

We threw everything helter skelter into large plastic trash bags, dumped the bags into my Chevy van, and quickly headed back to civilization.

It is noteworthy that before we left, Bobby pointed the flashlight towards another, smaller trailer situated on a knoll overlooking the road, which she claimed contained Michael's hidden computer equipment.

It was several weeks before Michael learned that Bobby had turned the documents over to me. She never told him, nor did I. It was through Jonathan Littman, a San Francisco Chronicle reporter whom I had confided in, that Riconosciuto learned of our secret.

Upon arriving home from my trip to the desert, I had xeroxed roundtheclock for five days with help from trusted friends. The documents corroborated everything Michael had related over the phone, and more.

It was an exciting time. Boxes and boxes of documents provided me for the first time with a window into the CIA corporate structure, arms deals, drug operations, money laundering, biological technology, all the connecting tentacles of Danny Casolaro's "Octopus."

After making copies, I squeezed the originals into eight large packing boxes, sealed them tightly, and sent them back to Bobby Riconosciuto, via a friend, who gave them to Michael's father, Marshall Riconosciuto.

I later learned Marshall allegedly shipped them to Ian Stuart Spiro for safekeeping. It was not until April, 1993, that I learned what became of Spiro and the documents.

An Associated Press news story entitled, "Deaths Linked to Spy Network," published in the Merced Sun Star newspaper, outlined the death of Ian Stuart Spiro, 46, who was found dead of cyanide poisoning in the AnzaBorrego desert on November 8, 1992, one week after his wife and children were found shot to death in their Rancho Santa Fe home.

The news story, originating from the Oceanside Blade Citizen, noted that "documents and U.S. intelligence sources implicated Spiro in the IranContra armsforhostages affair and an alleged Justice Department conspiracy to pirate software from a private company and sell it to foreign intelligence agencies."

Spiro's name also appeared in Lt. Col. Oliver North's personal notebooks documenting the IranContra affair, according to the National Security Archives in Washington D.C..

Former hostage David Jacobsen told the BladeCitizen shortly after Spiro's death that Spiro helped negotiate the release of hostages in the Middle East.

After obtaining a copy of a followup BladeCitizen article dated June 3, 1993, entitled, "Spiro Probers Want to Talk to North" by Wade Booth, Stacy Finz and Michael Williams, I learned that Ian Spiro lived in Beirut, Lebanon during the 1970's and 1980's where he "made contacts with Lebanese religious leaders and the Islamic Jihad."

Greg Quarton, Spiro's brotherinlaw, told reporters at the BladeCitizen that Spiro maintained communication with Lebanese business associates until the time of his death, but investigating officers had possession of Spiro's phone bills, and as of this writing, they had not released them.

San Diego sheriff's Capt. Jim Marmack said detectives were investigating allegations by Spiro's relatives that his file cabinets and business papers were missing.

The week of the Spiro family's death, Robert Corson, a business associate of Spiro's indicted in a savings and loan scam, was found dead in an El Paso, Texas, motel room. Corson, who reportedly worked for the CIA, died of a heart attack, officials said. The BladeCitizen reported that Corson once carried money to South America in a deal to deliver covert weapons. Corson also allegedly associated with California investor Wayne Reeder who was seen at a Wackenhut/Contra meeting in Riverside county (See Chapter 10).

The newspaper article went on to say that Alan Michael May, age 50, [a former Northern California field director in Richard Nixon's presidential campaign and attorney for Nixon's brothers Donald and Edward] was found dead in his San Francisco home on June 19, 1991, four days after a newspaper story in the Napa Sentinel outlined his role in an alleged plot by Republican Party officials to bribe Iranian officials to delay the release of U.S. hostages until after President Reagan's inauguration.

Immediately after May's death, Raymond Lavas, Ted Gunderson's former forensic's expert, (and a former protege of Robert Maheu according to Michael Riconociuto) wrote a letter to one of Michael's friends, expressing his professional opinion about the death of Michael May. A copy of that letter was faxed to me and the following excerpts quickly captured my attention:

"... I don't understand why it's going to take two weeks to determine May's cause of death. Did you know that certain chemical assassination methods will have been evaporated out of the body by that time?

"Then, the cause of death would be ruled as natural, since the chemical agents are the primary cause that result in a secondary action such as heart failure, kidney or liver damage, etc.

"Some examples of these agents include BZ2, Ricin, Tropodotoxin, shellfish toxia and a variety of methlamine based neurotoxinsthat affect the central nervous system and cause failure of one or more organs in the human body.

"Some, if not most of these toxins are solvent based [DMSO] and may be introduced in minute quantities through the skin. Their effect [may] vary and some toxins take weeks to months to take effect.

Others take moments to damage the nervous system, then evaporate within hours.

"Unless the body is immediately refrigerated, the toxins are quickly evaporated, leaving only one or two parts per million in quantity. Unless there are suspicious circumstances surrounding the death, a trained forensic expert would never detect any traces of the toxin.

"So there you have it. [Michael] May is dead and they are dragging their asses to find out how! What is next? A statement that May died of natural causes? Let me predict this now ... and we'll see. Regards, Ray."

Michael May also apparently attended briefings connected with Lawrence Livermore Labs in California according to an official listing of Lawrence Livermore employees at a "Briefings and Discussions" document obtained from Riconosciuto's files.

The document, stamped, "Official Use Only," listed Edward Teller along with nine other names, including Michael May, under the heading "Lawrence Livermore Laboratory." Other headings with names listed underneath included the Department of Energy, Department of State, Defense Nuclear Agency and Naval Research Laboratory. There were no other pages accompanying the document, so it was impossible to determine from what manual it came from.

May's name also popped up in a letter Michael Riconosciuto wrote to Dr. John Phillip Nichols at the Cabazon Indian reservation when he was being screened for security clearances to work on the Cabazon/ Wackenhut joint venture.

The letter focused primarily on Al Holbert, an Israeli intelligence officer who allegedly recruited Riconosciuto into the CIA, and May's name was mentioned only once, in connection with members of "The Company." That one sentence read as follows: "Ben Kalka's relationship with Holbert and `May' will give the proper authorities the necessary auspices to come in and swiftly clean it [The Company] up."

Other portions of the letter gave a history of Riconosciuto's experience with Al Holbert (Excerpts):

" ... My problems stemmed from my association with Al C. Holbert. I first met Holbert when I was still in high school and I was led to believe that he was an `unofficial' representative of the Israeli government. I was further led to believe that his interests were not contrary to those of the United States. It was not until July of 1981 that I learned the truth about Holbert. It came directly from him to me personally in what I will call a confrontational situation.

"August of 1981 was when I first brought Holbert to your [Dr. John Nichols] attention. At that time, I still did not know much and I was still in a sort of state of shock from my `new awareness' of Holbert. I was in deep with this guy and so was Paul [Morasca].

"At first Paul thought that I was off base and overreacting and then by degrees he started to come around. Much of the incredible account of Paul's doings (money transfers, gems, weapons, drugs) were the result of his relationship to Burt and Jensen. Burt, Jensen and Kalka all met Paul through his brother Joe. I was the one who introduced Al Holbert to Paul, and Paul was the one who introduced me to Burt, Jensen and Kalka. This was in early 1967.

"I was introduced to [Al] Holbert through the Stanford crowd at the home of [name withheld] in Portola Valley, California. Interesting enough, [name withheld] is a former State Department employee ..."

" ... The realization of who and what Holbert is, and Paul's death, have taken me some time to adjust to. And that required professional help. I now have a clear idea and good perspective on what has really happened in my life.

"I am in awe of Holbert and his group's power [The Company]. During the last year, I have forced this structure to rear its ugly head in many different times and places, and in ways that can't be covered up. I have also spread far and wide what knowledge I have with the intent to first protect others involved and secondly to chisel the story in stone.

"Where it all stands now is that no matter who the group attempts to silence or what ruse they attempt to perpetrate, the truth cannot be destroyed. This is now in the hands of a competent attorney. My direct involvement is finished except to be available to answer questions.

" ... I feel that Holbert and his group represent a current national security nightmare to this country. I feel that I have been extricated from the hold of this group. But I also feel that the destruction by legal means of this group ranks in importance with my scientific and engineering skills to the overall picture.

"Ben Kalka's relationship with Holbert and May will give the proper authorities the necessary auspices to come in and swiftly clean it up. I would now like to start out where we should have been a year ago. The first point I will start with is a recap of our visit to Pickitinny Arsenal ..."

It is noteworthy that two of the people mentioned in the above letter are now dead: Paul Morasca and Michael May.

The bizarre circumstances of Morasa's death are detailed in the next few pages. Ben Kalka of The Company, is now serving time in prison for having 900 pounds of methamphetamine in his possession at time of arrest.

Through one of Michael's contacts, I managed to locate the current (1991) whereabouts of Al Holbert and confirm his identity. A letter written on "Solomon Investigations" letterhead, dated June 13, 1991, to a client requesting payment for the services of Holbert read as follows: (Excerpted) " ... I enlisted the services of my electronic countermeasures expert, A.C. Holbert, for an immediate survey and sweep of the premises. Mr. Holbert is highly regarded as the best electronics man in the [San Francisco] Bay Area and has recently worked with Israeli intelligence services in the field of electronic countermeasures. He agreed to take on this job. I have enclosed a copy of Mr. Holbert's faxed report ..."

The mystery of Al Holbert was further uncovered in a 1983 transcript in which Michael stated, "After Paul's [Morasca] death, Holbert admitted to me that he was a Soviet backed agent, and they had a home, or he had a home for me, and I could be treated like royalty, and he reiterated that offer in the latest meeting, and he said, `He was prepared to deliver some fivehundredthousand dollars cash to me us a show of good faith ..."

The transcript, originating from a series of tape recorded interviews between Michael Riconosciuto, Ted Gunderson and Robert Booth Nichols at Nichols' "007" apartment in Marina Del Ray, provided a window into the entire drug scene in California from the early 1960's through the 1980's, mostly relating to methamphetamine operations in the Bay Area. It had been typed by Ellen Nichols, Robert's wife.

Riconosciuto's relationship with Ted Gunderson dated back at least as far as 1982. Michael and Nichols dated back to 1967. In reading the transcript, it appeared that Gunderson and Nichols were interviewing Riconosciuto for recruitment into a drug/sting operation.

Riconosciuto later verified that he was, in fact, being recruited into the overseas Lebanon drug operation by Gunderson and Nichols because of his (Riconosciuto's) undercover experience in the drug trade.

It is noteworthy that Al Holbert, the Israeli intelligence agent who originally recruited Michael into the CIA, is mentioned extensively throughout the 71 page transcript.

Chapter 9, Part 2

Riconosciuto's relationship with Holbert had lasted from 1966 to 1981, a span of fifteen years. Most of that time had been devoted to complex drug activities in California. In one passage, Riconosciuto stated that "Ben Kalka was one of [Al] Holbert's lieutenants. The other lieutenant with Kalka was Charlie Weinberg, who set up the Vortex Chemical Company in Berkeley, California for Holbert."

Holbert was also interested in technology. "I really confided in him. I was constantly steering him to various people in the Silicon Valley, you know, for requests that he made which were very sophisticated technical requests."

In the transcript, Ted Gunderson asked Michael, "Holbert had a technical mind for that sort of thing?"

Michael responded, "Absolutely! [He had] a firm grasp of physics, mathematics, chemistry, military hardware ..."

Gunderson asked, "Let's go back to '66 to '81, you were close to him?"

Michael: "Not on a regular basis. He would get in contact with me when he needed consultation in certain areas. I made some good money. I designed communications equipment for them. I did a lot of software development ..."

Ted: "And then he gave it to the Israelis?"

Mike: "Yes."

Ted: "And he admitted this?"

Mike: "Oh yeah, none of it was really classified. I did software for the analysis of radar change data. It was based on mathematical models that the Department of Defense wasn't using you know, my approach was new and different from theirs, but it wasn't connected with any of their projects, so technically it wasn't classified."

Michael developed other technology along the way and subsequently attracted the attention of Dr. John Phillip Nichols at Wackenhut/Cabazon who wanted his services. But Michael's association with Al Holbert was hindering Michael's security clearances. Through the screening process and Dr. John Nichols, Michael had learned more about Al Holbert.

Ted: "Well, how could he [Holbert] be a Soviet agent and an Israeli agent?"

Mike: "Your guess is as good as mine. I talked to Major General Peratt on that subject last May and he said, `You don't understand the ways of the world.' Regarding Al Holbert, I said, `That man has done more damage to my generation and my country [drugs] How can you people say that you're friends of the United States, when you send us a guy like that?"

Michael continued ..."You know, Holbert came to the United States and he went to work for the Treasury Department out of Philadelphia and ..."

Ted interrupted. "In what way? As an agent?"

Mike: "I don't know what the relationship was. The Treasury Department wouldn't tell me. They wouldn't comment at all except to acknowledge that, `Yes, he was involved at very high levels, giving special training.'

" ... Holbert taught courses in interrogation techniques. He taught touchkill techniques you know, with the thumbs on the temples and various scare areas like that. He moved around to a lot of different agencies. He got involved with the FBI, and he was involved with the Drug Enforcement people ..."

Ted: "He indicated to you for fifteen years [that] he was with the Israelis?"

Mike: "Israelis. Yes."

Ted: "And then you realized through Dr. Nichols that he was a Soviet?"

Riconosciuto explained that he thought it was John Ammarell at Wackenhut who had "zeroed in on Holbert."

Gunderson continued to press Riconosciuto about Holbert being a double agent. Michael responded: "Well, he was with the Soviets, but he was also with the Israelis. Holbert definitely is connected with Israeli intelligence. I mean there's no ifs, ands, buts, or maybes ... He was decorated in combat for them."

Riconosciuto further recounted a visit to Israel in April 1982. He had met a man (name unspecified) who was the assistant Secretary of Defense of Israel for a number of years and was in charge of defense production for the Israeli government. This man was a friend of Ariel Sharon and he had introduced Riconosciuto to Sharon. It was through this man and a man named "General Peratt," that Riconosciuto confirmed Holbert's position with the Israelis.

"Holbert definitely is one of their boys. I got an admission out of General Peratt that Holbert was funny, that he's a Trotskiite, and they knew about it, and I couldn't understand why they kept a guy like that around? I was told that I just didn't understand the ways of the world!"

Ted asked, "Who does Holbert report to?"

Mike: "Jean Pierre Boegner."

At this point in the transcript, Robert Booth Nichols interceded and provided Boegner's address: " ... His address in Paris is 114 Champs Elysees, Paris 8, France. That goes into my territory ..."

Mike added, "Jean Pierre reports directly to Colonel Stefan Uznanski of the Ukraine ..." Nichols noted, "I have strict files on him."

Ted asked, "And is he GRU?"

Mike answered, "No KGB."

Nichols added, "As high as you can go ..."

Ted asked, "And where is he, in the Kremlin?"

Mike answered, "No, he's in Vienna."

Nichols interjected, " ... Out of Salzberg. He has a home twenty minutes from Salzberg. His hobby is boar hunting. He has about a twenty man contingent."

Gunderson asked, "Is Boegner a Canadian?"

Nichols responded, "Boegner is French. Boegner was involved in the assassination attempt on de Gaulle. Boegner served time."

Ted: "He's KGB?"

Nichols: "Oh yeah, a Colonel."

Ted: "Okay, anything else. Anything more on Holbert that we should bring up?"

Riconosciuto noted that Holbert was very disappointed that he couldn't "turn him" (Riconosciuto) in August of 1981. Ted asked Michael if Holbert admitted at that time that he was KGB?

Michael corrected Ted, "GRU, he was GRU. He told me that he was GRU and he bragged that there were over thirtyfive thousand GRU agents active on the North American continent. And I checked with John Ammarall and with Robert Frye [executives at Wackenhut Corporation] and they told me it was about half that number.

" ... He [Holbert] wanted me to leave the United States, through Canada, and go to Israel."

Riconosciuto added, "You know, he's touched the Central Intelligence Agency, the Treasury Department, the Secret Service and various local law enforcement agencies all over the country ..."

The abovementioned transcript was mailed by one of three people to the "prosecutor" at Michael Riconosciuto's trial in Washington state where it was entered into evidence.

******

At that time, to Michael's knowledge, only Robert Booth Nichols, Peter Zokosky and Jonathan Littman, a San Francisco Chronicle reporter, had possession of it.

I subsequently received a copy of it from Jonathan Littman, who coincidentally, I learned later, happened to be Ben Kalka's "cousin" (Kalka belonged to The Company, according to Riconosciuto, and had been arrested with 900 pounds of methamphetamine in his possession). Littman had obtained the transcript from Peter Zokosky, Robert Booth Nichols' partner.

Riconosciuto believed Littman had given the transcript to Kalka during one his visits with him at the Pleasanton prison, and Kalka had sent it on to the prosecutor at Michael's trial.

Nichols later confirmed to me that he (Nichols) had indeed interviewed Riconosciuto with Ted Gunderson in 1983 and the transcript was legitimate, though he wouldn't state the purpose of the interview.

******

It is significant that a passage in the 1983 transcript mentioned Michael May as "one of the top three guys in the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory management structure" who was associated with Riconosciuto.

******

Michael and Bobby Riconosciuto had been communicating with Jonathan Littman for months, as had Danny Casolaro before his death, and they wanted me to connect with him. At that point, Littman had written a series of indepth articles on the Cabazon Indians and Dr. John Nichols, and I hadn't been interested in talking to him ... until he wrote about the death of Michael's partner, Paul Morasca.

The article, entitled, "Bizarre Murders Puzzle Cops," published on the front page of the San Francisco Chronicle on December 30, 1991, noted that the body of Paul Morasca, 31, had been found by Michael Riconosciuto. Morasca's arms had been lashed behind his back as he was hogtied with a telephone cord from his curledup legs to his neck. Police believed he died when his legs finally gave out and the cord tightened like a bowstring, drawing the noose around his neck until he slowly strangled.

Oddly, when Riconosciuto found Morasca's body, he drove 500 miles to the Cabazon reservation and told John Nichols about the death. Nichols then called his Los Angeles attorney, who telephoned the San Francisco police.

Just three days after Morasca's death, Mary Quick, a 63yearold school teacher was shot in the face and her purse stolen as she was about to enter Fresno's American legion Post 509, where she was president of the Woman's Auxiliary.

At first, police assumed it to be a routine mugging murder, until it was discovered that her nephew, Brian Weiss, who had been living at his aunt's house in Fresno, was a business associate of Michael Riconosciuto's. (Brian Weiss was also mentioned in the abovementioned 1983 "drug transcript").

Riconosciuto explained to police that he told Paul Morasca that he had given Mary Quick a card containing secret bank account code numbers because "she had no connection to any of the principles and could be trusted." She had been instructed to give the code numbers over the phone only to Paul Morasca or Michael Riconosciuto.

It was not until I obtained Michael Riconosciuto's "desert" files that the above story affected me personally. Within one of the boxes was an envelope containing eight coded computer cards with large sums of money handwritten next to the account numbers. One card, containing ten account numbers, indicated sums of upwards of $3.5 million dollars. That was just one card of eight.

In my next conversation with Michael Riconosciuto, I inquired of him the "real" story behind Paul Morasca and Mary Quick's death. I did not reveal to him that I was in possession of his bank cards, but referred to the S.F. Chronicle newspaper story.

Michael remorsefully indicated that he had not, in fact, given any cards to Mary Quick as he had told

Paul Morasca he did. Michael had kept them (and obviously hidden them at his desert trailer). Nevertheless, Morasca believed, and under torture revealed, that one of the cards was being held by Mary Quick and the rest were stored in a safe deposit box. As we know, Mary Quick died three days later.

After that conversation I immediately took the cards to a professional photographer, had closeup photographs taken of them, and returned them in a separate envelope to Bobby Riconosciuto. I never knew what she did with them.

During subsequent phone conversations, Riconosciuto often referred to his former partner, Paul Morasca. During his attempted trade into the Federal Witness Protection Program, he had made a statement which caught my attention, and which I later inquired about. While relating his background in the electronics field, he had mentioned that he once worked at Tyme Share, Inc. Chuck Evert, a longtime family friend, had reportedly been one of the founders along with Tom O'Roarke.

Noted Riconosciuto, " ... And at the time of Paul Morosca's death, the biggest loss I received was a big bag of bearer shares of original Tyme Shares stock. And that was the main reason why Paul got killed."

Riconosciuto had stressed that only the FinCen people would understand the significance of that. I later learned that the computer cards which Paul Morasca and Mary Quick had died for belonged to the Tyme Shares online financial clearing house used worldwide by banking institutions. Essentially, the cards were provided to a subscriber or "user" who rented time on the computer for conducting banking transactions.

Riconosciuto chose not to elaborate on his operation at Tyme Shares from a "jail" phone, nevertheless, I was able to decipher that he and Paul Morasca had accessed bank accounts using the computer cards in conjunction with a "password" determined by the user. Michael had created the passwords from the "pets" named in Phyllis Riconosciuto's (Michael's exwife's) diary.

He did, however, randomly discuss his background with Tyme Shares: "I developed the modem, error trapping routines for Tyme Share used on the original network. I developed the protected mode memory for the scientific data systems, SDS, Sigma 7 computers. And I developed the capital PERT, Pert Software, which was the next generation of critical path method. That's a Programmed Evaluation Review Technique that Tyme Shares, for years, was the leader in.

"And then Electronic Data Systems bought a license from them, and you know, EDS's story is legendary. Now, PROMISE is an outgrowth of PERT. The Hamiltons had a woman programmer who was selftaught and she's the one, her signature is in the code structures of PROMIS. It's just like her signature because she was out of the mainstream and did things her own way ..."

Shortly thereafter, while reviewing Riconosciuto's documents, I came across a copy of an obscure statement submitted by Riconosciuto in February 1984 to the San Francisco Grand Jury on the death of Paul Morasca. It cryptically tied Morasca to Wackenhut and appeared to have been transcribed from a tape recorded interview. The statement in its entirety read as follows:

"I first heard of Phil Porath in December of 1981. John Phillip Nichols [Cabazon administrator] told Paul Morasca and myself that we needed Phil Porath as a consultant to Recovery Technology, Inc. Porath was represented by John P. Nichols as being able to smoothly handle metals transactions for RTI on a large scale. Phil Porath was one of the contacts that John Phillip Nichols had committed to arrange for Paul as part of our deal. Paul Morasca's body was found after he failed to contact Porath for that scheduled meeting in January 1982.

"After Paul's death, JPN [John Phillip Nichols] came to me with a request. He asked me if I could recover some of Ben Kalka's LSD because he had a sale for 5 lbs. of it to someone in Romania. John Phillip Nichols claimed that this was an authorized covert intelligence operation and the proceeds would be used to purchase George Wackenhut's yacht, Top Secret.

"Military electronics equipment to be delivered to South Africa was also to be purchased according to JPN and delivered by the yacht. I went along with the program because JPN told me that the `agency' was involved through WSI. I did some checking on my own and became suspicious of JPN. Then JPN met with myself and Raoul Arana of Central Carribean Research, Inc.

"At this meeting, the details were plainly discussed by Mr. Arana. At that point, JPN directed me to have PAT (Phillip Arthur Thompson) recover [all] of Kalka's assets. I then contacted DeSilva, who had control of Kalka's assets and he agreed to release them to me. DeSilva later called the Indian reservation and gave the location of the assets which included: one bobtail semitruck with power lift gate loaded with amphetamine production chemicals; one red Datsun truck with a portable refrigerator containing the acid.

"I accompanied PAT and Steve Finley to the locations of these vehicles in the Oakland area. The keys, title and registration were with each vehicle. PAT and SF drove the vehicles off and I reported to JPN that the vehicles had been located and picked up.

"I also reported to my attorney, DW (Don Wager), the details. I contacted JPN a few days later and he complained to me that PAT had made off with everything.

" ... with George Wackenhut in Las Vegas. JPN told me that my problems would be over with if I went along with the program. Brian Weiss [Mary Quick's nephew] drove me to Palm Springs where I rented a car. JPN, myself and Brian Weiss then drove to Las Vegas.

"We arrived in Las Vegas late in the afternoon. We checked into the hotel. After we checked in, I was then introduced to Phil Porath by JPN. Porath seemed a little nervous and upset with JPN. JPN seemed desperate to have Phil Porath stall George W. on the sale of the yacht. Phil Porath seemed reluctant to go along with JPN.

"JPN, myself and Porath then went to a private section of the dining room and met with GW [George Wackenhut] and JA[John Ammarell]. During dinner, JPN outlined my situation. [Al] Holbert, [Ben] Kalka, [Richard] Knozzi, [and] the Fresno Company were covered in detail.

"A cutaway, sectioned high security lock was also shown to JA and GW [George Wackenhut]. JA said that this should be presented to his personal friend, Bud Miller, for action and that I would be contacted.

"The sale of the WH [Wackenhut] yacht then came up. Porath gave GW a story [at] JPN's prompting. GW was impatient and asked where the `South African' Thompson could be reached?I then asked GW [George Wackenhut] if he was referring to PAT [Phillip Arthur Thompson] and he said, `Yes.'

"I then demanded to know what was going on? I laid out to GW what PAT had done, including murdering PM [Paul Morasca]. JPN interrupted me and told GW that I was mistaken and it was a different PT that I was talking about. It was at that point that GW [George Wackenhut] said he had a hearing problem and the dinner broke up.

"I went immediately to make telephone calls. I spread the word that I felt my life was in danger and that JPN, WH, and PAT had conspired to kill PM [Paul Morasca]. I then went back to the dining area where I saw PP [Phil Porath] and GW [George Wackenhut] at a small twoperson table talking about the yacht deal. JPN and JA were standing up and they asked me to come to JA's room.

"At JA's room, everybody acted like nothing had happened. There we talked for an hour or so about hitech projects. JPN and I then went to PP's room and talked [about] P's missed meeting with Paul M., Bill Jensen, Burt Gardener and metal projects. We then went to bed. The next morning JPN, BW [Brian Weiss] and I drove back to Indio. At no time did JPN mention the problem that came down at dinner."

In John Connolly's SPY magazine article on Wackenhut, September 1992 issue, on page 54, a brief notation mentioned Riconosciuto's meeting in Las Vegas with George Wackenhut and John Ammarell, a Wackenhut board member and consultant to George Wackenhut. SPY contacted Ammarell regarding the meeting, and Ammarell confirmed that such a meeting did indeed take place in Las Vegas. "I don't remember any specific conversations," Ammarell said, "but I think we were there to discuss the sale of George's [Wackenhut] yacht, the Top Secret. I think Nichols said he had a potential buyer."

Wrote SPY, "So, the wealthy president of a large security company with CIA ties and one of his board members meet with a drug dealer turned electronics expert and a spook turned arms supplier and all they discuss is the sale of a boat?"

After reading the newspaper article on the death of Paul Morasca, I contacted Jonathan Littman at the San Francisco Chronicle. Littman jumped in the car and drove from San Francisco to Mariposa (near Yosemite National Park) when he learned I had obtained Michael's hidden documents.

Interestingly, when he arrived at my home he thumbed through piles of documents, but seemed to be looking for something specific. I later learned he was searching for Phyllis Riconosciuto's (Michael's first wife's) diary.

While Michael had worked at Wackenhut, Phyllis had been treated psychiatrically by the Cabazon administrator, Dr. John Phillip Nichols. Part of her treatment included writing a "diary" of her life with Michael. Michael later broke into Nichols' office at the reservation and stole the original diary before fleeing to Washington state.

The original diary was in fact included in the documents I had obtained in the desert, but I decided to withhold specific pages from Littman until I could determine what his purpose for wanting them was. An incident which I have enumerated in Chapter 10, confirmed that my instincts had been subliminally correct.

Meanwhile, I attempted to satisfy Littman with a few documents sent to me by Henry Weinstein, court reporter for the Los Angeles Times. I had contacted Weinstein to inquire if he had written anything on Robert Booth Nichols' (unrelated to Dr. John Phillip Nichols) lawsuit against the Los Angeles FBI, specifically FBI agent Thomas Gates?

Weinstein had not heard of the lawsuit, but immediately investigated at the Los Angeles courthouse. Shortly thereafter, he sent a package of documents relating not only to Nichols' lawsuit against Thomas Gates, but also relative to Nichols' corporate minutes on the facilitation of biological technology to Japanese institutes, copies of his weapons permits, and documents indicating that Eugene Giaquinto, Vice president of MCA Entertainment Division, was on the board of directors of Nichols' corporation, Meridian International Logistics.

Marvin Rudnick, now a Pasadena lawyer, once tried to prosecute MCA Corporation for organized crime involvement, but got shut down at the highest level, and the Organized Crime Strike Force was disbanned. One member of that investigative team was Richard Stavin, who talked to Danny Casolaro shortly before his death.

Eugene Giaquinto and Jack Valente played heavily in Rudnick's investigation of MCA, as did Curry Company (a subsidiary of MCA) in Yosemite National Park. Rudnick was written up in American Lawyer for his explorations through the MCA labrynth, and at some point, worked closely with Thomas Gates during his investigation of Robert Nichols. Gates and Weinstein were also well acquainted with Mariposa County government's relationship with Curry Company. (See page 2 of manuscript).

In return for sharing copies of these documents with him, I asked Littman to collaborate with me on a story concerning the government sanctioned (10 years!) methamphetamine operations at Whiskey Flats, on the Sara Priest Indian reservation in Mariposa. I was still intent on forcing the arrest of deputies involved in the meth lab at that location. (See page 3 of manuscript). Littman instructed me to put together a detailed synopsis which he would submit to the San Francisco Chronicle.

CHAPTER 10, Part 1

Through Michael Riconosciuto, Danny Casolaro had compiled a sizable list of former CIA officers and arms dealers, the most noteworthy of whom was Robert Booth Nichols, described in various publications as a James Bond type who jetted around the world trading arms and other products.

At the time of Danny's investigation, Nichols headed Meridian International Logistics (M.I.L.), a Californiabased company that conducted extensive business in Australia and Japan. M.I.L. also controlled Meridian Arms Corporation of which Riconosciuto was briefly Vice President.

Out of the WackenhutCabazon endeavor grew a business partnership between Nichols and Riconosciuto, both interested in developing new, hightech submachine guns and powerful explosive devices that, like a nuclear blast, could produce an electromagnetic pulse that could wipe out an enemy's communicatins and electronics.

The secretive Nichols chatted with Casolaro frequently. Casolaro's July phone bills indicated that he called Nichols fifteen times that month, often in the wee hours of the morning. Several of those phone conversations lasted for more than two hours. Before his death on August 10th, Danny Casolaro told his brother, Tony, and Bill Hamilton that Nichols warned him that his investigations were risky.

According to FBI statements, Nichols is not a man whose warnings should be taken lightly. In September 1987, Special Agent Thomas Gates of the Los Angeles FBI had begun an investigation of the activities of Robert Booth Nichols and his corporation, Meridian International Logistics, through Japanese and Australian legal attaches abroad.

According to a subsequent deposition filed by Gates, the bureau suspected Nichols of being involved in a $500 million stock fraud and of maintaining ties to the Gambino crime family and organized crime in Japan.

Gates's deposition was part of a 1987 wiretapping on the phone of Eugene Giaquinto, an official of the MCA entertainment corporation with reputed MOB links. Nichols was one of the people whose calls the bureau intercepted. According to the wiretap application, Nichols was allegedly an international money launderer for money generated through narcotics trafficking and organized crime activities.

In June, 1989, Nichols sued Thomas Gates in a California state court for libel, slander, and interference with contractural relationships when he (Gates) allegedly acted outside the scope of his employment by initiating contacts with the Australian Federal Police and various individuals in Australia and Japan. The complaint asked for damages in the amount of $11,000,000.

Ted Gunderson submitted an affidavit on Nichols' behalf, stating that he believed Gates HAD acted outside the scope of his employment when investigating Nichols abroad, the suit was subsequently dismissed through the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Robert Booth Nichols was depicted in one eastern publication as a "handsome, dashing figure, frequently described as `Clark Gable without the ears' ..." His friendship with movie actor Steven Seagal brought him a cameo appearance in the movie, "Under Siege," but his real purpose for being on the set was to act as technical advisor for the weaponry used in the movie.

The son of a prominent Los Angeles surgeon, Nichols is the inventor of a submachine pistol that he maintained was superior to the MAC10.

Nichols' weapons permit application, dated January 28, 1985 from the Santa Clara County Sheriff's Department, indicated that that he was born on March 6, 1943 at Loma Linda, California. In addition to his residences in California, he maintained residences in Italy, France, Australia and London, England for "business purposes for twenty years."

His medical doctor was listed in Zurich, Switzerland. He had worked for Harold Okimoto in Hawaii for four years, from 1968 to 1972 as Vice President of Preventor Security Center, an intruder electronics firm.

The four guns registered to him included two Colt .45 automatics. His purpose for carrying a concealed weapon was listed as such: "I am involved in the research and development of weapons systems, ranging from the basic blowback automatic weapon to various advanced destructive devices. As I have detailed knowledge of the workings of these systems, I feel it is imperative to have personal protection for myself and for the good of the community."

Nichols' corporation, Meridian Arms, a subsidiary of Meridian International Logistics, was licensed in California in 1987 to posses and/or transport machine guns, Permit No. 01678, and to sell machine guns, Permit No. 01677. A 1985 Statement by Domestic Stock Corporation filed with the Secretary of State in Sacramento listed Harold Okimoto, Peter Zokosky, and Glen Shockley as Directors in addition to Nichols' family.

Okimoto, Zokosky and Shockley are also listed as Directors on Meridian International Logistics, Inc. (MIL). Eugene F. Giaquinto, president of MCA (Music Corporation of America) Home Entertainment Division in Universal City, was also a Director of M.I.L. until May 31, 1988, when he resigned and returned his 10,000 shares of stock as a result of the Los Angeles Organized Crime Task Force investigation, at that time headed by Thomas Gates.

The May 25, 1988 Minutes of an MIL Board meeting reflected Robert Booth Nichols concern with the investigation: " ... Upon meeting with Agent Gates on March 8, 1988, our legal counsel, Judge Mark Robinson, interpreted the line of questioning of Agent Gates as having a main focus on the relationship between Robert Nichols and MCA, Inc. (of which Mr. Giaquinto is an officer).

" ... Therefore, due to Mr. Nichols' concern, which Mr. Giaquinto understood and thus stated he would submit written resignation within two days; it was the unanimous decision of the Board to remove Mr. Giaquinto from the position of Director of MIL forthwith ..."

Nichols' concern with such an investigation can well be justified when you review the Minutes of an MIL board meeting held in Sherman Oaks on August 26, 1988. The following business was discussed and voted upon: (Excerpted)

"It was the unanimous decision of the Board to draft a letter to the President of an internationally recognized Medical School in Japan (as referenced in our corporate minutes of April 24, 1988) with regard to our corporation's intention to make available a grant of funds to said School, as the funds become available to our corporation, and under specific terms and conditions.

" ... The phenomenal success in the field of immunotherapeutics by the Immunology Department of said Japanese Medical School has convinced the Board [of MIL] that the EXCLUSIVE training of qualified physicians under contract to and the direction of Meridian International Logistics, Inc., would be of great value and benefit to our company and it's shareholders."

While reading these documents, I couldn't help wondering why an "arms" dealer, allegedly tied in with organized crime, wanted to fund the exclusive training of physicians at a Japanese medical school?

The Minutes of MIL dated September 20th, 1988, referred to an agreement executed on September 14th, which discussed the threeway, equal ownership between MIL, Dr. Shigeyoshi Fujimoto, and Ajinomoto Co. Inc., of certain patented biological technology identified as "a newly devised technology for induction and activation of cytotoxic Tlymphocytes (Tcells), referred to as CTL, directed to autologous cancer cells in vitro with high efficacy utilizing a serumfree medium."

A Power of Attorney was issued to attorney Fujio Kubota in Japan to file patents and registrations on the technology entitled "The Method for Induction and Activation of Cytotoxic TLymphocytes."

The signatories on the Agreement to file Registrations and Patents on September 14, 1988 were listed as Dr. Shigeyoshi Fujimoto; Takasha Miyamae (Ajinomoto Co., Inc.); Hidetoshi Onogi (representative of MIL); Kanehiro Ishida (International Service Center, Inc.); and Takashi Kumakawa (American Embassy).

Hidetoshi Onogi was granted full power of attorney to negotiate and execute an equity position for Meridian International Logistics related to the filings and "any other documentation pertaining to the technical knowledge and the mechanical and/or chemical processes for the production of T Cells as are present in the immune system of the human body or any other organism."

In and of itself this transaction seemed innocuous enough. But again I asked myself, why was an international arms dealer on the Board of F.I.D.C.O (First Intercontinental Development Corporation), a CIA front corporation, which offered three billion dollars to rebuild Beirut to President Amin Gamayel of Lebanon, whose chief of finances (Sami el Khouri) was shipping tons of heroin to Sicily for reexport to America, want to invest in "a method for induction and activation of cytotoxic TLymphocytes"?

Was this technology being developed with the authority of the U.S. government, or independently? If Nichols' operations were in fact government sanctioned, then it must have been frustrating for him to be investigated by the FBI. The concept of the FBI inadvertently investigating the CIA was ironic. And what had Danny Casolaro learned about this technology?

I found a possible answer in an obscure letter written on Wackenhut/Cabazon letterhead, dated January 20, 1983, addressed to Dr. Harry Fair at Tactical Technology in Arlington, Virginia, from Dr. John P. Nichols, Cabazon Administrator. The letter noted that on February 15th, 1983, Dr. Nichols would be forwarding to Dr. Fair "a unique list of agents and production techniques related to biological warfare."

The letter went on to say that the Storemont Laboratories business plan Dr. Nichols mailed to him was to prepare him for what was to be sent in the area of biological warfare. Added Dr. Nichols: "[These] products could be utilized in small countries bordering ALBANIA or large countries bordering the Soviet Union. You will be amazed at the scope ..." I could not help recalling the Village Voice article ("The Last Days of Danny Casolaro," October 15, 1991) which had stated, tongue in cheek, that "Casolaro had traced the Inslaw and related stories back to a CIA `Old Boy' network that had begun working together in the 1950's around the ALBANIA covert operations ..."

The hybridoma technology discussed in attached documents (in Michael Riconosciuto's files), centered around the ability to reorganize and synthesize genetic structures and to modify "lymphocytes" (immune cells).

Under the heading "Possible Military Applications Utilizing Hybridoma Technology" was the notation that "genesplicing technology provides the ability to produce pathogenic (harmful) agents, i.e. viruses."

"In fact," noted the writer, "biological warfare weaponry of this nature (both production and supply) is limited only by the imagination of the scientist."

Included in the above mentioned documents (attached to the Dr. Harry Fair letter), was a proposal to develop monoclonal antibody kits to detect the presence of such harmful biological agents in a field (combat) environment. In other words, develop a laboratory created vaccine for a laboratory created virus. The very same proposal had been submitted to Peter Zokosky in December 1982 by John P. Nichols.

I wondered, was THIS the same technology that Robert Booth Nichols and the Directors of MIL, including Peter Zokosky, Glen Shockley and Harold Okimoto, were fronting to the Japanese? What kind of "weapon" was this?

Other weapons discussed in the same letter included the Cabazon Arms CA 9 SMG which "Peter Zokosky had the British interested in." The CA 9 SMG could be produced for $75.00 per unit on the reservation and sold for $100 to $125.00. "It meets all the needs of a small, poor democracy for 9MM parabellum," said Nichols.

"They can afford to purchase this one. We have fired over 50,000 rounds with the test model using South Korean ammunition without jamming. We could begin manufacturing within two weeks in a country like Guatemala, Chile, etc., utilizing USA produced dies and Swedish extrusion machinery." ... Peter Zokosky has fired both the Viper and the CA 9 SMG and was impressed with both, but particularly with the CA 9 SMG. Kuwait has been particularly interested in financing the producion of the CA 9 SMG ..."

Dr. Nichols concluded: "We would initially manufacture on the reservation. We can purchase an existing small company with all the licenses to manufacture and export. [Meridian Arms?] We are ready. We are continuing to experiment with the combination sniper rifle (9MM) equipped with micropressor vision enhancement (no tubes) (night vision). Michael Riconosciuto and some friends of the reservation have been working cooperatively on this project. Within another 90 to 120 days we should have a working model to use on the CA 9 SMG and the sniper rifle."

The ongoing projects listed in research and development were a second 9MM calibre machine pistol, an assault rifle with laser sighting, a longdistance sniper rifle, and a small portable rocket system which could be attached to the assault rifle.

Three months later, on April 13, 1983, Robert Booth Nichols wrote to Joseph Preloznik in Madison, Wisconsin, recapitulating exactly the same weapons proposal as outlined above by Dr. John Nichols to Dr. Harry Fair.

I never found out who Joseph Preloznik was, but Dr. Harry Fair's name popped up in a Wackenhut InterOffice Memorandum in Michael's files. Dated May 25, 1981, from Robert Frye, a Vice President of Wackenhut in Indio, to Robert Chasen, a Vice President of Wackenhut in Coral Gables (and former Commissioner of U.S. Customs) the memorandum detailed a May 1213 visit to Dr. Harry Fair, Chief of Propulsion Technology, Applied Sciences Division and others at Pickitinny Arsenal in Dover, New Jersey.

The arsenal was listed under the official heading of "U.S. Army Armament Research & Development Command, Large Caliber Weapon Systems Laboratory" or ARRADCOM.

The fivepage memo not only outlined the depth of Wackenhut's commitment and involvement at the Cabazon reservation, but it delineated Peter Zokosky's importance to the projects underway there. One of those projects included proposed construction of an "R & D" (Research and Development) facility on the Cabazon Indian reservation for the manufacture of 120 mm. combustible cartridge cases for sale to the U.S. Army, with sales also to NATO, and especially to the Federal Republic of Germany which at that time, was adopting the use of such cases in their Leopard tanks.

Wrote Frye: "The obvious key to any such endeavor is [Peter] Zokosky. He is reportedly one of only 67 personnel in the world who have had any significant experience in the development and manufacture of the slurry process involved in combustible cartridge cases. He is under present noncompete agreement with Armtec, his former company, until August 1981. Armtec is the present sole source supplier of 120 mm. combustible cartridge cases to the U.S. Government. Zokosky is also serving as a consultant to the British Government ..."

CHAPTER 10, Part 2

It is noteworthy that the Cabazon Indians had enlisted the aid of other Indian tribes to join in their endeavor. Use of adjacent tribal lands as a location for a large caliber weapons range test site was obtained from a sister tribe, the Torres Martinez, involving some 30,000 acres of very remote and desolate land near the Salton Sea.Potential use of a test firing range for the "railgun" on the Santa Rosa Mountain, under the control of the Santa Rosa Indians, had also been pledged to the Cabazons and the U. S. Government.

A notation was included in the lengthy memorandum to "firm up the deal between the Joint Venture and John Vanderwerker, President of Intersect Corporation, [in] Irvine, California," who had the exclusive rights for foreign marketing with the Litton Electron Tube Division in third world countries.

Mention of John Vanderwerker in the Wackenhut memorandum was singularly important in my investigative leap from overt arms operations to "covert" intelligence operations.

According to Peter Zokosky, Vanderwerker was on the CIA payroll. In Riconosciuto's files, I located a letter dated April 11, 1983, written to Vanderwerker at Intersect Corporation from Glenn Shockley, a Board Director of both F.I.D.C.O. (First Intercontinental Development Corporation) and MIL (Meridian International Logistics), under investigation for organized crime activities. Robert Booth Nichols was also on the Board of both corporations.

The Octopus trail gets a little complicated here, but it is a significant trail. Both Vanderwerker and Shockley were on the CIA payroll. Documents to that effect will be noted in future pages. In the aforementioned letter, Shockley was offering to Vanderwerker fortytwo AH1S Cobra Helicopters at a unit price of seven million eight hundred thousand U.S. dollars each.

The rest of the letter read as follows: (Note a few words had been damaged while xeroxing) "The price offered is F.A.S. location at Seller's option Europe. The price is net to Buyer possessing the proper documentation and does not include any government considerations (taxes), if any, all of which (indecipherable) to the Buyer's account.

"For verification of the existence of these products, you are requested to refer to telex transmission occuring during the Spring of 1981 between Union Bank Suisse of Zurich, Switzerland, and Omega Industries of Long Island, New York. The transmissions were addressed to Mr. Parvis Lavi at Omega and were signed by Mr. N.A. (indecipherable) bank officer. Your immediate response to this offer would be greatly appreciated. Sincerely, Glenn. R. Shockley."

Attached to this letter was a handwritten memorandum, obviously taken from the above referenced "telex" transmission. The memo delineated the procedure for "airframe I.D. number acquisition." The buyer's bank officer was instructed to telephone Seller's bank officer at 8:00 a.m. Tuesday morning to relay the following Seller's bank data: "Bank Credit Suisse, Geneva. Officer Mr. Eucomun. Telephone number 0114122365380. Account Number 02746590 54821 Reference Code J.H."

If the connection was missed, then it was to be repeated Wednesday at 8:00 a.m. $10 million U.S. dollars was to be exchanged at the bank for [a] Frame I.D. No. on Wednesday. If all was ready to proceed in Geneva in 5 banking days, then the $10 million would be credited to the buyer's account toward acquisition of all craft. If not, then $10 million was to be forfeited.
